5 Loe, howe all our workes are ſubiect to the curſe of the lawe, if they be meaſured by the rule of the lawe. But howe ſhould then vnhappy ſoules cherefully applie themſelues to worke, for which they might not truſt that they coulde get any thinge but curſe? On the other ſide, if being deliuered from this ſeuere exacting of the lawe, or rather from the whole rigor of the lawe, they heare that they be called of God with fatherly gentleneſſe: they will merily and with great cherefulneſſe aunſwer his calling and followe his guiding. In a ſumme, they which are bound to the yoke of the lawe, are like to bondſeruants, to whom are appointed by their Lordes certain taſkes of worke for euery day. Theſe ſeruants thinke that they haue done nothing, nor dare come into the ſight of their Lordes, vnleſſe they haue performed that full taſke of their workes. But children, which are more liberally and more freemanlike handled of their fathers, ſticke not to preſent to them their begonne & half vnperfect workes, yea and thoſe hauing ſome fault, truſting that they will accept their obedience and willingneſſe of minde, although they haue not exactly done ſo much as their good will was to do. So muſt we be as may haue ſure affiance, that our obediences ſhalbe allowed of our moſt kinde father, howe litle ſoeuer, and howe rude and vnperfect ſoeuer they be. As alſo he aſſureth to vs by the prophet: I will ſpare them (ſaith he) as the father is wont to ſpare his ſonne that ſerueth him. Mal. 3. 17 Where this word Spare, is ſet for to beare withall, or gently to winke at faultes, foraſmuch as he alſo maketh mention of ſeruice. And this affiãce is not a litle neceſſarie for vs, without which we ſhal go about all things in vaine. For God accompteth himſelfe to be worſhipped with no worke of ours but ẅ is truly done of vs for the worſhipping of him. But howe can that be done among theſe terrors, where it is douted whether God be offended or worſhipped with our worke?

6 And that is the cauſe why the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, referreth all the good workes that are red of in the holy fathers, fathers,to faith,& weyeth them onely by faith. Touching this liberty there is a place in the Epistle to the Romaines,where Paule reſoneth that ſome ought not to haue dominion ouer vs, becauſe we are not vnder ỹ law,but vnder grace. For when he had exhorted the faithfull that ſinne ſhould not reigne in their mortall bodie, and that they ſhould not geue their mẽbers to be weapons of wickedneſſe to ſinne, but ſhould dedicate themſelues to God, as they that are aliue from the deade, and their members, weapons of righteouſneſſe to God: and whereas they might on the other ſide obiect that they do yet carry with them the fleſh full of luſtes, and that ſinne dwelleth in them, he adioyneth that comfort by the libertie of the lawe, as if he ſhould ſay. Though they do not yet throughly fele ſinne deſtroyed and that righteouſneſſe yet liueth not in them,yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould feare and be diſcouraged as though they had bene alway diſpleaſed with thẽ for the remnãts of ſinne,foraſmuch as they are by grace made free from the law,that their workes ſhould not be examined by the rule of the law. As for thẽ that gather that we may ſinne becauſe we are not vnder the law,let thẽ know that this liberty perteineth nothing to them,the ende wherof is to encourage to God. Ro.11.2 Rom.6. 12.

6 The third part is,that we be bound with no conſcience before God of outward things which are by them ſelues indifferent, but that we may indifferently ſometime vſe them, and ſometime leaue them vnuſed. And the knowledge of this libertie alſo is very neceſſary for vs,for if it ſhalbe abſent,there ſhalbe no quiet to our cõſciences,no ende of ſuperſtitions. Many at this day do thinke vs fonde to moue diſputation about the free eating of fleſh,about thẽ free vſe of dayes, and garmentes and ſuch other ſmale trifles as they in deede thinke them: but there is more weight in them than is commonly thought. For when conſciences haue ones caſt themſelues into the ſnare,they entre into a long and comberſome way,from whence they can afterward finde no eaſy way to get out. If a man beginne to doubt whether he may occupy linnen in ſhetes,ſhertes, hankercheifes,and napkines, neither will he be out of doubt whether he may vſe hẽpe, and at the laſt he wil alſo fall in doubt of mattes,for he will way with himſelf whether he can not ſuppe without napkins,whether he may not be without handkercheifes. If any man thinke deinty meate to be vnlawefull, at length he ſhall not with quietneſſe before the Lorde eate either brounebreade or common meates,when he remembreth that he may yet ſuſteine his body with bacer foode. If he doubte of pleaſaunte wine,afterwarde he will not drinke deade wine with good peace of conſcience, laſt of all he will not be ſo bold to touch ſweter and cleanner water than other. Finally at the length he will come to this point, to thinke it vnlawefull (as the common saying is) to treade vppon a strawe lying a crosse. For here is begonne no lighte strife, but this is in question, whether God will haue vs to vse these or those thinges, whose will ought to guide all our counsells and doinges. Hereby some must needes be carried with desperation into a confuse deuouring pit: some must, despising God, and casting away his feare, make themselues away through destructiō when they haue no redy way. For whosoeuer are entangled with such doubting, which way soeuer they turne themselues, they see euery where present offense of conscience.

Ro. 14. 14. 8 I knowe (saith Paule) that nothing is common (meaning by common, vnholy) but who so thinketh any thing common, to him it is common. In which wordes he maketh all outward things subiect to our libertie, prouided alway that our mindes haue the assurance of the libertie before God. But if any superstitious opinion cast into vs any dout, those things which of their owne nature were cleane, are defiled to vs. Wherefore he addeth: Blessed is he that iudgeth not himselfe in that which he alloweth. But he that iudgeth, if he eate, is condemned, because he eateth not of faith. And that which is not of faith, is sinne. Among such narrowe streightes, who so neuertheless with carelesly venturing on all things shewe themselues boulder, do they not asmuch turne themselues away from God? But they which are throughly pearced with some feare of God, when they themselues also are compelled to do many things against their conscience, are discouraged & do fall downe with feare. All that are such, do receiue none of the giftes of God with thankesgeuing, by which alone yet Paul testifieth that they all are sanctified to our vse. I meane the thankesgeuing that procedeth from a heart that acknowledgeth the liberalitie & goodnesse of God in his giftes. For, many of them in deede do vnderstande that those are the benefites of God which they vse, and they praise God in his workes: but sith they are not persuaded that they are geuen to themselues, howe should they thanke God as the geuer of them? Thus in a summe we see, whereto this libertie tendeth, namely that we should vse the gifts of God to such vse as he hath geuen them vnto vs, without any scruple of conscience, without any trouble of minde: by which confidence our soules may both haue peace with him and acknowledge his liberalitie toward vs. For here are comprehended all ceremonies that are at liberty to be obserued, that our consciences should not be bound with any necessitie to kepe them, but should remember that the vse of them is by Gods benefit

ſubiect to themſelues vnto edification.

9 But it is diligently to be noted, that Chriſtian libertie is in al the partes of it a ſpirituall thing, the whole ſtrength whereof conſiſteth in appeaſing fearfull conſciences before God, if either they be vnquieted or carefull for the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, or if they be penſiue whether our imperfect workes and defiled with the faultes of our fleſh do pleaſe God, or if they be troubled about the vſe of indifferent things. Wherefore they do wrongfully expound it, which either do make it a cloke for their owne deſires, that they may abuſe the giftes of God to their owne luſt, or which do thinke that there is no libertie but that which is vſed before men, and therefore in vſing it haue no regard of the weake brethren. In the firſt kinde, men do at this day much offend. There is almoſt no man which, may by his abilitie of wealth be ſumptuous, which deliteth not in exceſſiue gorgiouſneſſe, in furniture of bankets, in apparell of body, in building of houſes, which hath not a will to excell other in all kinde of ſtatelineſſe: which doth not maruellouſly flatter himſelf in his fineneſſe. And all theſe things are defended vnder the pretēſe of Chriſtian libertie. They ſay that they are things indifferent: I graunt, ſo that a man indifferently vſe them. But when they are to gredily coueted, when they are proudely boſted, when they are waſtefully ſpent, it is certaine that thoſe things which otherwiſe were of themſelues lawfull, are by theſe faultes defiled. This ſaying of Paule doth very well put difference betwene things indifferēt: All things are cleane to the cleane: but to the defiled and vnbeleuing, nothing is cleane, becauſe their minde and conſcience is defiled. For why are accurſed the rich men, they which haue their comfort, which are ſatisfied with meate, which do nowe laugh, which ſlepe in beds of iuory, which ioyne land to lande, whoſe banketes haue lute, harp, taber and wine? Verily both iuory, and golde, and richeſſe, are the good creatures of God, permitted yea & apointed by the prouidence of God for men to vſe. Neither is it any where forbidden either to laugh, or to be ſatisfied with meate, or to ioyne new poſſeſſions to their owne olde poſſeſſiōs or of their aunceſters, or to be delited with muſicall melodie, or to drink wine. This is true in deede. But whē they haue plenty of things, to wallowe in delites, to glut themſelues, to make their wit and minde dronke with preſent pleaſures & alway to gape for newe, theſe doings are moſt farre from the lawfull vſe of the giftes of God. Therefore let them take away immeaſurable deſire, let them take away immeaſurable waſting, let them take away vanitie and arrogance, that they may with a pure conſcience purely vſe the giftes of God. When the minde ſhalbe framed to this ſobrietie, they ſhall haue a rule of the lawfull vſe. On the other ſide let this moderation be wanting, euen baſe and common delicates are to much. For this is truely ſaid, that oftentimes in friſe and courſe cloth dwelleth a purple hearte, and Phil. 4. ſomtime vnder ſilke and purple, lieth ſimple humilitie: Let euery man in his degree ſo liue either poorely, or meanely, or plentifully, that they all remember that they are fed of God to liue, not to be riotous: and let them thinke, that this is the lawe of Chriſtian liberty, if they haue learned with Paule to be contented with thoſe things which they preſently haue: if they can ſkill both to be humble and to excell: if they be taught in all places and in all things to be both full and hungry, to haue plentie and to ſuffre want.

10 Herein alſo many men do erre, bycauſe as though their libertie ſhould not be ſounde and ſafe vnleſſe it had men witneſſes of it, they do vndiſcretly and vnwiſely vſe it. By which vnſeaſonable vſing they many times offend the weake brothren. You may ſee at this day ſome, which thinke that their libertie can not ſtande, vnleſſe they take poſſeſſion of it by eating of fleſh on friday. I blame not that they eate: but this falſe opinion muſt be driuen out of their mindes. For they ought to thinke that by their libertie they obteine no newe thing in the ſight of menne but before God, and that it ſtandeth as well in abſteining as in vſing. If they vnderſtande that it maketh no matter before God, whether they eate fleſh or egges, whether they weare redde or blacke garments, that is enough. The conſcience is nowe free, to which the benefite of ſuch libertie was due. Therefore although they do afterward abſteine all their life long from fleſh, and weare alway but one colour, yet they are no leſſe free. Yea therefore becauſe they are free, they do with a free conſcience abſteine. But they do moſt hurtfully offend bycauſe they nothing regard the weakeneſſe of their brethren, which we ought ſo to beare with, that we raſhly commit nothing with offenſe of them. But ſometime alſo it behoueth that our libertie be ſet forth before men. And this I graunt. But there is a meaſure moſt heedefully to be kept, that we caſt not away the care of the weake of whome the Lorde hath ſo earneſtly geuen vs charge.

11 I will in this place therefore ſpeake ſomewhat of offenſes, in what differēce they are to be taken, which are to be auoided, & which to be neglected: whereupō we may afterward determine what place there is for our libertie among men. I like well that cōmon diuiſion, which teacheth that there is of offenſes one ſort geuen, an other taken: for aſmuch as it both hath a plaine teſtimonie of the Scripture, and doth not vnfitly expresse that which it meaneth. If thou do any thing by vnseasonable lightnesse, or wantonnesse, or rashnesse, not in order, nor in fit place, whereby the ignorant and weake are offended, that same may be called an offense geuē by thee: because it came to passe by thy fault that such offense was stirred vp. And it is alway called an offense geuen in any thing, the fault whereof came from the doer of the thing it selfe. It is called an offense taken, when a thing which is otherwise not euelly done nor out of time is by euell will or by some wrongfull maliciousnesse of minde drawen to occasiō of offense. For in this case was not offense geuen, but these wrongefull construers do without cause take one. With that first kinde of offense none are offended but the weake: but with this .ij. kinde sowre natures & Pharisaicall scornefull heads are offended. Wherefore we shall call the one, the offense of the weake: the other of the Pharisees: and we shall so temper the vse of our libertie, that it ought to geue place to the ignorance of the weake brethren, but in no wise to the rigorousnesse of the Pharisees. For, what is to be yelded to weaknesse, Paule sheweth in very many places. Beare (saith he) the weake in faith. Again, Let vs not hereafter iudge one an other: but this rather, let there not be layed before our brother any offense or occasion of falling: and many other sayings to the same entent, which are more fit to be red in the place it selfe, than to be here rehearsed. The summe is, that we which are strong should beare with the weakenesses of our brethren, and not please our selues, but euery one of vs please his neighbor vnto good for edifying. In an other place, But see that your libertie be not in any wise an offense to them that are weake. Againe, Eate ye al things that are sold in the shambles, asking no question for conscience: of your conscience (I say) not an other mans. Finally be ye such, that ye geue no offense, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Grekes, nor to the Church of God. Also in an other place, Ye are called, brethren, into libertie: onely geue not your libertie to be an occasion to the flesh, but by charitie serue ye one an other. Thus it is. Our libertie is not geuen toward our weake neighbours, whose seruantes charitie maketh vs in all things: but rather, that hauing peace with God in our mindes, we may also liue peaceably among men. As for the offense of the Pharisees, howe much it is to be regarded, we learne by the wordes of the Lorde, whereby he biddeth them to be let alone, because they are blinde, and guides of the blinde. The disciples had warned him, that the Pharisees were offended with his sayings: he aunswered that they were to be neglected, and the offending of them not to be cared for.

Mat. 15. 14.

12 But yet ſtill the matter hangeth doutfull, vnles we knowe who are to be taken for weake, and who for Phariſees: which difference beinge taken away, I ſee not amonge offences what vſe at all of liberty remaineth, which might neuer be vſed without great daunger. But it ſeemeth to me that Paul hath moſt plainely declared both by doctrine and by examples, howe far our liberty is either to be tempred or to be defended though with offences. When he toke Timothee into his company, he circumciſed him: but he coulde not be brought to circumciſe Titus. Here were diuerſe doings, & no chaũge of purpoſe or of minde: namely in circumciſing Timothee, when he was free from all men, he made himſelfe a ſeruaunt to all men: and he was made to the Iewes, as a Iewe, that he might win the Iewes: to them that were vnder the lawe, as if he himſelf were vnder the lawe, that he might winne them which were vnder the lawe: all things to all men, that he might ſaue many, as he writeth in an other place. Thus we haue a right moderation of libertie, if it may be indifferẽtly reſtrained with ſome profit. What he had reſpect vnto, when he ſtoutly refuſed to circumciſe Titus, he himſelf teſtifieth, writing thus. But neither was Titus, which was with me, although he was a Grecian, compelled to be circumciſed, becauſe of the falſe brethren which were come in by the way, which had priuily crept in to eſpie our libertie which we haue in Chriſt Ieſus, that they might bring vs into bondage, to whome we gaue not place by ſubiection ſo much as for a time, that the truth of the Goſpell might continue with you. There is alſo a time when we muſt of neceſſitie defend our libertie, if the ſame be in weake cõſciences endaungered by the vniuſt exactings of falſe Apoſtles. We muſt in euery thing ſtudy to preſerue charity, & haue regard to the edifying of our neighbor. All things (ſaith he) are lawfull for me, but not all things are expedient: all things are lawefull for me, but not all thinges do edify. Let no man ſeeke that ẅ is his owne, but ẏ which is an others. There is nothing now plainer by this rule, than that we muſt vſe our libertie, if it may turne to the edifying of our neighbor: but if it be not ſo expediẽt for our neighbor, then we muſt forbeare it. There be ſome which conterfait the wiſdome of Paule in forbearing of libertie, while they do nothing les than apply the ſame to the duties of charitie. For ſo that they may prouide for their owne quietnes, they wiſh all mentiõ of liberty to be buried, whereas it is no les behouefull for our neighbors, ſometime to vſe libertie for their benefit and edification, than in fit place to reſtraine it for their commoditie. But it is the part of a godly man to thinke, that free power in outward things is therefore graunted

him, that he may be the freer to all duties of charitie.

13 But whatsoeuer I haue spoken of auoyding of offences, my meaning is that it be referred to meane and indifferent things. For, those things that are necessary to be done, are not to be left vndone for fear of any offence. For as our libertie is to be submitted to charity, so charity it selfe likewise ought to be vnder the purenes of faith. Verily here also ought to be had regard of charitie, but so far as to the altars, that is, that for our neighbors sake we offēd not God Their intemperance is not to be allowed, which do nothing but with troublesome turmoiling, and which had rather rashly to rend all things, than leisurely to rip them. Neither yet are they to be harkened to, which when they be leaders of men into a thousand sorts of vngodlynes, yet do faine that they must behaue themselues so that they be none offence to their neighbors. As though they do not in ỹ meane edify the cōsciences of their neighbors to euill, specially wheras they sticke fast in the same mire without any hope of getting out. And the pleasant men forsoth, whether their neighbor be to be instructed with doctrine or example of life. say that he must be fed with milke, whome they fill with most euill & poisonous opinions. Paule reporteth that he fed the Corinthians with drinking of milke: but if Popish Masse had then bene among them, would he haue sacrificed to geue them the drinke of milke. But milke is not poison. Therefore they lie in saying ỹ they feede them whom vnder a shewe of flattering allurementes they cruelly kill. But, graunting that such dissembling is for a time to be allowed, howe long yet will they feede their children with milke? For if they neuer grow bigger, that they may at the least be able to beare some light meate, it is certain that they were neuer brought vp with milke. There are two reasons that moue me why I do not nowe more sharply contend with them: first, because their follies are scarcely worthy to be cōfuted, sith they worthily seeme filthy in the sight of all men that haue their sound wit: secondly, because I haue sufficiently done it in peculiar bookes, I will not nowe do a thing already done. Onely let the readers remember this, that with whatsoeuer offences satan and the world go about to turne vs away from the ordinances of God, or to stay vs from following that which he apointeth, yet we must neuertheless go earnestly forward: and then, that whatsoeuer dangers hang vpon it, yet is it not at our liberty to swarue one heare bredth from the commaundement of the same God, neither is it lawefull by any pretence to attempt any thing but that which he geueth vs leaue. 1 Cor. 3. 2.

14 Nowe therefore sith faithfull consciences hauing receiued such

prerogatiue of libertie as we haue aboue ſet forth, haue by the benefite of Chriſt obtained this that they be not entangled with any ſnares of obſeruations in thoſe things in which the Lorde willed that they ſhould be at libertie: we conclude that they are exempt from all power of men. For it is vnmeete, that either Chriſt ſhould loſe the thanke of his ſo great liberalitie, or conſciences their profite. Neither ought we to thinke it a ſlight matter, which we ſee to haue coſt Chriſt ſo deere: namely which he valued not with gold or ſiluer, but with his owne bloud: ſo that Paule ſticketh not to ſay, that his death is made voide, if we yeld our ſoules into ſubiection to men. For he trauelleth about nothing els in certaine chapters of the epiſtle to the Galathiãs, but to ſhew that Chriſt is darkned or rather deſtroied to vs, vnleſſe our conſciences ſtand faſt in their libertie, which verily they haue loſt if they may at the will of men be ſnared with the bondes of lawes and ordinances. But as it is a thing moſt worthy to be knowen, ſo it needeth a longer and plainer declaration. For ſo ſoone as any word is ſpoken of the abrogating of the ordinances of men, biandby great troubles are raiſed vp partly by ſeditious men, partly by ſlaunderers, as though the whole obedience of men were at once taken away and ouerthrowen.

1. Pet. 1. 18. Gal. 5. 1. and 4.

15 Therefore that none of vs may ſtumble at this ſtone, firſt let vs conſider, that there are two ſortes of gouernment in man: the one ſpirituall whereby the conſcience is framed to godlineſſe and to the worſhip of God: ỹ other ciuill, wherby man is trayned to the duties of humanitie and ciuilitie which are to be kept among men. They are commonly by not vnfit names called the Spirituall and Temporall iuriſdiction, whereby is ſignified, that the firſt of theſe two formes of gouernment pertaineth to the life of the ſoule, and the latter is occupied in the things of this preſent life: not onely in feeding and clothing, but in ſetting forth of lawes whereby a man may ſpend his life among men holily, honeſtly, and ſoberly. For, that firſt kinde hath place in the inward minde, this latter kinde ordereth onely the outward behauiours. The one we may call the Spirituall kingdome the other, the Ciuil kingdome. But theſe two, as we haue deuided them, muſt be either of them alway ſeuerally cõſidered by themſelues: and when the one is in conſidering, we muſt withdrawe and turne away our mindes from the thinking vpon the other. For there are in man as it were two worlds, which both diuerſe kings & diuerſe lawes may gouerne. By this putting of difference ſhall come to paſſe, that that which the Goſpell teacheth of the ſpirituall libertie, we ſhall not wrongefully drawe to the ciuil order, as though Chriſtians were according cording to the outward gouernment lesse subiect to the lawes of men, becauſe their conſciences are at libertie before God: as though they were therefore exempt from all bondage of the fleſh, becauſe they are free according to the ſpirit. Again, becauſe euen in thoſe ordinances which ſeeme to pertaine to the Spirituall kingdome, there may be ſome error: we muſt alſo put difference betwene theſe, which are to be taken for lawfull as agreable to the word of God, & on the other ſide which ought not to haue place among the godly. Of the Ciuile gouernment there ſhalbe els where place to ſpeake. Alſo of the Eccleſiaſticall lawes I omit to ſpeake at this time, becauſe a more full entreating of it ſhalbe fit for the fourth book, where we ſhall ſpeake of the power of the Church. But of this diſcourſe, let this be the concluſion, The queſtion being (as I haue ſaid) of it ſelfe not very darke or entangled, doth for this cauſe accomber many, becauſe they do not ſuttelly enough put differēce betwene the outward court as they cal it, and the court of conſcience. Moreouer this encreaſeth the difficultie, that Paule teacheth that the Magiſtrate ought to be obeyed, not onely for fear of puniſhment, but for conſcience. Whereupon followeth that conſciences are alſo bounde by the ciuile lawes. If it were ſo, all ſhould come to naught which we both haue ſpoken and ſhall ſpeake of the ſpirituall gouernment. For the loſing of this knot, firſt it is good to know what is conſcience. And the definition therof is to be fetched from the deriuation of the word. For, as when men do with minde and vnderſtanding conceaue the knowledge of things, they are thereby ſaid (Scire) to knowe, whereupon alſo is deriued the name of Science: Knowledge: ſo when they haue a feeling of the iudgement of God, as a witnes ioined with thē, which doth not ſuffer them to hide their ſinnes but that they be drawen accuſed to the iudgement ſeate of God, that ſame feeling is called Conſcience. For it is a certaine meane betwene God and man, becauſe it ſuffreth not man to ſuppreſſe in himſelf that which he knoweth, but purſueth him ſo far till it bring him to giltines. This is it which Paul meaneth, where he ſaith that conſcience doth together witneſſe with men, when their thoughtes do accuſe or aquite them in the iudgement of God. A ſimple knowledge might remaine as encloſed within man. Therefore this feeling which preſenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioined to man, to marke and eſpie all his ſecretes, that nothing may remaine buried in darknes. Whereupon alſo commeth that olde Prouerb, Conſciēce is a thouſand witneſſes. And for the ſame reaſon Peter hath ſet the examination of a good conſcience for quietneſſe of minde, when being perſwaded of the grace of Christ, we do without fear present our selues before God.

Heb.10. 3. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, setteth to haue no more cõscience of sinne, in stede of to be deliuered or acquited that sinne may no more accuse vs.

16 Therefore as workes haue respect to men, so conscience is referred to God, so that a good conscience is nothing els but the
2.Ti.1.5 inward purenes of the hart. In which sense Paul writeth that charity is the fulfilling of the lawe out of a pure conscience & faith not fained. Afterward also in ỹ same chapter he sheweth how much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had suffred shipwracke from the faith, because they had forsaken good Conscience. For in these wordes he signifieth it is a liuely affection to worship God, and a sincere endeuor to liue holily and godlily. Sometime in deede it ex-
Act. 24. 16. tendeth also to men, as in Luke where the same Paul protesteth that he endeuored himselfe to walke with a good conscience toward God and men. But this was therefore said, because the frutes of good conscience do flowe and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God onely, as I haue already said. Hereby it commeth to pas that the lawe is said to binde the conscience, which simply bindeth a man without respect of men, or without hauing any consideration of them. As for example: God commaundeth not onely to kepe the minde chast and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth all manner of filthines of wordes and outwarde wantonnes whatsoeuer it be. To the kepinge of this lawe my conscience is subiect although there liued not one man in the world. So he that behaueth himselfe intemperantly, not onely sinneth in this that he geueth an euill example to the brethren, but also hath his conscience bound with giltines before God. In things that are of themselues meane, there is another consideration. For we ought to abstein from them
1.Cor. 10.28. if they bred any offence, but the conscience still being free. So Paule speaketh of flesh consecrate to Idoles. If any (saith he) moue any doubt, touch it not for conscience sake: I say for conscience, not thine but the others. A faithfull man should sinne, which being first warned should neuertheless eate such flesh. But howesoeuer in respect of his brother, it is necessary for him to abstein as it is prescribed of God, yet he ceasseth not to kepe stil the libertie of cõscience. Thus we see howe this lawe binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Praier, vvhich is the chiefe exercise of faith, and vvhereby vve daily receiue the benefites of God.

OF these thinges that haue bin hitherto spoken, we plainely perceiue how needy and voide man is of all good things, & howe he wanteth all helpes of saluation. Wherefore if he seeke for relieses whereby he may succour his needines, he must go out of himselfe and get them elsewhere. This is afterward declared vnto vs, that the Lorde doth of his owne free will and liberally giue himselfe to vs in his Christ, in whom he offereth vs in stede of our misery all felicity, in stede of our neede welthinesse, in whom he openeth to vs the heauenly treasures: that our whole faith should behold his beloued sonne, ỳ vpon him our whole expectation should hange, in him our whole hope should sticke fast and rest. This verily is the secret & hidden Philosophy, which can not be wronge out with Logickall arguments: but they learne it whose eies God hath opened that they may see light in his light. But since that we are taught by faith to acknowledge that whatsoeuer we haue neede of, whatsoeuer wanteth in vs, the same is in God & in our Lord Iesus Christ, namely in whome the Lorde willed the whole fulnesse of his largesse to rest, that from thense we shoulde all drawe as out of a most plentifull fountaine: nowe it remaineth that we seeke in him, and with prayers craue of him that which we haue learned to be in him. Otherwise to know God to be the Lord & giuer of all good thinges, which allureth vs to pray to him: and not to go to him and pray to him: shoulde so nothing profit vs, that it should be al one as if a man should neglect a treasure shewed him buried and digged in the ground. Therfore the Apostle, to shewe that true faith can not be idle from callinge vpon God, hath set this order: that as of the Gospel springeth faith, so by it our heartes are framed to cal vpon the name of God. And this is the same thing which he had a litle before sayd, that the Spirit of adoption, which sealeth in our heartes the witnesse of the Gospell, raiseth vp our spirits that they dare shew forth their desires to God, stirre vp vnspeakeable groninges, and crie with confidence Abba, Father. It is mete therfore that this last point, because it was before but only spoken of by the way & as it were lightly touched, should nowe be more largely entreated of. Rom.8. 26.

2 This therfore we get by the benefit of prayer, that we attaine to those richesse which are laid vp for vs with the heauenly father. For there is a certaine communicatinge of men with God, whereby they entring into ſanctuary of heauen,do in his owne preſence call to him touching his promiſes: that the ſame thing which they beleued him affirming only in word not to be vaine,they may when neede ſo requireth finde in experience. Therefore we ſee that there is nothing ſet forth to vs to be looked for at the hand of the Lord,which we are not alſo cõmaunded to craue with praiers: ſo true it is that by prayer are digged vp the treaſures, which our faith hath looked vpon being ſhewed to it by the Goſpel of the Lord.Now how neceſſary and how many wayes profitable this exerciſe of praier is, it can by no wordes be ſufficiently declared. Vndoutedly it is not without cauſe that the heauenly father teſtifieth,that the only fortreſſe of ſaluation is in the callinge vpon his name, namely whereby we call to vs the preſence both of his prouidence, by which he watcheth to take care of our matters:and of his power,by which he ſuſtaineth vs being weake and in a maner faintinge:and of his goodneſſe, by which he receiueth vs into fauour being miſerably loden with ſinnes:finally wherby we call him all whole,to giue himſelf preſent to vs.Hereby groweth ſingular reſt and quietnes to our conſciences. For when we haue diſcloſed to the Lorde the neceſſity which diſtreſſed vs, we largely reſt though it were but in this only that none of our euils is hidden frõ him,whom we are perſwaded both to be moſt well willinge toward vs, and moſt able to prouide well for vs.

3 But (will ſome man ſay) did not he know without any to put in minde of it,both in what parte we be diſtreſſed, and what is expedient for vs: ſo that it may ſeeme after a certayne maner ſuperfluous, that he ſhould be troubled with our praiers, as though he winked or ſlept, vntill he were awaked with our voice? But they which ſo reaſon,marke not to what end the Lord hath inſtructed them that be his to pray: for he ordained it not ſo much for his owne cauſe as rather for ours. He willeth in deede, as right it is,that his due be rendred to him,when they acknowledge to come from him whatſoeuer men require or do perceiue to make for their profit,and do teſtifie the ſame with wiſhings.But the profit alſo of this ſacrifice wherwith he is worſhipped, commeth to vs. Therefore how much more boldly the holy fathers glorioufly talked both to themſelues & other of the benefites of God,ſo much the more ſharply they were pricked forward to pray. The onely example of Elias ſhalbe enough for vs,which beinge ſure of the coũſell of God, after that he not raſhly had promiſed raine to drowsie and sluggish, to lay vp his desires with God. Wherefore although while we lie senslesse & so dul that we perceiue not our owne miseries, he waketh and watcheth for vs, and somtime also helpeth vs vndesired, yet it much behoueth vs, that he be cõtinually called vpon of vs, that our heart may be enflamed with earnest and feruent desire to seeke, loue, and worship him, while we accustome our selues in euery necessity to flee to him as to our shoote anchare. Againe, that no desire and no wishe at all may entre into our minde, whereof we should be ashamed to make him witnesse, while we learne to present our wishes, yea & to poure out our whole heart before his eyes. Thẽ, that we may be framed to receiue all his benefites with true thankefulnes of minde, yea & with outward thankesgiuing, of which we are put in mind by our praier that they come to vs from his hand. Moreouer, that when we haue obtained that which we desired, being perswaded that he hath answered to our prayers, we may be thereby the more feruently caried to thinke vpon his kindenes, and therewithall embrace with greater pleasure those thinges which we acknowledge to haue bin obtained by praier. Last of all, that very vse & experience may according to the measure of our weakenesse assure our mindes of his prouidence, when we vnderstand that he not only promiseth that he will neuer faile vs, and that he doth of his owne accord open vs the entry to cal to him in the very point of necessity, but also hath his hand alway stretched out to help thẽ that be his, & that he doth not feede them with wordes, but defendeth them with present help. For these causes, the most kinde Father, although he neuer slepeth or is sluggish, yet oftentimes maketh a shewe as though he slept and were sluggish, that so he may exercise vs, which are otherwise slouthfull and sluggishe to come to him, to aske of him, to require him to our owne great benefit. Therefore they do to foolishly, which to call away the mindes of men from prayer, babble that the prouidence of God, which maketh for the safekeping of all thinges, is in vaine wearied with our callings vpon him: Whereas the Lord contrariwise not in vaine testifieth that he is nie to all them that call vpon his name in trueth. And of none other sort is ỹ which other do triflingly say, that it is superfluous to aske those things which the Lorde is of his owne will ready to giue: whereas euen the very same thinges which flowe to vs from his owne free liberality, he will haue vs acknowledge to be graunted to our praiers. Which thing that notable sentence of the Psalme doth testifie, wherewith many like sayinges do accorde. The eyes of the Lorde are vpon the righteous, and his eares vnto their praiers. Which sayinge so setteth out the prouidence of God bent of his owne accord to prouide for the safety of the godly, that yet he omitteth not the exercise of faith, whereby slouthfulnesse is wiped frō the mindes of men. The eies of God therefore do wake, that he may succour the necessity of the blinde: but he will againe on our behalfs heare our gronings, that he may the better proue his loue toward vs. And so both are true, that the watchman of Israell slepeth not, nor slombreth, and yet that he sitteth still as hauinge forgotten vs when he seeth vs dull and dumme.

4 Now, to frame praier rightly & wel, let this be the first rule, that we be no otherwise framed in minde and hearte, than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. Which verily we shall attaine as touching the minde, of the same being free from fleshly cares and thoughtes wherewith it may be called away or withdrawen from the right and pure beholding of God, do not onely bende it selfe wholly to prayer, but also so much as is possible be lifted vp & caried aboue it selfe. Neither do I here require a minde so at liberty, ỳ it be pricked and nipped with no care, whereas contrariwise the feruentnesse of prayer must by much carefulnesse be kindled in vs (as we see that the holy seruantes of God do sometime declare great tormentes, much more carefulnesses, when they say that they vtter to the Lord a bewailinge voice out of the deepe depth, and out of the middest of the iawes of death) But I say that all strange and foraine cares must be driuen away, wherewith the minde it selfe wandring hither and thither is caried about, & being drawen out of heauen is pressed down to the earth. I meane by this that it must be lifted vp aboue it selfe, that it may not bring into the sight of God any of those things which our blinde & fooliſh reason is wont to imagine, nor may hold it selfe bound within the compasse of her owne vanity, but rise vp to purenes worthy for God.

5 Both these thinges are specially worthy to be noted, that whosoeuer prepareth himselfe to pray, should thereto apply all his senses and endeuours, & not (as men are wont) be diuersly drawē with wandering thoughtes: because there is nothing more contrary to the reuerence of God, than such lightnesse which is a witnesse of too wanton licentiousnesse and loose from all feare. In which thing we must so much more earnestly labour, as we finde it more hard, for no man can be so bent to pray, but that he shall feele many bythoughtes to crepe vpon him, either to breake of, or by some bowing & swaruinge to hinder the course of his prayer. But here let vs call to minde, how great an worthinesse it is, when God receiueth vs vnto familiar talke with him, to abuse his so great gentelnesse, with minglinge holy and

prophane thinges together, when the reuerence of him holdeth not our mindes fast boũd vnto him: but as if we talked with some meane man, we do in the middest of our prayer, forsaking him, leape hither and thither. Let vs therfore know that none do rightly and well prepare themselues to praier, but they whom the maiesty of God pearceth, that they come to it vncumbred of earthly cares and affectiõs. And that is ment by the ceremony of lifting vp of handes, that men shoulde remember that they be farre distant from God, vnlesse they lift vp their senses on hie. As also it is said in the Psalm. To thee haue I lifted vp my soule. And the Scripture oftentimes vseth this manner of speech, to lift vp praier: that they which desire to be hard of God, should not sit stil in their dregges. Let this be the summe: that howe much more liberally God dealeth with vs, gently alluringe vs to vnlode our cares into his bosome, so much lesse excusable are we vnlesse his so excellent and incomparable benefit do with vs ouerweye all other things and draw vs vnto it selfe, that we may earnestly apply our endeuours and senses to pray: which can not be done vnlesse our minde by strongly wrastlinge with the hinderances do rise vp aboue them. An other point we haue set foorth, that we aske no more than God giueth leaue. For though he biddeth vs to poure out our hartes, yet he doth indifferently giue loose reines to foolish and froward affections: and when he promiseth that he will do according to the will of the Godly, he procedeth not to so tender bearing with them that he submitteth himselfe to their will. But in both these pointes men do cõmonly much offend. For not only the most part of men presume without shame, without reuerẽce, to speake to God for their follies, & shamlesly to present to his throne whatsoeuer liked them in their dreame: but also so great foolishnes or senseleſse dulnes possesseth thẽ, that they dare thrust into the hearing of God, euen all their most filthy desires, wherof they would greatly be ashamed to make men priuy. Some prophane men haue laughed to scorne, yea & detested this boldnes, yet the vice it selfe hath alway reigned. And hereby it came to passe that ambitious men haue chosen Iupiter to be their Patrone: couetous men, Mercurie: the desirous of learninge, Apollo and Minerua: warriers, Mars: and Lecherous folke, Venus. Like as at this day (as I haue euen now touched) men do in praiers graunt more licence to their vnlawfull desires, than when they sportingly talke with their Egalles. But God suffreth not his gentlenes to be so mocked: but claiming to himselfe his right, maketh our praiers subiect to his authority, and restraineth them with a bridle. Therefore we must keepe fast this sayinge of Iohn, This is our affiance, that if we aske any thinge according to his wil, he heareth vs. But forasmuch as our abilities are far frō being sufficient to performe so great perfectiō, we must seke a remedy to help vs. As we ought to bend the sight of our mind to God so the affection of the hearte ought also to followe to the same ende. But both do stay farre beneth it, yea rather do faint and faile or be caried a contrary way. Therefore God to succour this weakenesse, in our prayers giueth the Spirite to be our Schoolemaister, to instruct vs what is right, and to gouerne our affections. For, because

Rom. 8. 26. we knowe not what we ought to praye as we ought, the Spirite commeth to our succour, and maketh intercession for vs with vnspeakeable groninges, not that it in deede either prayeth or groneth but stirreth vp in vs affiance, desires, and sighinges, which the strength of nature were not able to conceiue. And not without cause Paule calleth them vnspeakeable groninges which so the faythfull sende foorth by the guidinge of the Spirite, because they which are truely exercised in prayers, are not ignorant that they be so holden in perplexity with blinde cares, that they scarcely finde what is profitable for them to speake: yea while they go about to vtter stammeringe wordes they sticke fast encombred. Whereupon it followeth, that the gift of prayinge rightly is a singular gift. These thinges are not spoken to this purpose, that we fauoringe our owne slouthfulnesse should giue ouer the charge of prayinge to the Spirit of God, and lie dull in that careles nesse, to which we are too much enclined: (as there are hearde the wicked sayinges of some, that we must lie negligently gaping to waite vntill he preuent our mindes occupied elsewhere) but rather that we lothing our owne slouthfulnesse and sluggishnesse,
2. Cor. 14. 26. should craue such helpe of the Spirite. Neither doth Paule, when he biddeth vs to pray in Spirite, therefore ceasse to exhorte vs to wakefulnesse: meaning that the instinct of the Spirite so vseth his force to frame our prayers, that it nothinge hindereth or slacketh our owne endeuour: because God wil in this behalfe proue how effectually faith moueth our heartes.

6 Lette also an othet law be, that in prayinge we alway feele our owne want, & that earnestly thinking how we stand in nede of those thinges that we aske, we ioyne with our prayer an earnest yea feruent affection to obtaine. For, many do slightly for maners sake recite prayers after a prescribed forme, as though they rendered a certaine taske to God: and although they confesse that this is a necessary remedy for their euils, because it is to their destruction to be without the help of God which they craue: yet it appeareth that they do this duety for custome, forasmuch as in the meane time their mindes

are cold, & do not wey what they aske. The generall & confuse feeling in deede of their necessity leadeth them hereunto: but it doth not stirre them as it were in a present case to aske reliefe of their neede. Now what thinke we to be more hatefull or more detestable to God than this fayning, when a man asketh forgiuenesse of sinnes, in the meane time either thinkinge that he is not a sinner, or not thinkinge vppon this that he is a sinner: euen wherewith God himselfe is plainely mocked? But of such peruersenesse (as I haue sayd) mankinde is full, that for manners sake they many times aske many thinges of God, which they certainely Iudge that without his liberalitie to come to them from some other where, or that they haue them already remaininge with them. The fault of some other seemeth to be lighter and yet not tolerable, that they which haue only conceiued this principle that we must sacrifice to God with praiers, do mumble vp praiers without any musing of minde vpon them. But the Godly must principally take heede, that they neuer come into the sight of God to aske any thinge, but because they do both boyle with earnest affection of heart, and do therewithall desire to obtaine it of him. Yea and also though in those thinges which we aske onely to the glory of God, we seeme not at the first sight to prouide for our owne necessity, yet the same ought to be asked with no lesse feruentnesse and vehementnes of desire. As, when we pray that his name be hallowed, we must (as I may so speake) feruently hunger & thirst for that hallowing.

7 If any man obiect, that we are not alway driuen with like necessity to pray, I graunt the same in dede: and this difference is profitably taught vs of Iames: Is any man heauy amonge you? Let him pray. Who so is mery, let him sing. Therfore euen commō feeling teacheth vs, that because we are to slouthfull, therfore, as the matter requireth we are the more sharply pricked forwarde of God to pray earnestly. And this Dauid calleth the fit time, because (as he teacheth in many other places) how much more hardly troubles, discōmodities. feares, and other kindes of tentations do presse vs, so much freer accesse is open for vs, as though God did call vs vnto him. But yet no lesse true is that saying of Paule, that we must pray at all times: because howesoeuer thinges prosperously flowe accordinge to our heartes desire, and matter of mirth doth compasse vs on euery side, yet there is no minute of time wherein our neede doth not exhort vs to pray. If a man haue abundance of wine and wheate: yet sith he can not enioy one morsell of bread but by the continuall grace of God, whole cellars or barnes full shalbe no let why he should not craue daily bread.

Iac.5. 13.

Nowe if we call to minde howe many dangers do euery moment hang ouer vs, the very feare it selfe wil teach vs that we haue no time free from prayer. But this we may better perceiue in spiritual things. For, when shall so many sinnes, wherof we knowe our selues gilty, suffer vs to sit still without care and not in humble wise craue pardon both of the fault and the paine? When do tentations graunt vs truce, so that we neede not to hast vnto helpe? Moreouer the desire of the kingdome and glory of God ought so to plucke vs to it selfe, not by fittes but continually, that it shoulde alway be fit time for vs. Therefore not without cause we are so oft commaunded to pray continually. I do not yet speake of perseuerance in prayer, whereof mention shalbe made herafter: but when ỹ Scripture warneth vs that we ought to pray continually, it accuseth our slouthfulnesse, because we do not perceiue how necessary this care & diligence is for vs. By this rule all hypocrisie & craftinesse of lying to God, is debarred, yea driuen farre away from prayer. God promiseth that he will be neere to all them that call vpon him in trueth, & he pronounceth that they shall finde him which seeke him with their whole heart. But they aspire not thither which please themselues in their owne filthinesse. Therefore a right praier requireth repentance. Whereupon this is commóly said in the Scriptures, that God heareth not wicked doers, and that their praiers are accursed, like as their sacrifices also be: because it is rightful that they finde the eares of God shut, which do locke vp their owne hearts: and that they should not finde God easie to bow, which do with their owne hardnesse prouoke his stiffenesse. In Esay he threatneth after this maner. When ye shall multiply your prayers, I will not heare you: for your handes are full of blond. Againe in Ieremy: I haue cried, and they haue refused to heare: they shall likewise crie, and I will not heare: because he taketh it for a most hie dishonor, that wicked men shoulde boast of his couenant, which do in all their life defile his holy name. Wherfore in Esay he complaineth, that when the Iewes come neare to him with their lippes, their hearte is farre from him. He speaketh not this of only praiers, but affirmeth that he abhorreth faininge in all the partes of worshippinge him. To which purpose maketh that saying of Iames. Ye aske, & receiue not: because ye aske ill, that ye may spende it vpon your pleasures. It is true in dede (as we shal againe shew a litle hereafter) that the prayers of the godly which they pour out, do not rest vpon their owne worthinesse: yet is not that admonition of Iohn superfluous: If we aske any thing, we shall receiue it of him, because we kepe his commaundementes: forasmuch as an euill conscience shutteth the gate against vs. Whereupon upon followeth that none do rightly pray, nor are hearde, but the pure worshippers of God. Therefore whosoeuer prepareth himselfe to pray, let him be lothfull to himselfe in his owne euils, and (which can not be done without repentance) let him put on the person and minde of a begger.

8 Hereunto let the third rule be ioyned, that whosoeuer presenteth himselfe before God to pray, should forsake all thinkinge of his owne glory, put of all opinio of worthines, & finally giue ouer al trust of himselfe, giuing in the abacing of himselfe ỹ glory wholly to God: least if we take any thing be it neuer so litle to our selues, we do with our owne swelling fall away from his face. Of this submission which throweth downe all heighth, we haue often examples in the seruantes of God: amõg whom the holier that euery one is, so much the more he is throwen downe when he commeth into the sight of the Lord. So Daniel, whom the Lord himselfe commended with so great a title of praise, sayd: We poure not out our praiers before thee in our righteousnesses, but in thy great mercies. Here vs Lord, Lord be mercifull to vs: Heare vs, & do these thinges that we aske, for thine owne sake: becausse thy name is called vpon ouer ỹ people & ouer thy holy place Neither doth he by a crooked figure (as mẽ somtime speake) mingle himselfe with the multitude as one of the people, but rather seuerally confesseth his owne giltinesse & humbly fleeth to the sanctuary of forgiuenes, as he expresly sayth: When I confessed my sinnes and the sinnes of my people. And this humblenes Dauid also setteth out with his owne example, when he sayth: Enter not into iudgement with thy seruãt, becausse in thy sight euery one that liueth shall not be iustified. In such manner Esay prayeth: Loe, thou art angry becausse we haue sinned, the world is founded in thy wayes, therefore we shalbe saued: And we haue bin all filled with vncleannes, & all our righteousnesses as a defiled cloth: and we haue all withered away as a leafe, & our iniquities do scatter vs abroad as the winde: and there is none that calleth vpon thy name, that raiseth vp himselfe to take holde of thee: becausse thou hast hid thy face from vs, & hast made vs to pine away in the hande of our wickednes. Now therefore O Lord, thou art our father, we are clay, thou art our fashioner, & we are the worke of thy hande. Be not angry O Lord, neither remember wickednes for euer. Behold, looke vpon vs, we are al thy people. Loe, how they stand vpon no affiance at all, but vpon this only, that thinking vpon this that they be Gods, they despeire not that he will haue care of them. Likewise Ieremy: If our iniquities answere against vs, do thou for thy names sake. For it is both most truely & most holy written, of whomsoeuer it be, which being wrytten by an vnknowen author is fathered vpon the Prophet Baruch: A ſoule heauy & deſolate for the greatnes of euil, crooked, and weake, a hungry ſoule, & fainting eies giue glory to thee O Lord. Not accordinge to the righteouſneſſes of our fathers do we poure out praiers in thy ſight, and aske mercy before thy face O Lord our God: but becauſe thou art mercifull, haue mercy vpon vs, becauſe we haue ſinned before thee.

9 Finally the beginning and alſo the preparing of praying rightly, is crauing of pardon, with an humble & plaine confeſſion of fault. For neither is it to be hoped, that euen the holieſt man may obtaine any thing of God, vntill he be freely reconciled to him: neither is it poſſible that God may be fauourable to any but them whom he pardoneth. Wherefore it is no maruel if the faithfull do with this keie open to thẽſelues the dore to pray. Which we learne out of many places of the Pſalmes. For Dauid when he asketh an other thing, ſayth: Pſal. 25 6. & 18. Remember not the ſinnes of my youth, remember me according to thy mercy for thy goodneſſes ſake O Lord. Againe, Looke vpon my affliction, and my labour, & forgiue all my ſinnes. Where we alſo ſee ẏ it is not enough, if we euery ſeueral day do cal our ſelues to accõpt for our newe ſinnes, if we do not alſo remember thoſe ſinnes which Pſa. 51. 7. might ſeeme to haue bin long ago forgotten. For, the ſame Prophet in an other place, hauinge cõfeſſed one hainous offenſe by this occaſion returneth euen to his mother wombe wherein he had gathered the infection: not to make the fault ſeeme leſſe by the corruption of nature, but that heapinge together the ſinnes of his whole life, howe much more rigorous he is in condemninge himſelfe, ſo much more eaſie he may find God to entreate. But although ẏ holy ones do not alway in expreſſe words aske forgiuenes of ſinnes, yet if we diligently weye their prayers which the Scripture rehearſeth, we ſhall eaſily finde that which I ſay, that they gathered a mind to pray of the only mercy of God, and ſo alway tooke their beginning at appeaſing him becauſe if euery manne examine his owne conſcience, ſo farre is he from being bold to open his cares familiarly with God, that he trembleth at euery comming toward him, except that he ſtandeth vpon truſt of mercy and pardon. There is alſo an other ſpeciall confeſſion, where they ask releaſe of peines, ẏ they alſo pray to haue their ſinnes forgiuen: becauſe it were an abſurdity to will that the effect be taken away while the cauſe abideth. For we muſt beware that God be fauorable vnto vs, before that he teſtifie his fauour with outwarde ſignes: becauſe both he himſelfe will kepe this order, & it ſhould litle profit vs to haue him beneficiall, vnleſſe our conſcience feling him appeaſed sed shoulde throughly make him louely vnto vs. Which we are also taught by the answere of Christ. For when he had decred to heale the man sicke of the Palsey, he sayd, Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee: lifting vp our mindes thereby to that which is chiefly to be wished, that God first receiue vs into fauour, and then shew forth the frute of reconciliation in helping vs. But beside that special confessiō of present giltines, whereby the faithful make supplication to obtaine pardon of euery special fault & peine, that general preface, which procureth fauour to praiers, is neuer to be omitted, because vnlesse they be groūded vpon the free mercy of God, they shall neuer obtaine any thing of God. Wherunto may be referred that saying of Iohn: If we cōfesse our sinnes, he is faithful & righteous to forgiue vs, & clense vs from all iniquity. For which cause it behoued praiers in the time of the law to be hallowed with expiation of blood, ý they might be acceptable, & that so the people should be put in minde that they are vnworthy of so great a prerogatiue of honor, till being cleansed from their defilings they should of the only mercy of God cōceiue affiance to pray.

Matt 9. 2. 1. Ioh. 1 9.

10 But whereas the holy ones seeme somtime for the entreatinge of God to alleage the help of their owne righteousnes (as when Dauid saith: kepe my soule, because I am good. Againe Ezechias: Remēber Lord I beseech thee, that I haue walked before thee in trueth, and haue done good in thine eies) by such formes of speaking they mean nothing else than by their very regeneratiō to testifie thēselues to be the seruants & children of God, to whome he himselfe pronounceth that he will be mercifull. He teacheth by the prophet (as we haue already seene) that his eies are vpō the righteous, & his eares vnto their praiers. Againe by the Apostle, that we shall obtaine whatsoeuer we aske, if we keepe his cōmaundements. In which sayings he doth not value praier by the worthinesse of workes: but his will is so to stablish their affiance, whose owne conscience well assureth them of an vnfained vprightnes & innocency, such as all the faithfull ought to be. For the same is taken out of the very trueth of God, which the blind man ý had his sight restored, saith in Iohn, ý God heareth not sinners: if we vnderstand sinners after the cōmon vse of the Scripture, for such as without all desire of righteousnes do altogether slepe & rest vpon their sinnes: forasmuch as no heart can euer breake forth into vnfained calling vpon God which doth not also aspire to godlines. Therfore with such promises accord the praiers of the holy ones, wherein they make mentiō of their owne purenes or innocency that they may feele ý to be giuen them which is to be looked for of al ý seruants of God. Againe it is thē cōmonly found ý they vse this kinde of prayer, whē they do in the preſence of the lord compare themſelues, w̄ their enemies, frō whoſe vniuſt dealing they wiſhed themſelues to be deliuered by his hand. In this compariſon it is no maruel if they brought forth their righteouſnes & ſimplicity of heart to moue him ỹ rather by ỹ rightfulnes of their cauſe to help thē. This therfore we take not away frō the godly heart of a good mā, but ỹ he may vſe the purenes of his conſcience before the lord, to ſtrengthē himſelf in ỹ promiſes wherwith the Lord cōforteth & vpholdeth his true worſhippers: but our meaning is, that the truſt of obtaining ſtand vpon the only mercy of God, laying away all thinking of their owne deſeruing.

Psal 86 2 Reg. 20. 2. Psal. 34. 16. 1. Ioh. 3 Iohn. 9. 31.

11 The fourth rule is, that being ſo throwen downe and ſubdued with true humility, we ſhould neuertheles with certaine hope of obtaining be encouraged to pray. Theſe be things in deede contrary in ſhew, to ioyne with the feeling of the iuſt vengeance of God ſure affiance of fauour: which things do yet very well agree together, if the onely goodneſſe of God raiſe vs vp beinge oppreſſed with our owne euills. For, as we haue before taught that repentance & faith are knit as companions together with an vnſeparable bond: of which yet the one afraieth vs, the other chereth vs: ſo in prayers they muſt mutually meete together. And this agreement Dauid expreſſeth in fewe Pſa.5.8 wordes: I (ſayth he) will in the multitude of thy goodneſſe enter into thy houſe: I will worſhip in the temple of thy holineſſe with feare. Vnder the goodneſſe of God he comprehendeth faith, in the meane time not excluding feare: becauſe not only his maieſty driueth vs to reuerence, but alſo our owne vnworthineſſe holdeth vs in feare forgetting all pride & aſſurednes. But I meane not ſuch an affiance which ſhould ſtroke the minde looſed from all feeling of carefulnes with a ſweete & full quieteneſſe. For, to reſt ſo peaſably is the doing of them which hauinge all thinges flowing as they would wiſh it, are touched with no care, are kindled with no deſire, do ſwel with no feare. And it is a very good ſpurre to the holy ones to call vpon God, when being diſtreſſed with their owne neceſſity, they are vexed with moſt great vnquieteneſſe, & are almoſt diſmaied in themſelues, till faith come in fit time to their ſuccours, becauſe in ſuch diſtreſſes the goodneſſe of God ſo ſhineth to them, ỹ they do in dede grone beinge weried with weight of preſent euils, they are alſo in paine & grieued with feare of greater, yet being ſo vpholden by it, they both relieue and cōfort the hardnes of bearing them, & do hope for eſcape & deliuerance. Therfore the prayer of a godly man muſt ariſe out of both affections, muſt alſo containe & ſhew both: namely to grone for preſent euils, & to be carefully afraid of new, & yet therwithall to flie to God, not douting

thar he is ready to reach his helpinge hande. For God is maruelously prouoked to wrath by our distrustfulnes, if we aske of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothinge more agreable with the nature of praiers, than that this law be prescribed & apointed to them, that they breake not foorth rashly, but folowe faith going before thē. To this principle Christ calleth vs all w̄ this saying: I say vnto you, whatsoeuer things ye require, beleue ẏ ye shal receiue them, & they shall happen to you. The same also he cōfirmeth in an other place. Whatsoeuer ye aske in prayer beleuing, ye shall receiue. Wherwith agreeth Iames sayinge, If any neede wisdom, let him aske it of him which giueth to all mē freely, & vpbraideth not: but let him aske in faith no douting. Wherin setting douting as contrary to faith, he doth most fittely expresse the natūre of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he addeth, that they obtaine nothinge which cal vpon God in wauering & dout, and do not determine in their hearts whether they shal be heard or no. Whom he also cōpareth to waues which are diuersly tossed and driuen about of the winde. Whereupon in an other place he calleth a right praier, the praier of faith. Againe whē God so oft affirmeth that he will giue to euery one acording to his faith, he signifieth that we obtaine nothing without faith. Finally it is faith that obtaineth whatsoeuer is graunted by prayer. This is meant by that notable sayinge of Paule, which the foolishe menne do take no heede vnto. Howe shall any man call vpon him, in whome he hath not beleued? But whoe shall beleue, vnlesse he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearinge, and hearinge of the word of God. For, cōueying by degrees the beginning of praier from faith, he plainely affirmeth that God can not be sincerely called vpō of any other, than them to whom by the preachinge of the Gospell his mercifulnes and gentlenesse hath bin made knowen, & familiarly declared.

Mat. 11. 24. Mat. 21. 22. Iam. 5. 15. Rom. 10 14.

12 This necessity our aduersaries do not thinke vpon. Therefore when we bid the faithfull to holde with assured confidence of minde that God is fauourable & beareth good will to them, they thinke that we speake a most great absurdity. But if they hadde any vse of true praier, they would truely vnderstand that God can not be rightly called vpon without that stedfast feeling of Gods good will. Sith no mā can wel perceiue the force of faith, but he which by experience feleth it in his heart: what may a man profitte by disputinge with such men which do openly shew, that they neuer had any thing but a vaine imaginatiō? For of what force, & how necessary is ẏ assurednes which we require, is chiefely learned by inuocation. Which who so seeth not, he bewraieth ỹ he hath a very dul cõſcience. Let vs therfore, leauing this kinde of blindemen, ſticke faſt in that ſaying of Paule, that God can not be called vpon of any other, but them that know his mercy by the Goſpell, & are ſurely perſwaded ỹ it is ready for thẽ. For what maner of ſaying ſhould this be? O Lord, I am verily in dout whether thou wilt heare me: but becauſe I am diſtreſſed with carefulnes, I flee to thee, that thou maiſt help me if I be worthy. This was not the wõted maner of all the holy ones, whoſe praiers we reade in the Scriptures. Neither hath ỹ holy Ghoſt thus taught vs by the Apoſtle which biddeth vs to go to the heauenly throne with cõfidence, that we may obtaine grace & when in an other place he teacheth ỹ we haue boldnes & aeceſſe in confidence by the faith of Chriſt. We muſt therfore holde faſt with both handes this aſſurednes to obtaine what we aske (ſith both the Lord with his owne voice ſo cõmaundeth vs, & all the holy ones teach it by their exãple) if we will pray with frute. For, that only praier is pleaſinge to God which ſpringeth out of ſuch a preſũptiõ of faith (as I may ſo call it) & is groũded vpon a dredles certainty of faith. He might haue bin content with the bare name of faith, but he not only added cõfidence, but alſo furniſhed the ſame with liberty or boldnes, by this marke to put differẽce betwene vs & vnbeleuers, which do in deede alſo praye to God as we do, but at aduenture. For which reaſon ỹ whole Church praieth in ỹ Pſalme: Let thy mercy be vpon vs, as we put our truſt in thee. The ſame cõdition is alſo ſpoken of in an other place by the Prophet: In what day I ſhall crie, this I know that God is with me. Againe, in the morninge I will direct my ſelfe to thee, & I wil watch. For of theſe words we gather, that praiers are in vaine caſt into ỹ aire, vnleſſe hope be adioined, from whenſe as out of a watchtour we may quietly waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeth the order of Paules exhortation. For before that he moue the faithfull to pray in ſpirit at all times with wakefulnes & diligence, he firſt of al biddeth them to take the ſhield of faith, the helmet of ſaluation, & the ſwerd of the ſpirit, which is the word of God Now let the readers here cal to remẽbrance that which I haue before ſaid, ỹ faith is not ouerthrowen where it is ioyned with acknowledginge of our miſery, nedines, & filthines. For with how heauy weight ſoeuer of euil doings the faithfull feele themſelues to be ouerloden or grieued, & ỹ they be not only void of all thinges which may procure fauour with God, but alſo that they be burdened with many offenſes which may worthily make him dreadful to them: yet they ceaſſe not to preſent themſelues, neither doth this feeling make thẽ ſo afraid but that they ſtil reſort to him, foraſmuch as there is no other way to come to him. For, prayer was not ordained, whereby we ſhould arrogantly aduãce our ſelues before God, or eſteme at great value any thing of our owne, but wherby confeſſing our giltines, we ſhould bewaile our miſeries to him, as childrẽ do familiarly open their cõplaints to their parents. But rather the vnmeaſurable heape of our euils ought to be full of ſpurres or prickes to pricke vs forward to pray. As alſo the prophet teacheth vs by his example, ſayinge. Heale my ſoule, becauſe I haue ſinned againſt thee. I graunt in deede that in ſuch ſayings ſhould be deadly prickings vnleſſe God did help: but the moſt good father of his incomparable tender kindes hath brought remedy in fit ſeaſon, whereby appeaſing all trouble, aſſuaginge all cares, wiping away feares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea & taking away all doutes (much more all ſtoppes) he might make vs an eaſie way. Pſa. 64. 5.

13 And firſt when he commaundeth vs to pray, he doth by the very ſame commaundement accuſe vs of wicked obſtinacy, vnleſſe we obey him. Nothing could be more preciſely commaunded, than that which is in the pſalme: call vpon me in the day of trouble. But foraſmuch as among all the dueties of godlines, the ſcripture cõmendeth none more often, I nede not to tary longer vpõ this point. Aske (ſaith our maiſter) & ye ſhal receiue: knocke, it ſhalbe opened to you. Howbeit here is alſo with the commaundement ioyned a promiſe as it is neceſſary. For though all men cõfeſſe that the cõmaundement ought to be obeied, yet the moſt part would flee from God whẽ he calleth, vnleſſe he promiſed ẏ he would be eaſie to be entreated, yea & would offer himſelfe. Theſe two things being ſtabliſhed, it is certain ẏ whoſoeuer make delaies that they come not ſtreight to God, are not only rebellious and diſobedient, but alſo are proued gilty of infidelity, becauſe they diſtruſt the promiſes. Which is ſo much more to be noted, becauſe hypocrites vnder the colour of humility & modeſty do as wel proudly deſpiſe the commaundement of God, as diſcredit his gentle callinge, yea and defraud him of the chiefe part of his worſhip. For after that he hath refuſed ſacrifices, in which at that time al holines ſeemed to ſtand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing and moſt precious to him, aboue all other, to be called vpon in the day of nede. Therefore where he requireth his owne, & encourageth vs to cherefulnes of obeyinge, there are none ſo gay colours of douting ẏ may excuſe vs. Wherfore how many teſtimonies are cõmonly found in ẏ ſcriptures wherby we are cõmaunded to cal vpon God, ſo many ſtandardes are ſette vp before our eyes to put affiance into vs. It were raſhnes to ruſhe into the ſight of God, vnleſſe he did preuẽt vs with calling vs. Therfore he openeth vs ẏ way with his owne voice ſaying: Pſa. 50. 15. Mat. 7. 7

Zach.13.9. I will say to them, Ye are my people: and they shal say to me, thou art our God. We see how he preuenteth them that worship him, & willeth them to follow him, and therfore it is not to be feared that this should not be a very swete melody which he tuneth. Specially let this notable title of God come in our minde, wherupon if we stay, we shall Psa. 65.3. easily passe ouer all stoppes. Thou God that heareſt prayer, euen to thee shall all flesh come. For what is more louely or more alluringe, than that God be garnished with this title which may ascertaine vs that nothing is more proper to his nature, than to graunt the desire of humble suters? Hereby the Prophet gathereth that the gate standeth open not only to a fewe, but to all men: because he speaketh euen to Psa. 50.15. all in this sayinge: Call vpon me in the day of trouble: I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. According to this rule Dauid laieth for himselfe that a promise was giuen him, that he may obtaine what 2.Sa.7.27. he asketh: Thou Lorde hast reuealed into the eare of thy seruaunt: therefore thy seruaunt hath found his heart to pray. Whereupon we gather that he was fearefull, sauing insomuch as the promise had encouraged him. So in an other place he armeth himselfe with this Psa.145.19. general doctrine. He will do the will of them that feare him. Yea & this we may note in ỹ Psalmes ỹ as it were breaking his course of praying he passeth ouer somtime to the power of God, somtime to his goodnesse, somtime to the trueth of his promises. It might seeme that Dauid by vnseasonable thrustinge in of these sentences, made mangeled praiers: but the faithfull know by vse and experience, that feruentnes fainteth vnlesse they put new nourishmentes vnto it, and therfore in prayinge the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his word is not superfluous. And so by the example of Dauid, let it not grieue vs to thrust in such things as may refresh fainting hearts with new liuely strength.

14 And it is wonderfull that with so great sweetenesse of promises we are either but coldly or almost not at all moued, that a great parte of men wandringe about by compasses had rather leauinge the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge for themselues drie pitts, than to embrace the liberality of God freely offred thē. An inuincible tour is the Pro.18.10. name of the lord, (saith Salomon) to it the righteous man shal flee, & he shalbe saued. And Ioel, after that he had prophecied of that horrible Ioel.2.32. destructiō which was at hand, added this notable sentence. Whosoeuer calleth vpon the name of ỹ lord, shalbe safe: which sentēce we know to pertaine properly to the course of ỹ Gospell. Scarcely euery hundreth mā is moued to go forward to mete God. He himself crieth Esa.65.24. by Esay: Ye shal cal vpō me, & I wil heare you, yea before that ye crie,

I will aunſwer you. And this ſame honor alſo in an other place he voucheſaueth to geue in common to the whole Church, as it belongeth to all the membres of Christ. He hath cried to me, I will heare him, I am in trouble with him, that I may deliuer him. Neither yet (as I haue already ſaid) is it my purpoſe to recken vp all the places, but to chooſe out the chiefe, by which we may take a taſt howe kindely God allureth vs vnto him, and with howe ſtreight bonds our vnthankfulnes is bound, when among ſo ſharp prickings our ſluggiſhneſſe ſtil maketh delay. Wherefore let theſe ſayings alway ſound in our eares: The Lorde is nie to all them that call vpon him, that call vpon him in trueth: alſo theſe ſayings which we haue alleged out of Eſaye and Ioel, by which God affirmeth that he is hedefull to heare prayers, yea and is delited as with a ſacrifice of ſwete ſauoure, when we caſt our cares vpon him. This ſingular frute we receiue of the promiſes of God, when we make our prayers not doubtingly & ſerefully: but truſting vpon his word, whoſe maieſty wold otherwiſe make vs afraide, we dare call vpon him by the name of Father, foraſmuch as he voucheſaueth to put this moſt ſwete name into our mouthes. It remaineth that we hauing ſuch allurementes ſhould knowe that we haue thereby matter enough to obteine our prayers: foraſmuch as our prayers ſtand vpon no merite of our own, but all their worthines and hope of obteining are grounded vpon the promiſes of God, and hang vpon them: ſo that it nedeth none other vnderpropping, nor loketh vpwarde hither or thither. Therfore we muſt determine in our minds, that although we excell not in like holines as is praiſed in the holy fathers, prophets & Apoſtles, yet becauſe the cõmaundement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is alſo common, if we reſt vpon the word of God, in this right we are fellowes with them. For, God (as we haue before ſhewed) promiſing that he will be gentle, and mercifull to all, geueth cauſe of hope to all euen the moſt miſerable that they ſhall obteine what they aſke. And therefore the generall formes are to be noted, from which no man (as they ſay) from the firſt to the laſt is excluded: onely let there be preſent a purenes of heart, miſliking of our ſelfes, humility, and faith: let not our hypocriſy vnholily abuſe the name of God with deceitfull calling vpon it: the moſt good father will not put back them, whom he not onely exhorteth to come to him, but alſo moueth them by all the meanes that he can. Herupon cometh the mãner of praying of Dauid which I haue euen nowe reherſed. Lo thou haſt promiſed, Lorde, to thy ſernant: for this cauſe thy ſeruant at this day gathereth courage, and hath found what prayer he might make before thee. Now therfore

O Lorde God, thou art God, and thy words ſhalbe true. Thou haſt ſpoken to thy ſeruant of theſe benefits: begin therfore, and do them.
Pſa.119 76. As alſo in an other place, Performe to thy ſeruant according to thy word. And all the Iſraelites together, ſo oft as they arme themſelues with remembrance of the couenant, do ſufficiently declare that we ſhould not pray fearfully, wheras the Lorde ſo apointeth. And herein
Gen.32 10. they followed the examples of the fathers, ſpecially of Iacob, which after that he had cõfeſſed that he was vnworthy of ſo many mercies which he had receiued at the hand of God, yet he ſaith that he is encoraged to require greater things becauſe God had promiſed that he would do thẽ. But whatſoeuer colours the vnbeleuers do pretend, when they flee not to God ſo oft as neceſſitie preſſeth thẽ, when they ſeke not him nor craue his helpe, they do as much defraud him of his due honor as if they made to themſelfes newe Gods, and idoles: for by this meane they deny that he is to thẽ the author of all good thinges. On the other ſide there is nothing ſtronger to deliuer the godly from all dout, than to be armed with this thought, that no ſtop ought to ſtay them while they obey the commaundement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleaſing to him than obedience. Here againe that which I ſaid before more clerely appereth, that a dredles ſpirit to pray agreeth well with fear, reuerẽce, and carefulnes: and that it is no abſurdity to ſay that God raiſeth vp the ouerthrowen. After this manner thoſe formes of ſpeach agree well together which in ſeming are contrary. Ieremie and Daniel ſay that they

Pſa.141 of the fatherly loue of God, cherefully committ themſelues into his faithfull keping, and dout not to craue the helpe which he freely promiſeth: yet doth not an idle careleſneſſe lift them vp, as though they had caſt away ſhame, but they aſcend ſo vpward by degrees of promiſes, that they ſtill remaine humble ſuppliants in the abacement of themſelues.

15 Here are queſtions obiected more than one. For the ſcripture reporteth that the Lorde granted certaine deſires which yet brake forth of a minde not quiet nor well framed. Verily for a iuſte cauſe:
Iu.9.20 Ioatham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichem, to the deſtruction which afterward came vpon thẽ: but yet God kindled with feruẽtnes

of anger and vengeance following his execration seemeth to allowe ill tempered violent passions. Such heat also caried Samson when he said, Strengthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the vncircumcised. Iud.6. 28. For though there were some peece of good zele mingled with it: yet a hote, and therefore faulty gredines of vengeance did beare rule therin. God granted it. Whereupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the prayers be not framed according to the prescribed rule of the word, yet they obteine their effect. I answer first that a generall law is not taken away by singular examples: again, that somtime speciall motions haue bene put into a fewe men, wherby it came to passe that there was an other cõsideration of thẽ than of the cõmon people. For the aunswer of Christ is to be noted, when the disciples did vndiscretly desire to coũterfait the example of Elias, that they knewe not with what spirit they were endued. Luc. 9. 55. But we must go yet further, and say that the prayers do not alway please God which he granteth: but that, so much as serueth for example that is by clere praise made plaine which the scripture teacheth, namly that he succoureth the miserable, heareth the gronings of them which being vniustly troubled do craue his helpe: that therefore he executeth his iudgemẽts, when the complaints of the poore rise vp to him, although they be vnworthy to obteine any thing be it neuer so litle. For howe oft hath he taking vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lustes and other wicked doings of the vngodly, subduing their boldnes and rage, and also ouerthrowing their tyrannous power, testified that he helpeth the vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beat the aire with praying to an vncertaine godhed? And one Psalme plainely teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet do not pearce into heauen by faith. Psa.107 For he gathereth together those prayers which necessitie wringeth no lesse out of the vnbeleuers thã out of the godly by the very feling of nature: to which yet he proueth by the effect that God is fauourable. Is it because he doth with such gentlenes testifie that that they be pleasing to him? No. but to enlarge or to set out his mercie by this circumstance, for that euen to vnbeleuers their prayers are not denied: and then the more to pricke forward his true worshipers to pray, when they see that profane wailinges sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithfull should swarue from the lawe laid vpon them by God, or should enuie the vnbeleuers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they haue obteined their desire. After this manner we haue said, that the Lorde was bowed with the repentance of Achab, that he might shew by this example how easy he is to entreat toward 1.King. 21.39.

his elect, when true turning is brought to appeaſe him. Therefore in Pſal.100 5. the Pſalme he blameth the Iewes, that they hauing by experience proued him ſo eaſy to grant their prayers, yet within a litle after returned to the ſtubbornes of their nature. Which alſo plainely appeareth by the hiſtory of the Iudges: namely that ſo oft as they wept, although their teares were deceitfull, yet they were deliuered out of the handes of their enemies. As therefore the Lord indifferently bringeth forth his ſunne vpon the good and the euell: ſo doth he alſo not deſpiſe their weepinges, whoſe cauſe is righteous and their miſeries woorthy of helpe. In the meane time he no more heareth theſe to ſaluation, than herein miniſtreth foode to the deſpiſers of

But this ſolution ſhall (as I truſt) ſatisfie ſober readers: that they being inſtructed with the generall principles, whereby God cõmaundeth them to be mercifull euen alſo to the vnworthy, were not altogether without faith, although in Libr. de ciu. Dei 22. ca. 1. a ſpeciall caſe their opinion deceiued them Auguſtine writeth wiſely in a certaine place. Howe (ſaith he) do the holy ones pray by faith, to aſke of God contrarie to that which he hath decreed? Euen becauſe they pray according to his will: not that hiddẽ & vncheangeable will, but the will which he inſpireth into them, that he may heare them after an other manner: as he wiſely maketh difference. This is well ſaid: becauſe after his incomprehenſible counſell he ſo tempereth the ſucceſſes of things, that the prayers of the holy ones be not voyde which are wrapped both with faith and errour together. Neither yet ought this more to auaile to be an example to followe, than it excuſeth the holy ones themſelues, whome I denie not to haue paſſed meaſure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promiſe, we muſt aſke of God with a condition adioined. To which pur-
Pſal. 7. 7. poſe ſerueth that ſaying of Dauid. Watch to the iudgement which thou haſt commaunded: becauſe he telleth that he was warranted by a ſpeciall oracle to aſke a temporall benefite.

16 This alſo it is profitable to note, that thoſe things which I haue ſpoken of the fower rules of right prayer, are not ſo exactly required with extreme rigor, that God refuſeth the prayers in which he ſhall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a feruentneſſe of zele and well ordered requeſtes. We haue ſaid

that although prayer be a familiar talke of the godly with God, yet we must kepe a reuerēce and modestie, that we geue not loose reines to all requestes whatsoeuer they be, and that we desire no more than God geueth leaue: and then, least the maiesty of God should growe in contempt with vs, that we must lift our mindes vpward to a pure & vndefiled worshipping of him. This no man hath euer performed with such pureness as it ought to be. For (to speake nothing of the common sort) howe many cōplaintes of Dauid do sauore of vntemperance: not that he meant of purpose to quarell with God, or carpe against his iudgementes: but because he fainting for weakenesse, found no other better comfort, than to cast his sorrowes into his bosome. Yea and God beareth with our childish speach and pardoneth our ignorance, so oft as any thing vnaduisedly escapeth vs: as truely without this tender bearing, there shoulde be no libertie of praying. But although Dauids minde was to submit himselfe wholly to the will of God, and he prayed with no lesse patience than desire to obteine: yet there arise yea boile out sometimes troublous affections, which are much disagreing from the first rule that we haue set. Specially we may perceiue by the conclusion of the xxxix. Psalme, with howe great vehemence of sorrowe that holy man was carried away, that he could not kepe measure. Cesse (saith he) frō me, til I go away and be not. A man would say that he like a desperate man desireth nothing els but that the hand of God cessing, he might rot in his euels. He saith it not for that he with an auowed minde runneth into such outrage, or (as the reprobate are wont) would haue God to depart from him: but onely he complaineth that the wrath of God is to heauy for him to beare. In these tentations also there fall out oftentimes requestes not well framed according to the rule of the word of God, and in which the holy ones do not sufficiently wey what is lawfull and expedient. Whatsoeuer prayers are spotted with these faultes, they deserue to be refused: yet if the holy ones do bewaile, correct themselues, and by & by come to themselues againe, God pardoneth them. So they offend also in the second rule, because they are oftentimes driuen to wrastle with their owne coldenesse, & their neede and misery doth not sharply enough pricke them to pray earnestly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes do slippe aside, and in a manner wander away into vanitie. Therefore in this behalfe also there is neede of pardon, least our faint, or vnperfect, or broken and wandering prayers haue a deniall. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with mindes lifted vpwarde. Hereupon came the ceremonie of lifting vp of handes, as we haue before ſaid, which hath bene vſed in all ages and nations, as yet it is in vre. But howe many a one is there, which when he lifteth vp his hands, doth not in his owne conſcience finde himſelfe dull, becauſe his heart reſteth vpon the grounde? As touching the aſking of forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, although none of the faithful do ouerpaſſe it, yet they which are truly exerciſed in prayers do fele that they bring ſcarcely the tenth part of that ſacrifice, of Pſal 51. 19. which Dauid ſpeaketh. An acceptable ſacrifice to God is a troubled ſpirit: a broken and humbled heart O God thou wilt not deſpiſe. So there is alway double pardon to be aſked, both becauſe they knowe themſelues gilty in cõſciences of many faultes, with feeling whereof they are not yet ſo touched, that they miſlike themſelues ſo much as they ought: and alſo that, ſo much as it is giuen them to profit in repentance and in the feare of God, they being throwen downe with iuſt ſorrowe for their offenſes, ſhould pray to eſcape the puniſhment of the iudge. Chefely the febleneſſe or imperfection of faith corrupteth the prayers of the faithful, vnleſſe the tendre mercie of God did helpe them. But it is no maruell that God pardoneth this default, which doth oftentimes exerciſe them that be his with ſharpe inſtructions, as if he would of purpoſe quench their faith. This is a moſt harde tentation, when the faithfull are compelled to crie: How long wilt thou be angry vpon the prayer of thy ſeruant? as though the Pſa. 80. very prayers made God more angry. So whẽ Ieremie ſaith. The Lord

Lam. 3. 8. hath ſhut out my prayer, it is no dout that he was ſhaken with a violẽt pange of trouble. Innumerable ſuch examples are commonly found in the ſcriptures, by which appeareth that the faith of the holiones was oftentimes mingled and toſſed with doutinges, that in beleuing and hoping they bewrayed yet ſome vnfaithfulneſſe: but bicauſe they come not ſo far as it is to be wiſhed, they ought to endeuor ſo much the more that their faults being amended, they may daily come nerer to the perfect rule of praying, and in the meane time to fele in howe great a depth of euels they be drowned, which euen in the very remedies do get to themſelues newe diſeaſes: ſith there is no prayer, which the Lorde doth not worthily loth, vnleſſe he winke at the ſpottes wherwith they are all beſprinkled. I reherſe not theſe things to this ende that the faithfull ſhould careleſly pardon themſelues any thing, but that in ſharply chaſtiſing themſelues they ſhould trauaile to ouercome theſe ſtoppes, and although Satan laboure to ſtoppe vp all the wayes, that he may kepe them from praying, yet neuertheleſſe they ſhould breake through, being certainly perſwaded, that although they be not vncombred of all hinderances, yet their endeuors do pleaſe God,& their prayers are allowed of him,ſo ỹ they trauaile and bende thẽſelues thitherward,whether they do not byandby attaine.

17 But foraſmuch as there is no man woorthy to preſent himſelfe to God, and to come into his ſight:the heauenly Father himſelfe to deliuer vs both from ſhame and feare which ſhould haue throwen downe all our courages, hath geuen to vs his ſonne Ieſus Chriſt our Lorde, to be an aduocate and Mediator with him for vs, by whoſe leading we may boldly come to him, truſting that we haue ſuch an interceſſor, nothing ſhall be denied vs which we aſke in his name,as nothing can be denied him of the Father. And here vnto muſt all be referred whatſoeuer we haue heretofore taught cõcerning faith:bycauſe as the promiſe ſetteth out vnto vs Chriſt for our Mediator, ſo vnleſſe our hope of obteining ſtay vpon him, it taketh from it ſelfe the benefite of praying. For ſo ſoone as the terrible maieſty of God cõmeth in our minde, it is impoſſible but that we ſhould tremble for feare,& the acknowledging of our own vnwoorthineſſe ſhould driue vs far away, till Chriſt come meane betwene vs and him, which may change the throne of dreadfull glorie into the throne of grace:as alſo the Apoſtle teacheth that we may be boulde to appeare with al confidence which ſhall obteine mercy and finde grace in helpe cõming in fit ſeaſon. And as there is a lawe ſet that we ſhould call vpon God like as there is a promiſe geuen, that they ſhalbe heard which call vppon him: ſo are we peculiarly commaunded to call vppon him in the name of Chriſt, and we haue a promiſe ſet forth, that we ſhall obteine that which we ſhall aſke in his name.Hetherto (ſaith he) ye haue not aſked any thing in my name: aſke and ye ſhall receiue. In that day ye ſhall aſke in my name,and whatſoeuer ye aſke, I will do, that the father may be glorified in the ſonne.Herby it is plaine without controuerſie, that they which call vpon God in any other name than of Chriſt, do ſtubbornly breake his commaundements, and regarde his will as nothing, and that they haue no promiſe to obteine any thing. For (as Paule ſaith) all the promiſes of God are in Chriſt, yea and Amen,that is to ſay,they are confirmed and fulfilled.

18 And ỹ circunſtance of the time is diligẽtly to be marked,where Chriſt cõmaundeth his diſciples to flee to interceſſiõ to him after that he is gone vp into heauen.In that houre(ſaith he)ye ſhall aſke in my name. It is certain ỹ euen from the beginning none were hearde that prayed,but by meane of ỹ Mediator. For this reaſon ỹ Lord had ordeined in the law,ỹ the prieſt alone entring into ỹ ſanctuarie, ſhould beare vpõ his ſhoulders the names of the tribes of Iſraell, & as many precious ſtones before his breaſt:but the people ſhould ſtãd a far of in the porche, & from thense should ioine their prayers with the priest. Yea and the sacrifice auailed hereto, that the prayers should be made sure and of force. Therefore that shadowish ceremonie of the lawe taught that we are all shutt out from the face of God, and that therfore we neede a Mediator, which may appeare in our name, and may beare vs vpon his shoulders, and holde vs fast bound to his breast, that we may be heard in his person: then that by sprinkeling of bloode our prayers are cleansed, which (as we haue already said) are neuer voide of filthinesse. And we see that the holy ones, when they desired to obteine any thing, grounded their hope vpon sacrifices, bycause they knewe them to be the stablishings of all requestes. Let him remembre thy offring (sayeth Dauid) and make thy burnt offring fatt. Hereupon is gathered that God hath bene from the beginning appeased by the intercession of Christ, to receiue the prayers of the godly. Why then doth Christ apoint a newe heire, when his Disciples shall beginne to pray in his name, but becausse this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, so deserueth more commendation with vs. And in this same sense he had said a litle before. Hetherto ye haue not asked any thing in my name: now aske. Not that they vnderstood nothing at all of the office of the Mediator (whereas all the Iewes were instructed in the principles) but becausse they had not yet clerely knowen that Christ by his ascending into heauen should be a surer patron of the Church than he was before. Therefore comfort their greefe of the absence with some speciall frute, he claimeth to himself the office of an aduocate, & teacheth that they haue hitherto wanted the chiefe benefite, which it shalbe graunted them to enioy, when being aided by his mediation, they shall more frely call vpon God: as the Apostle saith that his newe way is dedicate in his blood. And so much lesse excusable is our frowardnes, vnlesse we do with both armes (as the saying is) embrace so inestimable a benefite, which is proprely apointed for vs.

19 Nowe whereas he is the onely way, and the onely entrie by which it is graunted vs to come in vnto God: whoe so do swarue from this way and forsake this entrie, for them there remaineth no way nor entrie to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, iudgement, and terrour. Finally sith the Father hath marked him for our heade, and guide, they which do in any wise swarue or go away from him, do labore as much as in them lieth to race out & disfigure the marke which God hath imprinted. So Christ is set to be the only Mediator, by whose intercession the Father may be made to vs fauorable and easy to be entreated. Howe be it in the meane time the holy holy ones haue their intercessions left to them, whereby they do mutually commend the safetie one of an other to God, of which the Apostle maketh mention: but those be such as hange vpon that one onely intercession: so farre is it of, that they minish any thing of it. For as they springe out of the affection of loue, wherewith we embrace one an other, as the membres of one body: so they are also referred to the vnitie of the heade. Sith therefore they also are made in the name of Christ, what do they els but testifie that no manne canne be holpen by any prayers at all, but with the intercession of Christ? And as Christ with his intercession withstandeth not, but that in the Church we may with prayers be aduocates one for an other: so let this remaine certaine, that all the intercessors of the whole Church ought to be directed to that onely one. Yea and for this cause we ought specially to be beware of vnthankefulnesse, bycause God pardoning our vnworthinesse, doth not onely geue leaue to euery one of vs to pray for himselfe, but also admitteth vs to be entreaters one for an other. For, where God appointeth aduocates for his Church which deserue worthily to be reiected if they pray priuately euery one for himselfe: what a pride were it to abuse this libertie to darken the honoure of Christ? 1.Ti.2.1

20 Nowe it is a meare trifeling, which the Sophisters bable, that Christ is the Mediatour of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediatours of intercession. As though Christ hauing performed a Mediation for a time, hath geuen to his seruauntes that eternall Mediatourshippe which shall neuer dy. Full courteously forsoth they hādle him, that cutte away so little a portion of honor from him. But the Scripture saith farre otherwise, with the simplicitie whereof a godly man ought to be contented, leauing these deceiuers. For where Iohn saith, that if any do sinne, we haue an aduocate with ỹ Father, Christ Iesus: doth he meane that he was ones in olde time a patrone for vs, and not rather assigneth to him an euerlasting intercession? Howe say we to this that Paule also affirmeth, that he sitteth at the right hande of God the Father and maketh intercession for vs? And when in an other place he calleth him the onely Mediatour of God and men: meaneth he not of prayers, of which he had a little before made mention? For when he hadde before said that intercession must be made for all men: for proofe of that saying, he by and by addeth, that of all menne there is one God and one Mediatour. And none otherwise doth Augustine expounde it, when he saith thus: Christian menne do mutually commende themselues in their prayers. But he for whom none maketh intercession, but he for all, he is the only 1.Ioh.2.2. Rom. 8.32. 1.Ti.2.5. Rom 15 30. Lib.cō. tra Par. 2.Ca.8.

and true Mediatour. Paule the Apoſtle, though he were a principall membre vnder the heade (yet bycauſe he was a membre of the body of Chriſt, and knewe that the greateſt and trueſt prieſt of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inward places, of the vaile, to the holy of holy places, but by expreſſe & ſtedfaſt trueth into the inner-

21 As touching the Saintes, which being deade in the fleſh do liue in Chriſt, if we geue any prayer at all to them, let vs not dreame that they themſelues haue any other way of aſkinge, than Chriſt which onely is the way, or that their prayers be acceptable to God in any other name. Therfore ſith the Scripture calleth vs backe from all to Chriſt only: ſith the heauenly fathers wil is to gather together all in him: it was a point of to much dulnes, I wil not ſay madnes, ſo to deſire to make for our ſelues an entrie by them, that we ſhould be ledde away from him without whome euen they them ſelues haue no entrie open. But, that this hath bene vſually done in certaine ages paſt, and that it is at this day done whereſoeuer Papiſtry reigneth, who can denie? Their merites are from time to time thruſt in, to obteine the good will of God: and for the moſt part, Chriſt being passed ouer, God is prayed to by their names. Is not this, I beseche you to conuey away to them the office of that onely intercession, which we haue affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Againe, what Angel or Deuell euer reueled to any man any one syllable of this their intercession which these men faine? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? Truely, when the witte of man so seketh for it selfe succoures, wherewith we are not certified by the word of God, it plainly bewrayeth his owne distrustfulnesse. If we appeale to all their consciences that are delited with the intercession of saintes, we shall finde that the same cõmeth from no other ground, but because they are greued with carefulnes, as though Christ were in this behalf either to weake or to rigorous. By which doubtfulnesse first they dishonour Christ, and robbe him of the title of onely Mediatour, which as it is geuen him of the Father for a singular prerogatiue, so ought not also to be conueyed away to any other. And in this very doing they darken the glorie of his birth, they make voide his crosse, finally whatsoeuer he hath done or suffred they spoile & defraude of the due praise therof: for all tend to this ende that he may be in deede and be accompted the onely Mediatour. And therewith they cast away the goodnesse of God, which gaue himselfe to be their Father. For he is not their father, vnlesse they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they vtterly deny vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection towarde them, than which there can nothing be more kinde or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth onely him to vs, sendeth vs to him, and stayeth vs in him. He (saith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we speake to the Father: our eye, by which we see the Father: our right hande, by which we offer vs to the Father, otherwise than by whose intercession neither we nor all the Saintes haue any thing with God. If they aunswer that the cõmon prayers which they make in Churches, are ended with this cõclusiõ adioined, Through Christ our Lorde: this is a trifeling shifte: because the intercession of Christ is no lesse profained when it is mingled with the prayers and merites of deade men, than if it were vtterly omitted and onely deade men were in our mouth. Againe, in al their Letanies, Hymnes, and Proses where no honor is lefte vngeuen to deade saintes, there is no mention of Christ. Libr. de Isa. & anima.

22 But their foolish dulnesse proceded so farre, that here we haue the nature of Superstition expressed, which when it hath ones shaken of the bridle, is wont to make no ende of running astray. For after that men ones begun to loke to the intercession of Saintes, by litle and litle there was geuen to euery one his ſpeciall doing, that according to the diuerſity of buſines, ſomtime one & ſomtime an other ſhould be called vpon to be interceſſor: then they to them ſelues euery one his peculiar Sainte, into whoſe faith they cõmitted themſelues as it were to the keping of ſafegarding Gods. And not onely (wherewith the prophet in the olde time reproched Iſraell) Gods were ſet vp according to the nũbre of cities, but euen to the numbre of perſons. But ſith the Saintes referre their deſires to the onely will of God, and behold it and reſt vpon it: he thinketh fooliſhly, and fleſhly, yea and ſclaunderouſly of them, which aſſigneth to them any other prayer, then whereby they pray for the comming of the kingdome of God: from which that is moſt farre diſtant which they faine to them, that euery one is with priuate affection more partially bent to his owne worſhippers. At length many abſtained not frõ horrible ſacrilege, in calling nowe vpon them not as helpers but as principall rulers of their ſaluation. Lo wherunto fooliſh men do fall when they wander out of their true ſtanding, that is, the word of God. I ſpeake not of the groſſer monſtruouſneſſes of vngodlineſſe, wherin although they be abhominable to God, Angels, & men, they are not yet aſhamed nor wery of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catharine, and ſuch other, do mumble Pater noſter, Our father. This madnes the Paſtors do ſo not care to heale or reſtraine, that being allured with ỹ ſwete ſauour of gaine they allowe it with reioiſing at it. But although they turne frõ themſelues the blame of ſo hainous an offenſe, yet by what colour will they defende this that Loy or Medard are prayed vnto to looke downe vpon & helpe their ſeruantes from heauen? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to commaunde her ſonne to do that which they aſke? In the olde time it was forbidden in the Councel at Carthage, ỹ at the alter no directe prayer ſhould be made to Saintes. And it is likely that when the holy men could not altogether ſuppreſſe ỹ force of that naughty cuſtome, yet they added at leaſt this reſtraint that the publike prayers ſhould not be corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter pray for vs. But howe much further hath their deuelliſh importunacie ranged, which ſticke not to geue away to deade men that which proprely belonged onely to God and Chriſt?

23 But whereas they traauaile to bring to paſſe that ſuch interceſſion may ſeeme to be grounded vpon the authoritie of ſcripture, therin they labor in vaine. We read oftẽtimes (ſay they) of the prayers of Angels: & not that only: but it is ſaid that the prayers of the faithfull are by their handes caried into the ſight of God. But if they liſte to cõpare holy men departed out of this preſent life, to Angels: they ſhould proue that they are miniſtring ſpirits, to whom is comitted the miniſterie to loke to our ſafetie, to whom the charge is geuen to kepe vs in all our wayes, to go about vs, to admoniſh and coũſell vs, to watch for vs: all which things are geuen to Angels, but not to thẽ. Howe wrongfully they wrappe vp deade holy men with Angels, appeareth largly by ſo many diuers offices, whereby the ſcripture putteth difference betwene ſome and other ſome. No man dare execute the office of an aduocate before an earthely iudge, vnleſſe he be admitted, from whẽſe then haue wormes ſo great libertie, to thruſt vnto God thoſe for patrons to whom it is not read that the office is enioined? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to loke vnto our ſaftie, wherefore they do both frequent holy aſſembles, and the Church is a ſtage to thẽ, wherein they wõder at the diuers & manifold wiſdome of God. Who ſo conueye away to other that which is peculiar to them, verily they cõfounde and peruert the ordre ſet by God, which ought to haue bene inuiolable With like hãdſomneſſe they procede in alleging other teſtimonies. God ſaid to Ieremie: If Moſes and Samuel ſhould ſtand before me, my ſoule is not to this people. Howe (ſay they) could he haue ſpoken thus of deade men, vnleſſe he knewe that they made interceſſion for the liuinge? But I on the cõtrary ſide gather thus, that ſith it thereby appeareth that neither Moſes nor Samuel made interceſſiõ for the people of Iſrael, there was then no interceſſion at all of deade men. For which of the Saintes is to be thought to be carefull for ỹ ſafetie of the people, whẽ Moſes ceſſeth, which in this behalfe farre paſſed al other when he liued? But if they followe ſuch ſlight ſuttelties, to ſay that the deade make interceſſion for the liuing, becauſe the Lorde ſaid, If they ſhould make interceſſiõ: I will much more colorably reaſon in this maner: In the extreme neceſſitie of the people Moſes made not interceſſiõ, of whom it is ſaid, if he ſhall make interceſſion. Therefore it is likely that none other maketh interceſſion, ſith they are all ſo farre from the gentleneſſe, goodneſſe, and fatherly carefulneſſe of Moſes. This forſoth they get with cauilling, that they be wounded with the ſame weapons, wherwith they thought themſelues gaily fenſed. But it is very fonde that a ſimple ſentẽce ſhould ſo be wreſted, becauſe the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not ſpare the offenſes of the people, although they had ſeen Moſes to be their patron, or Samuel, to whoſe prayers he had ſhewed himſelfe ſo tender. Which ſenſe is moſt clerely gathered out of a like place of Ezechiel. If (ſaith the Lorde) theſe three men were in ỹ citie, Noe, Daniel, & Iob, they ſhall not deliuer their ſonnes and daughters in their righteousnesse: but they shall deliuer onely their owne soules. Where it is no dout that he meant if two of them should happen to reuiue againe, for the thirde was thē aliue, namely Daniell, who (as it is knowen) did in the first florishing of his youth shewe an incomparable example of godlinesse. Let vs then leaue them whom ẏ Scripture plainly sheweth to haue ended their course. Therfore Paule, when he speaketh of Dauid, teacheth not ẏ he doth with prayers helpe his posteritie, but onely that he serued his owne time.

24 They answere againe: shall we then take from them all prayer of charitie, which in the whole course of their life breathed nothing but charitie and mercie? Verily as I will not curiously searche what they do, or what they muse vpon: so it is not likely, ẏ they are caried about hether and thether with diuerse and particular requestes: but rather that they do with a stayed & vnmoued will, long for the kingdome of God, which standeth no lesse in the destructiō of the wicked than in the saluation of the godly. If this be true, it is no dout that their charitie is conteined in the communion of the body of Christ, and extendeth no further, than the nature of that cōmunion beareth. But nowe though I graunt that they pray in this maner for vs, yet they do not therfore depart from their own quietnesse, to be diuersly drawen into earthly cares: and much lesse must we therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby followe that they must so do, because men which liue in earth may commende one an other in their prayers. For this doing serueth for nourishing of charitie among them, when they do as it were part and mutually take vpon them their necessities among themselues. And this they do by the commandement of the Lorde, and are not without a promise, which twoo things, haue alway the chefe place in prayer. All such considerations are farre from the dead, whom when the Lord hath cōueyed from our companie, he hath left to vs no enterchāge of doings with them, nor to them with vs, so farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man allege, that it is impossible but that they must kepe the same charity toward vs, as they be ioined in one Faith with vs: yet who hath reueled ẏ they haue so long eares to reach to our voices? and so percing eyes to watch our necessities? They prate in their shadowes I wote not what of the brightnes of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on hie behold the matters of men beneath. But to affirme that, specially with such boldnesse as they dare, what is it elles but to go about by the dronken dreames of our owne braine, without his word to pearce & breake into the hidden iudgements of God, & to treade

the Scripture vnder fete which so oft pronoũceth that the wisdome of the flesh is enemie to the wisdome of God, which wholly condemneth the vanitie of our naturall witt, which willeth all our reason to be throwen downe, and the onely will of God to be loked vnto of vs. Ro.8.6.

25 The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defende this their lie, they most noughtily wrest. But Iacob (said they) praieth that his name & the name of his Fathers Abraham & Isaac be called vpon ouer his posteritie. First let vs see what forme of calling vpon this is amõg the Israelites. For they call not vpon their Fathers, to helpe them: but they besech God to remẽber his seruantes Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for thẽ that speake to the Saintes themselues. But because those blockes (such is their dulnesse) neither vnderstande what it is to call vpon the name of Iacob, nor why it is to be called vpõ: it is no maruell if in the very forme also they so childishly stumble. This maner of speche is not seldome founde in the Scriptures. For Esaye saith that the name of the men is called vppon ouer the women, when they haue them as their husbandes vnder whoes charge & defense they liue. Therfore the calling vpon of the name of Abrahã vpon the Israelites, standeth in this when they conuey their pedegree from him, and doo with solemne memorie honor him for their author & parent. Neither doth Iacob this because he is carefull for the enlarging of the renome of his name: but for asmuch as he knewe that the whole blessednesse of his posteritie cõsisted in the enheritance of the couenant which God had made with him: he wisheth that which he seeth should be the chefe of all good things to them, that they be accõpted in his kinred: For, that is nothinge ells but to conuey to them the succession of the couenant. They againe when they bring such remembrãce into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of deade men: but do put the Lorde in minde of his couenant, wherby the most kinde father hath promised that he will be fauorable & beneficiall to thẽ for Abrahãs, Isaacs, and Iacobs sakes. Howe litle the holy ones did otherwise leane vpon the merites of their father, the cõmon saying of the Chirch in the Prophet testifieth, Thou art our Father, and Abraham knewe vs not, & Israell was ignorant of vs. Thou Lorde art our Father and our redemer. And when they say thus, they adde therwithall, Returne O Lorde for thy seruants sakes: yet thinking vpon no intercession, but bendinge their minde to the benefite of the couenãt. But now sith we haue the Lord Iesus, in whoes hand the eternall couenant of mercy is not onely made but also confirmed to vs: whoes name should we rather vse in our prayers? And because these good maisters will haue Gen.48 16. Esa.4.1. Esa.63. 16.

the Patriarches to be by theſe wordes made interceſſors, I woulde faine knowe of them why in ſo great a route Abraham the Father of the Chirch hath no place at all among them. Out of what ſinke they feth their aduocates, it is not vnknowē. Let thē aunſwere me, how hit it is that Abrahā, whom God preferred aboue all other, and whom he aduaunced to the hieſt degree of honor, ſhould be neglected & ſuppreſſed. Verily when it was euident that ſuch vſe was vnknowē to the old Chirch, they thought good for hiding of the newneſſe to ſpeake nothing of the olde Fathers: as though ẏ diuerſity of names excuſed the newe & forged maner. But whereas ſome obiect ẏ God is prayed vnto, to haue mercy on ẏ people for Dauids ſake, it doth ſo nothing at all make for defenſe of their error, that it is a moſt ſtrōg proſe for the cōfutation therof. For if we cōſider what perſon Dauid did beare: he is ſeuered from all the aſſembly of ẏ Saintes, ẏ God ſhould ſtabliſh the couenāt which he hath made in his hāde. So both ẏ couenāt is rather cōſidered thā ẏ mā, & vnder a figure ẏ only interceſſiō of Chriſt is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belōged only to Dauid, in ſo much as he was the image of Chriſt, accordeth not ẅ any other.

26 But this forſoth moueth ſome, that it is oftentimes red that the prayers of Saintes haue bene heard. Why ſo? Euen becauſe they
Pſa. 22. 5. prayed. They truſted in thee (ſaith the Prophet) & they were ſaued: they cried, and they were not cōfounded. Therefore let vs alſo pray as they did, that we may be heard as they were. But theſe men, otherwiſe than they ought, do wrōgfully reaſon, that none ſhalbe heard but they that haue ones bene heard. Howe much better doth Iames ſay?
Iam. 6. 17. Elias (ſayeth he) was a man like to vs: & he prayed with prayer that it ſhould not raine, & it rained not vppon the earth in three yeares and ſix monethes. Againe he prayed, and the heauen gaue raine, and the earth gaue here frute. What? doth he gather any ſingular prerogatiue of Elias, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is ẏ continual ſtrength of godly & pure praier, to exhorte vs likewiſe to pray. For we do niggardly conſtrue the redineſſe & gentleneſſe of God in hearing thē, vnleſſe we be by ſuch experiences cōfirmed into a more ſure affiāce of his promiſes, in ẅ he promiſeth ẏ his eare ſhalbe encli-ned not to one, or two, nor yet to a few, but to all ẏ call vpō his name. And ſo much leſſe excuſable is this fooliſhneſſe, becauſe they ſeeme as it were of ſet purpoſe to deſpiſe ſo many admonitiōs of Scripture.
Pſa. 142. 8 Dauid was oft deliuered by the power of God. Was it that he ſhould draw that power to himſelf, that we ſhould be deliuered by his helpe?

and trust in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, and he hath answered him. There be in the psalmes many such praiers, in which to craue that which he requireth, he moueth God by this maner, ý the righteous be not made ashamed, but may by his exãple be raised vp to hope well. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore euery holy one shall pray to thee in fit time. Which place I haue so much the more willingly rehearsed, because the leud babblers which do let out to hire the seruice of their waged tongue haue not bin ashamed to alleage it to proue the intercession of the dead. As though Dauid meant any thing else, than to shew the frute that shall come of the mercifulnesse and gentlenesse of God, when he shall be heard. And in this kinde, we must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well towarde our selues as other, is no slender help to cõfirme the credit of his promises. I leaue vnrehearsed many places, where Dauid setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of cõfidence, because the readers of the Psalmes shal commonly find them without sekeing. This selfe same thing had Iacob before taught by his owne example: I am vnworthy of all thy mercies, and of the trueth which thou hast performed to thy seruant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Iordane, and now I come forth with two bandes. He alleageth in deede the promise, but not alone: but he also ioineth the effect, that he may the more couragiously in time to come trust that God will be the same toward him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are wery of their liberality, or whose ability is wasted: but he is to be weyed by his owne nature, as Dauid wisely doth where he sayth, Thou hast redeemed me, O God that speakest trueth. After that he hath giuẽ to God the praises of his saluation, he addeth that he is a true speaker: because vnlesse he were cõtinually like himselfe, there could not be gathered of his benefites a sufficiently strong reason of affiance & calling vpon him. But when we know that so oft as he helpeth vs, he sheweth an exãple & proofe of his goodnesse, we neede not to feare that our hope shalbe put to shame or disapoint vs.

27 Let this be the summe. Whereas the Scripture setteth out this vnto vs for the chiefe point in the worshipping of God, (as refusing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this duety of godlinesse) praier is not without manifest sacrilege directed to other. Wherfore also it is sayd in the Psalme. If we stretch forth our hands to a strãge God, shall not God require these things? Againe, wheras God wil not be called vpõ, but of Faith, & expresly commaũdeth praiers to be framed according to the rule of his word: finally wheras Faith founded vpon the word, is the mother of right praier: ſo ſone as we ſwarue frō the word, our praier muſt needes be corrupted But it is already ſhewed, that if the whole Scripture be ſought, this honor is therein chalenged to God only. As touching the office of interceſſiō, we haue alſo ſhewed that it is peculiar to Chriſt, & that there is no praier acceptable to God, but which that mediator halloweth. And though the faithful do one for an other offer praiers to God for their brethren, we haue ſhewed that this abateth nothing from the onely interceſſion of Chriſt: becauſe they altogether ſtanding vpon it do cōmend both thēſelues & other to God. Moreouer we haue taught that this is vnfitly drawen to dead men, to whom we neuer read that it hath bin commaunded that they ſhould pray for vs. The Scripture doth oftentimes exhorte vs to mutuall doings of this duety one for an other: but of dead men

Iam. 5. 8. there is not ſo much as one ſyllable: yea and Iames ioyning theſe two things together, that we ſhould cōfeſſe our ſelues among our ſelues, & mutually pray one for an other, doth ſecretly exclude deade men. Therfore to condemne this errour, this one reaſon ſufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, ſpringeth out of Faith, and that Faith commeth of the hearing of the word of God, where is no mentiō of the fained interceſſion, becauſe ſuperſtition hath raſhly gotten to it ſelfe patrones which were not giuen them of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many formes of praier, there is no example found of this patronſhip, without which in ẏ papacy they beleue that there is no praier. Moreouer it is certaine that this ſuperſtition hath growē of diſtruſtfulneſſe either becauſe they were not content with Chriſt to be their interceſſour, or haue altogether robbed him of his praiſe. And this later point is eaſily proued by their ſhameleſneſſe: becauſe they haue no other ſtronger argumēt to proue that we haue nede of the interceſſion of Saintes, than whē they obiect that we are vnworthy of familiar acceſſe to God. Which we in deede graunt to be moſt true: but thereupō we gather, that they leaue nothing to Chriſt, which eſteeme his interceſſion nothinge worth, vnleſſe there be adioyned George, Hypolite, or ſuch other viſors.

28 But although prayer properly ſignifieth only wiſhes & petitiōs: yet there is ſo great affinity betwene petitiō & thankeſgiuing, ẏ they may be fitly comprehended both vnder one name. For, theſe ſpecial ſortes which Paule rehearſeth, fall vnder the firſt part of this diuiſion. With asking & crauing we poure forth our deſires before God, requiring as well thoſe things ẏ ſeme to ſpred abroade his glory & ſet forth his name, as the benefites that are profitable to our vſe. With giuinge of thankes, we do with due praiſe magnifie his good doinges towarde vs, acknowledging to be receiued of his liberality whatsoeuer good things do come to vs. Therfore Dauid cõprehended these two partes togethe, saying: Call vpon me in the day of necessity : I will deliuer thee, & thou shalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vaine cõmaundeth vs to vse both. For we haue sayd in an other place that our nedines is so great, & ẏ experience it selfe crieth out that we are on euery side pinched and pressed with so many & so great distresses, that all haue cause enough why they should both sigh to God, & in humble wise call vpon him. For though they be free from aduersities, yet the giltines of their wicked doings, & their innumerable assaultes of tentations ought to pricke forwarde the most holy to aske remedy. But in the sacrifice of praise and thankesgiuing there can be no interruptiõ without hainous sinne, forasmuch as God cesseth not to heape vpon diuerse men diuerse benefites to driue vs though we be slacke & slow, to thankfulnes. Finally so great & so plenteous largesse of his benefits doth in a maner ouerwhelme vs: ther are so many & so great miracles of his sene on euery side which way soeuer thou turne thee, that we neuer want ground and matter of praise and thankesgiuinge. And, that these thinges may be somewhat plainelier declared: sith all our hopes and wealth stand in God (which we haue before sufficiently proued) that neither we nor all our things can be in prosperity but by his blessinge : we must continually commit our selues and all our things to him. Then, whatsoeuer we purpose, speake, or do, let vs purpose, speake, & do vnder hs hande & wil, finally vnder the hope of his help. For, all are pronounced accursed of God, which deuise or determine any purposes vppon trust of themselues or of any other, which without his wil, & without calling vpon him do enterprise or attempt to begin any thing. And wheras we haue diuerse times already said, ẏ he is duely honored when he is acknowledged the author of al good things: therupon followeth that all those things are so to be receiued at his hande, that we yelde continuall thankes for them: & that there is no other right way for vs to vse his benefites, which flow & procede frõ his liberality to no other end, but ẏ we should be continually busied in confessing his praise & giuing of thankes. For Paul, when he testifieth ẏ they are sanctified by the word & praier, doth therewithal signify ẏ they are not holy & cleane to vs without the word & praier, vnderstanding by ẏ word, faith by figure. Therefore Dauid saith very wel, when hauing receiued ẏ liberality of the Lord, he declareth that there is giuen him into his mouth a new song: wherby verily he signifieth that it is a malitious silence, if we passe ouer any of his benefits without praise : sith he so oft giueth vs matter to say good of him, as he doth good to vs. As also Esay settinge out the singular grace of God, exhorteth the faithfull to a new and vnwonted songe. In which sense Dauid sayth in an other place, Lord open thou my lippes, and my mouth shall shew foorth thy praise. Likewise Ezechias and Ionas testifie ý this shalbe to thē the end of their deliuerance, to celebrate the goodnes of God with songes in the temple. This same Law Dauid prescribeth to all the godly. What shal I repay to the Lord (saith he) for all the thinges that he hath bestowed vpon me? I will take the cup of saluations, and will call vpon the name of the Lorde. And the same law the Church foloweth in an other Psalme, Saue vs our God, that we may confesse to thy name and glory in thy praise, Againe, he hath looked vnto the praier of the solitary, and he hath not despised their praiers. This shalbe wrytten to the generation that shal follow, and the people created shall praise the Lorde, that they may declare his name in him and his praise in Hierusalem. Yea so oft as the faithfull besech God to do for his names sake: as they professe themselues vnworthy to obtaine any thinge in their owne name, so they binde themselues to giue thanks, and they promise that this shalbe to them the right vse of the bountifulnes of God that they shalbe publishers of it. So Osee speakinge of the redemption to come of the Church, sayth: Take away iniquity O God, and lift vp good: and we will pay the calues of lippes. And the benefites of God do not onely claime to themselues the praise of the tongue, but also do naturally procure loue. I haue loued (sayth Dauid) becausé ý Lord hath heard the voice of my prayer. Againe in an other place, rehearsing the helpes which he had felt, he sayth: I will loue thee O God my strength. Neither shal the praises euer please God, which shal not flow out of this sweetenes of loue. Yea and also we must holde fast this sayinge of Paule, that all praiers are wrongfull and faulty to which is not adioyned giuinge of thankes. For thus he sayth, in all praier and besechinge with thankesgiuing, let your petitions, be knowen with God. For, sith testinesse, tediousnesse, impatience, bitternes of griefe, and feare do moue many in prayinge to murmure, he commaundeth that our affections be so tempered, that the faithful ere they haue obtained that which they desire, should neuertheless cherefully blesse God. If this knot ought to haue place in things in a maner cōtrary, with so much more holy band doth God binde vs to sing his praises, so oft as he maketh vs to enioy our requestes. But as we haue taught that our praiers are hallowed by the intercession of Christ, which otherwise shoulde be vncleane: so the Apostle, where he commaundeth vs to offer a sacrifice of praise by Christ, putteth in minde that we haue not a mouth clean enough to praise the name of God, vnlesse the priesthode of Christ become the meane. Whereupon we gather that men haue bin monstruously bewitched in the papacy, where the greater part marueleth ỳ Christ is called an aduocate. This is the cause why Paule cõmaundeth both to pray and to giue thankes without cessinge: namely for that he willeth that with so great cõtinuing as may be, at euery time in euery place, in all matters and businesses, the praiers of all men should be lifted vp to God, which may both looke for al things at his hand & yelde to him the praise of al things, as he offreth vs continuall matter to praise and pray. Heb. 13. 15. 1. Thes. 5. 13.

29 But this continuall diligence of prayinge, although it specially concerne the propre and priuate prayers of euery man, yet somewhat also pertaineth to the publike prayers of the Church. But those can neither be continuall, nor ought otherwise to be done than according to the politike order that shall by cõmon consent be agreed vpon amonge all. I graunt the same in dede. For therefore certaine houres are set & appointed, as indifferent with God, so necessary for the vses of men, that the cõmodity of all men may be prouided for, and all things (according to the saying of Paul) may be comelily and orderlỹ done in the Church. But this maketh nothing to the cõtrary but that euery Church ought both from time to time to stirre vp it selfe to often vse of prayers, and when it is admonished by any greater necessity, to be feruent with more earnest endeuour. As for perseuerance which hath a great affinity with continual diligence, there shall be a fitte place to speake of it about the ende. Nowe these make nothing for the much babling which Christ willed ỳ we should be forbidden. For he forbiddeth not to continue longe, nor oft, nor with much affection in praiers, but that we shoulde not trust that we may wringe any thinge out of God, by dullinge his eares with much babbling talke, as if he were to be perswaded after the maner of mẽ For we know that Hypocrites, becausse they do not cõsider that they haue to do with God, do no lesse make a põpous shew in their praiers than in a triumph. For, the Pharisee which thanked God that he was not like to other men, without dout reioysed at himselfe in the eyes of men, as if he would by praier seeke to get a fame of holines. Hereupon came that much babblinge, which at this day vpon a like cause is vsed in ỳ papacy: while some do vainly spend the time in repeating the same praiers, and other some do set out themselues amonge the people with a lõg heape of words. Sith this babbling childishly mocketh God, it is no maruell that it is forbidden out of the Church, to the end that nothing should there be vsed but earnest & proceeding Matt. 6. 7.

from the bottome of the hart. Of a neere kinde and like to this corruption is there an other, which Christ condemneth with this, namely that hypocrits for boasting sake do seeke to haue many witnesses, and do rather occupy the market place to pray in, than their praiers shoulde want the praise of the worlde. But whereas we haue already shewed that this is the mark that praier shooteth at, that our mindes may be caried vpward to God, both to confession of praise & to craueinge of helpe: thereby we may vnderstande that the chiefe duetie thereof do stand in the minde & the hart, or rather that praier it selfe is properly an affection of the inward hart, which is poured forth and laid open before God the searcher of hearts. Wherfore (as it is already sayd) the heauenly schoolemaister, whē he minded to set out the best rule of praying, cōmaunded vs to go into our chamber, & there the dore beinge shut to pray to our Father which is in secrete, that our Father which is in secrete may heare vs. For when he hath drawen them away frō the example of hypocrites, which with ambitious boasting shew of prayers sought the fauour of men, he therewithall addeth what is better, namely to enter into our chamber, & there to pray the dore being shut. In which words (as I expound them) he willed vs to seeke solitary beinge, which may helpe vs to descende & to enter throughly with our whole thought into our hart, promising to the affections of our hart that God shalbe neere vs whose tēples our bodies ought to be. For he meant not to deny but that it is expedient also to pray in other places: but he sheweth that praier is a certaine secret thing, which both is chiefly placed in the soule, & requireth the quiet therof farre from all troubles of cares. Not without cause therfore the Lorde himselfe also, when he was disposed to apply himselfe more earnestly to praier conueied himselfe into some solitary place farre from the troublesome company of men: but to teach vs by his example that these helpes are not to be despised, by which our mind being to slippery of it selfe is more bent to earnest applying of praier. But in the meane time euen as he in the middest of the multitude of men, abstained not from praying, if occasion at any time so serued: so should we in all places where nede shalbe, lift vp pure handes. Finally thus it is to be holdē, that whosoeuer refuseth to pray in the holy assembly of the godly, he knoweth not what it is to pray aparte, or in solitarines, or at home. Againe, that he that neglecteth to pray alone or priuatly how diligently soeuer he haunt publike assemblies, doth there make but vaine praiers: becaus he giueth more to the opinion of men than to the secret iudgement of God. In the meane time, that the commō praiers of the Church should not grow into contempt,

God

God in old time garnished them with glorious titles, specially where he called the temple the house of praier. For, by this sayinge he both taught that the chiefe part of the worshipping of him is the duety of praier: & that to the end that the faithfull shoulde with one consent exercise themselues in it, the temple was set vp as a standard for them. There was also added a notable promise: There abideth for thee, O God, praise in Sion: & to thee the vow shalbe paied. By which wordes the Prophet telleth vs, that the praiers of the Church are neuer void: because the Lord alway ministreth to his people matter to sing vpon with ioy. But although the shadowes of the law are cessed: yet because the Lords wil was by this ceremony to nourish among vs also the vnity of faith, it is no dout that the same promise belōgeth to vs, which both Christ hath stablished with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

Esa. 56. 7.

30 Now as the Lord by his word cōmaundeth the faithfull to vse common praiers: so there must be cōmon temples appointed for the vsing of them: where who so refuse to communicate their praier with the people of God, there is no cause why they should abuse this pretense, that they enter into their chamber that they may obey the cōmaundemēt of the Lord. For he that promiseth that he wil do whatsoeuer two or three shall aske beinge gathered together in his name, testifieth that he despiseth not praiers openly made: so that boastinge and seking of glory of men be absent, so that vnfained & true affectiō be present which dwelleth in the secret of the hart. If this be the right vse of temples (as truely it is) we must againe beware that neither (as they haue begon in certaine ages past to be accompted) we take them for the proper dwellinge places of God from whense he may more nerely bende his eare vnto vs: nor faine to them I wote not what secrete holinesse, which may make our praier more holy before God. For sith we our selues be the true tēples of God we must pray in our selues if we will call vpon God in his own holy temple. As for ỳ grosnesse, let vs which haue a commaundement to call vpon the Lord in Spirit and trueth without difference of place, leaue it to the Iewes or the Gentiles. There was in dede a temple in old time by the cōmaundement of God for offringe of praiers and sacrifices: but that was at such time as the truth lay hid figured vnder such shadowes, which being now liuely expressed vnto vs doth not suffer vs to stick in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Iewes themselues with this condition, that they should enclose the presence of God, within the walles thereof, but whereby they might be exercised to beholde the image of the true temple. Therfore they, which in any thought

Act.7. 48. that God dwelleth in temples made with handes, were sharply rebuked of Esay and Stephen.

31 Here moreouer it is more than euident, that neither voice nor song, if they be vsed in praier, haue any force, or do any whit profite before God, vnlesse they procede from the depe affectiō of the hart. But rather they prouoke his wrath against vs, if they come only from the lippes and out of the throte: forasmuch as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockery of his maiesty: as we gather out of the words of Esay, which although they extende further, yet pertaine also to reproue this fault. This people (sayth he) commeth nere to with their mouth and honoreth me with their lippes but their hart is farre from me: and they haue feared me with the commaundement and doctrine of men. Therefore beholde I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at: For, wisdom shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neither yet do we here condemne voice or singing, but rather do hiely commende them, so that they accompany the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and holde it intentiue in thinkinge vpon God: which as it is slippery and rolling, eaſily slacketh and is diuersely drawen vnlesse it be stayed with diuerse helpes. Moreouer whereas the glory of God ought after a certaine maner to shine in al the parts of our body, it specially behoueth that the tongue be applied and auowed to this seruice both in singinge and in speakinge which is properly created to shewe foorth and display the praise of God. But the chiefe vse of the tongue is in publike praiers, which are made in the assembly of the Godly: which tende to this ende, that we may all with one common voice, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God, whom we worship with one Spirit & one Faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, euery one of his brother, may receiue the confession of Faith, to the example wherof they may be both allured and stirred.

Esai.9. 13. Mar.15. 8.

32 As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is certaine that it is not only most auncient: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, we may gather by these words of Paule, I will sing in Spirit, I will sing also in minde. Againe to the Colossians, Teachinge and admonishinge you, mutually in hymnes psalmes, and spirituall songes, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. For in the first place he teacheth that we should sing with voice and hart: in the other he commendeth spirituall songes, wherewith the Godly do mutually edifie themselues. Yet that it was not vniuersall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the

the Church of Millain first beganne to singe, when while Iustina the mother of Valentinian cruelly raged against ỹ true Faith, the people more vsed watchings than they were wont: and that afterwarde the other westerne Churches followed. For he hadde a litle before sayd that this maner came from the Easterne Churches. He telleth also in his seconde booke of Retractations that it was in his time receiued in Africa. One Hilarie (sayth he) a ruler did in euery place whereſoeuer he could, with malicious blaming raile at the maner which thē began to be at Carthage, that the hymnes at the altar shoulde be pronounced out of the booke of Psalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had bin offered was distributed to ỹ people. Him I answeted at the commaundement of my brethren. And truely if song be tēpered to ỹ grauity which becommeth the presence of God & Angels, it both procureth dignity and grace to the holy actions, and much auaileth to stirre vp the mindes to true affection, and feruentnesse of prayinge. But we must diligently beware that our eares be not more heedefully bent to the note, than our mindes to the spirituall sense of the words. With which peril Augustine in a certain place saith ỹ he was so moued, that he somtime wished that the maner which Athanasius kept should be stablished, which commaunded that the reader should sounde his wordes with so small a bowinge of his voice, that it should be liker to one that readeth than to one that singeth. But when he remembred how much profit he himselfe had receiued by singing, he enclined to the other side. Therfore vsing this moderation, there is no dout that it is a most holy & profitable ordinance. As on the other side what songs so euer are framed only to sweetenes and delite of the eares, they both become not the maiesty of the Church & can not but hiely displease God. Cōfess lib. 10. cap. 33

33 Wherby it also plainely appeareth that common praiers are to be spoken not in Greeke amonge Latine men, nor in Latine amonge Frenchmen or Englishmen (as it hath heretofore bin ech where cōmonly done) but in the peoples mother tongue, which commonly may be vnderstoode of the whole assembly: forasmuch as it ought to be done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receiue no frute at all of a sounde not vnderstanded. But they which haue no regarde neither of charity nor of humanity, should at least haue bin somwhat moued with the authority of Paule, whose wordes are nothing doutful. If thou blesse (sayth he) in Spirit, how shal he that filleth the place of an vnlearned man answere Amen to thy blessing, sith he knoweth not what thou sayst? For thou in dede giuest thankes, but the other is not edified. Who therefore can sufficiently wonder at the vnbrideled 1. Cor. 14. 16.

licentiousnesse of the Papistes,which,the Apostle so openly cryinge out against it , feare not to roare out in a strange tongue most babbling praiers,in which they themselues sometime vnderstand not one syllable,nor woulde haue other folkes to vnderstand it?But Paul teacheth that we ought to do otherwise.How then?I will pray(saith he) with spirit,I will pray also with minde:I wil sing with spirit:I will sing also with minde:signifying by the name of Spirite,the singular gift of tongues,which many being endued with abused it,when they seuered it from the mind,that is, from vnderstanding. But this we must altogether thinke,that it is by no meane possible,neither in publike nor in priuate praier,but that the tongue without the hart must hiely displese God. Morouer we must think that the mind ought to be kindled with feruentnesse of thought , that it may farre surmount all that the tongue may expresse with vtterance. Finally that ỹ tongue is not necessary at all for priuate praier, but so farre as the inward feelinge either is not able to suffice to enkindle it selfe , or the vehemence of enkindling violétly carieth the worke of ỹ tongue with it. For though very good praiers somtime be without voice, yet oftétimes betideth, that when the affectiō of the minde is feruent,both the tongue breaketh foorth into voice , and the other members into gesturing without excesse shew.Hereupon came the muttering of Hanna,and such a like thinge all the holy ones alway feele in themselues , when they burst out into broken and vnperfect voices. As for the gestures of the body which are wont to be vsed in praier(as kneling and vncouering of the head) they are exercises by which we endeuour to rise vp to a greater reuerencing of God.

34 Nowe we must learne not onely a more certaine rule,but also the very forme of prayinge : namely the same , which the heauenly Father hath taught vs by his beloued Sonne : wherein we may acknow his vnmesurable goodnesse and kindenesse. For beside this he warneth and exhorteth vs to seeke him in all our necessity , (as children are wont to flee to their fathers defence, so oft as they be troubled with any distresse) because he sawe that we did not sufficiently perceiue this, how slender our pouerty was, what were meete to be asked,& what were for our profit:he prouided also for this our ignorance,and what our capacity wanted,he supplied and furnished of his own.For he hath prescribed to vs a forme wherin he hath as in a Table set out whatsoeuer we may desire of him,whatsoeuer auaileth for our profit,& whatsoeuer is necessary to aske. Of which his gētlenes we receaue a great frute of comfort that we vnderstand that we aske no inconuenient thing,no vnseeminge or vnfit thing,finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, sith we aske in a maner after his owne mouth. Whē Plato saw the folly of men in making requestes to God, which being graunted, it many times befel much to their own hurt: he pronounced that this is the best maner of prayinge taken out of the olde Poete, Kinge Iuppiter giue vnto vs the best thinges both when we aske them, and when we do not aske them, but commaund euil things to be away from vs euen when we aske them. And verily the heathen man is wise in this, that he iudgeth howe perillous it is to aske of the Lord that which our owne desire moueth vs: & therewithal he bewraieth our vnhappy case, that we can not ones opē our mouthes before God without danger, vnlesse the Spirite do instruct vs to a right rule of prayinge. And in somuch greater estimation this priuilege is worthy to be had of vs, sith the onely begotten Sonne of God ministreth words into our mouth which may deliuer our minde from all douting.

Rom.8. 6.

35 This whither you call it forme or rule of praying is made of six petitions. For, the cause why I agree not to them that diuide it into seuen parts, is this, that by putting in this aduersatiue word (But) it semeth that the Euangelist ment to ioyne these two peces together, as if he had said: Suffer vs not to be oppressed with tentation but rather help our weakenes, & deliuer vs, that we faint not. The old writers also thinke on our side, so that nowe that which is in Mathew added in the seuenth place, is by way of declaratiō to be ioyned to the sixt petition. But although the whole praier is such that in euery parte of it regarde is specially to be had of the glory of God, yet the three first petitions are peculiarly appoynted to Gods glory, ẅ alone we ought in them to looke vnto without any respect (as they say) of our owne profit. The other three haue care of vs, and are properly assigned to aske those thinges that are for our profite. As when we pray that the name of God be hallowed: becausse God wil proue whether he be loued & honored of vs freely or for hope of reward, we must thē thinke nothing of our owne cōmodity: but his glory must be set before vs, ẅ alone we must behold with fixed eies: & no otherwise ought we to be minded in the other praiers of this sort. And euen this turneth to our great profit, ẏ when it is sanctified as we pray, it is also likewise made our sanctification. But our eyes (as it is sayd) must winke and after a certaine maner be blinde at such profit, so as they may not ones loke at it: that if all hope of our priuat benefit were cut of, yet we shoulde not ceasse to wishe and pray for this sanctification and other thinges which pertaine to the glory of God. As it is seene in the examples of Moses and Paule, to whom it was not grieuous to turne away their mindes and eyes from themselues, and with vehement and enflamed zeale to wish their owne destruction that though it were with their owne losse they might auance the glory & kingdom of God. On the other side when we pray that our daily bread be giuen vs: although we wish ẏ which is for our owne commodity, yet here also we ought chiefely to seeke the glory of God, so that we should not aske it vnlesse it might turne to his glory. Now let vs come to the declaring of the praier it self.

Our Father which art in heauen.

36 First in they ver entry we mete with this which we said before that all praier ought none otherwise to be offred of vs to God than in the name of Christ, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For since we call him Father, truely we alleage for vs the name of Christ. For by what boldnesse might any man call God, Father? who shoulde burst foorth into so great rashnesse, to take to himselfe the honor of the Sonne of God, vnlesse we were adopted
Iohn.1. 12. the children of grace in Christ? Which being the true Sonne, is giuē

Psal.27 10. nature, may by the benefite of adoption be made ours, if we do with Esa. 63. 16. sure faith embrace so great bountifulnesse. As Iohn sayth, that power
2.Tim.2 13. is giuen to thē which beleue in the name of the only begotten Sonne of God, that they also may be made the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himselfe our Father, & will be so called of vs, by this sweetenesse of name deliuering vs from all distrust, sith there can no where be found any greater affection of loue than in a Father. Therfore he could by no surer example testifie his vnmeasurable dere loue toward vs than by this that we are named the sonnes of God. But his loue is so much greater & more excellent toward vs than all loue of our parentes, as he passeth all men in goodnesse and mercy: that if all the fathers that are in the earth, hauing shaken of al feeling of fatherly naturalnesse, would forsake their children, yet he wil neuer faile
Matt.7. 11. vs, because he can not deny himselfe. For we haue his promise, If you beinge euill can giue good giftes to your children, how much more Esa.49. 15. can your Father which is in heauen? Againe in the Prophet, Can a mother forget her children? Though she forget them, yet I will not forget thee. If we be his children: then as a childe can not giue himselfe into the tuition of a stranger and foreine man, vnlesse he cōplaine either of the cruelty or pouerty of his father: so we can not seeke succours from elsewhere than from him alone, vnlesse we reproch him with pouerty and want of ability, or with cruelty or to extreme rigorousnesse.

37 Neither let vs alleage that we are worthily made feareful with conſcience of ſinnes, which may make a Father be he neuer ſo mercifull and kinde, daily to be diſpleaſed. For if among men the ſonne can with no better aduocate pleade his cauſe to his father, and by no better meane get and recouer his fauour beinge loſt, than if he himſelfe humbly & lowly, acknowledging his fault, do beſech his fathers mercy (for then the fatherly bowels can not hide thẽſelues but muſt be moued at ſuch prayers) what ſhall that father of mercies do, and the God of all comforte? ſhall not he rather heare the teares and groninges of his children intreatinge for themſelues (ſpecially ſith he doth call and exhort vs to do ſo) than any other interceſſions whatſoeuer they be: to the ſuccour whereof they do ſo fearefully flee, not without ſome ſhew of deſpeire, becauſe they diſtruſt of the kindenes and mercifulnes of their father? This ouerflowing plenty of fatherly kindenes he depainteth and ſetteth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father louingly embraceth the ſonne that had eſtranged himſelf from him, that had riotouſly waſted his ſubſtãce, that had euery way grieuouſly offended againſt him: and he tarieth not till he do with words craue pardon, but he himſelfe preuenteth him, knoweth him a farre of returning, of his owne wil goeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueth him into fauour. For, ſetting out in a man this example of ſo great gentlenes, he minded to teach vs how much more plentifull kindenes we ought to looke for at his hand, who is not only a Father, but alſo the beſt and moſt merciful of all Fathers, howſoeuer we be vnkinde, rebellious, and naughty children: ſo that yet we caſt our ſelues vpon his mercy. And that he might make it to be more aſſuredly beleued, that he is ſuch a Father to vs, if we be Chriſtiãs: he willed not onely to be called Father, but alſo by expreſſe name Our father: as if we might thus talke with him, O Father which haſt ſo great natural kindnes toward thy children, ſo great eaſines to pardon, we thy children call to thee and pray to thee, being aſſured and fully perſwaded, that thou beareſt no other affection to vs than fatherly, howſoeuer we be vnworthy of ſuch a Father. But becauſe the ſmall capacities of our hearte conceiue not ſo great vnmeaſurableneſſe of fauour, not only Chriſt is to vs a pledge and earneſt of our adoption, but alſo he giueth vs the Spirit for witneſſe of the ſame adoption, through whome we may with a free and lowde voyce crie Abba, Father. So oft therefore as any delay ſhall withſtande vs, lette vs remember to aske of him, that correctinge our fearefulneſſe he will ſet before vs that Spirite of coragiouſneſſe to be our guide to praye boldely.

38 Whereas we are not ſo taught that euery one ſhould ſeuerally call him his owne father,but rather that we ſhould al in common together call him Our Father:thereby we are put in minde,how great affection of brotherly loue ought to be among vs,which are altogether by one ſame right of mercy and liberality,the children of ſuch a Father.For we all haue one common Father,from whome commeth whatſoeuer good thinge may betide vnto vs: there ought to be nothing ſeuerall amonge vs, which we are not ready with great cherefulneſſe of minde to communicate one to an other,ſo much as nede requireth. Now if we be ſo deſirous, as we ought to be, to reach our hand & help one to an other,there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commende them to the care and prouidence of the moſt good Father,who being wel pleaſed and fauoring, nothing at al can be wanted. And verily euē this ſame we owe to our Father. For as he that truely & hartily loueth any Father of houſhold, doth alſo embrace his whole houſehold,with loue and good will:likewiſe what loue & affection we beare to this heauēly Father, we muſt ſhew toward his people,hi houſehold and his inheritance,which he hath ſo honored, that he hath called it the fulneſſe of his onely begotten Sonne. Lette a Chriſtian man therefore frame his prayers by this rule,that they be common,and may comprehende all them that be brethren in Chriſt with him:and not onely thoſe whom he preſently ſeeth and knoweth to be ſuch,but al men that liue vpon earth: of whom,what God hath determined,it is out of our knowledge : ſauing that it is no leſſe godly then naturall to wiſh the beſt to them, & hope the beſt of them. Howbeit we ought with a certaine ſingular affection to beare a ſpeciall inclination to them of the houſeholde of faith, whom the Apoſtle hath in euery thing peculiarly commended vnto vs. In a ſumme, All our praiers ought to be ſo made, that they haue reſpect to that community which our Lorde hath ſtabliſhed in his kingdom and his houſe.

Gala.6. 10.

39 Yet this withſtandeth not, but that we may ſpecially praye both for our ſelues and for certaine other : ſo that yet our minde depart not from hauing an eie to this community, nor ones ſwarue frō it,but apply all things vnto it. For though they be ſingularly ſpoken in forme,yet becauſe they are directed to that marke, they ceaſſe not to be common. All this may be eaſily vnderſtoode by a like example. The commaundement of God is generall,to relieue the neede of all poore:and yet they obey this commaundement which to this end do helpe their pouerty whome they knowe or ſee to be in neede, although they paſſe ouer many whom they ſee to be preſſed with no

lesse necessity: either because they can not knowe all, or be not able to helpe al. After this maner they also do not against the wil of God, which hauing regard vnto and thinkinge vpon this common fellowship of the Church, do make such particular praiers, by which they do with a common minde in particular wordes, commende to God thẽselues or other, whose necessity God willed to be more neerely knowen to them. Howebeit all thinges are not like in praier and in bestowing of goods. For, the liberality of giuing can not be vsed but toward them whose neede we haue perceiued: but with praiers we may helpe euen them that are most strange and most vnknowen to vs, by howe great a space of grounde soeuer they be distant from vs. This is done by the general forme of praier, wherin all the children of God are contained, among whom they also are. Hereto we may apply that which Paul exhorteth the faithfull of his time, that they lift vp euery where pure handes without strife: because when he warneth thẽ that strife shutteth the gate against praiers, he willeth thẽ with one minde to lay their petitions in common together. 1. Ti. 2. 8.

40 It is added, ý he is in heauen. Wherupõ it is not byandby to be gathered that he is bound fast enclosed & compassed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon also confesseth that the heauens of heauens can not containe him. And he himselfe saith by the Prophet that heauen is his seate, & the earth his footestoole. Wherby verily he signifieth ý he is not limited in any certaine coast, but is spred abroade throughout all thinges. But because our minde (such is the grosseneſſe of it) coulde not otherwise conceiue his vnspeakeable glory, it is signified to vs by the heauen, than which there cã nothing come vnder our sight more ample or fuller of maiesty. Sith therfore whersoeuer our senses comprehend any thing, there they vse to fasten it: God is set out of all place, that when we will seeke him we should be raised vp aboue all sense both of body and soule. Againe by this maner of speaking he is lifted vp aboue all chaunce of corruptiõ & change: finally it is signified that he comprehendeth & containeth the whole world & gouerneth it with his power. Wherefore this is al one as if he had bin called of infinite greatnes or height, of incõprehensible substance, of vnmeasurable power, of euerlasting immortality. But while we haue this, we must lift vp our minde hier when God is spoken of, that we dreame not any earthly or fleshly thinge of him, that we measure him not by our small proportions, nor draw his will to the rule of our affections. And therewithal is to be raised vp our affiance in him, by whose prouidence and power we vnderstand heauen & earth to be gouerned. Let this be ý summe, that vnder the name 1. Kings 8. 27. Esa. 66. 1. of Father is ſette before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, that he may be called vpon with aſſured faith: & that the familiar name of Father is not onely applied to ſtabliſh affiance, but alſo auaileth to hold faſt our mindes that they be not drawen to doutful or fained Gods, but ſhoulde from the onely begotten ſonne climbe vp to the only father of Angels and of the Church: then, that becauſe his ſeate is placed in heauē, we are by the gouernance of the worlde put in mind ẏ not without cauſe we come to him which with preſent care commeth of his owne will to mete vs. Who ſo come to
Heb. 11. 6. God (ſaith the Apoſtle) they muſt firſt beleue that there is a God: thē, that he is a rewarder to all thē that ſeke him. Both theſe things Chriſt affirmeth to be proper to his Father, that our Faith may be ſtaied in him: then, that we may be certainly perſwaded that he is not careles of our ſafety: becauſe he vouchſaueth euen to vs to extend his prouidence. With which introductions Paul prepareth vs to pray rightly. For before that he biddeth our petitiōs to be opened before God
Phi. 4. 6 he ſaith thus, Be ye carefull for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Wherby appeareth that they doutfully & with perplexity toſſe their praiers in their minde which haue not this well ſetled in them, that the eye of God is vpon the righteous.

Pſa. 33. 18. 41 The firſt Petitiō is, That ẏ name of God be hallowed, the nede wherof is ioined with our great ſhame. For what is more ſhamefull, than that the glory of God ſhould be partly by our vnthankefulnes, partly by our maliciouſneſſe, darkened: and (ſo much as in it lieth) by our boldneſſe and furious ſtubbornes, vtterly blotted out? Though all the wicked would burſt themſelues with their wilfulnes full of ſacrilege, yet the holines of the name of God glorioufly ſhineth. And Pſa. 48. 11. not without cauſe the Prophet crieth out, As thy name O God, ſo is thy praiſe into all ẏ ends of the earth. For wherſoeuer ẏ name of God is knowen, it can not be but that his ſtrengthes, power, goodnes, wiſdom, righteouſnes, mercy, and trueth muſt ſhewe foorth themſelues, which may drawe vs into admiration of him, and ſtirre vs vp to publiſh his praiſe. Sith therefore the holines of God is ſo ſhamefully taken from him in earth, if we be not able to reskue it, we be at the leaſt commaunded to take care of it in our praiers. The ſumme is, that we wiſh the honor to be giuen to God which he is worthy to haue, that men neuer ſpeake or thinke of him without moſt hie reuerēce: wherunto is contrary the vnholy abuſinge, which hath alway bin to commō in the world, as at this day alſo it rangeth abroad. And hereupon commeth the neceſſity of this petition, which if there liued in vs any godlineſſe, though it were but litle, ought to haue bin ſuperfluous.

But

But if the name of God haue his holineſſe ſafe, when being ſeuered from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, here we are cõmaunded not only to pray that God will deliuer that holy name from all contempt and diſhonor, but alſo that he will ſubdue all mankind to the reuerence of it. Nowe whereas God diſcloſeth himſelfe to vs partly by doctrine, partly by workes, he is no otherwiſe ſanctified of vs, than if we geue to him in both behalfes that which is his, and ſo embrace whatſoeuer ſhall come from him: and that his ſeueritie haue no leſſe praiſe amõg vs than his mercifulneſſe, foraſmuch as he hath in the manifolde diuerſitie of his workes emprinted markes of his glorie which may worthily drawe out of all tonges a confeſſion of his praiſe. So ſhall it comme to paſſe that the Scripture ſhall haue full authoritie with vs, & that no ſucceſſe ſhall hinder the bleſſing which God deſerueth in the whole courſe of the gouerning of the worlde. Againe the petition alſo tendeth to this purpoſe, that all vngodlineſſe which defileth this holy name, may be deſtroyed & taken away: that whatſoeuer things doo darken and diminiſh this ſanctifying, as well ſclaunders as mockings, may be driuen away: and when God ſubdueth all ſacrileges, his glorie may thereby more and more ſhine abroade.

42 The ſeconde petition is, that The Kingdome of God may come: which although it conteine no newe thing, is yet not without cauſe ſeuered from the firſt: becauſe if we conſider our owne drowſineſſe in a thing greateſt of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it ſelfe to haue bene moſt well knowẽ, be with many wordes ofte beaten into vs. Therefore after that we haue bene commaunded to pray to God to bring into ſubiection, & at length vtterly to deſtroy whatſoeuer ſpotteth his holie name: nowe is added a like and in a maner the ſame requeſte, that his kingdome come. But although we haue alredy ſet foorth the definition of this kingdome, yet I nowe brefely rehearſe, that God reigneth when men as well with forſaking of themſelues as with deſpiſing of the world and of the earthly life, do ſo yelde themſelues to his righteouſneſſe, that they aſpire to the heauenly life. Therefore there are twoo partes of this kingdome: the one, that God correcte with the power of his Spirit all corrupt deſires of the fleſh, which do by multitudes make warre againſt him: the other, that he frame all our ſenſes to the obedience of his gouernement. Therefore none do kepe right order in this prayer, but they which beginne at themſelues, that is to ſay, that they be cleanſed from all corruptions which trouble the quiet ſtate of the kingdome of God, and infect the pureneſſe thereof. Nowe becauſe the word of God is like a kingly ſcepter, we are here commaunded to pray that he will ſubdue the mindes and hartes of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the ſecret inſtinct of his Spirit he vttereth the effectuall force of his worde, that it may be auaunced in ſuch degree as it is worthy. Afterward we muſt come downe to the wicked which do obſtinatly and with deſperate rage reſiſt his authoritie. God therefore ſetteth vp his kingdome by humbling the whole world: but that in diuerſe maners: becauſe he tameth the wantonneſſes of ſome, and of other ſome he breaketh the vntamed pride. This is daily to be wiſhed that it be done, that it may pleaſe God to gather to himſelfe Chirches out of all the coaſtes of the world, to enlarge and encreaſce them in number, to enrich them with his giftes, to ſtabliſh right order in them: on the other ſide to ouerthrowe all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to ſcatter abrode their counſells, to caſt downe their enterpriſes. Whereby appeareth that the endeuor of daily proceding is not in vaine cõmaunded vs: becauſe the matters of men are neuer in ſo good caſe, that filthineſſe being ſhaken away and cleanſed, full pureneſſe floriſheth and is in liuely force. But the fulneſſe of it is differred vnto the laſt

1. Cor. 15. 28. comming of Chriſt, when Paule teacheth that God ſhalbe all in all. And ſo this prayer ought to withdrawe vs from all the corrupt ons of the world, which do ſeuer vs from God that his kingdome ſhould not floriſh in vs, and alſo to kindle our endeuor to mortifie the fleſh, finally to inſtruct vs to the bearing of the croſſe: foraſmuch as God will in this wiſe haue his kingdome ſpred abrode. Neither ought we to take it miſcontentedly that the outward man be deſtroyed, ſo that the inwarde man be renewed. For this is the nature of the kingdome of God, when we ſubmitt our ſelues to the righteouſneſſe thereof, to make vs partakers of his glorie. This is done when brightly ſetting fourth his light and truth with alway newe encreaſces, whereby the darkeneſſe and lies of Satan and his kingdome, may vaniſh away, be deſtroyed, and periſh, he defendeth them that be his, with the helpe of his Spirit directeth them to vprightneſſe and ſtrengtheneth them to continuance: but ouerthroweth the wicked conſpiracies of his enemies, ſhaketh abrode their treaſons and deceites, preuẽteth their malice, and beateth downe their ſtubbornneſſe, till at length he kill Antichriſt with the Spirit of his mouth and deſtroy all vngodlineſſe with the brightneſſe of his comming.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth as it is in heauen. Which although it hãgeth vpon his kingdome, and can not be ſeuered from it, is not in vaine added ſeuerally, for our groſſgroſſneſſe, which doth not eaſily or by and by conceiue what it is that God reigne in the world. It ſhall therefore be no abſurditie if this be taken by way of plainer expoſition: that God ſhall then be king in the world when all things ſhall ſubmitt themſelues to his will. Nowe here is not meant of his ſecrete will, wherby he gouerneth all things and directeth them to their ende. For though Satan & men are troubleſomly caried againſt him, yet he can by his incõprehenſible counſell not onely turne aſide their violent motions, but alſo driue them into order that he may do by them that which he hath purpoſed. But here is ſpoken of an other will of God, namely that, whereunto aunſwereth willing obedience: and therefore the heauen is by name compared with the earth: becauſe the Angells, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, do willingly obey God, & are diligently bent to do his commaundements. We are therfore cõmaunded to wiſh that as in heauẽ nothing is done but by the becke of God, & the Angells are quietly framed to all vprightneſſe: ſo the earth, all ſtubbornneſſe & peruerſeneſſe being quenched, may be ſubiect to ſuch gouernemẽt. And when we require this, we renounce the deſires of our owne fleſh: becauſe whoſoeuer doth not reſigne and yelde his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth ſet himſelf againſt him, foraſmuch as nothing cometh out of vs but faulty. And we are againe by this prayer framed to the forſaking of our ſelues, that God may gouerne vs after his will: and not that onely, but that he may alſo creat in vs newe mindes and newe hartes, our olde being brought to nought: that we may fele in our ſelues none other motion of deſire than a mere conſent with his will: ſummarily that we may will nothing of out ſelues, but that his Spirit may gouerne our hartes, by whome inwardly teaching vs we may learne to loue thoſe things that pleaſe him, and to hate thoſe things that diſpleaſe him. Whereupon this alſo followeth, that whatſoeuer affections fight againſt his wil, he may make them vaine and voide. Loe here be the firſt three thiefe pointes of this prayer, in aſking whereof we ought to haue the onely glorie of God before our eyes, leauing the reſpect of our ſelues, and hauing no regarde to any of our owne profit, which although it come hereof largely vnto vs, yet we ought not here to ſeke it. But albeit all theſe things, though we neither thinke of them, nor wiſh them, nor aſke them, muſt neuertheleſſe come to paſſe in their due time, yet we muſt wiſhe them and require them. And this to do is no ſmall profite for our trauaill, that we may ſo teſtifie and profeſſe our ſelues to be the ſeruantes and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeuoring and being truely and throughly geuen to ſet fourth his honor, which is due to him being both a Lorde and a Father. Who ſo therefore do not with affection and zele of auauncing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God be hallowed, that his kingdome come, that his will be done: they are not to be accompted among the children and ſeruantes of God: and as all theſe things ſhalbe done againſt their willes, ſo they ſhall turne to their confuſion and deſtruction.

44 Nowe followeth the ſeconde part of the prayer, in which we come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding farewell to the glory of God (which as Paule witneſſeth, is to be regarded euen in meate & drinke) we ſhould ſeke onely what is profitable for our ſelues: but we haue already geuen warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himſelfe doth drawe vs to himſelf wholly, that he may in this wiſe proue our godlineſſe. Then he graunteth vs alſo to haue an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition that we aſke nothing for our ſelues but to this ende that whatſoeuer benefits he beſtoweth vpon vs, they may ſet foorth his glory: foraſmuch as nothing is more rightful than that we liue and die to him. But in this petition we aſke of God generally all things which the vſe of the body nedeth vnder ỹ elemẽts of this world, not onely wherewith we may be fed and clothed, but alſo whatſoeuer he foreſeeth to be profitable for vs, that we may eate our bred in peace. By which prayer brefely we yelde our ſelues into his care, and commit vs to his prouidence, that he may feede, cheriſh, and preſerue vs. For the moſt good Father diſdaineth not to receiue alſo our body into his faithfull ſauegarde and keping, to exerciſe our Faith in theſe ſmal things, when we loke for all things at his handes euen to a crumme of bred and a droppe of water. For whereas it is come to paſſe I wote not howe by our iniquitie, that we be moued and vexed with greater care of the fleſhe than of the ſoule: many which dare truſt to God for their ſoule, are yet careful for their fleſh, are yet in doute what they ſhall eate, and wherewith they ſhalbe clothed: and if they haue not plenty of wine, wheate, and oyle aforehande, they tremble for feare. So much more do we eſteeme the ſhadowe of this life which laſteth but a momẽt, than that euerlaſting immortalitie. But who ſo truſtinge to God haue ones caſt away that carefulneſſe for the prouiſion of the fleſh, do alſo by and by loke for ſaluation and euerlaſting life at his hand, which are greater things. It is therfore no ſmal exerciſe of Faith, to hope for thoſe things of God, which otherwiſe do ſo much holde vs in care: & we haue not ſmally profited, when we haue put of this vnbeleuingneſſe which ſticketh faſt within the bones almoſt of all men. As for that which ſome do here teache of transubstantiall bred, it semeth but smally to agree with the meaninge of Christ: yea but if we did not euen in this fraile life geue to God ỹ office of a nourishing Father, our prayer should be vnperfect. The reason which they bring is to much profane: that it is not mete that the children of God, which ought to be spirituall, should not onely cast their minde to earthly cares, but also wrappe God there in with them. As though his blessing and fatherly fauor doth not also appeare in the sustenance of our life, or as though it were written in vaine that godlinesse hath promises not onely of the life to come, but also of this present life. But although the forgeuenesse of sinnes is of much greater value than the sustenances of the body, yet Christ hath set the inferor thing in the first place, to the entent to list vs vp by degrees to the other twoo petitions which do properly belong to the heauenly life, wherin he had regarde to our grosseneſſe. We are commaunded to aske Our bred, that we should be contente with the quantitie which our heauenly Father vouchesaueth to geue to vs, and should not seke for gaine by vnlawfull crafty meanes. In the meane time we must learne that it is made Ours by title of gifte, because neither our diligence, nor our trauaill, nor our handes (as it is sayed in Moses) do by themselues gett vs any thing, vnlesse the blessing of God be presente: yea ỹ plentie of bred should nothing at all profit vs, vnlesse it were by God turned into nourishmente. And therefore this liberality of God is no lesse necessarie for the riche than for the poore: because hauing their cellers and their barnes full, they should yet fainte for drineſſe and emptineſſe, vnlesse they did by his grace enioy their bred. The word This day, or Euery day as it is in the other Euangelist, and also the adiectiue Daily, do bridle the to much gredines of fraile things, wherewith we are wont to burne out of measure, and wherunto are ioined other euells: sith if we haue plentifull abundance, we do gloriously poure it out vppon pleasure, delites, boasting, and other kindes of riotous excesse. Therfore we are commaunded to aske onely so much as is enough for our necessity, and as it were from day to day, with this affiance that when our heauenly Father hath fed vs this day, he will also not faile vs to morrowe. Therefore howe great plentie of thinges so euer do flowe vnto vs, yea when our barnes be stuffed and our cellers full: yet we ought alway to aske our daily bred: because we must certainly beleue that all substance is nothing, but in somuch as the Lorde doth by pouring out of his blessinge with continuall encrease make it fruteſull: and that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but insomuch as he doth euery houre geue vs a portion and graunt vs the vse of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardly suffer it selfe to be persuaded: the Lorde testifieth that he hath shewed a singular example thereof for all ages, when he fed his peo-

Matt.3. 4. in bred onely, but rather in the worde that cometh out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that it is his power alone by which our life and strengthes are susteined, although he do minister it vnto vs vnder bodily instrumentes. As he is wont also to teache vs by the contrarie
Leu.26. 26. example, when he soeuer as he will, breaketh the strength and (as he calleth it) the staff of bred, that men eating may pine with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But whoso not being contented with daily bred, but with vnbrindeled gredineſſe are gaping for endleſſe store, or whoso being full with their aboundance, and careleſſe by reason of the heape of their richeſſe, do neuertheleſſe sue to God with this prayer, they do nothing ells but mocke him. For, ỹ first sorte of such men aske that which they would not obteine, yea that which they most of all abhorre, that is, to haue onely daily bred, & so much as in them lieth they dissemblingly hide from God the affection of their couetousneſſe: whereas true prayer oughte to poure out before him the very whole minde it selfe, and whatsoeuer inwardly lieth hidden. But the other sort do aske that which they loke not for at his hande, namely that which they thinke that they haue with theselues. In this that it is called Oures ỹ bountifulneſſe of God (as we haue said) so much more appeareth, which maketh that oures that is by no right due to vs. Yet that exposition is not to be reiected which I haue also touched, that by our bred is meante that which is earned with rightfull and harmeleſſe trauaill, and not gottē with deceites & extorcions: becauſe that is alway Other mens which we get to our selues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be geuen vs, thereby is signified that it is the onely and fre gifte of God, from whenſesoeuer it come to vs, yea when it shall most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne policie and trauaill, and earned with our owne handes: forasmuch as it cometh to passe by his onely bleſſing, that our labours prosper well.

45 Nowe followeth, Forgeue vs our dettes: in which petition and the nexte followinge, Christ hath brefely conteined whatsoeuer maketh for the heauenly life: as in these twoo partes aboue standeth Iere.31. 33. and 33.8. the spirituall couenant which GOD hath made for the saluation of his Chirch, I will write my lawes in their hartes, and I will be mercyfull to their iniquitie. Here Christ beginneth the forgeueneſſe of sinnes: after this, he will by and by adioine the seconde grace, that

God defend vs with the power of his Spirit, and ſuſtaine vs with his helpe, that we may ſtande vnouercome againſt all tentations. And ſinnes he calleth dettes, becauſe we are detbounde to pay the penalty of them, and were by no meanes able to ſatisfie it, vnleſſe we were acquited by this forgeueneſſe. Which pardon is of his free mercie, when he himſelfe liberally wipeth out theſe dettes, taking no paimēt of vs, but with his owne mercie ſatisfying himſelfe in Chriſt, which hath ones geuen himſelfe for recompenſe. Therefore whoſo truſt that God ſhalbe ſatisfied by their owne or other mennes merites, and that with ſuch ſatisfactiōs the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is recompenſed and redemed, they haue no parte of communicating of this free forgiueneſſe: & when they call vpon GOD in this maner, they do nothing but ſubſcribe to their owne accuſation, yea & ſeale their owne condemnation with their own witneſſe. For they confeſſe themſelues detters, vnleſſe they be acquited by the benefit of forgeueneſſe, which yet they do not receiue, but rather refuſe, whē they thruſt vnto God their owne merites and ſatisfactions. For, ſo they do not beſech his mercie, but do appeale to his iudgement. As for them that dreame of a perfectiō in themſelues, which taketh away neede to craue pardō, let them haue ſuch diſciples whom the itching of their eares driueth to errors: ſo that it be certaine that ſo many diſciples as they get, are taken away from Chriſt: foraſmuch as he inſtructing all to confeſſe their giltineſſe, receiueth none but ſinners: not for that he cheriſheth ſinnes with flatterings, but becauſe he knewe that the faithfull are neuer throughly vnclothed of the vices of their fleſh, but that they alway remaine ſubiect to the iudgement of God. It is in deede to be wiſhed, yea & to be earneſtly endeuored, that we hauing performed all the partes of our dutie may truely reioiſe before God that we are cleane from all ſpott: but foraſmuch as it pleaſeth God by litle & litle to make againe his image in vs, that there alway remaineth ſome infection in our fleſh, the remedie ought not to haue bene deſpiſed. If Chriſt by the authoritie geuen to him of his Father, cōmaundeth vs throughout the whole courſe of our life, to flee to crauing of pardō of our giltineſſe: who ſhalbe able to ſuffer theſe newe maiſters, which go about with this imagined ghoſt of perfect innocēcie to daſell the eyes of the ſimple, to make them to truſt that they may be made free from all fault? Which, as Iohn witneſſeth, is nothing ells but to make God a lier. And withall one worke theſe lewde men by cācilling one article do teare in ſonder & by that meane do weaken from the very foundation ỹ whole couenāt of God, wherin we haue ſhewed that our ſaluation is cōteined: ſo as they be not only robbers of God, becauſe

they ſeuer thoſe things ſo conioined, but alſo wicked and cruell becauſe they ouerwhelme poore ſoules with deſpeire: and traitors to themſelues & other, that be like them, becauſe they bring themſelues into a ſlouthfulneſſe directly contrary to the mercy of God. But whereas ſome obiect, that in wiſhing the coming of the kingdome of God, we do alſo aſke the putting away of ſinne: that is to childiſh, becauſe in the firſt table of this prayer is ſet forth vnto vs moſt hie perfection, but in this part is ſet forth our weakeneſſe. So theſe twoo things do fitly agree together, that in a ſpring toward the marke we deſpiſe not the remedies which our neceſſitie requireth. Finally we pray that we may be forgeuē as we our ſelues do forgeue our dettors, that is, as we do forgeue and pardon all of whomeſoeuer we haue bene in any thing offended, either vniuſtly handled in deede, or reprochefully vſed in word. Not that it lieth in vs to pardon the giltineſſe of the fault and offenſe, which perteineth to God alone: but this is our forgeuing, of our owne willingneſſe to lay away out of our minde wrath, hatred, and deſire of reuengement, and with voluntary forgetfulneſſe to treade vnder fote the remembrance of iniuries. Eſa. 43. 25. Wherefore we may not aſke forgeueneſſe of ſinnes at the hande of God, if we do not alſo forgeue their offenſes towarde vs which either do or haue done vs wrong. But if we kepe any hatreds in our hartes, and purpoſe any reuengementes and imagine by what occaſion we may hurt, yea and if we do not endeuor to come into fauor againe with our enemies, & to deſerue well of them with all kinde of frendly doings, and to winne them vnto vs: we do by this prayer beſeche God that he do not forgeue vs. For we require that he graunt to vs the ſame forgeueneſſe which we graunt to other. But this is to pray that he graunt it not to vs, vnleſſe we graunt it to them. Whoſo therfore be ſuch, what do they obtein by their prayer but a more greuous iudgement? Laſt of all it is to be noted, that this cōdition that he forgeue vs as we forgeue our dettors, is not herefore added for that we deſerue his forgeueneſſe by the forgeueneſſe which we graunt to other, as if that cauſe of forgeueneſſe to vs were there expreſſed: but by this worde partly the Lordes will was to comforte the weakeneſſe of our Faith, for he added this as a ſigne whereby we may be aſſured that he hath as ſurely graunted to vs forgeueneſſe of our ſinnes, as we ſurely knowe in our conſcience that we haue graunted the ſame to other, if our minde be voide and cleanſed of all hatred, enuie and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a marke, he wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not be bolde to call vpon him as their Father, which being hedlong haſty to reuenge, and

hardily entreated to pardon, do vse stiffly continuing enmities, and do cherish in themselues the same displeasure towarde other which they pray to be turned from themselues. Which is also in Luke expressly spoken in the wordes of Christ.

46 The sixt petition (as we haue said) aunswereth to the promise of engrauing the lawe of God in our hartes. But because we do not without continuall warrefare and hard and great striuings obey to God, we do here pray to be furnished with such wepons and defended with such succor, that we may be able to get the victorie: whereby we are warned that we stande in neede not onely of the grace of the Spirit, which may soften, bowe, and direct our hartes to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby he may make vnuincible against both all the traiterous entrappinges and violent conflictes of Satan. But now of tentations there are many and diuerse sortes. For, both the peruerse thoughtes of minde prouoking vs to trespassing against the lawe, which either our owne lust doth minister vnto vs, or the deuell stirreth vp, are tentatiõs: and also those things which of their owne nature are not euell, yet by the craft of the deuell are made tentations, when they are so set before our eyes, that by the occasiõ of them we be drawen away or do swarue from God. And these tentations are either on the right hande or on the left. On the right hand, as richesse, power, honors, which commonly do with their glistering and shewe of good so dasell the sight of men, and catche them with the baited hoke of their flatterings, that being entrapped with such deceites, or droonke with such sweteneſſe, they may forget their God. On the left hande, as pouertie, reproches, despisinges, troubles, and such other: that they being greued with the bitterneſſe and hardneſſe thereof may be vtterly discouraged, cast away faith and hope, and finally be altogether estranged from God. To these tentations of both sortes, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our owne lust, or being set against vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heauenly Father that he suffer vs not to yelde. But rather that he vpholde vs and raise vs vp with his hande, that being strong by his strength, we may stande fast against all the assaultes of the malicious enemie, whatsoeuer thoughtes he put into our minde: then, that whatsoeuer is set before vs on either side, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with prosperitie, nor throwen downe with aduersitie. Neither yet do we here require that we may fele no tentatiõs at all, with which we haue great neede to be stirred vp, pricked, & pinched, least by to much reste we growe dull. For not in vaine did Dauid wishe to be tempted: & not without

Gen.22.1. cause the Lorde daily tempteth his electe, chastising them by shame, pouertie, trouble, and other kindes of crosse. But God tempteth after Deut. 8.2. & 13.3. one maner and Satan after an other: Satan, to destroy, damne, confounde and throwe downe hedlong: but God, that by prouing them that be his he may haue a triall of their vnfainednesse, and by exercising them may confirme their strength, to mortifie purge by fier, and seare their flesh, which vnlesse it were in this wise restrained, would 1.Cor.10.13. waxe wanton and would wildly outrage aboue measure. Moreouer Satan assaileth men vnarmed and vnredy, that he may oppresse them vnware: God euen with tẽpting worketh the effecte, that they which be his may paciently beare whatsoeuer he sendeth vpon them. By the name of the Euell, whether we vnderstande the Deuell or sinne, 2.Pet.2.9. it maketh litle matter. Satan in deede himself is the enemy that lieth 1.Pet.5.8. in waite for our life: but with sinne he is armed to destroy vs. This therefore is our requeste, that we may not be ouercome or ouerwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lorde stande strong against all contrary powers wherewith we are assailed: which is, not to yelde vs vanquished to tentations, that being receiued into his keping and charge, & being safe by his protection we may endure vnouercome ouer sinne, death, the gates of hel, and the whole kingdome of the deuill: which is to be deliuered from euell. Where it is also to be diligently marked, that it is aboue our strength to matche with the deuill so great a warrier, and to beare his force and violẽce. Otherwise we should but vainely or as it were in mockage aske that which we had already in our selues. Surely, they which prepare them to such a battell with trust of themselues, do not sufficiently vnderstande with howe fierce and well armed an enemy they haue to do. Nowe we pray to be deliuered from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad & raging Lyon, whereas we should be torne in peeces with Psa.60.14. his teeth and pawes, and swallowed with his throte, vnlesse the Lorde do deliuer vs out of the middest of death: yet therewithall knowing this that if the Lorde shall stande by vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrowen, we shall in his strength shewe strength. Let other trust as they list to their owne abilities and strengthes of free will, which they thinke that they haue of themselues: but let it suffice vs that we stand and are strong by the onely strength of God. But this prayer conteineth more than at the first sight it beareth in shewe. For if the Spirit of God be our strength to fight out our combate with Satan, we shall not be able to get the victorie vntill we being filled with that Spirit shall haue put of all the weakenesse of our flesh. When therfore we pray to be deliuered from Satan and the Deuell, we pray

to bee from time to time enriched with newe encreases of the grace of God, till being fully stuffed with them we may triumph ouer all euell. It semeth hard and rough to some, that we craue of God that he leade vs not into tentation, forasmuch as it is contrary to his nature to tempt, as Iames witnesseth. But this question is already partly assoiled, where we said that our owne lust is properly the cause of all the tentations wherewith we are ouercome, and therefore worthily bereth the blame therof. Neither doth Iames meane any thing ells, but that the faultes are without cause & wrongfully layed vpon God, which we are driuen to impute to our selues, because we knowe our selues in our conscience gilty of them. But this withstandeth not but that God may when it pleaseth him make vs bonde to Satan, cast vs away into a reprobate sense, and to filthy lustes, and so leade vs into tentation by his iudgemēt which is righteous in deede but yet oftentimes secret: forasmuch as the cause of it is often hidde from men, which is yet certainely knowen with him. Whereupon is gathered that this is no vnfit maner of speaking, if we be persuaded that he doth not without cause so oft threaten, that when the reprobate shalbe striken with blindnesse and hardening of harte, these shalbe sure tokens of his vengeance. Iames. 1.13.

47 These three petitions, wherewith we do peculiarly cōmende vs and our things to God, do euidently shewe this which we haue before said, that the prayers of Christians ought to be common and to tend to the common edifying of the Chirch, and to the encrease of the communion of the faithfull. For there doth not euery man pray to haue any thing priuatly geuen, but all in common together do pray for Our bred, for forgeueneſſe of sinnes, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euill. There is furthermore adioined a cause why we haue both so great boldnesse to aske, and so great trust to obteine: which although it be not in ỹ latine copies, yet it agreeth more fitly in this place thā that it should seeme worthy to be omitted, namely that his is the kingdome, and the power and the glorie for euer. This is the perfect and quiet rest of our soule. For if our prayers were to be commended to God by their owne worthinesse, who should be so bolde, as ones to open his mouth before him? Nowe howsoeuer we be most miserable, howsoeuer most vnworthy of all men, howsoeuer voide of all commendation: yet we shall neuer want cause to pray, & neuer be destitute of confidence: forasmuch as our father can not haue his kingdome, power, and glorie taken away from him. At the ende is added Amen, whereby is expressed our feruentnesse of desire to obteine those things that we haue asked of God, and our hope is confirmed that all ſuch things are already obteined and ſhall ſurely be geuē vs becauſe they are promiſed of God, which can not deceiue. And this agreeth with that maner of prayer which we haue here before rehearſed, Do it Lorde for thy names ſake, not for our ſakes or our righteouſneſſe: whereby the holy ones do not only expreſſe the ende of their praiers, but alſo confeſſe that they are vnworthy to obteine vnleſſe God fetch the cauſe from himſelf, and that their truſt to ſpede cometh of the onely nature of God.

Mat.17. 5. 48 Thus haue we whatſoeuer we ought yea or in any wiſe may aſke of God, ſet foorth in this forme and as it were a rule of praying taught by the beſt ſcholemaiſter Chriſt, whome the Lorde hath ſet ouer vs to be our teacher, & whom alone he hath willed to be harkened vnto. For he both alway hath bene his eternall wiſedome, and being made man is geuen to men the Angell of great counſell. And this prayer is in all pointes, ſo fully perfect, that whatſoeuer foreyne or ſtrāge thing is added which can not be referred to it, it is vngodly and vnworthy to be allowed of God. For in this ſumme he hath ſet forth, what is mete for him, what is pleaſing to him, what is neceſſary for vs, finally what he will graunt. Wherefore who ſo dare go further, and to aſke any thing of God beſide theſe, firſt they will adde of their owne to the wiſdome of God (which can not be done without mad blaſphemie) then they holde not themſelues vnder the will of God, but deſpiſing it do with gredineſſe wander further: finally they ſhall neuer obteine any thing, foraſmuch as they pray without faith. And there is no dout that all ſuch prayers are made without faith, becauſe here wanteth the woord of God, vpon which vnleſſe faith be grounded, it can in no wiſe ſtande. But they which forſaking the maiſters rule, do followe their owne deſires, are not only without the word of God, but alſo ſo much as they be able with their whole endeuor, are againſt it. Therfore Tertullian no leſſe fitly than truly hath called this a lawefull prayer, ſecretely ſignfying that all other are laweleſſe and vnlawefull.

See Auguſtine. Of prayer to Proba.

De fuga in perſecut.

49 We would not haue theſe things ſo taken as though we were ſo bound with this forme of prayer, that we may not change a word or a ſillable. For there are echewhere red many prayers in the Scriptures, farre differing from this in woordes, yet written by the ſame Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vſed of vs. Many are continually put into the mouthes of the faithfull by the ſame Spirit, which in likeneſſe of wordes do not ſo much agree. This onely is our meaning in ſo teaching, that no man ſhould ſeke, loke for, or aſke any other thing at all than that which is ſummarily comprehēded in the prayer, and which though it most differ in wordes yet differeth not in sense. Like as it is certaine that all the prayers which are found in the Scriptures, and which do come out of godly hartes, are applied to this, so verily none can any where be found, which may match, much lesse passe, the perfectnesse of this prayer. Here is nothing left out, that might be thought vpon to the praises of God, nothing that ought to come into the minde of man for his owne profites: and the same so fully that all hope is worthily taken away from all men to attempt to make any better. In a summe, let vs remembre that this is the doctrine of the wisedome of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needefull, 50 But although we haue aboue sayed, that we ought alway to breath vpwarde with minds lifted vp to God, & pray without ceassing: yet forasmuch as such is our weakenesse, as needeth to bee vpholden with many helpes: such is our dullenesse, as needeth to be pricked forwarde with many spurres: it is good that euery one of vs appoint to himself priuately certaine houres which may not passe away without prayer, and which may haue the whole affections of our minde throughly busied to that purpose: as, when we rise in the morning, before that we go to our dayes worke, when we sitt downe to meate, when we haue bene fedde by the blessing of God, when we take vs to rest. Onely let this not be a superstitious obseruing of houres, by which, as paying a taske to God, we may think our selues discharged for the other houres: but a training of our weakenes, wherby it may so be exercised and from time to time stirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to loke that so oft as either we our selues are in distresse, or we se other to be in distresse with any hardnesse of aduersitie, we runne streight way to him, not with feete but with hartes: then, that we suffer not any prosperitie of our owne or other mens, to passe but that we testifie that we acknoweledge it to bee his with praise and thankesgeuing. Finally, this is diligētly to bee obserued in all prayer, that we go not about to binde God to certaine circumstances, nor to appoint to him, what he shall do, at what time, in what place, and in what maner: as by this prayer we are taught to make to him no lawe, nor to appoint to him any condition, but to leaue to his will that those things which he will do, he may dó in what maner, at what time, and in what place it pleaseth him. Wherefore ere we make any prayer for our selues, we first pray that his will be done: where we do already submitt our will to his: with which when it is restrained as with a bridle put vppon it, it may not presume to bring God into rule, but make him the iudge and gouernor of all her desires.

51 If we do with mindes framed to this obediéce, ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled with the lawes of Gods Prouidéce, we ſhall eaſily learne to continue in prayer, and with longing deſires paciently to waite for the Lord: being aſſured that although he appeare not, yet he is alway preſent with vs, and will when he ſeeth his time declare howe not deaffe eares he gaue to the prayers, which in the eyes of men ſemed to be deſpiſed. And this ſhalbe a moſt preſent comfort, that we faint not and fall downe by deſpaire, if at any time God do not aunſwere at our firſt requeſtes. Like as they are wont to do, which while they are caried with their ſodeine heate, do ſo call vpon God, that if he come not to them at their firſt bruntes & bring them preſent helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angry and hatefully bent againſt them, and caſting away all hope of obteining do ceſſe to call vpon him. But rather differring our hope with a well tempered euenneſſe of minde, let vs go forwarde in that perſeuerance which is ſo much commended to vs in Scriptures. For in the Pſalmes we may oftentimes ſee howe Dauid and other faithfull men, when they ſeeme in a maner weried with praying, did beate the aire, becauſe they threwe away their words to God that heard them not, & yet they ceſſe not from praying: becauſe the word of God hath not his full authoritie mainteined, vnleſſe the credite thereof bee ſet aboue all ſucceſſes of things. Moreouer let vs not tempte God and prouoke him againſt vs beinge weried with our importunacie, which many vſe to do, which doe nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and binde him to the lawes of their couenanting as though he were ſeruant to their deſires: which if he doe not preſently obey, they diſdaine, they chafe, they carpe againſt him, they murmure, they turmoile. Therefore to ſuch oftentimes in his furor he being angry graunteth that, which to other in his mercie he being fauorable denieth. An example hereof are the children of Iſraell, for whome it had bene better not to haue bene heard of the Lorde, than with fleſh to eate vp his wrath.

52 But if yet at length after long loking for it our ſenſe do not perceiue what we haue preuailed with praying, and feleth no fruite thereof: yet our faith ſhall aſſure vs of that, which can not be perceiued by ſenſe, namely that we haue obteined that which was expedient for vs, foraſmuch as the Lorde doth ſo ofte and ſo certainly take vpon him that he will haue care of our greues, after that they haue bene ones laide in his boſome. And ſo he will make vs to poſſeſſe aboundance in pouertie, comfort in affliction. For howſoeuer all other things do faile vs, yet God will neuer faile vs, which ſuffereth

the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. He alone shall suffice vs in steede of all things, forasmuch as he conteineth in himselfe all good things, which he shall one day disclose vnto vs at the day of iudgement when he shall plainely shewe forth his kingdome. Beside this although God graunt to vs, yet he doth not alway aunswer according to the expresse forme of our request, but holding vs after outwarde seeminge in suspense, yet by a meane vnknowē he sheweth that our prayers were not wain. This is meant by the wordes of Iohn, If we knowe that he heareth vs when we aske any thing of him, we know that we haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weake superfluousnesse of wordes: but it is a singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doth not follow our desires, is yet gentle & fauorable to our prayers, that the hope which resteth vpon his worde may neuer disappoint vs. But with this patience the faithfull do so farre neede to be susteined, that they should not long stand vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lorde doth by not light trialles proue them that be his, and not tenderly doth exercise them: but oftentimes driueth them into the greatest extremities, and when they are driuen thether he suffreth them long to sticke fast in the mire, ere he geue them any tast of his sweteneſſe: and, as Hanna saith, he slayeth, and quickneth: he leadeth downe to the helles, and bringeth backe againe. What coulde they here do but be discouraged, and fall hedlonge into despaire: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and already halfe dead, this thought did raise them vp, that God doth loke vpon them, and that there shall be at hande an ende of their euels? But howesoeuer they stande fast vppon the assuredneſſe of that hope, they ceasse not in the meane time to pray: because if there be not in prayer a stedfastneſſe of continuance, we nothing preuaile with praying.

The xxj. Chapter.

Of the eternall Election, vvhereby God hath predestinate some to saluation, and other some to destruction.

BVt nowe whereas the couenant of life is not egally preached to all men, and with them to whome it is preached it doth not either egally or continually finde like place: in this diuersitie the wonderous deapth of the iudgement of God appeareth. For neither is it any dout but that this diuersitie also serueth the free choise of Gods eternall election. If it be euident that it is wrought by the will of God that ſaluation is frely offred to ſome, and other ſome are debarred from cõming to it: here by and by ariſe great and hard queſtions which can not otherwiſe be diſcuſſed, than if the godly mindes haue that certainly ſtabliſhed which they ought to holde concerning election and Predeſtination. This is (as many thinke) a comberſome queſtiõ: becauſe they thinke nothing to be leſſe reaſonable thã of the cõmon multitude of men ſome to be foreordeined to ſaluatiõ, other ſome to deſtruction. But howe they wrongfully encombre themſelues, ſhall afterwarde be euidẽt by the framing of the matter together. Beſide that in ỹ very ſame darkneſſe which maketh men afraide, not onely the profitableneſſe of this doctrine but alſo the moſt ſwete fruite ſheweth forth it ſelfe. We ſhall neuer be clerely perſuaded as we ought to be, that our ſaluation floweth out of the fountaine of the free mercy of God, till his eternall electiõ be knowẽ to vs, which by this compariſon brightly ſetteth forth the grace of God, that he doth not without difference adopt all into the hope of ſaluation, but geueth to ſome that which he denieth to other. Howe much the ignorãce of this principle diminiſheth of the glory of God, howe much it withdraweth from true humilitie, it is plaine to ſee. But Paule denieth that that which is ſo neceſſary to be knowẽ, is poſſible to be knowen, vnleſſe God leauing alltogether the reſpect of workes do choſe them whom he hath determined with himſelf. In this time (ſaith he) the remnantes were ſaued according to free election. If by Grace, then not of workes: foraſmuch as Grace ſhould then not be Rom.11 grace. If of workes, then not of Grace: foraſmuch as worke ſhould

5. nowe not be worke. If we muſt be brought backe to the beginning of election, that it may be certaine that ſaluation cometh to vs from no otherwhere than frõ the mere liberalitie of God: they which will haue this principle quenched, do niggardly ſo much as in them lieth darken that which ought glorioufly & with full mouth to haue bene publyſhed, and they plucke vp the very roote of humilitie. Paule, where the ſaluation of the remnant of the people is aſcribed to free election, clerely teſtifieth that onely then it is knowen that God doth by his mere good pleaſure ſaue whom he will, and not render reward which can not be done. They which ſhutt the gates, that none may be bolde to come to the taſting of this doctrine, do no leſſe wrong to men than to God: becauſe neither ſhall any other thing ſuffice to hũble vs as we ought to be, neither ſhall we otherwiſe feele from our hart how much we are boũde to God. Neither yet is there any otherwhere the vpholding ſtay of ſounde affiãce, as Chriſt himſelfe teacheth, which to deliuer vs from all feare, & to make vs vnuã-

quishable among so many dangers, ambushes, & deadly battels, promiseth ỹ whatsoeuer he hath receiued of his Father to kepe, shall be safe. Whereof we gather that they shal with continuall trembling be miserable, whosoeuer they be that knowe not themselues to be the proper possession of God: and therefore that they do very ill prouide both for themselues & for all the faithfull, which in beinge blinde at these three profits which we haue touched, would wish ỹ whole fundation of our saluation to be quite taken from among vs. Moreouer hereby the Church appeareth vnto vs, which otherwise (as Bernard rightly teacheth) were not possible to be founde, nor to be knowen among creatures: because both waies in maruelous wise it lieth hidden within the bosome of blessed predestination, and within the Masse of miserable damnation. But ere I entre into the matter it selfe, I must before hande in two sortes speake to two sortes of men. That the entreating of predestination, whereas of it selfe it is somewhat combersome, is made very doutfull yea and dangerous, the curiousnes of men is the cause: which can by no stoppes be restrained from wandringe into forbidden compasses, and climbing vp an hie: which, if it may, wil leaue to God no secrete which it will not searche and turne ouer. Into this boldenesse and importunacie forasmuch as we commonly see many to runne headlong, and among those some that are otherwise not euill men: here is fit occasion to warne them what is in this behalfe the due measute of their duty. First therfore let them remẽber, that when they enquire vpon Predestinatiõ, they pearce into the secret closets of the wisdom of God: wherinto if any man do carelesly and boldly breake in, he shall both not attaine wherewith to satisfie his curiousnesse, and he shall entre into a mase whereof he shall finde no way to get out againe. For neither is it meete that man should frely search those things which God hath willed to be hidden in himself, and to turne ouer from very eternity the height of wisdom, which he willed to be honored & not be conceiued, that by it also he mought be maruelous vnto vs. Those secretes of his will which he hath determined to be opened vnto vs, he hath disclosed in his word: & he hath determined, so farre as he foresaw to pertaine to vs and to be profitable for vs.

2 We are come (saith Augustine) into ỹ way of Faith, let vs stedfastly holde it. It bringeth into the Kinges chamber, in which all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom are hidden. For, the Lorde himselfe Christ did not enuy his excellent & most chosen disciples, when he said, I haue many thinges to be said to you, but ye can not beare them now. We must walke, we must profit, we must encrease, that our hartes may be able to conceiue thoſe thinges which now we can not conceiue. If the laſt day finde vs profitinge, there we ſhall learne that which here we could not. If this thought be of force with vs, that the word of the Lord is the only way, that may leade vs to ſearche whatſoeuer is lawfull to be learned of him: that it is the only light, which may giue vs light to ſee whatſoeuer we ought to ſee of him: it ſhall eaſily holde backe and reſtraine vs from all raſheneſſe. For we ſhall know that ſo ſoone as we be gone out of the bounds of the word, we runne out of the way, and in darkeneſſe, in which race we muſt nedes oftentimes ſtray, ſlippe, and ſtumble. Firſt therefore lette this be before our eyes, that to couet any other knowledge of Predeſtination than that which is ſet forth by the word of God, is a point of no leſſe madneſſe than if a man haue a will to goe by an vnpaſſable waye, or to ſee in darkeneſſe. Neither let vs be aſhamed, to be ignorant of ſomewhat in it wherein there is ſome learned ignorance. But rather let vs willingly abſtaine from the ſearching of that knowledge, whereof the exceſſiue coueting is both fooliſh and perillous, yea & deadly. But if the wantonnes of wit prouoke vs, it ſhalbe profitable alway to ſet this againſt it, whereby it may be beaten backe, that as too much of honey is not good, ſo the ſearchinge of glory doth not turne vnto glory to the curious. For there is good cauſe why we ſhoulde be fraied away from that boldnes, which can do nothinge but throw vs downe headlong into ruine.

Pro.25. 27.

3 There be other which when they haue a will to remedy this euill, do commaund all mentiō of Predeſtination to be in a maner buried, at the leaſt they teach mē to flee from euery maner of queſtioning thereof as from a rocke. Although the moderatiō of theſe men be herein worthily to be praiſed, that they iudge ẏ myſteries ſhoulde be taſted of ẅ ſuch ſobriety: yet becauſe they deſcend too much beneath the meane, they litle preuaile with the wit of man, which doth not lightly ſuffer it ſelfe to be reſtrained. Therfore, ẏ in this behalfe alſo we may keepe a right ende, we muſt returne to the word of the Lord, in which we haue a ſure rule of vnderſtandinge. For, the Scripture is the ſchoole of the holy Ghoſt, in which as nothing is left out which is both neceſſary and profitable to be knowen, ſo nothinge is taught but that which is behouefull to learne. Whatſoeuer therefore is vttered in the Scripture cōcerning Predeſtination, we muſt beware that we debarre not the faithfull from it, leaſt we ſhould ſeme either enuiouſly to defraude them of the benefite of their God, or to blame and accuſe the holy Ghoſt who hath publiſhed thoſe thinges, which it is in any wiſe profitable to be ſuppreſſed. Let vs (I ſay) giue leaue to a Christian man, to open his minde and hir eares to all the sayings of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, that so soone as the Lord hath closed his holy mouth, he may also foreclose to himself all ỹ way to enquire further. This shalbe the best bound of sobriety, if not onely in learninge we alway follow the Lord going before vs, but also when he maketh an end of teaching, we ceasse to will to learne. Neither is the danger which they feare of so great importãce, that we ought therfore to turne away our mindes from the oracles God. Notable is the sayinge of Salomon, that the glory of God is to concele a word. But sith both godlinesse and common reason teacheth that this is not generally meant of euery thing, we must seeke a difference, least brutishe ignorance should please vs vnder colour of modesty and sobriety. That differẽce is in few words plainly set out by Moses: To the Lord our God (sayth he) belong his secretes: but to vs and to our children he hath disclosed these things. For we see how he commendeth to the people the study of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it pleased God to publish it: & how he withholdeth ỹ people within those boundes, by this only reason because it is not lawful for mortall men to thrust themselues into the secrets of God.

Pro. 25. 2. Deu. 29 29.

4 Prophane men (I graunt) do in the matter of Predestination sodainly catch hold of somwhat which they may carp, or cauil, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their waiwardnes do fray vs away from it, the chief articles of the faith must be kept secret, of which there is almost none which they or such as they be do leaue vntouched with blasphemy. A froward wit will no lesse proudly outrage when he heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if he heare that God foresaw what shoulde become of man when he created him. Neither will they abstaine from laughinge, when they shall vnderstande that there is litle more than fiue thousand yeres passed since the creation of the world: for they will aske why the power of God was so longe idell and a slepe. Finally there can be nothinge brought foorth, which they will not scoffe at. For the restraininge of these sacrileges, must we holde our peace of the Godheade of the Sonne, & of the holy Ghost? or must we passe ouer in silence the creatiõ of the world? Yea but the trueth of God is both in this behalfe and euery where mightier than that it neede to feare the euill speakinge of the wicked: as Augustine strongly maintaineth in his worke of the good of Perseuerance. For we see that the false Apostles could not by defaming and sclandering the true Doctrine of Paule, make him to be ashamed of it. But whereas they saye that this whole disputation is perillous also for Godly

Auguſtine ſticketh not to confeſſe that for theſe cauſes he was wont to be blamed, for that he did to freely preach Predeſtination:but,as he had in readines wherwithal,he largely confuteth thẽ.But we, becauſe many & diuers abſurdities are thruſt into this place, had rather to reſerue euery one to be wiped away in place fit for it.Only this I deſire generally to obtaine of them,that thoſe thinges which the Lorde hath layd vp in ſecret,we may not ſearch:thoſe things which he hath brought openly abroade,we may not neglect:leaſt either on the one part we be condemned of vaine curioſity,or on the other part,of vnthankefulneſſe.
Lib.5. de Gen. ad lite. For, this alſo is very well ſayd of Auguſtine, that we may ſafely follow the Scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth ſloupingely, leaſt it ſhoulde forſake our weakeneſſe. But who ſo are ſo ware and ſo feareſull that they woulde haue Predeſtination to be buried, leaſt it ſhould trouble weake ſoules:with what colour, I beſech you,wil they couer their arrogance, when they indirectly accuſe God of fooliſhe vnaduiſedneſſe,as though he forſaw not the danger,which they think themſelues to haue wiſely met with? Whoſoeuer therfore trauaileth to bring the doctrine of Predeſtinatiõ into miſliking,he openly ſaith euill of God: as though ſomwhat had vnaduiſedly ſlipped from him which is hurtful to the Church.

25 Predeſtinatiõ wherby God adopteth ſome into ỹ hope of life,& iudgeth ſome to eternal death,no man that would be accõpted godly dare ſimply deny: But they wrap it vp with many cauillations,ſpecially they which make foreknowledge the cauſe of it.We in deede do ſay that they be both in God, but we ſay that the one is wrongfully made ſubiect to the other.When we giue foreknowledge to God,we meane thar all things alway haue bin and perpetually do remaine vnder his eies, ſo that to his knowledge there is nothinge to come or paſt,but all thinges are preſent,& ſo preſent that he doth not imagine only by conceiued formes(as thoſe things are preſent to vs,whereof our minde holdeth faſt the remembrance)but he truely beholdeth & ſeeth them as ſet before him.And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compaſſe of the world and to all creatures. Predeſtination we call the eternal decree of God,wherby he had it determined with himſelfe what he willed to become of euery man.For al are not created to like eſtate: but to ſome,eternall life,and to ſome,eternall damnation is foreappointed. Therefore as euery man is created to the one or other ende,ſo we ſay that he is predeſtinate either to life or to death. But this predeſtination God hath not onely teſtified in euery seuerall person,but hath shewed an example therof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might plainly appeare that it lieth in his will what shalbe the estate of euery nation. When the Hiest diuided the nations, and seuered the children of Adam, his part was the people of Israell, the corde of his inheritance. The separation is before the eies of all men:in the person of Abraham as in a drie stocke one people is peculiarly chosen,all other being refused:but the cause appeareth not, sauinge that Moses, to cut of all occasion of glorying from posterity,teacheth that they excell only by ỹ fre loue of God. For he assigneth this to be the cause of their deliuerãce, for that God loued the Fathers, and chose their seede after them. More plainely in an other chapter: He was pleased in you to chose you,not because you passed other nations in number,but because he loued you. The same admonition is often repeated with him,Behold,to the Lord thy God belongeth the heauen,the earth,and whatsoeuer things are in it:and he hath pleased himselfe only in your Fathers, and hath loued them, & hath chosen you their sede. Againe in an other place sanctificatiõ is commaunded them, because they are chosen to be a peculiar people And againe in an other place,Loue is affirmed to be ỹ cause of protection. Which also the faithfull do declare with one voice,sayinge:He hath chosen for vs our inheritãce,the glory of Iacob,whom he hath loued. For they do all impute to free loue al the giftes wherwith they were garnished of God:not only because they knew that they themselues had obtained thẽ by no deseruings,but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he coulde purchase to himselfe and his posterity so great a prerogatiue of honor. And, the more strongly to treade downe all pride, he vpbraided them that they haue deserued no such thing,forasmuch,as they are a stubborne & hard necked people. And oftentimes ỹ Prophets do hatefully & as by way of reproch cast the Iewes in the teeth with this election, because they had fowly departed from it. Whatsoeuer it be,now let thẽ come foorth which will binde the election of God either to the worthines of men,or to the merites of works. When they see one nation to be preferred before all other, & when they heare ỹ God was led with no respect to be more fauorably bẽt to a few & vnnoble,yea & froward and disobedient men:will they quarell with him,because his will was to shewe such an example of mercy? But they shall neither with their pratling voices hinder his work, not with throwing stones of tauntes into heauen shall hit or hurt his righteousnesse, but rather they shal fall backe vpõ their owne heads. Moreouer the Israelits are called backe to this principle of the free couenant,whẽ either thanks

6 There is to be added a ſecōd degree more narrowly reſtrained, or in which was ſeene a more ſpeciall grace of God: when of the ſame kinred of Abraham God refuſed ſome, & other ſome by nouriſhing rishinge them in the Church he shewed that he reteined amonge his childrē. Ismael had at ỹ beginning obtained egall degre with his brother Isaac, becausse the spirituall couenant had bin no lesse sealed in him by the signe of Circucision. He is cut ofiand then, Esau: at the last an innumerable multitude and almost Israell. In Isaac was the seede called: the same calling endured in Iacob. A like exāple God shewed in reiecting Saul: which thing is also gloriously set forth in the Psalm, He hath put backe the tribe of Ioseph, & ỹ tribe of Ephraim he hath not chosen, but he hath chosen the tribe of Iuda. Which the holy history diuerse times repeateth, that the wonderfull secret of the grace may the better appeare in this change. Ismaell, Esau, and such other, (I graunt) fell from the adoption by their owne fault & giltines: becausse there was a condition adioined, that they should faithfully kepe the couenant of God, which they falsely brake. But this was yet a singular benefit of God, that he voutchsaued to preferre thē aboue the other Gentiles: as it is said in ỹ Psalme, He hath not so done to other nations, nor hath opened his iudgementes to them. But here I haue not without cause said that there be two degrees to be noted: becausse nowe in the choosinge of the whole nation God shewed that he is in his owne mere liberality bounde to no lawes: but he is free, so that egall portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequality whereof sheweth rhat it is truely of free gift. Therefore Malachie amplifieth the vnthankefulnesse of Israel, becausse they being not only chosen out of all mankinde, but also seuered out of a holy house to be a peculiar people, do vnfaithfully and wickedly despise God so beneficiall a Father. Was not Esau the brother of Iacob? (saith he) & yet Iacob I loued, but Esau I hated. For, God taketh it for confessed, that when either of them was borne of a holy Father, and successour of the couenaunt, finally a braunch of the holy roote: now the children of Iacob were more than cōmonly bond, which were taken into that dignity. But when, Esau the first begotten being refused, their Father which was by nature inferiour was made the heire, he proueth them doublely vnthankefull, and complaineth that they were not holden with that double bound.

Mal. 1. 2.

7 Although it be already sufficiently euident, that God doth by his secrete counsell freely choose whom he will, reiectinge other, yet his free election is hitherto but halfe shewed, till we come to all particular persones, to whome God not onely offereth saluation, but so assigneth it that the certainty of the effect therof is not in suspense or doutfull. For, these are accompted in that onely seede, whereof Paule maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet becauſe many of his poſterity were cut of as rotten members: that the election may be effectuall and truely ſtedfaſt, we muſt nedes aſcend to the head, in whom the heauenly Father hath bound together his elect one with an other, & hath knit them to himſelfe with a knot impoſſible to be looſed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, ſhined the liberall fauour of God, which he denied to other mē: yet in the members of Chriſt, appeareth a much more excellēt ſtrength of grace, becauſe they being graffed into their head do neuer fall away frō ſaluation. Therefore Paul doth fitly reaſon out of the place of Malachy which I euen now alleaged: ỹ where God with makinge a couenant of eternall life calleth any people to himſelfe, there is in part a ſpecial maner of election, that he doth not chooſe all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is ſayd, I haue loued Iacob, this pertaineth to ỹ whole iſſue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there ſetteth in cōpariſon againſt the poſterity of Eſau. Yet this withſtandeth not but that in the perſon of one man was ſet foorth to vs an example of the election, which can not ſlip away but muſt come to the marke that it tendeth to. Theſe Paul doth not vainly note to be called remnantes: becauſe experience teacheth that of a great multitude many ſlide and vaniſh away, ſo that oftentimes there remaineth but a ſmall portion. But why the generall election of a people is not alway firme & ſtedfaſt, there is a reaſon offring it ſelfe in readineſſe: becauſe with whom God couenanteth he doth not byandby giue to them the Spirite of regeneration, by the power wherof they may continue in the couenant to the ende: but the outward changinge without the inward effectuallneſſe of grace, which might be of force to holde them in, is a certaine meane thinge betwene the forſaking of whole mankinde, and the election of a ſmall number of the Godly. The whole people of Iſraell was called the inheritance of God, of whom yet there were many ſtrangers. But becauſe God had not for nothinge made couenant with them that he woulde be their Father and redeemer, he rather hath reſpect to his owne free fauour than to the vnfaithfull falling away of many: by whom alſo his trueth was not aboliſhed: becauſe where he reſerued any remnant, it appeared that his callinge was without repentance. For wheras God did from time to time chooſe vnto himſelfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, he had regard to his couenant, which being broken of the whole multitude he reſtrained to a few, that it ſhould not vtterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the ſeede of Abraham was a certaine viſible image of a greater benefit, which God hath vouchſaued to graunt to

few out of many. This is the reason why Paule so diligently putteth difference betwene the children of Abraham according to the flesh, and his spirituall children which were called after the example of Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and vnfruteſull thinge simply to be the childe of Abrahã (which might not be sayd without dishonor of the couenant) but becauſe the vnchangeable counsell of God, whereby he hath predeſtinate whom he would, is by it selfe effectuall only to this later sorte vnto saluation. But I warne the readers that they bringe not a foreconceiued iudgement on either side, till it appeare by the places of Scripture brought forth what is to be thought. That therefore which the Scripture clearely sheweth, we say that God by eternall and vnchangeable counsell hath ones appointed whome in time to come he would take to saluation, and on the other side whom he would condemne to deſtruction. This counsell as touching the elect, we say to be grounded vpon his free mercy without any reſpect of the worthineſſe of man: but whom he appointeth to damnation, to them by his iuſt in dede and irreprehenſible, but also incomprehenſible iudgement, the entry of life is forecloſed. Now in the elect we set vocation, to be the teſtimony of Election: & then iuſtification to be an other signe of the manifeſt shewing of it, til they come to glory wherin is the fullfilling of it. But as by vocation and election God maketh his elect: so by shutting out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name or from the sanctification of his Spirite, he doth as it were by theſe markes open what iudgement abideth for them. I will here paſſe ouer many fained inuentions, which fooliſh men haue forged to ouerthrowe predeſtination. For they nede no confutation, which so soone as they are brought forth do largely bewray their owne falſeneſſe. I will tary only vpon thoſe, which either are in controuerſie among the learned, or which may bring any hardineſſe to the simple, or which vngodlineſſe with faire seeming show pretendeth, to scoffe at the righteouſneſſe of God.

The xxij. Chapter.

A confirmation of this doctrine by teſtimonies of the Scripture.

ALL theſe thinges which we haue set are not without controuerſie amonge many, specially the free election of the faithfull: which yet can not be weakened. For the common sorte do thinke that God, as he foreſeeth that euery mannes deſeruinges shalbe, so maketh difference betwene men: that therefore whome he foreknoweth that they shalbe not vnworthy of his grace, them he adopteth into place of children : and whose natures he espieth that they will be bent to wickednesse and vngodlinesse, them he appointeth to the damnation of death. So by clokinge it with the veile of foreknowledge they do not onely darken election, but faine that it hath beginninge from elsewhere. And this opinion receiued of the common sorte is not the opinion of the common sorte alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I do plainly cõfesse, to the entent that no manne shoulde trust that it shall much hurt our cause if their names be obiected against vs. For, the trueth of God herein is more certaine, than that it may be shaken: more cleare, than that it may be darkened with the authority of menne. But some other neither exercised in the Scripture, nor worthy of any voice, do raile at this doctrine with greater maliciousnesse, than that their frowarde pride ought to be suffered. Because God choosinge some after his owne wil, leaueth other some, they picke a quarell against him. But if the thinge it selfe be knowen for true, what shall they preuaile with brawlinge against God? We teach nothing but that which is approued by experience, that it was alway at liberty for God to bestowe his grace to whome he will. I will not enquire whereby the posterity of Abraham excelled other, but by that vouchsauinge, whereof there is founde no cause elsewhere than in God. Let them answere why they be men rather than oxen or asses. When it was in the hand of God to make them dogges, he fashioned them after his owne image. Will they giue leaue to brute beastes to quarell with God for their estate, as though the difference were vnrighteous? Truely it is no more righteous, that they shoulde enioy the prerogatiue which they haue obtained by no deseruinges, than for God diuersly to deale abroade his benefites according to the measure of his owne iudgemẽt. If they skippe ouer to persons, where the inequality is more hateful to thẽ, at the least at the example of Christ they ought to be afraid to prate so boldely of so hie a mysterie. He is conceiued of the seede of Dauid, a mortall man: by what vertues will they say that he deserued to be in the very wombe made the head of Angels, the onely begotten sonne of God, the image & glory of the Father, the light, righteousnesse, and saluation of the worlde? This thing Augustine wisely noted, that in the very head of the Church is a most cleare mirror of free election, least it should trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by righteously liuinge made the sonne of God, but ỳ he had so great honor freely giuen him, that he might afterwarde make other partakers of his giftes. Here if any man aske why other were not the same that he was, or why all we are so farre distant from him, why all we be corrupt and he pure nes: such a man shall bewray not onely his madnesse but therewithal also his shamelesnesse. But if they go forward to labour to take from God the free power to chose and refuse, let them also take away that which is giuen to Christ. Now it is worth the trauaile to cõsider what the Scripture pronounceth of euery one. Paule verily, when he teacheth that we were chosen in Christ, taketh away all respect of our owne worthinesse. For it is all one as if he hadde sayd: because in the whole seede of Adam the heauenly father founde nothing worthy of his election, he turned his eies vnto his Christ, to choose as it were members out of his body them whom he woulde take into the felowship of life. Let this reason then be of force amonge the faithfull, that we were therefore adopted in Christ into the heauenly inheritance, because in our selues we were not able to receiue so great excellence. Which also he toucheth in an other place, when he exhorteth ỹ Colossians to giuinge of thankes, for this that they were by God made fit to be partakers of the estate of the holy. If election go before this grace of God, that we be made fit to obtaine the glory of the life to come: what shall God himselfe nowe finde in vs, whereby he may be moued to elect vs? My meaning shal yet be more openly expressed by an other sayinge of his. He hath chosen vs (sayth he) ere the fundatiõs of the world were laid, according to the good pleasure of his wil, that we might be holy, and vnspotted, and vnreprouable in his sight: where he setteth the good pleasure of God against all our deseruings whatsoeuer they be.

2 That the proofe may be more stronge, it is worth the labour to note all the partes of that place, which beinge coupled together do leaue no dout. Where he nameth the elect, it is no dout that he speaketh to the faithfull, as he also byandby afterward affirmeth. Wherefore they do with too fowle a glose abuse that name, which wrest it to the age wherein the Gospell was first published: Where he sayth that they were elect before the beginninge of the worlde, he taketh away all respect of worthines. For, what reason of difference is there betwene them which yet were not, and those which afterward should in Adam be egall? Nowe if they be elect in Christ, it followeth that not only euery man is seuered without himselfe, but also one of thẽ from an other, forasmuch as we see that not all are the members of Christ. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holy, plainely confuteth the errour which deriueth election from foreknowledge, forasmuch as Paule crieth out against it and sayeth that whatsoeuer vertue appeareth in men, it is the effect of election.

Now if a hier cause be sought, Paul answereth, that God hath so predestinate, yea and that according to the good pleasure of his will. In which wordes he ouerthroweth whatsoeuer meanes of their election men do imagine in themselues. For he also teacheth that whatsoeuer thinges God giueth toward spirituall life, they flowe out of this one fountain, because God hath chosen whom he would, & ere they were borne he had seuerally layd vp for them the grace which he vouchsaued to giue them.

3 But wheresoeuer this pleasure of God reigneth, there no works come to be considered. He doth not here in deede pursue the comparison of contraries, but it is to be vnderstanded such as he himselfe
2.Tim.1 declareth. He hath called vs (saith he) with a holy calling, not
9. according to our workes, but according to his purpose & the grace which is giuen of Christ before the times of the world. And we haue already shewed that all dout is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holy and vnspotted. For if thou say, because he foresaw that we should be holy, therefore he chose vs, thou shalt peruert the order of Paule. Thus therefore thou maist safely gather. If he chose vs that we might be holy: then he chose vs, not because he foresaw that we would be such. For these two thinges are contrary the one to the other: that the godly haue it of election that they be holy, and that they come to it by meane of workes. Neither is their cauillation here any thing worth to which they commonly flee, that the Lorde doth not render the grace of election to any workes goinge before, but yet graunteth it to workes to come. For when it is sayd that the faithfull were chosen, that they might be holy: therewithal is signified that the holinesse which was to come in them tooke beginninge at election. And how shall this saying agree together, that those things which are deriued from election gaue cause to election? The same thing which he sayd he seemeth afterwarde to confirme more strongly, where he saith, Accordinge to the purpose of his will which he had purposed Ephe.1. in himselfe. For, to say that God purposed in himselfe, is as much in
5. effect as if it had bin sayd, ỳ without himselfe he considered nothing wherof he had any regard in decreing. Therfore he byandby addeth, that the whole summe of our election tendeth to this ende, that we should be to the praise of the grace of God. Truely the grace of God deserueth not to be praised alone in our electiõ, vnlesse our election be free. But free it shall not be, if God in electing his, do cõsider what shalbe the workes of euery one. Therefore we finde that that which Ioh.15. Christ said to his disciples, hath place vniuersally among all the faith-
16. full, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosẽ you. Where he not only excludeth excludeth deseruinges past, but also signifieth that they had nothing in themselues why they shoulde be chosen, if he had not preuented them with his mercy. Like as this saying of Paule is also to be vnderstoode: Who first gaue to him, & shall receiue recõpense? For he meaneth to shewe that the goodnesse of God so preuenteth men, that it findeth nothing in them neither past nor to come, wherby he may be wonne to be fauorable to them. Rom.11 35.

4 Now to the Romaines, where he fetcheth this questiõ further of, & followeth it more largely, he denieth that all they are Israelites, which are issued of Israell: because although by right of inheritance they were all blessed, yet the succession did not egally passe to thẽ al. Ro.9.6. The beginning of this disputation proceded of the pride & deceitful glorying of the Iewish people. For when they claimed to themselues the name of the Church, they would haue ỹ credit of the Gospell to hang vpõ their will: as the Papistes at this day would gladly with this fained colour thrust thẽselues into the place of God. Paule, although he graunt that the offspringe of Abraham is holy by reason of the couenant, yet affirmeth that the most part of them are strangers in it: & that not onely because they swarue out of kinde, so that of lawefull children they become bastardes, but because the especiall election of God stãdeth aboue & reigneth in the hiest top, which alone maketh the adoption thereof sure. If their owne godlines stablished some in the hope of saluation, & their owne falling away alone disherited other some: Paul verily should both fondly and vnconueniently lift vp the readers euen to the secret election. Nowe if the will of God (the cause wherof neither appeareth nor is to be sought without himself) maketh the one sort differing from the other, so that not all the children of Israell be true Israelites, it is vainly fained that euery mans estate hath beginning in himselfe. Then he further followeth the matter vnder the example of Iacob & Esau. For when they both were the sonnes of Abraham, both together enclosed in one mothers wombe, it was a mõsterlike change that the honor of first birth was remoued to Iacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of the one & the reprobation of the other. The originall & cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will haue to be set out in the vertues, and vices of men. For this is an easie short way with them, that God shewed in the person of Iacob, that he chooseth the worthy of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeth to be vnworthy. Thus they say boldly. But what sayth Paule? when they were not yet borne, and hadde not done any good or euill, that according to election the purpose of

Rom. 9. 11. God might abide, not of works, but of him that calleth, it is sayd, The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is wrytten, Iacob I haue loued, but Esau I haue hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were vnfitly made of the time. Let vs graunt that Iacob was chosen, because he had worthines gotten by workes to come: to what purpose should Paule say that he was not yet borne? And this now should be vnaduisedly added, that he had yet done no good: because this shalbe a ready answere, that nothing is hidden from God, and that so the godlines of Iacob was present before him. If workes do win grace, they should then worthily haue had their price before that Iacob was borne as if he had bin growen to full age. But the Apostle goeth forward in vndoinge this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Iacob was not made of workes, but of the callinge of God. In workes he enterlaceth not the time to come or time past: & then he directly setteth them against the calling of God, meaning by stablishinge of the one expressly to ouerthrow the other: as if he had said that it is to be cõsidered what hath pleased God, not what men haue brought of themselues. Last of all it is certaine that by the words of Election & Purpose, all causes whatsoeuer men are wont to faine elsewhere than in the secret counsel of God, are quite remoued from this matter.

5 What colour wil they bring to darken these things, who in election assigne some place to workes either past or to come? For this is vtterly to mocke out that which the Apostle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not vpon any consideration of works, but vpon the mere calling of God: because it was put betwene them when they were not yet borne. Neither had he bin ignorant of this their suttelty, if it had had any soundnes in it: but because he very well knew, that God can foresee no goodnesse in man, but that which he hath first determined by ỹ benefit of his election to giue him: he fleeth not to that vnorderly order, to set good workes before the cause of themselues. Thus haue we by the words of the Apostle that the saluation of the faithful is founded vpon the will of the only election of God: & that the same fauour is not gotten by works, but commeth of free calling. We haue also as it were an image of that thing set before vs. Esau & Iacob are brethren, issuing both of one the same parents, encloſed yet both in one wombe, not yet brought out into the world. In them all things are egall, yet of thẽ ỹ iudgement of God is diuerse. For he taketh the one & forsaketh the other. There was nothing but the only first birth, by right wherof the one excelled the other. But this also being passed ouer, that thing is giuen to the yonger which is denied nied to the elder. Yea and in other also God seemeth alway as of set purpose to haue despised first birth, to cut of from the flesh all matter of glorying. Refusinge Ismaell, he cast his minde to Isaac. Pluckinge backe Manasse, he more honored Ephraim.

6 If any man interrupt me with saying that we must not by these inferiour & smal benefits determine of the summe of ỹ life to come, that he which hath bin aduanced to the honor of first birth, shoulde therfore be reckened to be adopted into the inheritance of heauen: (for there be some which spare not Paul himselfe, as though in alleaging these testimonies he had wrested ỹ Scripture to a strãge sense:) I answere as I haue done herebefore, that ỹ Apostle neither slipped by vnaduisednes, nor wilfully abused ỹ testimonies of the Scripture. But he saw (which they can not abide to consider) that God minded by an earthly signe to declare the spiritual election of Iacob, which otherwise was hidden in his inaccessible throne. For vnles we refer the first birth graunted to him vnto the worlde to come, it shoulde be a vaine & fonde forme of blessing whereby he obtained nothinge but manifolde miseries, discommodities, grisefull banishment, and many bitternesse of sorrow and cares. Therefore when Paule sawe without doutinge, that God by outward blessing testified the blessing which he had in his kingdom prepared spirituall and neuer decayinge for his seruant: he douted not for proofe of this spiritual blessing, to fetch an argument from that outward blessing. This also we must remember that to the land of Canaan was adioyned the pledge of the heauenly dwelling: so that it ought not at al to be douted that Iacob was grafted with the Angels into ỹ body of Christ that he might be partaker of the same life. Iacob therfore is chosen, whẽ Esau is reiected: and by the Predestination of God is made different from him from whom he differed not in any deseruinges. If you aske a cause, the Apostle rendreth this, becaus it is sayd to Moses, I wil haue mercy vpõ whom I will haue mercie: and I will vouchsaue to graunt mercy to whom soeuer I will vouchsaue to graunt mercy. And what, I beseech you, meaneth this? Verily, the Lord himselfe most plainely pronounceth that men haue in themselues no cause why he should do good to them, but he fetcheth the cause from his own mercy only: & therfore that the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluatiõ in himselfe alone, why wilt thou descend to thy self? Whẽ he appointeth to thee his mercy alone, why wilt thou runne to thine own deseruings? When he holdeth thy thought wholly in his mercifulnes alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine own workes? Therefore we must nedes come to that lesser people, which Rom. 9. 15.

Rom.11 2. Paul in an other place sayth to haue bin foreknowen to God: not in such sort as these men imagine, to foreknow out of an idle watchtour the thinges that he worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft reade. Act.2. 23. For truely when Peter saith in Luke, that Christ was by the determined counsell and foreknowledge of God appointed to death, he doth not bring God as a looker on but the author of our saluation. So the 1.Pet.1. 2. same Peter also, where he sayth that the faithfull to whom he wrote were chosen accordinge to the foreknowledge of God, properly expresseth that secrete Predestination whereby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And the word Purpose, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expressing all one thing, forasmuch as it doth euery where signifie a stedfast determination as they commonly call it, vndoutedly teacheth that God when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he saith in the same Chapter that Christ was the lambe foreknowen before the creation of the worlde. For what is more fonde or trifling, than to say that God from on hie did stand looking whense saluation shouid come to mankinde? Therefore in Paul the foreknowen people is as much as a small portion mingled with the multitude which falsely pretendeth the name of God. In an other place also Paule to beate downe their boastinge which beinge but couered with a visor, do take vpon themselues the chiefe preeminence amõg the godly before the world, saith that God knoweth who be his. Finally by that sayinge Paule pointeth vnto vs two sortes of people: the one, of the whole kinred of Abraham: the other, seuerally chosen out of it, and which beinge laid vp vnder the eies of God is hidden from the sight of men. And it is no dout that he tooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth that God will be mercifull to whom he will (although he there spake of the elect people, whose estate in outwarde seeminge was egall) as if he shoulde haue sayd, that in the common adoption is included with him a speciall grace toward some, as it were a more holy treasure: and that the cõmon couenaunt withstandeth not but that the same small number may be exempt in degree: and he willinge to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely denieth that he wil be mercifull to one rather than to an other, for any other reson, but for that it so pleaseth him: because when mercy commeth to him that seeketh it, though he in deede suffer not a deniall, yet he either preuenteth or partly getteth to himselfe the fauour whereof God claimeth to himselfe the praise. 2.Ti.2. 19.

7 Now let the soueraigne Iudge & maister pronounce of ỹ whole matter. Whẽ he saw so great hardnesse in his hearers, that he did in a maner maner waste his wordes without fruite among the multitude: to remedie this offence, he crieth out, Whatsoeuer my Father geueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoeuer my Father hath geuen me, I shal not lose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gifte, that we may be deliuered into the faithfull keping and defence of Christ. Here some man peraduenture will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they onely are accõpted in the propre possession of the Father, whose yeeldinge hath bene voluntarie by faith. But Christ standeth onely vpon that pointe, that although the fallings away of great multitudes do shake the whole world, yet the counsell of God shalbe stedfast and stande faster than the heauens themselues, that his election may neuer faile. They are saide to haue bene the elect of the Father, before that he gaue to them his onely begotten Sonne. They aske whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were straungers he made his owne hy drawing them to him. There is a greater clearenesse in the wordes of Christ, than can by shifting be couered with any darkenesse. No man (saith he) can come to me, vnlesse my Father drawe him. But who so hath hearde & learned of my Father, he commeth to me. If all generally without difference should bowe their knee before Christ, then the election were common: but nowe in the fewnesse of the beleuers appeareth a manifest diuersitie. Therfore after that Christ had affirmed that ỹ disciples which were giuẽ him, were the peculiar possession of God the Father, within a little after he added, I pray not for the worlde, but for those whom thou hast geuen me, because they are thine. Whereby is proued that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, sauing that grace deliuereth a fewe from the wrath of God, and from eternall death, which otherwise should haue perished: but the world it selfe is lefte in his owne destructiõ to which it was appointed. In the meane time although Christ putte himselfe meane betweene, yet he claimeth to himself the power of choosing in common with the Father. I speake not (saith he) of all: I knowe whom I haue chosen. If any man aske frõ whense he hath chosen thẽ, he answereth in an other place, Out of the world, which he excludeth out of his prayers when he commendeth his disciples to his Father. This is to be holden, that when he affirmeth that he knoweth whome he hath chosen, there is signified some speciall sort in the generall kinde of men: then, that the same speciall sort is made to differ not by the qualitie of their owne vertues, but by the heauenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excell by their owne force or diligence, when Christ maketh himselfe the author of electiō. For when in an other place he reckeneth Iudas among the elect, whereas he was a deuell, this is referred onely to the office of Apostleship which although it be a cleere mirror of the fauor of God (as Paule so oftentimes acknowledgeth in his owne persone,) yet it conteineth not in it selfe the hope of eternall saluation. Iudas therefore, when he did vnfaithfully beare the office of an Apostle, might be worse than the deuell: but of those whom Christ hath ones graffed into his body, he will suffire none to perishe: because in preseruing their saluation he will performe that which he hath promised, that is, he will stretch forth the power of God which is greater than all. For whereas he saith in an other place, Father, of those whom thou haste geuen me, I haue lost none but the sonne of perdition: although it be an abusiue speche by figure, yet it hath no doutefull meaning. The summe is, that God maketh them his children by free adoption whom he will haue to be his children: and that the inwarde cause thereof is in himselfe: because he his content with his owne secrete good pleasure.

8 But Ambrose Origene, and Hierome thought that God distributeth his grace among men, as he forseeth that euery man will vse it well: Yea and Augustine was ones in the same opinion. But when he had better profited in knowledge of the Scripture, he not onely reuoked it as euidently false, but also strongly confuted it: yea and after his reuoking of it, in reprouing the Pelagians for that they continued in the same error, sayeth: Who can not meruaill that the Apostle knewe not this most suttle sense? For when he hadde sette out a thing to be wondred at of these brethren, while they were not yet borne, and afterwarde obiected a question against himselfe, saying what then? Is there vniustice with God? Here was fitte place for him to aunswere, that God foresawe the merites of them both: yet he sayeth not this, but fleeth to the iudgements and mercy of God. And in an other place, when he had taken away all merites before electiō, Here (saith he) is confuted their vaine reasoning which defende the foreknowledge of God against the grace of GOD, and therefore say that we are chosen before the making of the world, because God foreknewe that we would be good, not that he himselfe would make vs good. He sayeth not this, which saith, Ye haue not chosen me, But I haue chosen you. For if he hadde therefore chosen vs, because he forknewe that we would be good: he should therewithall also haue foreknowen that we would choose him: and so forth as followeth to that effect. Let the testimonie of Augustine be of force among them that willingly rest in ỹ authority of the Fathers. Howe be it Augustine suffreth not himselfe to be seuered from the rest: but by cleere testimonies sheweth that this disagreement is false with ỹ malice wherof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the. xix. chapter of his booke of the Predestination of Saincts, he allegeth out of Ambrose, Christ calleth whom he hath mercie on. Againe, If he had willed, of the vndeuoute he might haue made deuoute. But God calleth whom he vouchsaueth: & whom he will he maketh religious. If I listed to knitte together a whole volume out of Augustine, I could readily shewe to the readers that I neede no other words but his: but I will not loade them with tediousnesse. But go to, let vs imagine that they speake not at all: but let vs geue hede to the matter it selfe. A harde questiō was moued, whether God didde righteously in this that he vouchesaued to graunte his grace but to some: Of which questiō Paul might haue incombred himselfe with one word if he had alleged the respect of workes. Why therfore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a discourse which abideth in the same hardenesse? Why, but because he ought not? For the Holy ghost which spake by his mouth, had not the disease of forgetfulnes. Therfore without any circūstances he answereth, that God therefore fauoreth his elect, because he will: herefore hath mercy, because he wil. For this Oracle of God, I wil haue mercy vppon whom I will haue mercy, & I wil shewe mercie to whom I will shewe mercie, is as much in effect as if it had bene said, that God is moued to mercy by no other reason but because he will haue mercy. Therefore this saying of Augustine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fitt to be chosen, but maketh them.

Ex. 33. 19.

9 Neither do we any thing passe vpon that sutteltie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of deseruings, is not in deede the cause of predestination on the behalfe of the act of him that doth predestinate, but on our behalfe it may after a certaine maner be so called, that is, according to the particular weyeng of Predestination: as when it is said that God predestinateth glorie to man by deseruings, because he hath decreed to geue to him grace by which he may deserue glorie. For sith the Lorde will in election haue vs to loke vnto nothing but his meere goodnesse, if any man shall couet here to see any more, it shalbe a wrongfull gredinesse. If we lusted to striue in sutteltie, we want not wherewith to beat backe this silly sutteltie of Thomas. He affirmeth that to the elect glorie is after a certaine maner predestinate by deseruings, because the Lord doth after a certain maner predestinate to thē the grace, by which they may deserue glory. What if I aunswer on the contrary side and say that predestination vnto grace, serueth election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting maide after it? that grace is predeſtinate to them, to whom the poſſeſſion of glorie hath bene long ago apointed: becauſe it pleaſeth the Lorde to bring his children from election into iuſtification? For thereupon it ſhall followe that the predeſtination of glorie was rather the cauſe of the Predeſtination of grace, than contrariwiſe, But away with theſe ſtriuinges, as things ſuperfluous for ſuch as ſhall thinke that there is wiſedome enough for them in the worde of God. For this vas in olde time truly written of an Eccleſiaſticall writer, that they which aſſigne the electiō of God to merites are more wiſe than they ought to be.

10 Some do obiect that God ſhould be contrary to himſelfe, if he ſhould vniuerſally call all men to him, & receiue but a fewe elect. So by their opinion the vniuerſalnes of the promiſe taketh away the difference of ſpeciall grace. And thus certaine ſobre men ſpeake, not ſo much to oppreſſe the truth, as to debarre crabbed queſtions, and to bridle the curioſitie of many. Their will is praiſe worthy, but their counſell is not to be allowed: becauſe dallying by ſhifts is neuer excuſable. But their obiecting of it which do more railingly inuey againſt it, is verily to fonde a cauillation, or to ſhamefull an error. Howe the Scripture maketh theſe two to agree together, that by outward preaching all men are called to Repentance and faith, and yet not to all men is geuen the Spirit of Repentance and faith, I haue in an other place already declared, and by and by ſomewhat of it muſt be repeted againe. Nowe that which they require I denie to them, ſith it is two wayes falſe. For, he that threteneth that while it raineth vppon one citie, there ſhall be drought vppon an other: He that pronounceth that there ſhall in an other place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not himſelf with a certaine lawe to call all men egally. And he which forbidding Paule to ſpeake in Aſia, and turning him from Bithinia draweth him into Macedonia, ſheweth that it is in his own power to diſtribute this treaſure to whomeſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him. Yet more plainely he ſheweth by Eſaie, howe he peculiarly directeth to the electe the promiſes of ſaluation: for he ſayeth of them onely, and not of all makinde indifferently, that they ſhall be his diſciples. Whereby it is certaine that the doctrine of ſaluation is wrongfully ſette open in common to all men to profite effectually, which is ſaid to be ſeuerally laide vp onely for the children of the Chirch. Let this ſuffiſe at this preſente, that although the voice of the Goſpell ſpeake generally to all, yet the gifte of faith is rare. Eſaie aſſigneth a cauſe, for that the arme of the Lorde is not open to all men. If he had ſaid that the Goſpell is maliciouſly and frowardly deſpiſed, becauſe many do ſtubbornly refuſe to heare: peraduenture this color touching ching vniuersall callinge should preuaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminish the faulte of men, when he teacheth that the fountaine of blindnesse is, that God vouchsaueth not to open his arme to them: onely he geueth warning, that because faith is a singular gift, the eares are beaten in vaine with outwarde doctrine. But I would faine knowe of these doctors, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainly when it is said in the first chapiter of Iohn, Whosoeuer beleue in the onely begotten Sonne of God, are themselues also made the children of God, there is not in that place a confused heape iumbled vp together: but a speciall order is geuen to the faithfull, which are borne not of blood, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (say they) there is a mutuall consent of faith with the word. Namely wheresoeuer is faith. But it is no newe thing that seede fall among thornes or in stonie places: not onely because the greater part appeareth in deede obstinate against God, but also because not all men haue eyes & eares. How then shal it agree that God calleth to him thē who he knoweth will not come? Let Augustine aunswere for me. Wilt thou dispute with me? Meruaile with me, and crie out, O depth. Let vs both agree in feare, least we perish in error? Moreouer if election (as Paule witnesseth) be the mother of faith, I turne backe the argument vpon their owne head, that faith is therfore not generall, because election is speciall. For by the orderly hanging together of causes & effectes, it is easily gathered that where Paule saith, that we are full of all spirituall blessing, as God had chosen vs before the creatiō of the world: therefore these richesse are not common to all, because God hath chosen onely whom he would. This is the reason why in an other place he cōmendeth the faith of the electe, least it should be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himself: but that this glorie may remaine with God, that they are freely enlightned of him, whome he had chosen before. For Bernarde saith rightly, Frendes do seuerally heare, to whom he also saith, Feare not thou small flocke: for to you it is geuen to knowe the misterie of the kingdome of heauen. Who be these? euen they whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great and secrete counsell is made knowen. The Lorde knewe who be his: but that which was knowē to God, is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a mistery, but those selfe same men whome he hath forknowen & predestinate to be his. A little after he concludeth. The mercie of God is from eternitie euen to eternitie vpon them that feare him: from eternitie, by reason of predestinatiō: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, ỹ other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernarde for witnesse, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none doe see but they which are of God? By which wordes he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of God, do dasell at the brightnesse of his countenāce. And to election faith in deede is fittly ioined, so that it kepe the secōd degree. Which order the wordes of Christ do clerely expresse in an other place, This is the will of my Father, that I lose not that which he hath giuē. For this is his will, that whosoeuer beleueth in the Sonne shall not perish. If he would haue all saued, he would appoint ouer them his Sonne to be their keper, and would graffe them all into his body with the holy bond of faith. Nowe it is certain that faith is a singular pledge of his fatherly loue, layed vp for his children whom he hath adopted. Therefore Christ in an other place saith that the shepe followe the shepherd, because they know his voice: but they followe not a stranger, because they knowe not the voice of straungers. Whense commeth this differēce, but because their eares are boared by God? For no man maketh himselfe a shepe: but he is made one by the heauenly grace. For which cause also the Lorde teacheth that our safetie shall alway be certaine and free from danger, because it is kepte by the inuincible power of God. Wherefore he concludeth that ỹ vnbeleuers are not of his shepe: namely because they are not of the number of them, whome God hath promised by Esaie that they shalbe his disciples. Nowe because in the testimonies which I haue alleged is expressed perseuerance, they do therewithall testifie the vnmouable stedfastnesse of election.

11 Nowe let vs speake of the reprobate, whom the Apostle ioineth there together. For as Iacob, hauing yet with good workes deserued nothing, is taken into grace: so Esau, being yet defiled with no wicked doinge, is hated. If we turne our eyes to workes, we do wrong to the Apostle, as though he sawe not the same thing which we clerely see. It is proued that he sawe it not, forasmuch as he expresly enforceth this pointe, that when they had not yet done any good or euell, the one was chosen, and the other refused, to prou that the foundation of the predestination of God is not in workes. Againe when he moued the obiectiō, whether God be vnrighteous, he allegeth not that which had bene the most certaine and plaine defence of his righteousnesse, namely that God reduced to Esau according to his euellnesse: but he was content with an other solution, that the reprobate are stirred vp to this ende, that the glorie of God may be set forth by them. Last of all he adioineth a concluding sentence, that God hath mercie vpon whome he will, and hardeneth whom he will. See you not howe he imputeth both to the onely will of God? Therefore if we can not declare a reason why he vouchsaueth to graunt mercie to them that be his, but because it so pleseth him: neither also shall we haue any other cause in reiecting of other, than his own will. For when it is said that God hardeneth, or sheweth mercie to whome he will, men are thereby warned to seke no cause ells where than in his will.

BVt when the witt of man heareth these things, the frowardnesse thereof can not be restrained, but that by & by as at the bloody blast of a trumpet, sounding to battaile, it diuersly and excessiuely turmoyleth. And many in deede, as though they would driue away the malice from God, do so graunte election, that they denie that any man is reprobate: but they do to ignorantly and childishely: forasmuch as election it selfe could not stande vnlesse it were set contrary to reprobation: God is said to seuer them whom he adopteth vnto saluation: it should be more than foolishly said that other do either by chaunce or by their owne endeuor obteine that which onely election geueth to a fewe. Therfore whom God passeth ouer, he reiecteth: and for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predestinate to his children. Neither is the waiwardnes of men tolerable, if it suffre not it selfe to be bridled with the word of God, where the incõprehensible counsell of God is entreated of, which the Angels themselues do worship. But we haue already heard, that hardening is no lesse in the hand and will of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men do that I haue spoken of) busily labour to excuse God with a lying defence: but onely he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarel with him that formed it. Now who so do not admit that any are reiected of God, howe will they vncombre themselues from that saying of Christ, Euery tree which my father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the roote? They plainly heare that all they are adiudged and auowed to destruction, whome the heauenly Father hath not vouchsaued to plãt as holy trees in his ground. If they denie this to be a signe of reprobatiõ, then is there nothing so clere that it may be proued to them. But if they cesse not to wrangle, let ỹ sobriety

Rom.9. 21. of faith be contented with this admonition of Paule, that there is no cause to quarel with God, if he willing on the one side to shewe his wrath and to make his power knowen do with dumme sufferãce, and lenitie beare with the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: and on the other side he make knowen the richesse of his glorie toward the vessels of mercy which he hath prepared to glory. Let the Reders marke, howe Paul to cutte of occasion from whisperinges & backbitinges, geueth the chiefe rule to the wrath & power of God: bycause it is vniust that those depe iudgemẽts which swallowe vp all our senses, should be made subiect to our determination. Our aduersaries answere is very trifling, that God doth not vtterly reiect them whom he suffreth in lenitie, but abideth with a minde hanginge in suspence towarde them, if peraduenture they may repente. As though Paule geueth to God a patience, to loke for their turning, whome he sayeth to be made to destruction. For, Augustine saith rightly where he expoundeth this place, where power is ioined to sufferance, God doth not suffer, but gouerne with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing said that the vessels of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, that God hath prepared the vessels of mercie: becausse by this meane he ascribeth and chalengeth the praise of saluation to God, but the blame of destruction he casteth vpon them which by their owne will do bring it vpon themselues. But although I graunt to them that Paul by the diuerse maner of speaking didde soften the roughnesse of the first part of the sentence, yet it is not meete to assigne the preparing vnto destruction to any other thing than to the secret counsell of God: which also is affirmed a little before in the rest of the texte, That God stirred vp Pharao: Thẽ, that he hardneth whom he will. Wherupon followeth that the hidden counsell of God is the cause of hardning. This at the lest I get which Augustine saith, that when God of wolues maketh shepe, he doth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardnes may be tamed: and therefore God for this cause doth not conuert the obstinate, because he doth not shewe forth in them the mightier grace, which he wanteth not if he would shewe it forth.

2 These sayinges in deede should be sufficient for the godly and sobre, & them which remẽbre themselues to be men. But forasmuch as these venemous dogges do cast vp not onely one sort of venime against God, we will as the matter shall serue, aunswer to euery one particularly. Foolishe men do diuers wayes quarell with God, as though they had him subiect to their accusations. First therfore they aske, by what right the Lorde is angry with his creatures, of whome

he hath not bene first prouoked by any offence: for to condemne to destructon whom he will, agreeth rather with the wilfulnesse of a tyrant, than the lawefull sentence of a iudge. Therefore they say that there is cause why men should charge God, if by his bare will, without their owne deseruing, they be predestinate to eternall death. If such thoughts do at any time come into the minde of the godly, to breake their violent assaultes they shalbe sufficiently armed with this although they had no more, if they consider how great wickednesse it is, euen so much as to enquire of the causes of the will of God: sith of all things that are, it is the cause, and worthily so ought to be. For if it haue any cause, then somewhat must go before it, wherto it must be as it were bound: which it is vnlawfull ones to imagine. For, the will of God is so the highest rule of righteousnes, that whatsoeuer he willeth, euen for this that he willeth it, it ought to be take for righteous. When therefore it is asked, why the Lorde did it: it is to be aunswered, because he willed it. But if thou go further in asking why he willed it, thou askest some greater and hier thing than the will of God: which can not be found. Let therefore the rashnesse of man restraine it selfe, and not seke that which is not, least paraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridle (I say) he shalbe well withholden whosoeuer he be that will dispute of the secrets of God with reuerence. As for the boldenesse of the wicked, which drede not openly to speake euell of God: against it the Lorde with his owne righteousnesse, without any our defense shall sufficiētly defend himselfe, when he shall take all shifting from their consciences, and hold them fast conuinced, and condemne them. Neither do we yet thrust in the fained deuise of absolute power, which as it is prophane, so worthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faine not God laweleſſe, who is a lawe to himselfe: because (as Plato saith) men stand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull lustes: but the will of God is not onely pure from all fault, but also is the hiest rule of perfectiō, yea and the lawe of all lawes. But we denie that he is subiect to yelde accompt. We denie also that we are mete iudges, which would pronoūce of this cause after our owne sense. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawefully may, let that threatening of the Psalme bring vs in feare, that God shall ouercome so oft as he is iudged of any mortall man.

3 So can God in keping silence, put his enemies to silence. But, that we may not suffer them freely to scorne his holy name, he deliuereth to vs out of his word weapons against them. Wherefore if any man assaile vs with such wordes: why God hath from the beginning predeſtinate ſome to death, which when they were not, could not yet deſerue the iudgement of death: we in ſteede of aunſwer may againe on our ſide aſke of them, what they thinke that God oweth to man, if he will iudge him by his owne nature. In ſuch ſort as we be all corrupted with ſinne, we can not but be hatefull to God: & that not by tirannous crueltie, but by moſt vpright reaſon of iuſtice. If all they whom the Lord doth predeſtinate to death, are by the eſtate of nature ſubiect to the iudgement of death: of what vniuſtice againſt themſelues, I beſeche you, may they complaine? Let all the ſonnes of Adam come: Let them ſtriue and diſpute with their creator, for that by his eternall prouidence they were before their generation condemned to euerlaſting miſerie. What ſhall they be able ones to murter againſt this defenſe, whē God on the other ſide ſhall call them to reknowledging of themſelues? If they be all takē out of a corrupt maſſe, it is no maruell if they be ſubiect to damnation. Let them not therefore accuſe God of vniuſtice, if by his eternall iudgement they be apomted to death, to which they themſelues do fele whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appereth howe wrongfull is the deſire of their murmuring, becauſe they do of ſet purpoſe hide the cauſe of damnation which they are cōpelled to acknowledge in themſelues, that the laying of the blame vpon God may acquite them. But though I do a hundred times confeſſe, as it is moſt true, that God is the author of it, yet they do not by and by wipe away the giltineſſe which being engrauen in their cōſciēces from time with oft recourſe, preſenteth it ſelfe to their eyes.

4 Againe they except and ſay: were they not before predeſtinate by the ordinance of God to the ſame corruption which is nowe alleaged for the cauſe of damnation? When therefore they periſh in their corruption, they do nothing but ſuffer the puniſhment of that miſerie into which by his predeſtination Adam fell and drewe his poſteritie hedlong with him. Is not he therefore vniuſt, which doth ſo cruelly mocke his creatures. I graunt in deede that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miſerie of ſtate wherin they be nowe bound: and this is it that I ſaid at the beginning, that at length we muſt alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cauſe whereof is hidden in himſelfe. But it followeth not byandby that God is ſubiect to this ſclaunder. For we will with Paule aunſwer them in this maner, O man, what art thou that contendeſt with God? doth the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou formed me ſo? Hath not the potter power to make of the ſame lumpe one veſſel to honor, and an other to diſhonor? They will say that the righteousnesse of God is so not truely defended, but that we seke a shift, such as they are wont to haue that want a iust excuse. For what els seemeth here to be said, than that God hath a power which can not be hindered from doing any thing whatsoeuer it be as he will himselfe? But it is farre otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought than when we are commaunded to thinke what a one God is? For howe should he commit any vniustice, which is iudge of the world? If it properly perteine to the nature of God to do iudgement, then he naturally loueth righteousnesse, and abhorreth vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though he were ouertaken, loke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousnesse of God is hier than that it either is to be measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the sclender capacitie of the wit of man. The Apostle in deede confesseth that there is such depth in the iudgements of God, wherewith the mindes of men should be swalowed, if they endeuored to pearce into it. But he teacheth also howe hainous wrong it is, to binde the workes of God to such a lawe, that so sone as we vnderstand not the reason of them, we may be bold to disalowe them. It is a knowen saying of Salomon (which yet fewe do rightly vnderstand) The great creator of all rendreth reward to the foole, and reward to transgressors. For he crieth out concerninge the greatnesse of God: in whose will it is to punish fooles & transgressors, although he do not vouchesaue to let them haue his Spirit. And monstruous is the madnesse of men, whē they so couet to make that which is vnmeasurable, subiect to the smal measure of their reason. The Angels which stoode stil in their vprightnesse, Paule calleth elect. If their stedfastnes was grounded vpon the good pleasure of God, the falling away of the other proueth that they were forsaken: Of which thing there can no other cause be alleged than reprobation, which is hidden in the secret counsell of God.

Pro. 26. 10.

5 Go to: let there nowe be present some Manichee, or Celestine, a sclaunderer of the prouidence of God: I say with Paule that there ought no reason to be rendred thereof: because with the greatnesse of it, it farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. What maruell? or what absurditie is it? Would he haue the power of God so limited, that it may be able to worke no more, than his minde is able to conceiue? I say with Augustine, that they are created of ỹ Lord, whom he without douting foreknewe that they should go into destruction: and that it was so done, because he so willed: but why he willed, it is not our part to aske a reason of it, who can not comprehend it: neither is it mete that the will of God ſhould come downe into controuerſie among vs, of which ſo oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named the hieſt rule of righteouſneſſe. Why therefore is any queſtion moued of vnrighteouſneſſe where righteouſneſſe clerely appereth? Neither let vs be aſhamed, after the example of Paule, ſo to ſtoppe the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time ſo oft as they ſhalbe bold to barke againſt it, to repete this, Who be ye miſetable men, that lay an accuſation to Gods charge, and do therefore lay it to his charge becauſe he doth not temper the greatneſſe of his workes to your dulneſſe? As though they were therefore wrongfull, becauſe they are hidden from fleſh. The vnmeaſurableneſſe of the iudgementes of God is by cleare experiences knowen vnto you. Ye Pſa. 36. knowe that they are called the depe bottomleſſe depth. Nowe aſke of the narrowe capacities of your wit, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himſelfe. What good doth it you therefore with mad ſearching to plunge your ſelues into the bottomleſſe depth, which reaſon it ſelfe teacheth you that it ſhalbe to your deſtruction? Why are ye not at the leaſt reſtrained with ſome feare of that which both the hiſtorie of Iob and the bookes of the Prophets do report of the incomprehenſible wiſedome, and terrible power of God. If thy minde be vnquieted, let it not greue thee to Auguſt. de verb. apoſto. ſermo. 20. embrace the counſell of Auguſtine. Thou being a man lokeſt for an aunſwer at my hand: and I alſo am a man. Therfore let vs both heare him that ſaith: O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than raſh knowledge, Seke merites: thou ſhalt finde nothing but peine. O depth. Peter denieth: the Thefe beleueth. O depth. Sekeſt thou a reaſon? I will trēble at the depth. Reaſon thou, I will wonder: diſpute thou, I will beleue: I ſee depth, but I reache not the bottome. Paul reſted, becauſe he found wondering. He calleth the iudgements of God vnſearchable: and art thou come to ſearche them? He ſaith that his wayes are impoſſible to be traced out: and doeſt thou trace them? with proceding further we ſhall nothing profit: For neither we ſhall ſatisfie their way wanton curiouſneſſe, neither doth the Lord neede any other defenſe, than which he hath vſed by his Spirit, which ſpake by the mouth of Paule: and we forget to ſpeake well, when we ceſſe to ſpeake with God.

6 Their other obiection alſo ariſeth out of vngodlineſſe, which yet tēdeth not ſo directly to the accuſing of God as to the excuſing of the ſinner. Howebeit the ſinner which is condemned of God can not be iuſtified without diſhonor of the iudge. Thus therefore prophane tongs do barke againſt God, ſaying: why ſhould God impute those things for sinne to men, whereof he hath by his predestination layed necessitie vpon men? For, what should they do? Should they wrastle with his decrees? But so should they do it in vaine, sith they can not do it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully punished for those things, wherof the chefe cause is in Gods predestination. Here I will absteine from that defense, wherunto the Ecclesiastical writers do commonly flee, namely that the foreknowledge of God withstãdeth not but that man may be accompted the sinner: because God foreseeth the euels of man, not his owne. For so the cauillatiõ would not stay here, but will rather presse vs further with saying that God might if he had would, haue prouided remedie for those euels which he foresaw: and that sith he hath not so done, he hath of determined purpose created men to that ende that he should so behaue himself in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man was created to this condition, that he should do all those things that he doth: then he is not to be blamed for that which he can not auoide, & which he enterprised by the will of God. Therfore let vs see how this knot ought to be well looſed. First of all this ought to be holden certaine among all men which Salomon saith, that God hath created all things for himself, & the wicked man to an euel day. Behold, when the dispising of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of safetie and death: he so ordereth them by his counsell and becke, that among men there are borne some adiudged euen from their mothers wombe to death, which with their destruction may glorifie his name. If any man answer, that there is no necessitie layed vpon them by the prouidéce of God, but rather that he created them in such estate, because he foresawe their peruersnesse to come: he neither saith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deede somtimes to vse this solution: but as it were doubtingly. But the Scholemen rest vpon it, as though nothing could be obiected against it. In dede I wil willingly graunt, ỳ foreknowledge alone bringeth no necessitie to creatures, although all men do not so agree: for there be some that will haue it also to be the cause of things. But it seemeth to me that Valla, a man otherwise not much practised in holy writinges, saw both more depely & more wisely, which shewed that this contention is superfluous: because both life and death are rather the doings of Gods will than of his foreknowledge. If God did but foresee the successes of men, & did not also dispose and order them by his will, then this question should not without cause be moued, whether his foreseing any thing auailed to the necessitie of them, But sith he doth none otherwise forsee the things ỳ shall come Pro. 16. 4.

to passe, than because he hath decreed that they should so come to passe: it is vaine to moue controuersie about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that all things do happen rather by ordinance and commaundement.

7 They say that this is not written in expresse words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam should perish by his falling away. As though the same God, whome the Scripture reporteth to do whatsoeuer he will, created the noblest of all his creatures to an vncertaine ende. They say he had freewill, that he might shape to himselfe his owne fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his deseruing. If so cold a deuise be receiued, where shalbe that almightines of God, wherby he gouerneth all things according to his secret counsell, which hangeth vpon none other thing than it selfe? But predestination, whether they will or no, sheweth himselfe in Adams posteritie. For it came not to passe naturally that all men should lose saluation by the fault of one parēt. What hindereth them to confesse of one man, that which against their willes they confesse of all mankinde? For why should they lose their labour with dallying shiftes? The Scripture crieth out that all men were in the persone of one man made bonde to eternall death. Sith this can not be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceded from the wonderous counsell of God. But it is to much absurditie that these good Patrones of the righteousnesse of God do so stumble at a strawe, and leape ouer great beames. Againe I aske: howe came it to passe, that the fall of Adam did wrappe vp in eternall death so many natiōs with their children being infantes, without remedie, but because it so pleased God? Here their tongues which are otherwise so pratling, must of necessitie be dumme. It is a terrible decree, I graunt: yet no man shalbe able to denie, but that God foreknewe what ende man should haue, ere he created him, and therefore foreknewe it bycause he had so ordeined by his decree. If any man here inuey against the foreknowledge of God, he rashly and vndiscretely stumbleth. For, what matter is there, I beseech you, why the heauenly iudge should be accused for that he was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be any either iuste or colorable complaint, it toucheth predestination. Neither ought it to serue an absurdity which I say, that God foresaw not onely the fall of the first man, and in him the ruine of his posterity, but also disposed it after his owne wil. For as it belongeth to his wisedome, to foreknowe all things that shalbe: so it belongeth to his power, to rule and gouerne all things with his hand. And this que-

Enchir. ad Lau. stion Augustine very well discussеth, as he doth other, saying: We

most holsomely confesse that which we most rightly beleue, that the God and Lorde of all things, which created all things very good, and foreknewe that euell things should spring out of good, and knewe that it more perteined to his almighty goodnesse euen of euell things do well, than not to suffer them to be euell: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shewe what free will could do, and then what the benefit of his grace and judgement of iustice could do.

8 Here they runne to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will haue it graunted that the wicked do perish, God onely permitting but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitteth it, but because he so willeth. Howebeit it is not likely, that man by himselfe, by the onely permission of God, without any his ordinãce, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God apointed not, of what condition he woulde haue the chiefe of his creatures to be. I therfore will not dout to cõfesse simply with Augustine, that the wil of God is a necessitie of things and that what he willeth, it must of necessitie come to passe: as those things shall truelly come to passe which he hath foreseen. Nowe if for excuse of themselues and of the vngodly, either the Pelagiãs, or Manichees, or Anabaptistes, or Epicureans (for with these fower sectes we haue to do in this question) shall obiect against vs necessitie wherewith they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing els but a dispensation of righteousnesse of God, which is hidden in deede, but yet without faulte: For asmuch as it is certaine that they were not vnworthy to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as certaine that the destruction is most righteous which they entre into by predestination. Moreouer their destruction so hangeth vpon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is founde in themselues. For the first man fell, because the Lorde so iudged it to be expedient: why he so iudged, is vnknowen to vs: yet it is certaine that he so iudged for no other reason but because he sawe that thereby the glorie of his name should be worthily set forth. When thou heareſt mention of the glorie of God, there thinke of his righteousnes: For it must be righteous that deserueth praise. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordeininge it: but he falleth by his owne fault. The Lorde had a litle before pronoũced, that all the things which he had made were very good. Whense therefore commeth that peruersnesse to man, to fall away from his God? Least it should be thought to be of creation, the Lorde with his commendation allowed that which came from himſelfe. Therefore by his owne euelneſſe he corrupted the nature which he had receiued pure of the Lorde, and by his fall he drewe his whole poſteritie with him into deſtruction. Wherefore let vs rather beholde an euident cauſe of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankinde, which is nerer to vs, than ſearch for a hidden and vtterly incomprehenſible cauſe thereof in the predeſtination of God. Neither let it greue vs ſo farre to ſubmit our wit to the vnmeaſurable wiſdome of God, that it may yeld in many ſecrets of his. For, of thoſe things which it is neither graunted nor lawefull to knowe, the ignorance is well learned: the coueting of knowledge, is a kinde of madneſſe.

9 Some man parhappes will ſay, that I haue not yet brought enough to ſubdue that wicked excuſe. But I verily confeſſe that it can neuer be brought to paſſe, but that vngodlineſſe will alway grudge and murmure againſt it: yet I thinke that I haue ſpoken ſo much as might ſuffice to take away not onely all reaſon but alſo all colour of gaineſaying. The reprobate would be thought excuſable in ſinning, becauſe they can not eſcape the neceſſitie of ſinning: ſpecially ſith ſuch neceſſitie is caſt vpon them by the ordinance of God. But we denie that they are thereby well excuſed, becauſe the ordinance of God, by which they complaine that they are deſtinate to deſtruction, hath his righteouſneſſe, vnknowen in deede to vs, but yet moſt certaine. Wherupon we conclude, that they beare no euel which is not layed vpon them by the moſt righteous iudgement of God. Then, we teach that they do ouerthwartly, which to ſeke out the beginning of their damnation, do bend their eyes to the ſecret cloſets to the counſell of God, and winke at the corruption of nature, fom whenſe their damnation ſpringeth. And this withſtandeth that they can not impute it to God, for that he witneſſeth of his owne creation. For although man is creat by the eternall prouidence of God to that calamitie, whereunto he is ſubiect: yet the matter thereof he tooke of himſelfe, not of God: foraſmuch as he is by no other meane ſo loſt, but becauſe he wente out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt and vnpure peruerſneſſe.

10 Nowe the aduerſaries of Gods predeſtination do ſclander it alſo with a third abſurditie. For when we impute it to nothing els but to the choiſe of the will of God, ỹ they are made free from the vniuerſall deſtruction, whom he maketh heires of his kingdome, thereby they gather that there is with him accepting of perſones, which the Scripture euery where denieth: & therfore, that either the Scripture diſagreeth with it ſelf, or that in the electiō of God there is reſpect of

deseruings. First, the Scripture in an other sense denieth, that God is an accepter of persones, than as they iudge it. For by the name of Person, it signifieth not a man, but those thinges which beinge seene with eies in man are wont to procure either fauour, grace, and dignity, or hatred, contempt, and shame: as, richesse, wealth, power, nobility, office, countrey, excellency of beauty, and such other: on the other side pouerty, neede, baseneſſe, vileneſſe, contempt, and such other. So Peter and Paul do teach that the Lord is not an accepter of persones, because he putteth not difference betwene the Iew & the Grecian, to refuse the one and embrace the other for only respect of nation. So Iames vseth the same words when he mindeth to affirme, that God in his iudgement nothing regardeth richesse. But Paule in an other place speaketh thus of God, that in iudging he hath no consideration of freedome or bondage. Wherefore there shalbe no contrariety if we shall say that God accordinge to the will of his good pleasure without any deseruinge chooseth to his sonnes whome he will, reiectinge and refusinge other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may be more fully satisfied. They aske howe it commeth to passe, that of two betwene whom no deseruinge putteth any difference, God in his electinge passeth ouer the one and taketh the other. I on the other side do aske them, whether they thinke that in him that is taken there is any thinge that may make the minde of God to encline toward him. If they confesse (as they nedes must) that there is nothing, it shall follow that God looketh not vpon man, but from his owne goodneſſe fetcheth a cause why to do good to him. Wheras therfore God chooseth one man, refusing an other, this cõmeth not of respect of man, but of his mercy alone, which ought to haue liberty to shew forth and vtter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in an other place also shewed, that there were not frõ the beginninge many called noble, or wise, or honorable, that God might humble the pride of flesh: so farre is it of, that his fauour was bound to persones.

Act. 10. 34. Rom. 2. 10. Gala. 3. 28 Iam. 2. 5 Colo. 3. 25. Ephe. 6. 9. Aug. ad Bonif. li. 1. ca. 7. 1. Cor. 1 26.

11 Wherefore many do falsely and wickedly accuse God of partiall vnrighteousneſſe, for that he doth not in his predestination kepe one selfe course toward all men. If (say they) he finde all gilty, let him egally punish all: if he finde them vngilty, let him withholde the rigor of his iudgemẽt from all. But so they deale with him, as if either mercy were forbidden him, or whẽ he would haue mercy he be compelled altogether to giue ouer his iudgemẽt. What is it that they require: if all be gilty, that all may together suffer al one paine. We graunt the giltineſſe to be common, but we say that the mercy of God helpeth ſome. Let it help all, ſay they. But we anſwere, that it is rightfull that he ſhould alſo in puniſhinge ſhewe himſelfe a rightfull iudge. When they ſuffer not this: what do they elſe but either go about to ſpoyle God of his power to haue mercy, or at leaſt to graunt it him vppon this condition, that he vtterly giue ouer his iudgement. Wherefore theſe ſayinges of Auguſtine do very well agree together. Sith in the firſt man the whole maſſe of mankinde fell into condemnation, theſe veſſels that are made of it to honor, are not the veſſels of their owne righteouſneſſe, but of the mercy of God: & whereas other are made to diſhonor, the ſame is not to be imputed to vnrightfulneſſe but to iudgement &c: That to thoſe whom he refuſeth, God rendereth due paine: to thoſe whom he calleth, he giueth vnderſerued grace: that they are deliuered from all accuſation, after the manner of a creditor, in whoſe power it is, to forgiue to the one, and aske of the other. Therefore the Lord alſo may giue grace to whom he will, becauſe he is merciſull: & giue it not to all, becauſe he is a iuſt iudge. He may by giuing to ſome, that which they do not deſerue, ſhew his free grace: and by not giuinge to all, declare what all deſerue. For wheras Paul writeth that God encloſed all vnder ſinne, that he might haue mercy vpon all, it is therewithall to be added that he is dettor to no man: becauſe no man firſt gaue to him, that he may require like of him.

Rom. 11 31.

12 This alſo they often ſay, to ouerthrowe predeſtination, that while it ſtandeth, all carefulneſſe and endeuour of well doing falleth away. For who (ſay they) ſhall heare that either life or death is certainely appointed for him by the eternall decree of God, but that it will byandby come into his minde that it maketh no matter how he behaue himſelfe, ſith the predeſtination of God can by his worke be nothinge hindered or furthered? So ſhall all men diſſolutely throw foorth themſelues, and after a deſperate manner runne headelonge whether their luſt ſhal cary them. And verily they ſay not altogether falſely, for there be many ſwine, which with filthy blaſphemies defile the doctrine of predeſtination, and by this pretenſe alſo do mocke out all admoniſhmentes and rebukinges, ſayinge, God knoweth what he hath ones determined to do with vs: if he haue decreed our ſaluatiõ, he will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he haue predeſtinate our death, we ſhoulde trauaile in vaine to the contrary. But the Scripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reuerence and religiouſneſſe we ought to thinke of ſo great a miſtery, doth both inſtruct the godly to farre other ſenſe, and well confute theſe mens outrage. For it doth not ſpeake of predeſtinatiõ to this end, that we ſhould be encouraged to boldnesse, and with vnlawfull rashenesse attempt to search the vnattained secretes of God: but rather that being humbled and abaced we should learne to tremble at his iudgement, & reuerently to looke vp to his mercy. To this marke the faithfull wil leuell themselues. As for that filthy groninge of swine, it is well confuted of Paule. They say that they go carelesly forward in vices: because if they be of the number of the elect, their vices shall nothinge hinder them, but that they shall at length be brought to life. But Paul telleth that we be to this end, that we should lead a holy & faultlesse life. If the marke that election is directed vnto be holinesse of life, it ought more to awake & sturre vs vp cheresully to practise that holinesse, than to serue for a clokinge of slothfulnesse. For howe greatly do these thinges differ the one from the other: to ceasse from well doing, because election sufficeth to saluation: and that the appointed ende of election is that we shoulde apply our selues to the endeuour of good doings. Away therfore with such sacrileges which do wrongfully misturne the whole order of election. Where they stretch their blasphemies further, when they say that he which is reprobate of God, shall loose his labour if he go about to make himselfe alloweable to him with innocency & honesty of life: therin they are taken with a most shameleſſe lye. For, whense coulde such endeuour come but of election? For whosoeuer be of the number of the reprobate, as they are vessels made to dishonor, so they ceasse not with continuall wicked doinges to prouoke the wrath of God against themselues, and by euident tokens to confirme the iudgement of God which is already pronounced vpon them: so farre be they from striuinge with him in vaine. Eph.1.4

13 But other do maliciously & shamefully sclaunder this doctrine as though it did ouerthrowe all exhortations to godly liuinge. For which matter in olde time Augustine was burdened with a great malice. Which he wiped away with his booke of correption and Grace wrytten to Valentine, the readinge whereof will appease all Godly and tractable men: yet I will touch a fewe thinges, which (as I trust) shall satisfie them that be honest and not contentious. We haue already seene how open and loude a preacher of the free election Paul was: was he therefore cold in admonishing and exhorting? Let these good zealous men compare their earnestnesse with his, and it shalbe found in them ise in comparison of his incredible heate. And truely this principle taketh away all douts, that we are not called to vncleannesse, but that euery man should possesse his vessell in honor, &c. Againe, that we are the handy worke of God created to good workes 1. Thes. 4.7.

Epho.2. 10. which he hath prepared that we ſhoulde walke in them. Summarily, they that are euen but meanly exerciſed in Paul, ſhall without longe declaration eaſily perceiue how fitly he maketh theſe things to agree, which they faine to diſagree. Chriſt commaundeth that men beleue in him : Yet is his definitiue ſentence neither falſe nor contrary to Iohn.6. 61. this commaundement, where he ſayth. No man can come to me, but he to whom it is giuen of my father. Let preachinge therefore haue his courſe, which may bringe men to faith, and with continuall profiting holde them faſt in perſeuerance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predeſtination be hindered, ỳ they which obey may not be proud as of their owne, but may glory in the Lord. Chriſt not for nothing Mat 13 9. ſayth, Who ſo hath eares of hearinge, let him heare. Therfore when we exhorte and preach, they that haue eares do willingely obey: but Eſa.6.9 who ſo lacke eares, in them is fulfilled that which is wrytten, That Lib.de bono perſeu. cap.15. hearing they heare not. But why (ſaith Auguſtine) ſhould ſome haue, and other not haue? Who hath knowē the minde of the Lord? Muſt that therefore be denied which is open, becauſe that can not be cōprehended which is hidden? Theſe ſayinges I haue faithfully reported out of Auguſtine: but becauſe paraduenture his wordes ſhal haue more authority than mine, go to, let vs bringe forth the very wordes that are read in himſelfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dulneſſe & ſluggiſhneſſe, and beinge enclined from labour to luſt do go after their deſires : ought that therefore to be accompted falſe which is ſpoken of the foreknowledge of God? If God haue foreknowen that they ſhalbe good, ſhall they not be good, in how great euilneſſe ſoeuer they now liue? and if he haue foreknowen that they will be euill, ſhall they not be euill, in how great goodneſſe ſoeuer they be now ſeene? Shall therefore thoſe thinges which are truely ſpoken of the foreknowledge of God, be for ſuch cauſes either to be denied or to be lefte vnſpoken of? namely then when if they be not ſpo-Cap.16 ken of, men go into errours? The rule (ſayth he) to keepe trueth vnſpoken of, is one thinge, & the neceſſity to ſpeake trueth is an other. As for the cauſes of leauinge trueth vnſpoken, it were longe to ſearch them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worſe which vnderſtande it not, while we meane to make them more learned that vnderſtand it, who when we ſpeake any ſuch thing are in dede not made more learned, nor yet are made worſe. But when a true thing is in ſuch caſe, that whē we ſpeake it, he is made worſe that can not conceiue it: and when we ſpeake it not, he is made worſe that can conceiue it: what thinke we now to be done? is not the trueth rather to be ſpokē, that he may conceiue it, that can cōceiue it: than to kepe

it vnspoken, that not only neither of them may conceiue it, but also he that more vnderstãdeth may be the worse? wheras if he did heare and conceiue it, by him also many shoulde learne? And we will not say that which, as the Scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might haue spoken. For we feare forsooth least when we speake, he be offended that can not conceiue it: but we feare not least while we holde our peace, he that can conceiue trueth be deceiued with falshode. Which sentence he at the last shortly knitting vp, more plainely also confirmeth. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the church did both, namely both godlily preach of the eternall election of God, and hold the faithfull in awe vnder the discipline of Godly life: why do these our aduersaries being confuted with inuincible violence of trueth, thinke that they say well in saying that that which is spoken of predestination is not to be preached to the people although it be true. Yea it must in any wise be preached, ỹ he which hath eares to heare may heare. But who hath eares if he haue not receiued thẽ from him ỹ promiseth that he wil giue them? Truely let him that receiueth not, refuse it: so that yet he which receiueth it, do take & drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlines is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predestination, that he which hath eares to heare of the grace of God, may glory in God and not in himselfe. Cap 20

14 And yet that holy man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the maner of teaching the trueth, that offense be wisely auoided so far as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those thinges which are truely sayd, may also be conueniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleue not, ỹ cause is for that ye are already predestinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulnesse, but also maintaine wickednesse. If any man also stretch his saying to the time to come, and say that they which heare shall not beleue, because they are reprobate: this shalbe rather a cursing than a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not vnworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as foolish teachers, and vnlucky and ill prophecying Prophetes. In an other place he truely affirmeth that it is to be holden that a man then profiteth with rebukinge, when he hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profit whom he will, euen without rebukinge. But why some thus, and some otherwise? God forbid that, that we should say that the power of iudging belõgeth rather to the clay than to the potter. Againe afterward. When men by rebukinge either come or returne into the way of righteousnesse, who worketh saluation in their hearts but he, which when any who-ſoeuer he be planteth and watereth,giueth the encreaſe,whom when he will ſaue,no freewill of man reſiſteth?It is therefore not to be douted that the wils of men can not reſiſt the will of God(which both in heauen and earth hath done whatſoeuer he woulde,and which hath alſo done thoſe things that are to come)but that he may do what he will,foraſmuch as euen of the very wils of men he doth what he will. Againe,when he will leade mẽ to him,doth he binde them with corporall bondes? He inwardly worketh,inwardly holdeth heartes,inwardly moueth hearts, & draweth thẽ with their wils which he himſelfe hath made in them.But,that which he byandby addeth ought in no wiſe to be omitted: that becauſe we know not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predeſtinate, we ought ſo to be affectioned that we woulde all men to be ſaued. So ſhall it come to paſſe,that whomſoeuer we finde, we ſhall trauaile to make him partaker of peace. But our peace ſhall reſt vpon the children of peace. Therfore for our part,we muſt apply holſome & ſharp rebuking to all men like a medecine,that they periſhe not, nor deſtroy other, but it ſhalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to thẽ whom he hath foreknowen and predeſtinate.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

That election is ſtablished by the callinge of God: but that the reprobate do bring vpon themſelues the inſt deſtruction vvhereunto they are appointed.

BVt, that the matter may more plainely appeare, we muſt entreate both of the callinge of the elect,and of the blinding and hardeninge of the wicked. Of the firſt of theſe I haue alreadyſpoken ſomewhat, when I confuted their errour, which think that the generalnes of the promiſes extẽdeth egally to al mankinde. But this election which otherwiſe God hath hidden with himſelfe he doth not without choiſe at length diſcloſe by his calling, which a man may therefore call the teſtifyinge of it. For, whom he hath foreknowen, them he hath alſo foreappointed to be faſhioned like the image of his ſonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath alſo called: whom he hath called, them he hath alſo iuſtified, that in time to come he may glorifie them.When the Lorde hath by electing already adopted his into the number of his children: yet we ſee how they entre not into poſſeſſion of ſo great a benefit,but when they be called:on the other ſide,how being called they do now enioy a certaine communicatinge of his election. For which reaſon Paule calleth the Spirite which they receiue,both the Spirite of adoption, and the seale, & earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doth with the testimony thereof stablish and seale to their heartes the assuredness of the adoptiō to come. For though the preaching of the Gospell spring out of the fountaine of electiō: yet because it is also common to the reprobate, therfore it could not by it selfe be a sure proofe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as we haue before alleaged out of the wordes of Christ, Who so is of God, he & none other seeth the Father. Againe, I haue shewed thy name to the men whom thou hast giuen me: Whereas he saith in an other place, No man can come to me, vnlesse my Father drawe him. Which place Augustine wisely weieth, whose words are these. If (as Trueth sayth) euery one that hath learned, commeth: whosoeuer commeth not, certainely neither hath he learned. It doth not therefore followe that he which can come, also commeth, vnlesse he haue both willed & done it. But euery one that hath learned of the Father, not only can come, but also commeth, when nowe there is present both the profit of comming, and the affection of willinge, and the effect of doinge. Also in an other place more plainely. What is this else, Euery one that hath hearde of the father, and hath learned, commeth to me, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to me? For if euery one which hath hearde of the father and learned, commeth: truely euery one that commeth not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he woulde come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the flesh, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a litle after. This grace which is secretly giuen to the heartes of men, is receiued of no hard hearte: for it is therefore giuen, that the hardnesse of the heart may first be taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the stony heart, and giueth a fleshly heart. For so he maketh the children of promise and vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared to glory. Why therefore doth he not teach all, that they may come to Christ, but because all whome he teacheth, by mercy he teacheth: whom he doth not teach, by iudgement he doth not teache? because he hath mercy vppon whom he will, and hardeneth whome he will. Therefore God assigneth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whom he hath chosen. Now by calling he bringeth them into his household, and vniteth himselfe to them, that they may be one together. But, when Calling is ioyned to election, in that manner the Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothinge is to be required but the mercy of God. For if we aske, whom he calleth and for what reaſon: he anſwereth, whom he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the onely mercy

Rom 9. 16. of God appeareth on euery ſide. And here that ſaying of Paul truely hath place, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercy: Neither yet that ſame ſo as they commonly take it, which part it betwene the grace of God, & the willing and running of man. For they expound it, that the deſire & endeuour of man haue in deede no force of themſelues, vnleſſe they be proſpered by the grace of God: but when they are holpen by his bleſſing, then they affirme that they haue alſo their partes in obtaininge ſaluation.
Enchir. ad Laurent. ca. 31. Whoſe cauillation I had rather confute with Auguſtines wordes thā mine owne: If the Apoſtle meant nothinge elſe but that it is not of him only that willeth or runneth, vnleſſe the Lorde be there preſent merciſull: we may contrariwiſe turne it againſt them and ſay that it is not of only mercy, vnleſſe there be preſent willing and runninge. But if this be openly wicked, let vs not dout that the Apoſtle giueth all to the mercy of the Lord, & leaueth nothinge to our willes or endeuours. To this effect ſpeaketh that holy man. And I ſet not a ſtraw by that nice ſuttelty, that they ſay that Paule would not haue ſo ſaid vnleſſe there had bin ſome endeuor & ſome wil in vs. For he did not cōſider what was in man: but when he ſaw that ſome did aſſigne part of ſaluation to the endeuour of men, he ſimply condemned their errour in the firſt parte of the ſentence, and in the ſecond he chalenged the whole ſumme of ſaluation of ỹ mercy of God. And what other thinge do the Prophetes trauaile about, but continually to preach the free calling of God?

2 Morouer the very nature alſo and diſpenſation of Calling doth clearely ſhewe it, which conſiſteth not in the only preachinge of the word, but alſo in the enlightning of the Spirit. To whom God offreth
Eſa. 65. 1. his word, is ſhewed vs in the prophet: I am foūd of them that ſought me not: I haue openly appeared to them that did not aske for me. To a people which hath not called vpon my name I haue ſayd, Loe I am preſent. And leaſt the Iewes ſhould thinke that this kindenes belonged only to the Gentiles, he doth alſo put them in remēbrance from Iho. 24. 3. whenſe he tooke their father Abraham, when he vouchſaued to ioine him to himſelfe, namely from mere idolatry, in which he was drowned with all his. When he firſt ſhineth with the light of his worde to men not deſeruinge it, he therein ſheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodneſſe. Here therefore the vnmeaſurable goodnes of God ſheweth forth it ſelf, but not vnto ſaluatiō to all: becauſe for the reprobate there abideth a more grieuous iudgement, for that they refuse the testimony of the will of God. And God also, to set foorth his glory, withdraweth from them the effectuall force of his Spirite. Therefore this inward calling is a pledge of saluation, which can not deceiue vs. For which purpose maketh that saying of Iohn, Thereby we know that we are his children, by the Spirit which he hath giuen vs. And least flesh should glory, that it did at the least answere to him when he called & of his owne will offred himselfe, he affirmeth that it hath no eares to heare, no eies to see, but which he hath made: and that he maketh them, not accordinge to euery mans thankefulnesse, but according to his owne election. Of which thinge you haue a notable example in Luke, where both Iewes and Gentiles in common together heard the preaching of Paule and Barnabas. Whereas they were at that time all taught with one selfe same worde, it is sayd that they beleued which were ordained to euerlastinge life. With what face may we deny that the Callinge is free, in which euen to the very last part election reigneth alone.

1.Ioh. 5 24.

3 But here we must beware of two errours: because many make man a worker together with God, that he by his consent may make the election to be of force: so by their opinió, the wil of man is aboue the counsell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is only giuen vs that we may beleue, and not rather faith it selfe. Other some, although they do not so weaken the grace of the holy Ghost: yet being led by I wote not what reson, hang election vpon faith as though it were doutfull, yea & vneffectuall vntill it be confirmed by faith. It is in deede certaine that it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we haue already shewed that the secret counsel of God beginneth to shine out, which was before hidden: so that by this word you vnderstande nothinge else, than that it is approued which was vnknowen, and is as it were sealed with a seale. But it is falsely sayd, that election is then and not till then effectuall, when we haue embraced the Gospell, and that thereof it taketh liuely strength. We must in deede from thense fetch the certainty of it: Because if we attẽpt to reach vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomlesse depth wil swallow vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, we must climbe vp hier, least the effect should drowne the cause. For what greater absurdity or shamefull vniustice is there, than that when the Scripture teacheth that we are enlightened as God hath chosen vs, our eyes shoulde be so daseled with this light, that they shoulde refuse to looke vppon election? Yet in the meane time I deny not, that to the ende we may be certaine of our saluation, we must beginne at the word, and that our affiance ought therewith to be contented, that we may call vppon God by the name of Father. For ſome quite contrary to right order, that they may be certified of the counſell of God (which is neere vnto vs, in our mouth & in our heart) do couet to flie aboue the cloudes.

Deu. 30 14. Therefore that raſhnes is to be reſtrained with ſobriety of faith, that it may ſuffice vs that God in his outwarde worde is a witneſſe of his hidden grace: to that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drinke, do not hinder but that the ſpringhead may haue his due honor.

4 Therfore as they do wrongfully, which hang the ſtrength of election vpon the faith of the goſpel, by which faith we feele that election pertaineth to vs: ſo we ſhall kepe the beſt order, if in ſeking the certainty of our election, we ſticke faſt in theſe later ſignes, which are ſure witneſſings of it. Satan doth with no tentation either more grieuouſly, or more dangerouſly aſtoniſh the faithfull, thā when diſquieting them with dout of their election, he doth alſo moue them with a peruerſe deſire to ſeeke it out of the way. I cal it ſeeking out of the way, when a wretched man enterpriſeth to breake into the hidden ſecretes of the wiſdom of God, and to pearce euen to the hieſt eternity to vnderſtand what is determined of himſelfe at the iudgement ſeate of God. For then he throweth himſelfe headlong to be ſwallowed vp into the depth of the vnmeaſurable deuouringe pit: then he wrappeth himſelfe with innumerable ſnares and ſuch as he can not winde out of: then he ouerwhelmeth himſelfe with the bottomleſſe depth of blinde darkeneſſe. For ſo is it rightful that the fooliſhneſſe of the wit of man be puniſhed with ſo horrible ruine, when he attepteth of his owne force to riſe vp to the height of the wiſdom of God. And ſo much more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which we are commonly all more bent. For there is moſt rarely any man to be founde, whoſe minde is not ſometime ſtriken with this thought. Whenſe haſt thou ſaluation, but of the election of God? And of Election what reuelation haſt thou? which thought, if it haue ones taken place in any man, either perpetually vexeth the miſerable man with terrible tormentes, or vtterly diſmayeth him. Truely I would haue no ſurer argument than this experience to proue, howe wrongefully ſuch men imagine of predeſtination. For the minde can be infected with no errour more peſtilent, than that which plucketh downe and thruſteth the conſcience from her peace and quietneſſe towarde God. Therefore if we feare ſhipwrecke, we muſt diligently beware of this rocke, which is neuer ſtriken vpon without deſtruction. And though the diſputinge of predeſtination be eſteemed like a dangerous Sea, yet in paſſinge through it there is found a ſafe and quiet yea and pleasant saylinge, vnlesse a man do wilfully couet to be in danger. For as they do drowne themselues in the deadly bottomlesse depth, which to be certified of their election do enquire of the secret Counsell of God without his word: so they which do rightly and orderly searche it in such sorte as it is contained in the worde, receiue thereof a singular frute of comfort. Let this therfore be our way to search it, that we beginne at the callinge of God, and ende in the same. Howebeit this withstandeth not, but that the faithfull may thinke that the benefites which they daily receiue at the hande of God, do descend from that secret adoption: as they say in Esay, Thou hast done maruels, thy thoughtes are olde, true, and faithfull: forasmuch as by that adoption as by a token, the Lordes wil is to cõfirme so much as is lawfull to be knowen of his counsell. But least any man shoulde thinke this a weake testimony, let vs cõsider how much both clearenesse and certainety it bringeth vs. Of which thinge Bernarde speaketh fitly. For after that he had spokẽ of the reprobate, he saith: The purpose of God standeth, the sentence of peace standeth vpon them that feare him, both couering their euils, and rewardinge their good thinges: so as to them after a maruelous maner not onely good thinges, but also euil do worke together vnto good. Who shal accuse the elect of God? It sufficeth me to all righteousnesse, to haue him alone merciful, to whom alone I haue sinned. Al that he hath decreed not to impute to me, is so as if it neuer had bin. And a litle after: O place of true rest, and to which not vnworthily I may giue the name of a bedchamber, in which God is seene not as troubled with wrath, not as withholden with care, but his will is proued in him good, and well pleasinge, and perfect. This sight doth not make afrayd, but calmeth: doth not stirre vp vnquiet curiousnesse, but appeaseth it: doth not weary the senses, but quieteth them. Here is quiet truely taken. God being appeased, appeaseth all things: and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet. Esa. 25.

5 First if we seeke a fatherly kindenesse and fauorable minde of God, we must turne our eies to Christ, in whom alone the soule of the father resteth. If we seeke saluation, life, & the immortality of the heauenly kingdome, we must then also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both the fountayne of life, and author of saluation, and heire of the kingdome of Heauen. Now whereto serueth election, but that being adopted of the heauenly Father into the degre of children, we may by his fauour obtaine saluation and immortality? Howesoeuer in seekinge thou tosse it and shake it, yet thou shalt finde that the vttermost marke of it extendeth no further. Therefore Matt. 3. 17.

Eph.1.4 ſen them in themſelues, but in his Chriſt: becauſe he could not loue them but in him, nor giue them the honor of the inheritance of his kingdom, vnleſſe they had firſt bin made partakers of him. If we be choſen in him, we ſhall not finde in our ſelues the certainety of our election: no, nor yet in God the Father, if we imagine him naked without the Sonne. Chriſt therefore is the mirrour, in whome we both muſt, and without deceite may beholde our election. For ſith it is he into whoſe body the Father hath appointed to graffe all them whom from eternity he hath willed to be his, that he may take for his children ſo many as he reknowledgeth among his members: we haue a witneſſe plaine and ſure enough, that we are wrytten in the booke of life, if we communicate with Chriſt. And that ſure communion of himſelfe he gaue vs, when by the preachinge of the Goſpell he teſtified that he was giuen to vs of the father, that he with all his

He (I ſay) hath bin a witneſſe to vs, that they ſhal be receiued of the heauenly Father in place of his children, of whom he hath bin receiued by faith. If we couet any more than to be accompted among the children & heires of God, then we may climbe aboue Chriſt. If this be our vttermoſt marke: howe much be we mad in ſeeking without him that which we haue already obtained in him, and which may be founde in him alone? Moreouer ſith he is the eternall wiſdom, the vnchangeable trueth, and faſt ſettled counſell of the Father: it is not to be feared leaſt that which he declareth to vs in his word, ſhoulde vary any thinge be it neuer ſo litle from that will of the father which we ſeeke: but rather he faithfully openeth it vnto vs, ſuch as it was from the beginninge, and euer ſhalbe. The practiſe of this doctrine ought alſo to be in vre in prayers. For though the faith of election doth encourage vs to call vppon God: yet when we make our praiers, it were vnorderly done to thruſt it into the preſence of God, or to couenant with this conditiō. Lord, if I be elected, heare me: foraſmuch as he willeth vs to be content with his promiſes, and no where elſe to ſeeke whether he will be entreateable to vs or no. This wiſdom ſhall deliuer vs from many ſnares, if we can skill to apply that to a right vſe which hath bin rightly wrytten: but let vs not

vndiscretely drawe hither and thither that which ought to haue bin restrained.

6 There is also for stablishing of our affiance an other stay of election, which we haue sayd to be ioyned with our calling. For, whom Christ taketh beinge enlightened with the knowledge of his name into the bosome of his Church, them he is sayd to receiue into his faith & protection. And whom soeuer he receiueth, they are sayd to be committed to him of the father & deliuered to his trust, that they may be kept into eternall life. What meane we? Christ crieth out with a loude voice, that so many as the Father willeth to be saued, he hath deliuered them into his protection. Therfore if we list to know whether God haue care of our safety, let vs seeke whether he hath committed vs to Christ, whom he hath made the onely Sauiour of all his. Now if we dout whether we be receiued of Christ into his faith and keping, he preuenteth our douting, when he voluntarily offereth himselfe to be our shepeheard, and pronounceth that we shalbe in the number of his shepe if we heare his voice. Let vs therefore embrace Christ, being liberally set open for vs, and comming to meete vs: he shall number vs in his flocke, and shall kepe vs enclosed within his folde. But there entreth into vs a carefulnesse of our state to come. For as Paule teacheth that they are called, which were before chosen: so Christ sheweth that many are called, but fewe are chosen. Yea and also Paule himselfe in an other place dishorteth vs from carefulnesse: Let him that standeth (sayth he) looke that he fall not. Againe, Art thou grafted into the people of God? Be not proude, but feare: for God is able to cut thee of againe that he may graffe other. Finally we are sufficiently taught by experience it selfe, that calling & faith are of smal value, vnlesse there be adioyned continuance which happeneth not to al men. But Christ hath deliuered vs frō this care: for verily these promises haue respect to the time to come. All that my Father giueth me, shall come to me: and him that shall come to me, I will not cast him out of doers. Againe, This is the will of him that sent me, the Father, that I loose nothinge of all thinges that he hath giuen me, but may raise them vp againe in the last day. Againe, My shepe heare my voice and they followe me: I knowe them, and I giue them eternall life, and they shall not perishe for euer, neither shall any man take thē out of my hand. The Father which gaue them to me, is greater then all: and no man can take them out of the hande of my Father. Now when he pronounceth, Euery tree which my Father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the roote: he signifieth on the contrary side, that they can neuer be plucked from saluation, which haue roote in God. Wherewith agreeth that saying of Iohn, 1.Ioh.2. 19. If they had bin of vs, they had not at all gone out from vs. Hereupon

Rom. 8 38. also commeth that noble glorying of Paule against life and death, present thinges and thinges to come: which gloryinge must needes be grounded vpon the gift of continuãce. Neither is it any dout that he directeth this saying to all the faithful. In an other place the same Phil.1. 16. Paule sayth. He that hath begonne in you a good worke, shall ende it Psa 138 8. euen vntill the day of Christ. As also Dauid, when his faith fainted, leaned vpon this stay: Thou shalt not forsake the worke of thy hands. And now neither is this doutfull, that Christ when he prayeth for all the faithfull, asketh the same thinge for them which he asketh for Luk. 22 32. Peter, that their faith may neuer faint. Whereby we gather, that they are out of daunger of fallinge away, because the sonne of God, askinge stedfast continuance for their godlinesse, suffered no denial. What woulde Christ haue vs to learne hereby, but that we shoulde trust that we shall perpetually be safe, because we are ones made his?

7 But it daily happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, do againe reuolt from him & fal. Yea & in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were giuen him
Ioh.16. 12. of the Father, yet he excepteth the sonne of perdition. That is true in deede: but this is also as certaine, that such did neuer cleaue to Christ with that affiance of heart with which I say that the assurednes of our
1.Ioh. 2 19. election is stablished. They went out from vs (sayth Iohn) but they were not of vs. For if they had bin of vs, they had still taried with vs. Neither do I deny that they haue like signes of callinge as the elect haue: but I do not graunt that they haue that sure stablishment of election which I bid the faithfull to fetch out of the worde of the Gospell. Wherefore let not such examples moue vs but that we quietely Iohn 3. 16. & 6 39. rest vpon the promise of the Lorde, where he pronounceth, that all they are giuẽ to him of the Father, which receiue him with true faith, of whom sith he is their keper and Pastor, none shall perish. Of Iudas we shall speake hereafter. Paule doth not counsell Christians from assuredneſſe altogether, but from careleſſe and looſe assuredneſſe of the flesh, which draweth with it, pride, presumption, & disdaine of other, and quencheth humility and the reuerence of God, & bringeth forgetfulnes of grace receiued. For he speaketh to the Gentiles, whom he teacheth, that they ought not proudly & vngently to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes beinge disherited, they were set in their stede. Feare also he requireth, not wherwith they should be dismaied and stagger, but which framing vs to the hũbler receiuing of the grace of God, should abate nothing of the affiance thereof, as we haue sayd in an other place. Beside that, he doth not there speake to euery man particularly, but to the sectes thẽselues generally. For when ỹ Church was diuided into two parts, & enuy bred dissension. Paule putteth the Gentiles in minde that their being supplied into the place of ỹ peculiar & holy people, ought to be to them a cause of feare & modesty. And among them there were many puffed vp with glory, whose vain bosting it was profitable to beat down. But we haue in an other place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come euen beyond death, and that nothing is more contrary to the nature of it, than to dout what shall become of vs.

8 That saying of Christ, of many beinge called but few chosen, is very ill taken after that maner. There shalbe nothinge doutfull if we hold fast that which ought to be cleare by the things aboue spoken, that there are two sorts of calling. For there is an vniuersall callinge wherby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altogether to him, euen them also to whom he setteth it forth vnto the sauor of death, & vnto matter of more grieuous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling which for the most parte he vouchsaueth to giue only to the faithfull, when by the inward enlightning of his spirit he maketh ỹ the word preached is settled in their hearts. Yet somtime he maketh them also partakers of it whome he enlighteneth but for a time, & afterward by the deseruing of their vnthankfulnes forsaketh them, & striketh them with greater blindenes. Now when the Lorde saw the Gospell to be published farre and wide, and to be despised of many, but to be had in due price of fewe: he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a king, which preparinge a solemne feast sendeth his messengers rounde about to bidde a great multitude to be his gestes, and yet can get but a fewe, because euery one alleageth lettes for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled vpon their refusall, to call out of the hie wayes euery one that he meeteth. Hitherto euery man seeth that the parable must be vnderstande of the outward callinge. He addeth afterward that God doth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheere his gestes. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, he will not suffer him with his vncleanlinesse to dishonour the solemnity of the feast. This parte of the parable, I graunt, is to be vnderstande of them which enter into the Church by the profession of faith, but are not clothed with the sanctification of Christ. Such dishonors and as it were botches of his Church, the Lord will not suffer for euer: but, as their filthinesse deserueth he will cast them out. Therefore fewe are Mat.22.

choſen out of a great number of them that are called, but yet not with that callinge by which we ſay that the faithfull ought to iudge their election. For, that generall callinge is alſo common to the wicked: but this ſpeciall Callinge bringeth with it the ſpirite of regeneration, which is the earneſt & ſeale of the inheritãce to come, wherwith our hearts are ſealed vp againſt the day of the Lord. In a ſumme
Ephe.1. 13. ſith hypocrites boaſt of godlineſſe as well as the true worſhippers of God, Chriſt pronounceth ẏ at length they ſhalbe caſt out of the place

And ſo doth the Spirit exhorte the faithfull to ſufferance, that they take it not grieuouſly that the Iſraelites be mingled with thẽ in the Church: for at length their viſor ſhalbe plucked from them & they ſhalbe caſt out without ſhame.

8 The ſame reſon is of ẏ exceptiõ euẽ now alleaged, where Chriſt
Ioh.17. 12. ſayth that none periſhed but the ſonne of perdition. It is in deede an vnproper ſpeeche, but yet not darke. For he was not accompted amonge the ſhepe of Chriſt, for that he was one in deede, but becauſe

Homil. 38. make difference, nothinge is more plaine. Therefore Gregory teacheth very ill and peſtilently when he ſayth that we knowe onely our callinge, but are vncertaine of our election: whereby he moueth all men to feare and tremblinge: vſinge alſo this reaſon, but becauſe we know what we be to day, but what we ſhalbe we know not. But in that place he ſufficiently declareth, how he ſtumbled at this blocke. For, becauſe he hanged election vppon the merites of workes, he had matter enough and more to diſcourage the mindes of men: but he could not ſtrengthen them, which did not remoue them from themſelues to the affiãce of the goodnes of God. Hereof ẏ faithful haue ſome taſt of that which we haue determined at the biginning ẏ predeſtinatiõ if it be rightly thought vpon, bringeth not a ſhaking of faith, but rather the beſt ſtrengthning of it. And yet I deny not, that ẏ holy Ghoſt frameth his talke to the smale mesure of our sense. As when he saith. In the secret of my people they shall not be, and in the rowle of my seruãts they shall not be written. As though God did beginne to write in the booke of life, them whom he reckeneth in the numbre of his: wheras yet we knowe, euen by the witnesse of Christ, that the names of the children of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in these words is only expressed the casting away of them which seemed the chefe among the elect: as it is said in the Psalme. Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, & let them not be written with the righteous. Eze. 13. 9. Phil. 4. 3. Psa 69. 29.

9 But the elect are neither immediatly from the wombe, nor all at one time, by calling gathered together into the flocke of Christ, but as it pleaseth God to distribute his grace to them. But ere they be gathered together to that chefe shepeherd, they are scattered abroad and stray in the common deserte, and differ nothing from other, sauing that they be defended by the singular mercie of God, from fallinge into the extreme hedlonge downefall of death. Therefore if you loke vpon them selues, you shal see the offspring of Adam, which sauoreth of the common corruption of the whole masse. That they be not carried into extreme and despeired vngodlynesse, this commeth not to passe by any goodnesse naturally planted in them but becausse the eye of God watcheth, and his hand is stretched out to their saluation. For they that dreame that from their very natiuitie there is plãted in their heartes I wote not what seede of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway enclined to godlynes and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to proue it by the authoritie of Scripture, and also are confuted by experience it selfe. They do in deede bring forth a fewe examples to proue that the elect euen before their enlightning, were not vtterly strangers from religion: that Paule in his being a Pharisee liued vnreprouable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and such other. Of Paule, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, we say that they are deceiued. For it appeareth that he was then already enlightned and regenerate, so that he wanted nothing but the clere reueling of the Gospell. But what will they wring out by these fewe examples? that all the elect are alway endued with the spirit of goodlinesse? No more than if a man by shewing the vprightnesse of Aristides, Socrates, Xenocrates, Scipio, Curius, Camillius, and other, should thereof gather that all they that are left in blindnesse of idolatrie, were desirous followers of holines & honestie. Yea and the Scripture in more places than one, openly crieth out against them. For, the state which Paul describeth Phil. 3. 5. Act. 10. 2.

Ephe.2. 2. of the Ephesians before their regeneration, sheweth not one grain of this seede. Ye were (saith he) deade with defaultes and sinnes, in which ye walked according to the time of this worlde, according to the prince of the aire, which nowe worketh in the obstinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuersant in the lustes of our flesh, doing those things that liked our flesh and minde. And we Ephe.5. 8. were by nature the children of wrath, as other also were. Againe, Remembre that ye were somtime without hope, aud lacked God in the Ephe.4. 21. world. Againe. Ye were somtime darkenesse: but nowe ye are light in the Lorde: walke as the children of light. But parduenture they will haue these things to be referred to the ignorance of the true God, wherewith they denie not that the elect are holden before that they be called. Albeit this were a shamelesse cauilling, sith he thereof concludeth, that they ought nowe no more either to lie or to steale: yet 1.Cor. 6.9. what will they aunswer to other places? as is that place to the Corinthians, where when he had pronounced that neither whoremongers, nor idolatrers, nor adulterers, nor weakelings, nor buggerers, nor theues, nor couetous men, shalbe heires of the kingdome of God: he by & by addeth that they were wrapped in the same hainous offenses before that they knewe Christ: but nowe that they are both washed by his bloode and made free by his Spirit. Againe an other place to Rom.6. 19. the Romaines. As ye haue geuen your membres bond to vncleanesse, and to iniquitie vnto iniquitie, nowe yeld them in bondage to righteousnesse. For what frute had you of those things, in which ye are nowe worthily ashamed. &c.

11 What maner of seede of election, I pray you, did then budde in thē, which being manifoldly defiled in all their life, as it were with desperate wickednes, wallowed in the most abhominable & accursed sinne of all? If he would haue spoken after their opinion, he should haue shewed howe much they were bond to the bountifulnesse of God, by which they had bene preserued from sliding into so great 1.Pet.4. 3. filthinesse. So Peter also should haue exhorted his to thankefulnesse for the perpetuall seede of election. But he contrary wise putteth them in minde that ỹ time past sufficed to make an ende of the lustes Ios.2.1 of the Gētiles. What if we come to examples? what budde of right- 2.Kin. 12.17. eousnesse was there in Rahab the harlot, before faith? in Manasse, when Hierusalem was dipped and in a maner drowned in the bloode Luc.22. 16. of the Prophetes? in the Thefe, which among his last gaspings beganne to thinke of repentance? Away therefore with these argumēts, which silly curious men do rashely deuise to themselues without the Scripture. But let that abide certaine with vs, which the Scripture hath, hath, that all haue strayed like lost shepe, euery one hath swarued into his owne way, that is, perdition. Out of this goulfe of perdition, whom the Lorde hath determined ones to plucke forth, them he differreth til his fit time: onely he preserueth them, that they fall not vnto vnpardonable blasphemy. Esa 53. 6.

12. As the Lorde by the effectualnesse of his calling towarde the elect, maketh perfect the saluation, where vnto he hadde by eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his iudgements against the reprobate. whereby he executeth his counsell of them. Whom therfore he hath created vnto the shame of life, and destruction of death, that they should be instrumentes of his wrath, and examples of his seueritie: from them, that they may come to their ende, somtime he taketh away the power to heare his word, and somtime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amaseth them. Of the first maner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs choose out one more cleare and notable than all the rest. There passed away about fower thousande yeares afore Christ, in which he hidde from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man answer that he therefore made them not to enioy so great a benefit bycause he iudged them vnworthy, they which come after shall not be proued any more worthy. Of which thing, biside the experience, Malachie is a substantiall witnes, which reprouing infidelitie mingled with grosse blasphemies, yet declareth that there shall come a redeemer. Why therefore is he rather geuen to these than to those? He shall trouble himselfe in vaine, that shall here search for a cause hier than the secret and vnsearchable counsell of God. Neither is it to be feared least any scholet of Porphyrie, should freely gnawe at the righteousnesse of God while we aunswer nothing in defense of it. For when we say that none perish vndeseruing, and that it is of the free bountifulnesse of God that some be deliuered, there is largely enough said for the setting forth of his glorie, so that it needeth not our shifting. The soueraigne iudge therefore maketh a way for his predestination, when whome he hath ones reiected, them being depriued of the communicating of his light he leaueth in blindenesse. Of the other maner there are both daily examples, and also many cõteined in the Scripture. One selfe same preaching is cõmonly made to a hundred, twenty receiue it with ready obedience of faith: the rest do either set naught by it, or scorne it, or hisse it out, or abhorre it. If any man aunswer that this diuersitie proceedeth of their malice and peruersnesse, he shall not yet satisfie vs: bycause the others witt also should be possessed with the same malice, vnlesse God did amende it with Mala. 4. 1.

This verily can not be brought in queſtion, that the Lord ſendeth his word to many, whoſe blindneſſe he will haue to be more enforced. them: it is not denied that the ſtubborneſſe proceded of their owne naughtineſſe: but it is therewithall touched why they were leſte in ſtubborneſſe, when the Lorde might haue ſoftened their heartes, namly becauſe his vnchãgeable decree hadde ones appointed them to deſtruction. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that ſaying of Iohn, Ioh. 12, When he had done ſo great ſignes, no man beleued in him: that the 38.
word of Eſaie might be fulfilled, Lorde, who hath beleued our ſaying? For though he do not excuſe the ſtifnecked from blame, yet he is cõtent with that reaſon, that the grace of God is vnſauorie to men, till the holy Ghoſt bring taſt. And Chriſt alleging the prophecie of Iohn.6. 45. Eſaie, They ſhall all be taught of God, tendeth to no other ende but to proue that the Iewes are reprobate and ſtrangers frõ the Church, becauſe they are vnapt to learne: and he bringeth no other cauſe thereof, but for that the promiſe of God doth not perteine to them.

1.Cor.1 23. Which thing this ſaying of Paule confirmeth, that Chriſt which to the Iewes is an offenſe, and to the gentiles fooliſhnes, is to the called the ſtrength and wiſedome of God. For when he hath tolde what commonly happeneth ſo oft as the Goſpell is preached, namly that ſome it maketh more obſtinate, and of ſome it is deſpiſed, he ſaith that it is had in price of them onely which are called. He had in deede a little before named them beleuers, but he meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before faith, but rather he added this ſeconde ſaying by way of Correction, that they which had embraced the Goſpell ſhould geue the praiſe of their faith to the calling of God. As alſo a litle after he teachech that they are choſen of God. When the vngodly heare theſe things, they crie out that God with inordinate power abuſeth his poore creatures for a ſporte to his crueltie. But we which knowe that all men are ſo many wayes endangered to the iudgement ſeate of God, that being aſked of a thouſand things they can not ſatisfie in one, do confeſſe that the reprobate ſuffer nothing which agreeth not with the moſt iuſt iudgement of God. Whereas we do not clerely atteine the reaſon thereof, let vs not be diſcontent to be ignorant of ſomewhat, where the wiſedom of God lifteth vp it ſelfe into ſo great heigth.

15 But foraſmuch as there are a fewe places of ſcripture wont to be obiected, in which God ſeemeth to denie that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked do periſh, but by this that, he crieng out againſt it, they wilfully bring death vpon themſelues: let vs by brefely declaring theſe places, ſhewe that they make nothing againſt the ſen-
Eze.34. 11. tence aboue ſet. There is brought forth a place of Ezechiel, that God will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he may be turned and liue. If they will extende this to all mankinde: why doth he not moue many to repentance, whoſe mindes are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his daily allurements waxe harder and harder?
Mat.13. 23. With the Sodomites (as Chriſt witneſſeth) the preaching of the Goſpell and miracles would haue brought forth more frute than in Iurie. Howe commeth it to paſſe therfore, if God will all to be ſaued, that he openeth not the gate of repentance to thoſe miſerable men that would haue bene more ready to receiue grace? Hereby we ſee

that the place is violently wrested, if the will of God, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be set against his eternall counsell, whereby he hath seuered the elect from the reprobate. Now if we seke for the true naturall meaning of the Prophet: his purpose is to bring hope of pardon to ỹ penitent. And this is the summe, that it is not to be douted but that God is ready to forgeue so sone as the sinner turneth. Therefore he willeth not his death, in so much as he willeth his repentance. But experience teacheth that he so willeth them to repent whome he generally calleth to him, that yet he toucheth not all their heartes. Yet is it therefore to be said that he dealeth deceitfully, because although the outward voice do but make them vnexcusable which heare & do not obey it, yet it is truely accompted the testimonie of the grace of God, by which testimonie he reconcileth men to himselfe. Therefore let vs holde this for the meaning of the Prophet, that the death of a sinner pleaseth not God: that the godly may haue affiance, that so sone as they shalbe touched with repentāce, there is pardon ready for them with God: and the wicked may fele that their fault is doubled, because they aunswer not to so great mercifull kindenesse and gentlenesse of God. The mercie of God therefore wil alway mete repentance, but to whom repentance is geuen, both all the Prophets, and Apostles, and Ezechiell himselfe do plainely teach. Secondly there is alleged a place of Paule, 1 Tim. 2.4. where he saith that God willeth all men to be saued, which although it haue a diuerse meaning from the other, yet in somthing they agree together. I aunswer, first that by the rest of the texte it is made plaine howe he willeth. For Paule coupleth together, that he willeth them to be saued, and to come to the acknowledging of the trueth. If they will haue this to be determined by the eternall counsell of God, that they receiue the doctrine of saluation: what meaneth that saying of Moses, What nation is so noble, that God commeth neare to it as he doth to thee? How came it to passe that God restrained from many peoples the light of the Gospell, which other enioyed? Howe came it to passe that the pure knowledge of godlynesse neuer came to some, and some scarcely tasted so much as any darke principles of it? Hereof it shall nowe be easy to gather, whereto Paule tendeth. He hadde commaunded Timothee to make solemne prayers in the Churche for kinges and princes. But when it seemed somewhat an absurditie that prayers shoulde be made to God for a kinde of menne in a manner despeired (because they were not onely strangers from the body of Christ, but also endeuored with all their forces to oppresse his kingdome) he added, that Deut. 4. 7.

the ſame is acceptable to God which willeth all men to be ſaued. Whereby verily he ſignifieth nothing els but that he hath ſtopped vp the way vnto ſaluation to no degree of men: but rather that he hath ſo powred out his mercie that he willeth no man to be voide of it. The other ſentéces do not declare what God hath by his ſecret iudgemēt determined of all men: but do ſhewe that there is pardon redy for all ſinners which do onely turne themſelues to require it. For if they more ſtifly ſtande vpon this that it is ſaid that he will haue mercie vpon all, I will on the contrarie ſide aunſwer them with that Pſa.115. 3. which is written in an other place, That our God is in heauen where he doth whatſoeuer he will. This word therfore muſt ſo be expoūded Exo.33. 19. that it may agree with the other, I will haue mercie vpon whome I will haue mercy, and I will ſhewe mercie to whom I will ſhew mercy. He that chooſeth out them whom he will haue mercie on, doth not geue it to all. But ſith it clearely appereth that in that place is ſpoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we wil make no longer diſputing about it. Howebeit it is alſo to be noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alway and euery where and in all men: but leaueth it to him at his libertie at length to make kings and magiſtrats partakers of the heauenly doctrine, although by reaſon of their blindeneſſe they do nowe rage againſt it. They ſeeme to preſſe vs more ſtrongly with obiecting the place of Peter, that God willeth none to periſh, but receiueth all to repentance. But the vndoing of this knot doth by and by offer it ſelfe in the ſecond worde, bycauſe the will to receiue can not be vnderſtāded to be any other than that Eze 36. 26. which is euery where taught. Truely the turning is in the hand of God: whether he will turne all or no, let himſelfe be aſked, when he promiſeth that he will geue to a certaine fewe men a fleſhly heart, leauing to other ſome a ſtony heart. It is true in deede, that vnleſſe he were ready to receiue them which call vpon his mercie, this ſaying Zach.1. 3. ſhould be falſe, Turne to me, and I will turne to you. But I ſay that none of all mortall men doth come to God but he that is preuented
2. Tim. 2. 25. of God. And if repentance were in the will of man, Paule would not ſay, If paraduenture he geue them repentance. Yea vnleſſe the ſame God which with word exhorteth all men to repentance, did with ſecret mouing of his ſpirit bring the choſen tó it: Ieremie would Iere. 31. 18. not ſay, Turne me, Lorde, and I ſhalbe turned: for when thou haſt turned me, I haue repented.

16 But (thou wilt ſay) if it be ſo, there ſhalbe ſmal truth in the promiſes of the Goſpell, which when they teſtifie of the will of God, affirme that he willeth that which is againſt his inuiolable decree.

Not

Not so. For howe to euer the promises of saluation be vniuersall, yet they nothing disagree with the predestination of the reprobate, so that we direct our mindes to the effect of them. We knowe that then and not till then the promises are effectuall to vs, when we receiue them by faith, on the other side when faith is made voide, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these things disagree together: that it is said that God hath from eternitie ordeined whome he will embrace with loue, and vpon whom he will exercise wrath: and that he promiseth saluation to all without difference. Truely I say that they agree very well. For in so promising he meaneth nothing els than that his mercy is set open for all which do couet and craue it: which thing none do but they whom he hath enlightned. And them he enlightneth, whom he hath predestinate to saluation. They (I say) haue the truth of the promises sure and vnshaken, so as it can not be said that there is any disagreement betwene the eternall election of God, and the testimonie of his grace which he offereth to the faithfull. But why nameth he All? verily that the consciences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they vnderstand that there is no difference of sinners, so that faith be present: and that the wicked may not cauill for their excuse, that they want a sanctuary wherunto they may withdrawe themselues from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfulnesse they refuse it being offred them. Therfore when the mercie of God is by the Gospell offred to both sortes, it is faith, that is to say the enlightning of God, which maketh difference betwene the godly and vngodly, so as the one sort feleth the effectualnesse of the Gospell, and the other sort obteine no frute therof. The enlightning it self also hath the eternall election of God for the rule therof. The cõplaint of Christ, which they allege, Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, how oft haue I willed to gather together thy chickens, but thou wouldest not? maketh nothing for them. I graunt that Christ there speketh not onely in the person of man, but also reprocheth them that in all ages they haue refused his grace. But we must define ỳ will of God which is entreated of. For neither is it vnknowen, howe diligently God endeuored to kepe still that people, and with how great stiffenesse they euen from the first to the last being geuen to their wandering desires refused to be gathered together: but it followeth not thereof that the counsell of God was made voide by the malice of men. They aunswer and say that nothing lesse agreeth with the nature of God than to haue a double will in him. Which I graunt to thẽ, so that they fitly expound it. But why do they not consider so many testimonies,

If they wil apply all these things to God, and not consider the figure, there shall arise many superfluous contentions, which this one solution bringeth to agreement, that the propretie of man is figuratiuely applied to God. Howbeit the solution which we haue brought in an other place largely sufficeth, that although the will of God be, as to our sense manifold: yet he doth not in himselfe diuersly will this and that, but according to his wise-

They also mocke with cauillations, that sith God is the father of all, it is vnrighteous that he should disherit any that hath not before with his own fault deserued this punishmēt. As though the liberalitie of God stretcheth not euen to hogges & dogges. But if they speake only of mankind, let thē answere why God bound himselfe to one people, to be the father therof: and why also out of the same people he picked a smal numbre as it were a floure. But their owne lust of euell speaking hindereth these railers that they cōsider not that God so bringeth forth his sunne to shine vpon the good and euell, that the inheritance is layed vp for a fewe, to whome it shall one day be said, Come ye blessed of my Fa-

The xxv. Chapter.

Of the last Resurrection.

ALthough Christ the sonne of righteousnesse, hauing ouercome death, shining by the Gospel, geueth vs the light of life (as Paule witnesseth) whereby also it is said that by beleuing we haue passed from death into life, being nowe not foreners and strangers, but citizens with the saintes, and of the housholde of God, which hath made vs to sit with the onely begotten sonne himselfe in heauenly places, that nothing may be wanting to perfect felicitie: yet least it should be greuous vnto vs to be exercised vnder this hard warfare, as though we had no frute of the victorie which Christ hath gotten, we must holde fast that which is in an other place taught of the nature of hope. For, because we hope for those things which appeare not, & (as it is said in an other place) faith is a demonstration of things inuisible: so long as we are enclosed in the prison of the flesh, we are wayfaring from the Lorde. For which reason the same Paule saith in an other place that we are deade, and that our life is hidden with Christ in God, and that when he which is our life, shall appeare, then shall we also appeare with him in glorie. This therefore is our condition, that with liuing soberly and iustly and godlily in this worlde, we loke for the blessed hope, and the comming of the glorie of the great God, and of our sauiour Iesus Christ. Here we neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied and either tourne backe our course, or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoeuer hath bene hetherto set out concerning our saluation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that we may loue Christ whome we haue not seen, and beleuing in him may reioise with vnspeakeable and glorious ioyfulnesse, till we receiue the ende of our faith, as Peter telleth vs. After which maner, Paule saith that the faith and charitie of the godly hath respect to the hope which is layed vp in heauē. When we thus with our eyes fastened vpon Christ do hang of heauen, and nothing withholdeth them in earth, from carrieng vs to the promised blessednesse: then is that truely fulfilled, Our heart is where our treasure is. Hereupon commeth that faith is so rare in the world, because nothing is more hard to our dulnesse then through innumerable steppes to climbe vp aboue them with endeuoring forward to the price of our heauenly calling: To the great heape of miseries wherewith we be almost ouerwhelmed, are added the mockings of vngodly men, wherewith our ſimplicitie is rayled at, when volutarily forſaking the allurementes of preſent good things, we ſeeme to followe the bleſſednes hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing ſhadow. Finally aboue and beneth vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations beſege vs, to the ſuſteining of the feare whereof our courages ſhould be farre to weake, vnleſſe beinge vncumbred of earthly things they were faſt bound to the heauenly life, which in ſeming is farre from vs. Wherefore onely it hath ſoundly profited in the Goſpell, which is enured to a cõtinuall meditation of the bleſſed reſurrection.

2 Of the ſoueraigne ende of good things, the philoſophers haue in olde time curiouſly diſputed, and alſo ſtriued among themſelues: yet none except Plato, acknowledged the ſoueraigne good of man to be his conioining with God. But what maner of conioining that was, he could not perceiue ſo much as with any ſmale taſt, and no maruel, ſith he had neuer learned of the holy bonde thereof. To vs the only and perfect felicitie is knowẽ euen in this earthly wayfaring: but, ſuch as daily more and more enkindleth our heartes with deſire of it, till the full enioyinge may ſatisfie vs. Therefore I ſaid that none receiue frute of the benefites of Chriſt, but they that lift vp their mindes to Phil. 3. 8. the reſurrectiõ. For, Paul ſetteth vp this marke to the faithfull, toward which he ſaith that he endeuoreth, and forgetteth all things till he come to it. And ſo much the more cherfully ought we to trauaill towarde it, leaſt if this world withholde vs, we ſuffer greuous puniſhment for our ſlothfulneſſe. Wherefore in an other place he marketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conuerſation is in heauen, from whenſe alſo they looke for their ſauiour. And ẏ their courages ſhould not faint in this race, he ioineth all creatures companiõs with them. For, becauſe euery where are ſeen deformed ruines, he ſaith that all things in heauen & earth do endeuour to the renewing. For Rom. 8. 19. ſith Adam by his fall diſſolued the perfect ordre of nature to the creatures, their bondage is peinefull and greuous, wherunto they are ſubiect by reaſon of the ſinne of man, not for that they are endued with any feling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect eſtate from which they are fallen. Therefore Paul ſaith that they grone, and are as in peine of childe bearing, that we to whom are geuen the firſt frutes of the Spirit, may be aſhamed to pine away in our corruption, and not at the leaſt to followe the dead elements, which beare paine of an others ſinne. And the more to pricke vs forward, he calleth the laſt comming of Chriſt our redemption. It is true in deede that all the partes of our redemptiõ are already fulfilled: but becauſe Chriſt

hath ones bene offered for sinnes, he shall be seene againe without sinne vnto saluation. With what miseries soeuer we be pressed, let this redemption susteine vs euen vntill the performance of it. Heb.10.

3 The very weight of the thing it selfe shall whet our endeuor. For neither doth Paul without cause affirme that the whole Gospel is void and deceitfull, vnlesse the dead do rise againe: because our state should be more miserable than the state of all men, namely sith we lieng open to the hatredes and reproches of many, are euery houre in danger, yea & are as shepe appointed to the slaughter: and therefore the authority thereof should fall away not only in one part, but also in the whole summe which both our adoption and the effect of our saluation cõteineth. And so let vs be hedefully bent to this most earnest thing of all, that no continuance of time may make vs wery. For which purpose I haue differred to this place that which I hadde breefely to entreate of it, that the readers may learne, when they haue receiued Christ the author of their saluation, to rise vp hier, and may knowe that he is clothed with heauenly immortality and glorie, that the whole body may be made like fashioned to the heade: as also the holy Ghost oftentimes setteth forth in his person an example of the resurrection. It is a thing harde to be beleued, that bodies when they haue bene consumed with rottennesse, shall at their appointed time rise vp againe. Therefore where many of the Philosophers haue affirmed soules to be immortall: the resurrectiõ of the flesh hath bene allowed of fewe: wherin although there was no excuse, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is to harde thing to drawe mans senses to beleue it. That faith may ouercome so great a stoppe, the scripture ministreth two helpes: the one is in the likenes of Christ, the other is the almightines of God. Nowe so oft as the resurrection is thought of, let the image of Christ come into our mindes: which in ỹ nature that he tooke of vs, so ranne out the race of mortall life, that nowe hauing obteined immortalitie, he is to vs a pledge of the resurrectiõ to come. For in ỹ miseries wherewith we are beseged, we carie about his mortifying in our flesh, that his life may be openly shewed in vs. And we may not seuere him from vs, neither can we possibly, but that he must be torne in sunder. Wherupon commeth that argumẽt of Paul, If the deade do not rise againe, then neither is Christ risen againe: becaus verily he taketh ỹ principle for confessed, that Christ was not made subiect to death, nor obteined victorie of death by risinge againe, priuately for him selfe: but, that that was begon in the heade which must needes be fulfilled in all the membres, accordinge to the degree and ordre of euery one. For it were not right that they 2. Cor. 4.10. 1. Cor. 15.13.

Psa.16. 10. should in all points be made egall with him. It is said in the Psalme. Thou shalt not suffer they meke one to see corruption. Although a portion of this trust perteine to vs according to the measure of gift, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Christ, which being free from all rotting hath receiued againe his body whole. Nowe least the Phil.3. 21. fellowship of blessed resurrection with Christ should be doutfull to vs, that we may be contented with this pledge, Paule expresly affirmeth that he therefore sitteth in heauen, and shall come at the last day a iudge, that he may make our base and vile body likefashioned to his glorious body. In an other place also he teacheth, that God raised not vp his sonne from death to the entent to shewe a token of his power: but to stretch out the same effectuall force of the Spirit toward vs which are faithfull: whom he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, because he was geuen to this ende that he should make aliue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a brefe bridgemēt those things which might both be more largely handeled and are worthy to be more gorgeously set out: and yet I trust that the godly readers shall in fewe words finde matter enough which may suffice to edifie their faith. Christ therfore is risen againe, that he might haue vs companiōs of the life to come He was raised vp of the father, in so much as he was ỹ head of the Church, from which he doth in no wise suffer himselfe to be plucked away. He was raised vp by the power of the Spirit, which is common to vs vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raised vp, that he should be resurrectiō and life. But as we haue said that in this mirrour, there is to be seene of vs a liuely image of the resurrection, so let it be to vs a sure substāce to stay our minde, so that yet we be not lothfull or wery of long tarieng: bycause it is not our part to measure the seasons of times by our will, but patiently to rest, till God at his own fit time repaire his kingdome. To which pur-

1.Cor. 15. pose seemeth that exhortation of Paule. The first frutes is Christ: and then they that are Christes, euery one in his ordre. But ỹ no question should be moued of the resurrection of Christ, vpon which the resurrection of vs all is founded, we se by howe many and how diuerse meanes he hath made it approued by witnesse to vs. Fine nosed men wil laugh at ỹ history which the Euangelistes rehearse, as at a childish mockerie. For of what importāce shall the message be which fearefull silly women bring, and afterward the disciples confirme being in a maner astonished? Why did not Christ rather set vp the triumphinge ensignes of his victorie in the middest of the temple and the market place? Why came he not forth terrible into the sight of Pilate? Why doth he not also proue himself to the priests, and to whole Hierusalē that he is risen vp aliue againe? As for the witnesses which he chose, prophane men will scarcely graunt them to be sufficient. I aunswer that although in these beginnings the weakenesse thereof was contemptible, yet all this was gouerned by the wonderful prouidence of God: that partly the loue of Christ and zele of godlinesse, and partly their owne hardnesse of beleefe should carry them in haste to the sepulchre which had lately bine dismaied for feare, that they might not only be seing witnesses of ỹ thing, but also should heare of ỹ Angels that which they sawe with their eyes. How shall we suspect their credit, who thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the womẽ, till they were brought to the present sight of the thing it selfe? As for all the people and the Ruler himself, after that they had bene largely cõuinced, it is no maruell if as well the sight of Christ, as other signes, was not graunted thẽ. The sepulchre was sealed vp, the watchemen watched it, the third day the body was not found, The soldiours corrupted with mony scattered a rumor ỹ his Disciples had stolen him away. As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armure, or were practised men to enterprise any such feate. If the soldiars had not courage enough to driue them away, why did they not pursue them, that with the helpe of the people they might haue taken some of them? Pilate therefore with his ring truely sealed the resurrection of Christ: and the watchemen which were set at the sepulchre both in their holding their peace and in their lieng, were made publishers of the same resurrection. In the meane time the voice of Angels sounded, He is risen, he is not here. The heauenly glistering plainely shewed that they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any douting, Christ himselfe tooke it away. The disciples sawe him ofter than ones, and also felt his feete and his handes, and their hardnesse of beleuing not a litle profited to the strengthening of our faith. He disputeth among them of the misteries of the kingdome of God, and at the last in their sightes beholding him, he ascended into heauen. And not onely this sight was shewed to the xj. Apostles, but also he was seen at ones of mo than fiue hundred brethren. Nowe when he sent the holy Ghost, he shewed a sure proose not onely of life, but also of the souereigne power: as he had said before, It is profitable for you that I go: otherwise the holy Ghost shall not come. But nowe Paule was ouerthrowen by the way not by the strength of a dead man, but he felt him whom he persecuted to haue most hye power. To Stephan he appeared for an other ende, namely that with assurednes of life he might ouercome the feare of death. To discredit so many authentike

4 This which we haue ſaid, that in prouing the reſurrection our ſenſes muſt be directed to the infinite power of God, Paule brefely teacheth, that he may make (ſaith he) our vile body likefaſhioned to the body of his brightnes, according to the working of his power, by which he may ſubdue all things to himſelfe. Wherefore nothing is more vnmete, than here to haue reſpect what may naturally be done, where an ineſtimable miracle is ſet before vs, which with ỹ greatnes thereof ſwalloweth vp our ſenſes. Yet Paul by ſetting forth an example of nature, reproueth their dulnes which deny the reſurrection. Thou foole (ſaith he) that which thou ſoweſt is not quickened vnleſſe it firſt dy. &c. He ſaith that in ſeede is ſene a forme of the reſurrectiõ, becauſe out of rottennes groweth corne. Neither were it ſo harde a thing to beleue, if we were as heedefull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout all the coſtes of the world do offer themſelues to our eyes. But let vs remembre that none is truely perſwaded of the reſurrection to come, but he which being rauiſhed into admiration, geueth to the power of God his glory. Eſaie lifted vp with this affiance, crieth out, Thy deade ſhall liue, my carcaſe ſhall riſe againe. Awake ye, & praiſe, ye dwellers of the duſt. In deſpeired caſe he liſteth vp himſelfe to God the author of life, in whoſe hande are the endes of death, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme. Iob alſo being liker to a carrion than to a man, truſting vpõ the power of God ſticketh not as though he were whole and ſounde to lifte vp himſelfe to that day ſaying, I knowe that my redeemer liueth: and in the laſt day he ſhall riſe vpon the duſt (namely to ſhewe forth his power therein) and I ſhall againe be compaſſed with my ſkinne, and in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God, I ſhall ſee him, and none other. For albeit that ſome do ſuttely wreſte theſe places, as though they ought not to bee vnderſtande of the reſurrection, yet they ſtrengthen that which they couet to ouerthrowe: bycauſe the holy menne in their euels ſeeke comforte from no where els, than from the likeneſſe of the reſurrection. Which better appeareth by the place of Ezechiell. For when the Iewes beleued not the promiſe of their returne, and obiected that it was no more likely that a way ſhould be made open for them, than that deade menne ſhould come out of their graue: there was a viſion ſhewed to the Prophet, a fielde full of dry bones: thoſe the Lorde commaunded to take againe fleſh and ſinewes. Although vnder that figure he raiſeth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping he gathereth of the reſurrection: as it is to vs an examplar of the deliuerances which the faithfull do feele in this world. So Christ, when he hadde taught that the voyce of the Gospell giueth life: because the Iewes receiued not this, he byandby sayd further: Maruell not at this, because the houre commeth in which all that are in the graues shall heare the voyce of the sonne of God, and shall come forth. Therfore after this example of Paule, let vs already cherefully triumphe in the middest of battels, because he which hath promised life to come, is mighty to keepe that which is left with him: and so let vs glory that a crowne of righteousnesse is layd vp for vs, which the iust iudge shal deliuer vs. So shall it come to passe, that whatsoeuer grieues we suffer, they shalbe to vs a shewinge of the life to come, because it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vniustly afflicted, rest at the appearinge of Christ with the Angels of his power, in a flame of fire. But that is to be holden which he addeth by and by afterwarde, that he shall come that he may be glorified in his saintes, and be made wonderfull in all them that haue beleued, because the Gospell hath bin beleued. Iohn. 5. 27. 2. Ti. 4. 8.

5 But although the mindes of men ought to haue bin continually occupied in this study: yet as though they would of set purpose destroy all remembrance of the resurrection, they haue called death the vttermost bound of all things & the destruction of man. For verily Salomon speaketh of the common and receiued opinion, when he sayth that a liuing dogge is better than a dead Lió. And in an other place: Who knoweth whether the soule of a man go vpward, & the soule of a beast go downeward? But in all ages this brutish sensles errour hath bin common in the world, yea & hath broken into the Church it self: for, the Sadduces haue presumed to professe openly that there is no resurrection, yea and that soules are mortall. But that this grosse ignorance should not help to excuse any man, the infidels euen by very instinct of nature haue alway had an image of the resurrection before their eies. For to what purpose serued that holy and inuiolable maner of burying, but to be an earnest of new life? Neither may it be answered that this spring of errour: because the religiousnesse of buriall was alway in vre amonge the holy Fathers, and God willed the same maner to remaine among the Gentiles, that an image of the resurrectió set before them might awake their drowsines. But although that ceremony wanted his vse of profiting, yet it is profitable for vs if we wisely marke the end of it, because it is no slender confutation of vnbeliefe, that altogether professed that which no man beleued. But Satan hath not only astonished the senses of men, so that they haue Eccle. 9 4. Eccle 3 21. Mar. 12. 18. Luk. 20 27. Act. 2. 8 buried with the bodies the remembrance of the resurrection, but also hath practised to corrupt this part of doctrine with diuerse fained inuentions, that at length it might vtterly die. I passe ouer howe in Paules time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a litle after there followed the Millenaries, which limited ỹ reigne of Christ to a thousande yeares. This errour is so childish, that it needeth not or is not worthy Reu.20. of any confutation. Neither doth the Reuelation make on their side,

4. by which it is certaine that they coloured their errour: forasmuch as in the place where he mentioneth the number of a thousand, he entreateth not of the eternal blessednesse of the Church, but only of the diuers troubles which were to come vppon the Church, while it yet trauailed in earth. But the whole Scripture crieth out that there shalbe no end of the blessednesse of the elect, nor of the punishment of the reprobate. Now of all thinges which both are hidden from our sight and do farre passe the capacity of our minde, either we must fetch the credit out of ỹ certaine oracles of God, or we must vtterly cast it away. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeres to enioy the inheritãce of the life to come, do not marke how great a dishonor they do both to Christ and his kingdom. For if they shall not be clothed with immortality: then neither is Christ himself, to whose glory they shalbe newly fashioned, receiued into the immortall glory. If their blessednesse shall haue any end: then the kingdome of Christ, vpon the stedfastnes whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally either they are most vnskilfull of all matter tõcerning God, or they go about with crooked maliciousnesse to ouerthrow the whole grace of God and power of Christ, the fulfillinge wherof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blotted out & death swallowed vp, eternal life is fully restored. But very blinde men may see how fondly they play the fooles, which feare that they shold ascribe to God to great cruelty if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lord forsooth shall do wronge, if he deny his kingdome to them which haue by their vnthankefulnesse made thẽselues vnworthy of it. But (say they) their sinnes endure but for a time I graunt: but the maiesty, yea and the righteousnesse of God, which they haue offended by sinning, is eternall. Worthily therefore the remembrance of iniquity dieth not: But so the paine excedeth the mesure of the fault. This is a blasphemy not to be suffred, when the maiesty of God is so litle set by, when the despising thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one soule. But let vs leaue these trifles, least contrary to that which we haue before sayd, we may seeme to iudge their dotages worthy of confutation.

6 Beside these, there haue bin two other doting errours brought in by men peruersly curious. The one sorte thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they graunt that the soules be immortall spirites, say that they shalbe clothed with new bodies: whereby they deny the resurrectiō of the flesh. Of the first sort, because I haue touched somwhat in speaking of the creation of mān, it shalbe enough for me to warne the readers againe, how beastly an errour it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishinge blast which doth nothing but quicke the body in this fraile life: & to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing: Finally to spoyle that part of vs wherin diuineneſſe chiefely shineth and marks of immortality appeare, to spoyle it (I say) of this gift: so that the estate of the body shoulde be better & more excellent than the estate of the soule. The Scripture teacheth farre otherwise, which compareth the body to a corage, out of which it sayeth that we remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that part which maketh vs differinge from brute beastes. So Peter beinge nie to death, sayth that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent. And Paule speakinge of the faithfull, after that he hath sayd: That when our earthly house shalbe dissolued, there is a buildinge for vs in heauen, adioyneth that we are wayfaringe from the Lord so long as we abide in the body, but do desire the presence of God in the absence of the body. If the soules do not ouerliue the bodies, what is it that hath God present when it is seuered from the body? But the Apostle taketh away all doutinge, when he teacheth that we are ioyned in fellowship to the spirites of the righteous. By which words he sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holy fathers, which euen being dead do kepe the same godlineſſe with vs, so that we can not be the members of Christ vnleſſe we grow together with them. Vnleſſe also the soules being vnclothed of the bodies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receiue blessed glory, Christ would not haue sayd to the thiefe: This day thou shalt be with me in paradise. Hauinge so cleare testimonies, let vs not dout after the example of Christ when we are dyinge, to commende our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen to commit them to Christ to keepe, which not vnworthily is called a faithfull shepeherd and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meane state, is neither lawful nor expedient. Many do much comber themselues with disputing what place they kepe, and whether they do now enioy the heauenly glory or no. But it is folly and rashneſſe, to search deepelier of vnknowen thinges, than God doth giue vs leaue to knowe. When the Mat.5.8 and 26. Ioh.12. 32. Scripture hath ſayd that Chriſt is preſent with them, and receiueth them into paradiſe that they may enioy comfort, on ỹ other ſide that the ſoules of the reprobate do ſuffer ſuch paines as they haue deſerued: it goeth no further. What teacher or maiſter ſhall now open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the queſtion is no leſſe fonde and vaine: foraſmuch as we know that there is not the ſame dimenſion of the ſoule which is of the body. Whereas the bleſſed gathering together of holy ſpirits is called the boſome of Abraham, it is enough for vs after this wayfaringe to be receiued of the common father of the faithfull, that he may communicate with vs the frute of his faith. In the meane time ſith the Scripture euery where biddeth vs to hang vpon the expectation of Chriſtes comminge, and differreth the crowne of glorie till then: let vs be content with theſe bondes appointed vs of God: namely, that the ſoules of the godly hauing ended the labor of their warfare do go into a bleſſed reſt, where with happy ioyfulneſſe they looke for the enioyinge of the promiſed glory: and that ſo all thinges are holden in ſuſpenſe till Chriſt the redeemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no dout that they haue the Iud.1.6 ſame eſtate which Iude aſſigneth to the Deuils, to be holden bounde with cheines, till they be drawen to the puniſhment whereunto they are condemned.

7 No leſſe monſtruous is their errour, which imagine that ſoules ſhall not receiue againe the ſame bodies wherwith they are now clothed, but ſhal haue new and other bodies. And the reaſon of the Manichees was very triflinge, that is, that it is not meete that fleſh which is vncleane ſhould riſe againe. As though there were no vncleannes of ſoules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of euerlaſtinge life. It was therefore all one as if they ſhould ſay that that which is infected with the filth of ſinne can not be cleanſed by God. For I nowe paſſe ouer that dotage, ỹ fleſh was naturally vncleane; becauſe it was create of the Deuill: Onely I ſhew that whatſoeuer is nowe in vs vnworthy of heauen, it hindereth not the reſurrection. And firſt wheras 2.Cor.7.1. Paule biddeth the faithfull to cleanſe themſelues from all defilinge of the fleſhe and of the Spirite, thereupon followeth the iudgement 2.Cor.5.10. which he in an other place pronoũceth, that euery man ſhal receiue by his body either good or euill. Wherewith agreeth that which he 2.Cor.4.10. wryteth to the Corinthians, That the life of Ieſus Chriſt may be openly ſhewed in our mortall fleſh. For which reaſon in an other place 1.The.5.23. he doth no leſſe pray that God preſerue the bodies whole vnto the day of Chriſt, than the ſoules and ſpirites. And no maruell, becauſe it were a moſt great abſurdity that the bodies which God hath dedicate to be temples to himselfe, shoulde fall away into rottennesse without hope of risinge againe. What say we to this, that they are also the members of Christ? that God commaundeth all the partes of them to be sanctified to himselfe? that he willeth his name to be praised with tongues, pure handes to be lifted vp to him, sacrifices to be offered? What madnesse is it therefore that that part to which the heauenly iudge hath vouchesaued to graunt so great honor, shoulde be brought from a mortal man into dust without any hope of restoring? Likewise when Paule exhorteth vs to suffer the Lord as well in body as in soule, because both belong to God, verily he suffereth not that which he chalengeth to God as holy, to be adiudged to eternall rottennesse. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the rising againe of this flesh which we beare. This corruptible (sayth Paule) must put on vncorruption, and this mortall must put on immortality. If God did make new bodies, where is this changing of quality? If it had bin sayd that we must be renued, the doutful spech paraduenture mought haue giuen occasion to their cauillation. But nowe when poyntinge with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiseth to them vncorruption, he plainely enough denieth any new bodies to be made. Yea he coulde not (sayth Tertullian) speake more plainly, vnlesse he had holden his owne skinne in his hande. And they can by no cauillation escape frō this, that where in an other place he sayth that Christ shalbe ỹ iudge of the worlde, he alleageth this testimony of Esay, I liue (sayth the Lord) euery knee shal bow to me: for as much as he plainly pronounceth ỹ they to whom he speaketh shalbe subiect to yeeld an accompt of their life: which could not agree, if new bodies shoulde be brought before the iudgement seate. Now in the words of Daniell there is no doutfulnesse: And many of them that slepe in the earth of dust, shall awake, some to eternall life, and some to reproches and to euerlasting contempt: sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elementes to make men, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plaine reson teacheth. For if mortality which tooke beginning at the fall of man, be accidentall: then the repayring, which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same body which beganne to be mortall. And truely, whereas the Athenians laughed when Paule affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what maner of resurrection he preached: and that same laughinge not smally auaileth to strengthen our faith. The saying of Christ also is worthy to be noted: Feare not them which kill the body, and can not kill the soule: but feare him which can throwe both the soule and the body into hell of fire. For there is no cause to feare, vnlesse the body which we nowe beare be sub-

And no lesse plaine is an other sayinge of the same Christ, The houre commeth, when all they that are in graues, shal heare the voice of the sonne of God, & shal come forth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Shall we say that soules rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christ? and not rather that at his commaundement the bodies shall returne into the liuelines which they had lost? Moreouer if we shall haue new bodies giuē vs, where is the like fashioning of the head and the members? Christ
Iohn.2.19. rose againe: was it with forging to himselfe a new body? No, but as he had said before, Destroy this temple, and in three dayes I wil build it vp: he tooke againe the same body which he hadde before borne mortall, For he had not much profited vs, if a new body being put in place, ỹ old body had bin destroied which was offred vp for a sacrifice of satisfactory cleansinge. We must also holde fast that felowship
1.Cor.15.12. which the Apostle preacheth? That we rise againe, because Christ hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable than that our flesh in which we beare about the mortifyinge of Christ, should be depriued of the resurrectiō of Christ. Which verily appeared by a notable ex-
Mat.17.52. ample, when at ỹ rising againe of Christ, many bodies of the Saintes came out of the graues. For it can not be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which we hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whome Tertullian calleth New possessors of the resurrection: because they being in body & soule deliuered from corruption, were receiued into the keping of God.

8 I am ashamed in so cleare a matter to spende so many wordes: but the readers shall contentedly beare this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for froward and bolde wittes to deceiue the simple. The fleinge spirites with whom I now dispute, bring forth a fained inuention of their owne braine, that at ỹ resurrection there shal be a creation of new bodies. What reason moueth them to thinke so, but because it seemeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with so long rottennes should returne into his auncięt state? Therfore only vnbeliefe is the mother of this opinion. But vs on ỹ other side Colo.2.12. the Spirit of God ech where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrection of our flesh. For this reason baptisme (as Paul witnesseth) is to vs a seale of the resurrection to come: and likewise the holy Supper allureth vs to the trust thereof, when we receiue with out mouth the Signes of spirituall grace. And truely the whole exhorta-

tion of Paule, that we giue our members to be weapons vnto the obedience of righteousnesse, shoulde be colde vnlesse that were ioyned which he addeth afterwarde, He that hath raised vp Christ from the deade, shall quicken also your mortall bodies. For, what shoulde it profite to applie our feete, handes, eyes, and tongues vnto the seruice of God, vnlesse they were partakers of the frute and reward? Which thinge Paule plainely confirmeth with his owne wordes, sayinge: The body not to fornication, but to the Lord: and the Lord to the body. And he that hath raised vp Christ, shall also raise vp vs by his power. More playne are those wordes which followe: that our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost & the members of Christ. In the meane time we see howe he ioyneth the resurrection with chastitie and holinesse, as a litle after he sayeth that the price of redemption pertaineth also to the bodies. Now it were not reasonable that the body of Paule, in which he hath borne the printes of Christ, and in which he honorably glorified Christ, should loose the rewarde of the crowne. Whereupon also came that gloryinge, We looke for the redeemer from heauen, which shall make our vile body likefashioned to the body of his brightnes. And if this be true, that we must by many afflictions enter into the kingdom of God, no reason suffreth to debarre the bodies from this entry, which God both exerciseth vnder the standard of the crosse, and honoreth with the praise of victory. Therefore of this matter there arose amõg the Saintes no doutinge, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remoueth into his own person all the afflictions wherwith we are proued, to teache that they bring life. Yea and vnder the law he exercised the holy fathers in this faith with an outward ceremony. For to what purpose serued the viage of buryinge, as we haue alredy shewed, but that they should know that there is new life prepared for the bodies that are layd vp? Hereunto also tended the spices & other signes of immortality, wherewith vnder ỹ law the darkenesse of faith was holpen euen as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that maner bredde by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the Spirite doth no lesse diligently rehearse burialles than the chiefe mysteries of fayth. And Christ commendeth that worke as a speciall worke, truely for none other reason but because it lifteth vp our eyes from beholding of the graue which corrupteth & destroyeth al, to the sight of the renuinge. Moreouer the so diligent obseruinge of the ceremony which is praised in the Fathers, sufficiently proueth that it was to them a rare and pretious help of faith. For neither would Abraham haue so carefully prouided for the burying place of his wife, vnleſſe there had bin ſet before his eyes a religion and a profite hyer than the world, namely that garniſhinge the deade body of his wife with the ſignes of the reſurrection he might confirme both his owne faith and the faith of his houſehold. But a clearer proofe of this thing appeareth in the example of Iacob, which to teſtifie to his poſterity that the hope of the promiſed lande was not euen by death fallen out of his minde, commaunded his bones to be caried thither. I beſeech you, if he was to be clothed with a newe body, ſhoulde he not haue giuen a fonde commaundement concerninge duſt that ſhoulde be brought to nothinge? Wherefore if their authority of the Scripture be of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a more cleare or more certaine proofe. For this euen children vnderſtande by the wordes of Reſurrection, and raiſing vp againe. For neither can we call it the Reſurrection of that which is now firſt created, neither ſhoulde that ſaying of Chriſt ſtande faſt, Whatſoeuer the Father hath giuen me, it ſhall not periſh, but I will raiſe it vp in the laſt day. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth the word of Sleping, which pertaineth only to the bodies. Whereupon alſo burying places were called Cœmeteria, Sleping places. Nowe it remaineth that I ſpeake ſome what of the maner of the reſurrection. I vſe this word, becauſe Paule calling it a miſtery, exhorteth vs to ſobriety, and bridleth the liberty to diſpute like Philoſophers freely & ſuttelly of it. Firſt we muſt hold, as we haue ſayd, that we ſhall riſe againe in the ſame fleſh which we beare, as touching the ſubſtãce, but the quality ſhalbe other. As whẽ the ſame fleſh of Chriſt which had bin offred for ſacrifice, was raiſed vp againe, yet it excelled in other qualities as if it had bin altogether an other fleſh. Which thing Paule declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one ſubſtance of the fleſhe of a man, and of a beaſt, but not all one quality: as all ſtarres haue like matter, but not like brightneſſe: ſo he teacheth that though we ſhall kepe ſtill the ſubſtãce of our body, yet there ſhalbe a change, that the ſtate of it may be much more excellent. The body therefore, that we may be raiſed vp againe, ſhal not periſh nor vaniſh away: but putting of corruption, it ſhall put on vncorruption. But foraſmuch as God hath all the elementes ready at his becke, no hardineſſe ſhall hinder him, but that he may commaunde both the earth and waters and fier, to render that which ſeemeth to be conſumed by them. Which alſo Eſay teſtifieth though not without a figure, where he ſayth, Beholde, the Lorde ſhall go forth of his place, that he may viſit the inquity of the earth: & the earth ſhall diſcouer her bloode, and ſhall no more hide her dead. But there is to be noted a difference betwene them that haue bin deade

longe before, and those whom that day shall finde aliue. For we shall not all slepe (as Paul sayth) but we shall all be changed: that is to say, it shall not be of necessitie that there be a distance of time betwene death and the beginning of the second life: becauſe in a moment of time, and in the twinclinge of an eye, the ſounde of the trompet ſhall pearce, to raiſe vp the deade vncorruptible, & with a ſodaine change to faſhion againe the liuing into the ſame glory. So in an other place he comforteth the faithfull which muſt die: becauſe they which ſhall then remaine aliue ſhal not go before the dead, but rather they ſhal firſt riſe againe which haue ſlept in Chriſt. If any obiect that sayinge of the Apoſtle, that it is appointed to all mortall men ones to die, it is eaſie to anſwere it with saying that when the ſtate of nature is changed, it is a kinde of death, and is fittely ſo called. And therefore theſe things agree wel together, that all ſhalbe renued by death when they ſhall put of their mortall body: and yet that it is not neceſſary that there be a ſeueringe of the body and the ſoule where there ſhalbe a ſodaine changing. 1. Cor. 15. 51. 1. The. 4 15. Hebr. 9. 27.

9 But here ariſeth a harder queſtion: by what right the reſurrectiō which is the ſingular benefit of Chriſt is common alſo to the wicked and the accurſed of God. We knowe that all were in Adam condemned to death: Chriſt came thē reſurrectiō & life. Came he to giue life to all mankinde vniuerſally without choiſe? But what is more againſt reaſon, than that they ſhoulde by their obſtinate blindeneſſe obtaine that which the godly worſhippers of God do obtaine by onely faith? Yet this remaineth certaine, that there ſhalbe one reſurrection of iudgement, and an other reſurrection of life, & that Chriſt ſhal come to ſeuere the Lambes frō the Goates. I anſwere, that this ought not to ſeeme ſtrange, the likeneſſe whereof we ſee in dayly experience. We ſee that in Adam we were depriued of the inheritance of the whole world, and that we are by no leſſe iuſte reaſon debarred from common foode, than from the eating of the tree of life. Whenſe then commeth it to paſſe, that God doth not onely make his ſunne to riſe vpon the good and euill, but alſo as touching the vſes of this preſent life, his ineſtimable liberality continually floweth forth to them with large plentuouſneſſe? Hereby verily we knowe that thoſe thinges which properly belonge to Chriſt and his members, do alſo ouerflow to the wicked: not that it is their rightfull poſſeſſion, but that they may be made ȳ more inexcuſable. So the wicked do oftentimes finde God beneficiall, by mōre than meane proues, yea ſuch as ſometime do darken all the bleſſinges of the Godly, but yet do turne to their greater damnation. If any man obiect, that the reſurrection is Ioh. 11. 25. Mat. 25. 31. Matt. 5. 45.

not fitly compared to fadinge and earthly benefites: here also I aunswere that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountaine of life, they deserued the death of the Deuill, whereby they shoulde be vtterly destroyed: Yet by the maruelous counsell of God there was found a meane state that out of life they might liue in death. No more absurdity ought it to seeme, if the resurrectiō happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their willes to the iudgement seate of Christ, whom now they refuse to heare for their maister and teacher. For it were a small paine to be consumed away with death, if they were not, to suffer punishment for their obstinacy, brought before the iudge, whose vengeance they haue without ende and measure prouoked against themselues. But although we must holde that Act. 24. 15. which we haue sayd, and which that notable confession of Paul before Felix containeth, that he looketh for ỹ resurrection of the righteous and wicked: yet the Scripture oftentimes setteth foorth election together with the heauenly glory to the only children of God: Because Christ properly came not to the destruction, but to the saluation of the world. Therefore in the Creede there is made mention of the blessed life only.

Ose. 13. 14. 1. Cor. 15. 54. 10 But forasmuch as the Prophecy of death swallowed vp by victory, shall thèn and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicity, the ende of the resurrection: of the excellency whereof, if all thinges were spoken which the tongues of men were able to speake, yet scarcely the smallest parcell thereof shoulde be expressed. For howesoeuer we truely heare that the kingdome of God shalbe stuffed full with brightnesse, ioy, felicity, and glory: yet those thinges that are spoken of are most farre remoued from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speaches, vntill that day come when he himselfe shall giue to vs his glory to be seene face
1. Ioh. 3. 2. to face. We know (saith Iohn) that we are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeared. But when we shalbe like to him, then we shall see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophetes, because they could by no wordes expresse the spiritual blessednesse in it selfe, did in a maner grosly portray it out vnder bodily thinges. But forasmuch as the feruentnesse of desire must with some tast of that sweetenesse be kindled in vs, let vs chiefely continue in this thought, ỹ if God do as a certaine fountaine which can not be drawen drie, containe in him the fulnesse of all good thinges, nothinge is beyonde him to be coueted of them that tende towarde the soueraigne good and the full perfection of felicity: as we are taught in many places. ſhalbe glorified in all his saintes, and ſhalbe made wonderful in them that haue beleued. If the Lord will enterparten his glory, power, and righeouſnes with his elect, yea and will giue himſelfe to them to be enioyed, and (which is better) will after a certaine maner grow into one with them: let vs remember that vnder this benefit is contained all kinde of felicity. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowledge that we yet ſtay beneth at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiuing of our minde be cõpared with the highneſſe of this miſtery. Wherefore in this behalfe we muſt keepe ſobriety, leaſt with how much greater boldneſſe we ſhall flie vp on hie beinge vnmindefull of our owne ſmall meaſure, ſo much more the brightneſſe of the heauenly glory ouerwhelme vs. We feele alſo how the vnmeaſurable gredineſſe to know more than is lawefull, tickleth vs: from whenſe both triflinge and hurtfull queſtions do ſpring from time to time: trifling I call thoſe of which there can no profit be gathered. But this ſecond kind is worſe, becauſe they which giue themſelues to them, do entangle themſelues with pernicious ſpeculatiõs, and therefore I call them hurtefull. That which the Scriptures do teach, ought to be out of all dout with vs: namely that as God diuerſly diſtributinge his giftes to the Saintes in this worlde, doth vnequally enlighten them, ſo the meaſure of glorie ſhall not be equall in heauen where God ſhal crowne his gifts. For neither doth this belonge indifferently to all which Paule ſayth, Ye are my glorie and crowne 1. Theſ. 2.19.
in the day of Chriſt: nor alſo that ſayinge of Chriſt to the Apoſtles: Mat.19. 28.
Ye ſhall ſit iudginge the twelue tribes of Iſraell. But Paule (which knewe that as God enricheth the holy ones with ſpirituall giftes in earth, ſo he beautifieth them with glorie in heauen) douteth not that there is a peculiar crowne layd vppe for him accordinge to the rate of his labours. And Chriſt to ſet forth to the Apoſtles the dignity of the office which they did beare, telleth them that the frute therof is layd vp for them in heauen. So Daniell alſo ſayth, But the wiſe Dan.12. 3.
ſhall ſhine as the brightneſſe of the firmament, and they which iuſtifie many, as Starres to the worldes ende and for euer. And if a manne heedefully conſider the Scriptures, they do not onely promiſe eternall life to the faithful, but alſo ſpeciall reward to euery one. Whereupon commeth that ſayinge of Paule, The Lorde render to 2.Tim.4 him in that day. Which the promiſe of Chriſt confirmeth, Ye ſhall 14.

Mat.19.29. receiue a hundred folde in the eternall life. Finally as Christ beginneth in this worlde the glory of his body with manifolde diuersity of giftes, and encreaseth it by degrees: so he shall also make it perfect in heauen.

11 But as all the godly will receiue this with one consent, because it is sufficiently testified by the word of God: so on the other side leauing crabbed questions, which they shall know to be a hinderance to them, they will not passe their appointed boundes. As for my parte, I do not onely priuately forbeare superfluous searchinge of vnprofitable thinges, but I also thinke that I ought to beware that I do not with aunsweringe nourishe the lightnesse of other. Menne hungrie of vayne knowledge do aske howe great shall be the distance betwene the Prophetes and the Apostles, and agayne betwene the Apostles and the Martyrs: howe many degrees Virgines differ from maried folkes: finally they leaue no corner of heauen vnsearched. Then it commeth in their mindes to enquire to what purpose serueth the repairinge of the worlde, sith the children of God shal neede nothinge of all this so great and incomparable plenty: but shalbe like to the Angels, whose not eatinge is a Signe of the eternall blessednesse. But I aunswere that in the very sight there shal be so great pleasauntnesse, so great sweetenesse in the onely knowledge without any vse, that this felicity shall farre passe all the helpes wherewith we be nowe holpen. Lette vs imagine our selues to be sette in the most wealthy coast of the worlde, and where we shall want no pleasure: yet who is there whome his sickenesse do not sometime hinder and not suffer to vse the benefites of God? Who is there whose course his owne intemperance doth not oft breake in sunder? Whereupon foloweth that a cleare enioyinge and pure from all fault, although there be no vse of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicity. Some go further and aske whether drosse and other corruptions in metalles, be not farre from restoringe and are contrary to it. Which though in some respect I graunt them, yet I looke with Paule for the reparinge of these faultes which tooke their beginninge at sinne, towarde which repayringe they grone and are in trauaile. Yet they proceede further, and aske what better estate is prepared for manne, sith the blessinge of iflue shall then be at an ende. This knot is also easie to be loosed. Whereas the Scripture so honorably setteth out that kinde of blessinge, that is referred to the encreasces wherewith God continually draweth forwarde the order of nature her marke: but in the perfection it is knowen that there is an other manner. But sith the vnware are easily taken with allurementes, and then the maze draweth weth them in deeplier, and at length when euery mannes deuises please himselfe there is no end of striuinge: therefore let this be a shorte way for vs, to be contented with the glasse and darke speech vntill we shall see face to face. For fewe of a great multitude care which way they may go to heauen: but all do before their time couet to know what is done there. All beinge commonly sluggish and slow to enter into battels, do already paint out to themselues imagined triumphes.

12 Now because no description can matche the grieuousnesse of the vengeance of God vppon the reprobate, their tormentes and paines are figured to vs by bodily thinges, namely by darkenes, weepinge, gnashinge of teeth, vnquencheable fier, and a worme endelessely gnawing the heart. For by such maners of speech it is certaine that the holy Ghost meant to trouble all our senses with horrour: as when it is sayd that there is prepared from eternity a deepe Hell, that the nourishmentes thereof are fire and much woode: that the blast of the Lorde, as a streame of brimstone, doth set it on fier. As by such thinges we must be holpen after a certaine maner to conceiue the miserable state of the wicked, so we ought chiefely to fasten our thought vpon this howe wretched a thinge it is to be estranged from the fellowshippe of God: and not that onely, bur also to feele the maiesty of God so bent against thee, that thou canst not escape but be fast strained of it. For first his displeasure is like a most violent fier, with touchinge whereof all thinges are deuoured and swallowed vp. Then, all creatures so serue him to execute his iudgement, that they to whom the Lord shall so shew his wrath, shal fele the heauen, earth, sea, and beastes, as it were with cruell indignation emflamed against them and armed to their destruction. Wherefore it is no small thinge that the Apostle pronounceth when he sayth that the vnbeleuinge shall suffer eternall punishment by dyinge from the face of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. And so oft as the Propheres do cast vs in feare with bodily figures, although they speake nothinge excessiuely for our dulnesse, yet they adde foreshewinges of the iudgement co come, in the sunne and the moone and the whole frame of the world. Wherefore the vnhappy consciences do finde no rest, from being vexed and tossed with a terrible whirlewinde, frō feeling themselues to be torne in peeces by God beinge angirly bent against them, from being pearced and launced with deadly stinges, from trembling at the lightninge of God, and beinge broosed with the weight of his hand: so that it is much more ease to enter into al bottomles depthes and deuouringe pittes, than to stande one moment in those terrours.

What and how great then is this, to be preſſed with euerlaſting and neuer ceaſſing ſiege of him? Of which thing the 90. Pſalme containeth a notable ſentence: that although with only ſight he ſcatter abroade all mortall men and bringe them to nought, yet his worſhippers, how much more fearefull they are in the worlde, ſo much more he enforceth them and pricketh them forward loden with the croſſe, vntill he be all in all.

THE FOVRTH BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the outward meanes or helpes, whereby God alloureth vs into the felowshippe of Chriſt and holdeth vs therein.

The firſt Chapter.

Of the true Church vvith vvhich vve ought to kepe vnity, becauſe it is the mother of all the godly.

THat by Faith of the Goſpel Chriſt is become oures, & we be made partakers of the ſaluation brought by him & of eternal bleſſednes, is already declared in the laſt booke. But becauſe our rudeneſſe, and ſlothfulneſſe, yea and vanity of wit, do nede outward helpes whereby Faith in vs may both be engendred, and grow and encreaſe in proceeding toward the marke wherunto it tendeth: God hath alſo added them therby to prouide for our weakenes. And that the Preaching of the Goſpel might floriſh, he hath left this treaſure with the Church. He hath appointed Paſtors and teachers, by whoſe mouth he might teach them that be his: he hath furniſhed them with authority, finally he hath left nothing vndone that might auaile to the holy conſent of faith and right order. Firſt of all he hath ordained Sacramentes, which we feele by experience to be more than profitable helpes to nouriſhe and confirme Faith. For becauſe beinge encloſed in the priſon of our fleſh, we do not yet attaine to the degre of Angels, God applying himſelfe to our cappacity according to his wonderful Prouidence, hath appointed a meane whereby we being farre distant from him might come vnto him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we entreate of the Church, & of the gouernement, orders, & power of it, & then of the Sacramentes, and lastly also of ciuile order: and therwithall that we call away the godly readers from those corruptions wherewith Satan in the Prophane hath depraued all things that God hath appointed for our saluation. I will beginne at the Church, into whose bosome God will haue his children to be gathered together, not only that they should by her helpe and ministery be nourished while they are infantes and yonge children, but also be ruled by her motherly care till they grow to ripe age, and at length come to the marke of Faith. For it is not lawfull that those things be seuered which God hath conioined, that to whom he is a Father, the Church be also their mother: and that not only vnder the law, but also since the cõming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth that we are the children of the new & heauenly Hierusalem. Mat. 10 9. Gala. 8. 26.

2 In the Creede, where we professe that we beleue the Church, that is not spoken onely of the visible Church whereof we nowe entreate, but of all the elect of God, in whose nũber they are also cõprehended that are departed by death. And therfore this word Beleue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference be noted betwene the children of God & the vngodly, betwene his peculiar flocke and sauage beastes. For whereas many do enterlace this worde in, that is without probable reason. I graunt in deede that it is the more commonly vsed, & also wãteth not the consenting testimony of antiquity, forasmuch as euen the Nicen Crede, as it is reported in the Ecclesiastical history, addeth the preposition in. But therewithall we may marke by the wrytings of the aunciẽt Fathers, that it was in olde time receiued without controuersie to say, that they beleued the Church & not in the Church. For Augustine, & that ancient writer whatsoeuer he was, whose work remaineth vnder ỹ name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Crede, do not only so speake thẽselues, but also do expresly note that it should be an vnproper maner of speakinge if the preposition were adioyned, & they confirme their opinion with no trifling reason. For we therfore testifie that we beleue in God because vpõ him as a true speaker our mind reposeth itselfe, & in him our confidence resteth which could not so cõueniently be spoken to say in the Church, no more than it could be sayd, I beleue in the forgiuenes of sinnes, or in the resurrectiõ of the flesh. Therefore although I woulde not striue about wordes, yet I hadde rather follow the propriety of ſpeakinge that ſhoulde be fitteſt to expreſſe the matter, than curiouſly to ſeeke for formes of ſpeech whereby the matter may without cauſe be darkened. But the ende is, that we ſhoulde knowe that although the Deuill attempt all meanes to ouerthrowe the grace of Chriſt, and though the enemies of God be caried with violent rage to the ſame entent: yet it can not be extinguiſhed, nor the bloude of Chriſt be made barren, but that it will bring foorth ſome frute. And ſo is both the ſecret election of God, and his inwarde callinge to be conſidered: becauſe he alone knoweth who be his, and holdeth them encloſed vnder a ſeale as Paule tearmeth it: ſaying that they beare his tokens whereby they may be ſeuerally knowen from the reprobate. But becauſe a ſmall and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, & a few graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onely is to be left the knowledge of his Church, the fundation whereof is his ſecret electiō. But it is not ſufficient to conceiue in thought and minde the multitude of the elect, vnleſſe we thinke vppon ſuch an vnity of the Church into which we be truly perſwaded that we our ſelues be engraffed. For vnleſſe we be vnder our heade Chriſt vnited together with all the reſt of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of the inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or Vniuerſall, becauſe we can not finde two or three Churches but that Chriſt muſt be torne in ſonder, which can not be done. But all the elect of God are ſo knit together in Chriſt, that as they hang vppon one head, ſo they may growe together as it were into one body, cleauing together with ſuch a compacting of ioyntes as the members of one ſelfe body: being truely made one, which with one hope, Faith, Charity, with one ſelfe Spirite of God do liue together, beinge called not only into one inheritance of eternal life, but alſo into one partakinge of one God and Chriſt. Wherefore although the ſoroweſull deſolation that on ech ſide preſenteth it ſelfe in ſight, crieth out that there is nothinge left of the Church, yet lette vs know that Chriſtes death is frutefull and that God maruellouſly as it were in ſecrete corners preſerueth his Church. As it was ſayd to Elias, I haue kept to my ſelfe ſeuen thouſand men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

Ephe. 1. 13.

1. Reg. 19. 18.

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doth in ſome reſpect belonge to the outwarde Church, that euery one of vs ſhould holde himſelfe in brotherly conſent with all the children of God, ſhoulde yeelde vnto the Church that authoritie which it deſerueth, finally ſhould ſo behaue himſelfe as a ſhepe of the flocke. And therfore is adioyned the communion of Saintes. Which parcell, although commonly the olde writers do leaue it out, yet is not to be neglected: becauſe it very well expreſſeth the qualitie of the Churche: as if it had bene ſayed that the Saints are gathered together into the fellowſhippe of Chriſt with this condition, that whatſoeuer benefites God beſtoweth vpon them they ſhould continually communicate them one to an other. Whereby yet the diuerſitie of graces is not taken away, as we knowe that the giftes of the holy Ghoſt are diuerſly diſtributed: neither is the order of ciuile gouernement diſturbed, by which it is lawfull for euery man priuately to enioy his owne poſſeſſions, as it is neceſſary, that for preſeruation of peace among men, they ſhould haue among them ſelues peculiare and deuided properties of things. But there is a community affirmed, ſuch as Luke deſcribeth, that of the multitude of the beleuers there was one harte and one ſoule: and Paule, when he exhorteth the Epheſians to be one body, one Spirit, as they be called in one hope. For it is not poſſible, if they be truely perſwaded that God is the common father, and Chriſt the common head to them all, but that being conioined among themſelues with brotherly loue, they ſhould continually communicate thoſe things that they haue. Nowe it much behoueth vs to knowe what profite thereupon returneth vnto vs. For we beleue the Churche to this ende, that we may be certainly perſwaded that we are the members of it. For by this meane, our ſaluation reſteth vpon ſure and ſounde ſtayes, that it, although the whole frame of the world be ſhaken, can not come to ruine and fall downe. Firſt it ſtandeth with goddes election, neither can it vary or faile but together with his eternall Prouidence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioined with the ſtedfaſtneſſe of Chriſt, which will no more ſuffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his owne members to be rente and torne in peces. Beſide that, we are aſſured that trueth ſhall alway abide with vs, ſo long as we are holden in the boſome of the Church. Laſt of al that we fele that theſe promiſes belong to vs, there ſhalbe ſaluation in Syon, God ſhall for euer abide in Hieruſalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the Church do, that it holdeth vs in the fellowippe of God. Alſo in the very worde Communion is much comfort: becauſe while it remaineth certaine, that whatſoeuer the Lorde geueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good things confirmed. But in ſuch ſorte to embrace the vnitie of the Church, it is not needefull (as we haue already ſayed) to ſee the Church it ſelfe with our eyes, or fele it with our handes: but rather by this that it conſiſteth in Faith, we are admoniſhed that we ought no leſſe to thinke it to be, when it paſſeth our vnderſtanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our faith therefore the worſe, becauſe it conceiueth it vnknowen: for aſmuch as we are not here in cõmaunded to diſcerne the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God onely, and not oures) but to determine aſſuredly in our mindes, that all they that by the mercifull kindneſſe of God the father through the effectuall working of the Holy Ghoſt, are come into the partaking of Chriſt, are ſeuered into the peculiar right and proper poſſeſſion of Chriſt: and that, for aſmuch as we be in the number of thoſe, we are partakers of ſo great a grace.

4 But ſith it is now our purpoſe to entreat of the viſible Church, let vs learne euen by this one title of Mother, how much ỹ knowledge thereof is profitable, yea neceſſary for vs: for aſmuch as there is no other entry into life, vnleſſe ſhe conceiue vs in her wombe, vnleſſe ſhe bring vs forth, vnleſſe ſhe feede vs with her breaſtes, finally vnleſſe ſhe kepe vs vnder her cuſtody and gouernaunce, vntill ſuch time as being vnclothed of mortall fleſh we ſhall be like vnto Angels. For our weakeneſſe ſuffreth vs not to be diſmiſſed from ſchole, till we haue bene ſcholars throughout the whole courſe of our life. Beſide that out of her boſome there is no forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and no ſaluation to be hoped for, as witneſſeth Eſaie & Ioel, with whom agreeth Ezechiel when he declareth that they ſhall not be in the number of Goddes people whom he putteth away from the heauenly life. At on the contrary ſide, they are ſayd to write their names among the citezens of Hieruſalẽ, that turne them ſelues to the following of true godlineſſe. After which maner it is alſo ſayed in an other Pſalme: Remember me, Lorde, in the good will of thy people: viſite me in thy ſaluation that I may ſee the benefites of thy elect, that I may be merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may reioiſe with thy enheritaunce. In which wordes the fatherly fauor of God, and the peculiar teſtimonie of the Spirituall life is reſtrained to his flocke, ſo that the departing from the Church is alway damnable.

5 But let vs procede to proſecute that which properly belongeth to this place. Paul writeth that Chriſt, that he might fulfill all things, gaue ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophetes, ſome Euangeliſtes, and ſome Paſtors & teachers, to the reſtoring of the holy ones, into the worke of miniſterie, vnto the edification of the body of Chriſt: vntill we all come into the vnitie of Fayeth, and of the acknowledging of the ſonne of God, vnto a perfect manne, and to the meaſure of the full growen age of Chriſt. We ſee howe God, which was able to make them that be his perfect in a momente, yet will not haue them grow into manly age but by the bringing vp of the Church. We see the meane expressed, for that vnto the Pastors is enioined the preaching of the heauenly doctrine. We see howe all, not one excepted, are brought into one rule, that they should with milde Spirit and willing to learne, yelde themselues to the teachers appointed for that vse. And by this marke Esaye had longe before set out the kingdome of Christ, where he sayeth: My Spirit which is in thee, and the wordes that I haue put in thy mouth shall neuer departe, neither out of thy mouth, nor out of ỹ mouth of thy sede & thy childrẽs childrẽ. Wherupon followeth that they are worthy to perish with famine & pining hunger, whosoeuer they be that refuse the Spirituall meate of the soule reached vnto them of God by the handes of the Church. God doth breath faith into vs, but by the instrument of his Gospell, as Paule sayeth that faith is by hearing. As also with God remaineth his power to saue, but (as the same Paule witnesseth) he vttereth and displayeth the same in the preaching of the Gospell. For this reason in olde time he wlled that there should be made holy assemblies to the sanctuary, that doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Priest should nourish the consente of faith. And to no other ende those glorious titles haue respect, where the temple is called the rest of God, and the sanctuary his house, where he is sayed to sit betwene the Cherubins, but to bring estimation, loue, reuerence and dignitie to the ministerie of the heauenly doctrine, which otherwise the sight of a mortall and despised man would not a litle diminish. Therefore that we should knowe, that out of earthen vessels is brought fourth vnto vs inestimable treasure, God himself cõmeth fourth, & in as much as he is author of this degree, so he will haue himself to be acknowledged presente in his institution. Therfore after that he hath forbidden his to giue themselues to iudgement by flying of birdes, to south sayings, magicall artes, necromancy and other superstitions, he immediatly addeth that he will geue them that which ought to suffice in steade of all, that is to say, that they shall neuer be destitute of Prophetes. But like as he sent not the olde people to Angels, but raised vp teachers out of the earth, which might truely performe the office of Angels: so at this day also his will is to teach vs by men. And as in the olde time he was not contente with the onely lawe, but added Priests for expositors, at whose lippes the people should enquire for the true meaninge thereof: so at this day he not onely willeth vs to be hedefully bent to reading, but also appointeth maisters ouer vs, by whose trauail we may be holpen: whereof cõmeth double profit. For on the one parte by a very good triall it proueth our obedience, where we heare his miniſters ſpeaking euen as it were himſelfe. On the other ſide it alſo prouideth for our weakneſſe, while after the maner of men he had rather ſpeake vnto vs by interpreters to allure vs vnto him, than with thondring driue vs away from him. And truely howe expedient this familiar maner of teaching is for vs, all the godly do fele by the feare wherewith the maieſtie of God doth worthily aſtoniſh them. But they that thinke that the authoritie of the doctrine is abaced by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, do bewray their vnthankefulneſſe: becauſe among ſo many excellent giftes wherewith God hath garniſhed mankinde: this is a ſingular prerogatiue, that he voucheſaueth to conſecrat the mouths and tonges of men to himſelfe, that his owne voice ſhould ſound in them. Wherefore on our behalues let vs not be greued obediently to embrace the doctrine of ſaluation ſet foorth by his commaundement and by his owne mouth: becauſe although the power of God is not bounde to outwarde meanes, yet he hath bounde vs to an ordinary maner of teaching: which whyle phrentike menne refuſe to kepe, they wrappe themſelues in many deadly ſnares. Either pride, or diſdainefulneſſe, or enuie moueth many to perſwade themſelues that they can ſufficiently profit by their owne priuate reading and ſtudy, and ſo to deſpiſe publike aſſemblies, and to accompte preaching ſuperfluous. But ſith they do as much as in thē is loſe or breake in ſonder the holy bonde of vnitie, no man eſcapeth the due puniſhment of this diuorce, but he bewitcheth himſelfe with peſtilent errours and moſt wicked dotages. Wherefore, that the pure ſimplicitie of faith may floriſh among vs, let vs not be grieued to vſe this exerciſe of godlineſſe, which God by his inſtitution hath ſhewed to be neceſſarie for vs and ſo earneſtly cōmendeth. But there was neuer yet foūd any euen of the moſt wanton dogges which would ſay that we ought to ſtoppe our eares againſt God: but in all ages the Prophets and godly teachers haue had a hard ſtrife againſt the wicked, whoes ſtubborneſſe can neuer come vnder this yoke, to be taught by the mouth and miniſterie of menne. Which is as much as to blotte out the face of God which ſhineth vnto vs in doctrine. For, in olde time the faithfull were commaunded to ſeke the face of God in the Sanctuarie, and the ſame is ſo ofte repeted in the lawe, for no other cauſe but for that the doctrine of the lawe and the exhortations of the Prophets were to them a liuely image of God: as Paule affirmeth that in his preaching ſhineth the glorie of God in the face of Chriſt. Howe much the more deteſtable are the Apoſtates, which gredely ſeeke to deuide Churches, as though they did driue ſhepe from

from their foldes and caſt them into the mouthes of wolues. But we muſt holde that which we haue alleged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwiſe bilded but by outwarde preaching, and that the holy ones are holden together with no other bonde but when with learning and profiting with one conſente they kepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this ende principally, as I haue ſayed, the faithfull in olde time vnder the lawe were commaunded to reſorte to the ſanctuary. Becauſe when Moſes ſpeaketh of the dwelling place of God, he doth there withall call it the place of name, where God hath ſet the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainely teacheth that without the doctrine of godlineſſe there is no vſe thereof. And it is not doutefull but that for the ſame reaſon Dauid with great bitterneſſe of Spirit complaineth that he is by the tyrannous crueltie of his enemies kept from entring into the Tabernacle. It ſemeth commonly to many, a childiſh lamẽtation, becauſe it ſhould be but a very ſmall loſſe, and alſo no great pleaſure ſhould be forgone thereby, to wante the entrie of the temple, ſo that there were enough of other delitefull things. But he bewaileth that with this one griefe, anguiſh, and ſorowe, he is fretted & vexed & in a maner waſted. For nothing is of greater eſtimation with the faithfull, than this helpe whereby God by degrees lifteth vp his on hie. For this is alſo to be noted, that God in the mirror of his doctrine alway ſo ſhewed himſelfe to the holy Fathers, that the knowledge was ſpirituall. Wherefore the temple is called not onely his face, but alſo (to take away all ſuperſtition) his foote ſtole. And this is that happy meting into vnitie of faith, while from the hieſt euen to the loweſt all do aſpire to the head. All the temples that euer the Gentiles vpon any other purpoſe builded to God, were but a mere prophaning of his worſhip: whereunto though not with like groſſenes, yet ſomwhat the Iewes fell. Whereof Stephen out of the mouth of Eſay reprocheth thẽ, where he ſayeth, that God dwelleth not in temples made with handes. &c. Becauſe onely God doth by his worde ſanctifie to himſelfe temples to the lawefull vſe. And if we raſhly attempt any thing without his commaundement, by and by to an euill beginning do cleaue newe deuiſes by which ỹ euill is ſpreade abrode without meaſure. Yet Xerxes, when by the coũſell of the Magitiãs he burned vp or plucked downe all the tẽples of Greece, vndiſcretely ſayed, that the goddes to whom all things ought to be freely open were incloſed within wals & tiles. As though it were not in the pow er of God, to the entente he might be nere vs, after a certaine maner to deſcende vnto vs, & yet neither to chaunge place, nor to faſten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certaine chariotes to carry vs vp to his heauenly glory, which with the inmeasurable greatnesse therof filleth all things, yea & in heigth surmounteth the heauens.

6 Nowe forasmuch as at this time there hath bene great strife about the effectualnesse of the ministery, while some excessiuely amplifie the dignitie thereof: and some other affirme that that which is properly belonging to the Holy Ghost is wrongfully geuen away to mortall man, if we thinke that ministers and teachers do pearce to the mindes & hartes, to amende as well the blindnesse of the mindes as the hardnesse of hartes: it is mete that we geue a right determination of this cõtrouersy. All that they contende on both partes shal easily be accorded by expressly noting the places where God the author of preaching ioining his Spirit with it promiseth fruit thereof: or againe, when seuering himselfe from outwarde helpes he chalengeth to himselfe alone as well the beginnings of faith as the whole course thereof. It was the office of the secõde Elias (as Malachie witnesseth) to enlighten the mindes, and to turne the hartes of fathers to the children, and vnbeleuers to the wisedome of the righteous. Christ pronounceth that he sendeth the Apostles, that they should bring fruite of their labor. But what that fruite is Peter shortly defineth, saying that we be regenerate with incorruptible seede. And therefore Paule glorieth that he by the Gospell begate the Corinthians, and that they were the seale of his Apostleshippe: yea that he was not a literall minister, such as did onely beate the eares with sounde of voice, but that there was geuen him an effectualnesse of Spirit, that his doctrine should not be vnprofitable. In which meaning also in an other place he sayeth, that his Gospell was not in word onely, but in power. He affirmeth also that the Galathians by hearinge receiued the Spirit of faith. Finally in many places he maketh himselfe not onely a worker together with God, but also assigneth himselfe the office of geuing saluation. Truely he neuer brought fourth all these things to this entent to geue vnto himselfe any thing were it neuer so little seuerally from God: as in an other place he shortly declareth, saying: our laboure was not vnprofitable in the Lorde, according to his power mightily working in me. Againe in an other place, he that was mightie in Peter towarde the circumcision, was also mightie in me towarde the Gentiles. But howe he leaueth nothing seuerally to the ministers, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but God that geueth the encrease. Again: I haue laboured more than all: not I, but the grace of God that was with me. And truely we must holde fast those thoſe ſayings, where God aſcribing to himſelfe the enlightening of the minde, and the renewing of the harte, teacheth that it is a robberie of God if man take vpon himſelf any parte of either of them. In the meane time if any man offer himſelfe to the miniſters whom God ordeineth, willing to learne, he ſhall knowe by the frute, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleaſed God, and that this yoke of modeſty was not in vaine layed vpon the faithfull.

7 But as for the Church viſible and which is within the compaſſe of our knowledge, what iudgement is mete to be geuen thereof, I thinke it already appeare euidently by that which we haue before ſayed. For we haue ſayed, that the holy Scripture ſpeaketh of the Church after two ſortes. Somtime when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is in deede before God, into which none are receiued but they that are both by grace of adoptiō the children of God, and by ſanctification of the Spirit the true members of Chriſt. And then truely it comprehendeth not onely the holy ones that dwell in earth, but alſo all the elect that haue bene ſince the beginning of the world. But oftentimes vnder the name of the Church it ſignifieth the vniuerſall multitude of men ſcattered abrode in the world, which profeſſe that they worſhip one God and Chriſt, by Baptiſme entre into his faith, by partaking of the Supper teſtifie their vnitie in true doctrine and charitie, haue an agreement in the word of the Lorde, and for the preaching thereof do kepe the miniſterie ordeined by Chriſt. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Chriſt but the name and outwarde ſhewe: there be many ambicious, couetous, enuious, euill ſpeakers, ſome of vncleane life: which be ſuffred for a time, either becauſe they can not by lawfull order of iudgemēt be conuinced, or becauſe there is not alway in vre that ſeueritie of diſcipline that ought to be. Therefore as we muſt needes beleue that the Church which is inuiſible to vs, is to be ſeen with the eyes of God onely: ſo are we commaunded to regarde this Church which is called a Church in reſpect of men, and to kepe the communion of it.

7 Therefore ſo much as behoued vs to knowe it, the Lord hath ſet it out by certaine markes and as it were ſignes vnto vs. This is in deede the ſingular prerogatiue of God himſelfe, to knowe who be his, as we haue already alleaged out of Paule. And truely that the raſheneſſe of menne ſhould not crepe ſo farre, it is prouided, by the very ſucceſſe of thinges daily putting vs in minde, howe farre his ſecret iudgementes do ſurmounte our vnderſtanding. For euen they that ſeemed moſt deſperate, and accompted vtterly paſt hope. 2. Tim. 2. 19.

are by his goodneſſe called backe into the way: & they that ſeemed to ſtande faſt in compariſon of other, doo oftentimes fall. Therefore Homel. in Ioā. 45. according to the ſecret predeſtination of God (as Auguſtine ſayeth) there be many ſhepe without, and many wolues within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that knowe neither him nor themſelues But of thoſe that openly beare his badge, his onely eyes do ſee who be both holy without faining, and who will cōtinue euen to the ende, which is the very chiefe point of ſaluation. Yet on the other ſide, foraſmuch as he forſawe it to be ſomedeale expedient, that we ſhould knowe who were to be accompted his children, he hath in this parte applied himſelfe to our capacitie. And becauſe the certaintie of faith was not neceſſarie, he hath put in place thereof a certaine iudgement of charitie: whereby we ſhould acknowledge for membres of the Church thoſe that both with confeſſion of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of ſacraments, do profeſſe the ſame God and Chriſt with vs. But as for the knowledge of the body thereof, howe much more that he knewe it to be neceſſary for our ſaluation, with ſo much ẏ more certaine markes he hath ſet it out.

9 Lee hereupon groweth & ariſeth vnto vs, a face of the Church viſible to our eyes. For whereſoeuer we ſee the word of God to be purely preached and hearde, and the ſacraments to be miniſtred according to the inſtitutiō of Chriſt, there it is in no wiſe to be douted that there is ſome Church of God: foraſmuch as his promiſe canne
Mat. 18. 20. not deceiue, Wherſoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the middes of them. But that we may euidently vnderſtande the ſumme of this matter, we muſt procede by theſe as it were degrees: that is to ſay, that the vniuerſall Church is a multitude gathered together out of all natiōs whatſoeuer they be, which being ſondered and ſeuerally ſcattered by diſtances of places, yet doth agree in one truth of godly doctrine, and is bounde together with the bonde of one ſelfe religion: And that ſo vnder this are cōprehended all particular Churches which are in all townes and ſtreetes according to the order of mens neceſſitie, ſo that euery one of them may rightfully haue the name and authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profeſſiō of godlineſſe are reckened among ſuch Churches, although they be in dede ſtrāgers from the Church, yet do after a certaine maner belong vnto it, till by publike iudgemēt they be baniſhed out of it. Howbeit there is ſomwhat a diuers maner in iudging of priuate men and of Churches. For it may fall in experience, that ſuch men as we ſhall thinke not to be altogether worthy of the company of the godly, yet we muſt vſe like brethren, and accompt compt them amonge the faithfull, for the common consent of the Church, wherby they are suffered and borne withall in the body of Christ. We do not by oure testimonie allowe such to be members of the Church: but we leaue them the place that they haue amonge the people of God, till it be by orderly right of lawe take away from them. But of the very multitude we must otherwise thinke: which if it hath and honoreth the ministery of the Word, and the administration of Sacramentes, it deserueth without dout to be esteemed & iudged a Church: because it is certaine that those things are not without fruite. So we do also preserue to the vniuersall Church her vnitie, which diuelishe spirits haue alway trauailed to cut in sunder: neither do we defraude of their authoritie those lawfull assemblies which are disposed according to the fitnesse of places.

10 We haue set for signes to discerne the Church by, the preaching of the Word, and the obseruing of the Sacraments. For these can be no where but they must bring forth fruite, and be prospered with the blessing of God. I do not say, that whersoeuer the word is preached, there by and by springeth vp fruit: but I say that no where it is receiued and hath a stayed seate, but that it bringeth forth the effectualnesse thereof. Where the preaching of the Gospell is reuerently heard, and the Sacraments are not neglected, howsoeuer it be, there for that time appeareth a not deceitfull & not doutfull face of the Church, whereof no man may vnpunished either despise the authoritie, or refuse the admonitions, or resist the cousells, or mocke at the corrections: much lesse to depart from it, and to breake in sunder the vnitie of it. For the Lorde so hiely esteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he compteth him for a traterous runne away and forsaker of Religion, whosoeuer shal stubbornely estraunge himselfe from any Christian fellowesship, so that it be such a one as hath the true ministerie of the Word and Sacraments. He so commendeth the Churches authority, that when it is violate, he iudgeth his owne diminished. Neither is it of small importaunce, that the Church is called the piller and strong stay of truth and the house of God. By which wordes Paule signifieth, that to the ende the truth of God should not decay in the world, the Church is a faithful keper thereof: because Gods will was to haue the preaching of his word kept pure, and to shewe himselfe vnto vs a father of housholde by her ministerie and labour, while she feedeth vs with spirituall nourishements, and procureth all things that make for our saluation. It is also no slender praise, that it is said that she is chosen and seuered by Christ to be his spouse, that should be without wrinkle and spot, the body and fulnes of him. Whereupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God and of Christ. Therefore so much the more we must beware of so wicked disagreement. For while we go about, so much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of Gods truth, we are worthy that he should sende downe his lightening with the whole violent force of his wrath to destroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any faulte more hainous, than with wicked breache of faith to defile the mariage that the onely begotten sonne of God hath vouchesaued to contracte with vs.

11. Wherefore let vs diligently kepe these markes emprinted in our mindes, and let vs esteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is no thing that Satan more endeuoureth than to take away and abolish the one of these, or both: sometime that when these markes are raced and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall distinction of the Church: sometime that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certain ages past, the pure preaching of the word hath vanished away: and nowe he doth with as great importunacy trauaile to ouerthrowe the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But nowe, howe daungerous, yea howe deadly a tentation is it when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation, wherein are seene the signes and tokens by which the Lorde thought his Church sufficiently described? We se howe great hede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we shoulde not be deceiued vnder the title of the Church, euery cõgregation that pretẽdeth the name of the Church must be examined by that maner of triall, as by a touchstone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lord, it will not deceiue vs: let vs boldly yeld vnto it the honor due to Churches. But contrary wise if it boast it selfe without the word and Sacramẽts, we must no lesse with fearefull conscience beware of such deceites, than on the other side we must flee rashenesse and pride.

12. Where as we say that the pure ministerie of the word and the pure vsage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a sufficient pledge and earnest, so that we may safely embrace as the Church any fellowe-shippe wherein both these shalbe: this extendeth so farre, that it is neuer to be cast of, so longe as it shall continue in those, although it swarme full of many other faultes. Yea and there may some faultinesse creepe into it, in the administration either of Doctrine, or of the Sacramentes, which ought not to estraunge vs from the Communion

munion of it. For all the articles of true Doctrine be not of one sorte. Some be so necessarie to be knowen, that they ought to be certaine and vndouted to all men, as the propre principles of Religion: of which sort are, That there is one God. That Christ is God, and the sonne of God: that our Saluation consisteth in the mercy of God: and such like. There be other that being in controuersie betwene Churches, yet do not breake the vnitie of faith. For those Churches that disagree about this one point, if without lust of contention, without stubburnesse of affirming, the one thinke that soules when they departe from the bodies do flie vp into heauen, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainely holdeth that they liue to the Lorde. The wordes of the Apostle are: Let all vs that be perfect thinke all one thing: but if ye thinke any thing otherwise, this the Lorde shall also reuele vnto you. Doth he not sufficiently shewe that diuersitie of opinions about these matters, that be not so necessary, ought to be no grounde of disagreement among Christians? It is in deede a principall pointe, that we agree in all things. But for as much as there is no man that is not wrapped with some littell clowde of ignoraunce: either we muste leaue no Church at all, or we must pardon a beinge deceiued in such things as may be vnknowen without violating the summe of Religion, and without losse of saluation. But I meane not here to defend any errors be they neuer so litle, so as I would thinke that they should be cherished with flattering and winking at them: but I say that we ought not rashly for euery light dissention forsake the Church, in which at least that Doctrine is reteined safe and vncorrupted, wherin standeth the safetie of godlinesse, and the vse of Sacramentes is kept as it was instituted by the Lorde. In the meane time if we endeuor to amend that which displeaseth vs, we do therin according to our dutie. And hereunto belongeth that saying of Paule: If any thing better be reueled to him that sitteth, let the first holde his peace. Whereby it is euidente, that all the membres of the Church are euery one charged with endeuour to publike edification, according to the measure of his grace, so that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that we neither do forsake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, do trouble the peace and well ordred discipline thereof.

1. Cor. 14. 30.

13 But in bearinge with the imperfection of life, our gentle tenderneſſe ought to go much further. For herein is a very slipperie easinesse to fall: and herein with no small deuises doth Satan lay wait for vs. For there haue bene alway some, which filled with false perſwation of perfect holineſſe as though they were already made certaine ayry ſpirits, deſpiſed the company of all men, in whome they ſawe remaining any thing of the nature of man. Such in old time were the Cathary, and they that were as madde as they, the Donatiſtes. Such at this day are ſome of the Anabaptiſtes, which would ſeeme to haue profited aboue the reſt. Some there be that offende more by an vndiſcrete zele of righteouſneſſe, than by that madde pride. For when they ſee among them to whom the Goſpell is preached, the fruit of life not agreably anſwering to the doctrine therof, they by and by iudge that there is no Church. It is in deede a moſt iuſt diſpleaſure, and ſuch a one whereunto in this moſt miſerable age of the world, we geue to much occaſion. Neither may we excuſe our accurſed ſlouthfulneſſe, which the Lorde will not ſuffer vnpuniſhed: as euen already he beginneth with greuous ſcourges to chaſtiſe it. Wo therefore to vs, which with ſo diſſolute licentiouſneſſe of wicked doinges, make that weake conſciences be wounded by reaſon of vs. But in this againe they offende whom I haue ſpoken of, becauſe they can not meaſure their beeing diſpleaſed. For where the Lorde requireth clemencie, they leauing it, do geue them ſelues wholly to immeaſurable rigorouſneſſe. For, becauſe they thinke that there is no Church where there is not ſounde pureneſſe and vprightneſſe of life, for hatred of ſinnes they departe from the laweful Church, while they thinke that they ſwarue from a company of wicked men. They alledge that the Church of Chriſt is holy. But that they may alſo vnderſtande that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them heare this parable out of the mouth of Chriſt, wherin it is compared to a nette, in which fiſhes of all kindes are gathered together: & are not choſen out til they be laid abrode vpon ỹ ſhoare. Let them heare that it is like vnto a corne fielde, which being ſowen with good graine, is by the enemies fraude ſcattered with tares, of which it is not cleanſed vntill the croppe be brought into the barne floore. Finally let them heare that it is like vnto a floore, wherein the wheat is ſo gathered together, that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till being cleanſed with fanne and ſyue it be at length laid vp in the grainer. If the Lorde pronounce that the Church ſhall euen to the day of Iudgement be troubled with this euill, to be burdened with mingling of euill men: they do in vaine ſeeke for a Church ſprinkled with no ſpotte.

Mat 13. 27.

14 But they crie out that it is an intollerable thing, that the peſtilence of vices ſo raungeth abroade. What if the ſaying of the Apoſtle do here alſo anſwere them? Among the Corinthians not only a fewe had gone out of the way, but the infection hadde in a maner poſſeſſed the whole body: There was not onely one kinde of ſinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certaine horrible outragious doings: it was not only corruption of maners, but alſo of doctrine. What in this caſe ſaith the holy Apoſtle, that is to ſay, the inſtrument of the Holy Ghoſt, by whoes teſtimonie the Churche ſtandeth and falleth? Doth he require a diuiſion from them? Doth he baniſh them out of the kingdome of Chriſt? Doth he ſtrike them with the extremeſt thunderbolt of curſe? He not onely doth none of all theſe thinges: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Chriſt and fellowſhip of ſainctes. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, ſectes, and enuious partakinges do broile: where quarels and brawlinges be in vre, with a gredineſſe of hauing where that wicked dooing is openly allowed, which were abhominable among the very Gentiles: where Paules name is vniuſtly railed at, whom they ought to haue honoured as their father: where ſome ſcorne at the reſurrection of the dead, with ruine whereof the whole Goſpell falleth: where the gracious gifts of God ſerue to ambition, & not to charitie: where many things are vncomely and vnorderly doone: and if therefore there ſtill remaine a Church, becauſe the miniſterie of the word and of the Sacraments is there not refuſed, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that can not be charged with the tenth part of theſe fautes? They that with ſo great preciſeneſſe deale ſo cruelly againſt the Churches of this preſent time: what (I pray you) would they haue done to the Galathiãs, which were almoſt vtter forſakers of the Goſpell amõg whom yet the ſame Apoſtle founde Churches: 1.Cor.1. 11.& 3. 3.& 5.1. &. 6. 7. &. 9 1. and 15. 12. Gala. 1.

15 They obiect alſo, howe that Paule greuouſely rebuketh the Corinthians for ſuffering in their company a mãn that was a hainous ſinner, and then he ſetteth a generall ſentence wherin he pronounceth, that it is vnlawefull euen to eate breade with a manne of reprochefull life. Here they crie out: If it be not lawefull to eate common breade, howe may it be lawefull to eate with them the bread of the Lorde. I confeſſe in deede that it is a great diſhonour, if hogges and dogges haue place among the children of God: it is alſo a much more diſhonour if the holy body of Chriſt be geuen forth to them. And truely if they be well ordred Churches, they will not ſuffer wicked men in their boſome, and will not without choiſe admitte both worthy and vnworthy together to that holy banket. But foraſmuch as the Paſtors do not alway ſo diligently watche, yea and ſometime are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to be, or 1.Cor. 5.2.

are hindered so that they can not vse that seueritie that they would: it commeth to passe that euen they that are openly euill, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holy ones. This I graunte to be a faulte: neither will I diminishe it, sith Paule doth so sharpely rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church be slacke in her duetie, it shall not be therefore immediately in the power of euery priuate man, to take vppon him selfe the iudgement to seuer him. I do in dede not deny that it is the doing of a godly mā to withdrawe himselfe from all priuate company of euill men, to entangle himselfe in no willing familiaritie with them. But it is one thing to flee the companie of euill men, and an other thing for hatred of them to forsake the Communion of the Church But where as they thinke it sacrilege to be partakers of the Lordes bread with them, they are therin much more rigorous than Paule is. For where he exhorteth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine an other, or euery man ẏ whole Church, but ẏ they shoulde echone proue himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnworthy man, then truely Paul would bid vs to looke circumspectly whether there were any in the multitude, by whoes vncleanneſſe we might be defiled. Nowe when he requireth onely of euery man the proofe of themselues, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if any vnworthy do thrust themselues in among vs. And nothing els is ment by this which he sayeth afterwarde, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himself. And rightfully. For it ought not to stande in the choise of euery particular man, who be to be receiued, & who to be reiected. The knowledge thereof belongeth to the whole Churche, which knowledge can not be had without lawefull order, as hereafter shall be said more at large. Therefore it should be vnrightuous, that any priuate man should be defiled with the vnworthinesse of an other, whom he neither can nor ought to kepe backe from comming to it.

16 But although by this vndiscrete zeale of righteousnesse this tentation doth sometime also entre into good men: yet this we shall finde that to much precisenesse groweth rather of pride, disdainfulnesse, and false opinion of holynesse, than of true holinesse and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are bolder than other, and as it were standerd bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the most parte do it vpon no other cause, but in despising of all men to boast themselues to be better than other. Therefore Augustine fayeth well and wisely: When godly order & maner of Ecclesiasticall discipline ought principally to haue regarde vnto the vnitie of Spirit in the bonde of peace: which the Apoſtle commaunded to be kept by bearing one with an other: and which beinge not kept, the medicine of reuenge is proued to be not only ſuperfluous, but alſo pernicious, and therefore nowe to be no medicine at all: thoſe euill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affection of their owne contentions, do gredily labour either wholy to drawe or at leaſt to diuide the weake common people entangled with the boſting of their name, ſwelling with pride, madde with ſtubburneſſe, traiterous with ſclaunders, troubleſome with ſeditions, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to want the light of truth, do pretende a ſhadowe of rigorous ſeueritie: and thoſe things that are in the holy Scriptures cõmaunded to be done with a gentler kinde of healing, ſauing the ſinceritie of loue, and keping the vnitie of peace, to correct the faultes of brethren, they abuſe it to ſacrilege of ſchiſme, and to occaſion of cutting of. But to godly and quiet men he geueth this counſell, that they mercifully correct that which they can, and that which they can not, paciently beare, and grone and mourne with loue, vntill God either amende and correct them, or at the harueſt roote vp the tares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly trauaile to fortifie themſelues with theſe armures, leaſt while they ſeeme to themſelues ſtrong and courageous reuengers of righteouſnes, they departe from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of righteouſneſſe. For ſith it is Gods will to haue the communion of his Church to be kept in this outward felowſhip: he that for hatred of euil men doth break the token of that feloſhip, entreth into a way whereby is a ſlippery falling from the communiõ of ſaints. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truely holy and innocent before the eyes of the Lord, whom they ſee not. Let them think that euen of them that be diſeaſed there be many that do not pleaſe or flatter themſelues in their faultes, but being nowe and then awakened with earneſt feare of God do aſpire to a greater vprightneſſe. Let them thinke that iudgement ought not to be geuen of a man by one deede: foraſmuch as the holieſt do ſomtime fall away with a moſt greuous fall. Let them thinke that to gather a Church there lieth more weight both in the miniſterie of the word and in the partakinge of the holy myſteries, than that all ỳ force ſhould vaniſhe away by the fault of ſome wicked men. Laſt of all let them conſider, that in iudging the Church, the iudgement of God is of greater value than the iudgement of man.

17 Where alſo they pretẽd that the Church is not without cauſe called Holy, it is mete to wey with what holineſſe it excelleth: leaſt if we will admitte no Church but ſuch a one as is in all pointes perfect,

Ephe. 5. 15. we leaue no Church at all: It is true in deede which Paule ſaith, that Chriſt gaue himſelfe for the Church to ſanctifie it: that he clenſed it with the lauer of water with the word of life, to make her vnto himſelfe a glorious ſpouſe hauing no ſpotte or wrinkle &c. Yet this is alſo nothing leſſe true, that the Lorde daily worketh in ſmothing her wrinkles and wiping away her ſpottes. Whereupon followeth that her holineſſe is not yet fully finiſhed. Therefore the Church is ſo holy, that it daily profiteth and is not yet perfect. dayely procedeth, & is not yet come to the marke of holineſſe: as alſo in an other place

Ioel. 3. 17. Eſa. 35. 8. ſhalbe more largely declared, whereas therefore the Prophets prophecie that there ſhalbe a holy Hieruſalem, through which ſtraungers ſhall not paſſe: and a holy temple whereinto vncleane men ſhall not entre: let vs not ſo take it, as if there were no ſpotte in the membres of the Church: but for that with their whole endeuour they aſpire to holineſſe and ſound pureneſſe, by the goodneſſe of God cleanneſſe aſcribed to them, which they haue not yet fully obteined. And although oftentimes there be but rare tokens of ſuch ſanctification monge men: yet we muſt determine ẏ there hath bene no time ſince the creation of the world wherin the Lord hath not had his Church, and that there ſhall alſo be no time to the very ende of the world, wherin he ſhall not haue it. For albeit immediatly frō the beginning the whole kinde of men is corrupt and defiled by the ſinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted maſſe, God alway ſanctifieth ſome veſſels vnto honour, that there ſhould be no age without feling of his mercie. Which he hath teſtified by certaine promiſes: as theſe:

Pſa. 89. 4. Pſa. 132 13. Hier 31. 35. I haue ordeined a teſtament to my elect: I haue ſworne to Dauid my ſeruant, I will for euer continue thy ſeede: I will builde thy ſeate in generation and generation. Againe, the Lorde hath choſen Syon, he hath choſen it for a dwelling to himſelfe: This is my reſt for euer. &c. Againe, Theſe things ſaith the Lord which geueth the Sunne for the light of ẏ day, the mone & ſtarres for the light of the night. If theſe lawes ſhall faile before me, then the ſeede of Iſraell ſhall alſo faile.

18 Hereof Chriſt himſelfe, the Apoſtles, and in maner all the Prophets haue geuen vs example. Horrible are thoſe deſcriptions wherin Eſaie, Hieremie, Ioel, Abacuc, and the other do lament the ſickneſſes of the Church of Hieruſalem. In the common people, in the magiſtrat, in the Prieſts all things were ſo corrupt, that Eſaie douteth not to match Hieruſalem with Sodom and Gomorrha. Religion was partely deſpiſed, partely defiled: in their maners are commonly reported theftes, extortions, breaches of faith, murthers and like miſchieues. Yet therefore the Prophets did neither erect to themſelues newe Churches, nor build vp newe altars on which they might haue seuerall sacrifices: but of whatsoeuer maner men they were, yet because they considered, that God had left his word with them, and ordained Ceremonies wherby he was there worshipped, in the middest of the assembly of the wicked they helde vp pure handes vnto him. Truely if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they woulde rather haue died a hundred times than haue suffred themselues to be drawen thereunto. Therfore nothing withheld them frō departing, but desire to the keping of vnity. But if the Prophets thought it against conscience, to estrange themselues from the Church, for many & great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in maner of the whole people: then we take too much vpon vs, if we dare byandby depart frō the communiō of the Church, where not all mens maners do satisfie either our iudgemēt, yea or the Christian profession.

19 Now what maner worlde was there in the time of Christ and the Apostles? And yet that desperate vngodlinesse of the Pharisees, and the dissolute licentiousnesse of liuinge, which then eche where reigned, could not hinder, but that they vsed the same Ceremonies with the people, and assembled with the rest into one temple to the publike exercises of religion. Whereof came that, but because they knew that the felowship of euil men did not defile them, which with a pure conscience did communicate at the same Ceremonies. If any man be litle moued with the Prophets and Apostles, let him yet obey the authority of Christ. Therefore Cyprian well sayth, though there be seene tares or vncleane vessels in the Church, yet there is no cause why we should depart from the Church: we must only labour that we may be wheate: we must vse diligence and endeuour as much as we may ý we may be a golden or siluer vessel. But to breake the earthen vessels, is the only worke of the Lord, to whom also is giuen an iron rodde. And let no man chalenge to himselfe that which is properly belonging to the Sonne onely, to be able alone to fanne the floore, and clense the chaffe, and seuere all the tares by mans iudgement. This is a proude obstinacy, and a presumption ful of sacrilege, which a peruerse furour taketh to it selfe. &c. Therefore let both these thinges remaine certainely fixed. First that he hath no excuse, that of his owne will forsaketh the outwarde communion of the Church. Where the word of God is preached and the sacramentes ministred: then that the faultes of a fewe or of many are no hindrance, but that we may therein rightly professe our faith by the Ceremonies institute by God: because a godly conscience is not hurt by the vnworthines of any other either paſtor or priuate man, and the miſteries are to a holy & vpright man neuertheleſſe pure & holſome becauſe they are together handled of vncleane men.

20 Their preciſeneſſe and diſdainfulnes proceedeth yet further: becauſe they acknowledge no Church but ſuch a one as is pure from all ſpottes be they neuer ſo ſmall: yea they are angry with good teachers, for that in exhortinge the faithfull to go forward, they teache them all their life long to grone vnder the burden of vices, & to flee vnto pardō. For they prate ỹ by this meane men be led frō perfectiō. I graunt in deede, that in earneſt callinge vpon perfection we ought not ſlowely or coldly to trauaill, much leſſe to be idle: but to fill our mindes with confidence thereof while we be yet in our courſe, I ſay, it is a deueliſhe inuention. Therefore in the Creede the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is aptly ioyned next after the Church. For none do attaine it, but only they that are citizens and of the houſhold of the Church, as it is read in the Prophet. Therefore the buildinge of the heauenly Hieruſalem ought to go before, wherein afterward this mercifulneſſe of God may haue place, that whoſoeuer come vnto it, their iniquity may be taken away. I ſay that it ought firſt to be builded, not for that there can be any Church without the forgiuenes of ſinnes, but becauſe the Lord hath not promiſed his mercy but in the Communiō of Saintes. Therfore the firſt entry for vs into the Church and kingdome of God, is the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, without which we haue no couenant or conioyning with God. For thus he ſayth by the Prophet: In that day I will ſtrike you a couenant with the beaſt of the fielde, with the fowle of the aire, and with the vermine of the earth. I will breake the ſworde and warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to ſleepe without feare. I will eſpouſe you vnto me for euer. I will eſpouſe you (I ſay) in righteouſneſſe, in iudgement, in mercy, and in compaſſions. We ſee how by his mercy the Lord reconcileth vs to himſelfe. And ſo in an other place, when he foreſayth that the people ſhalbe gathered together againe, whom he had ſcattered abroade in his wrath, he ſayth, I will clenſe them from all wickedneſſe wherewith they haue ſinned againſt me. Wherefore by the ſigne of waſhinge we enter into the feloſhippe of the Church, whereby we may be taught, that there is no entry open for vs into ỹ houſeholde of God, vnleſſe our filthines be firſt wiped away with his goodneſſe.

21 But by the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes the Lord doth not onely receiue & adopt vs once into the Church, but by the ſame he alſo preſerueth and maintaineth vs ſtill in it. For to what purpoſe were it, to

haue such a pardon graunted vs, as should serue for no vse? But euery one of the godly is a witnesse to himselfe that the mercy of God should be vaine and mocking, if it should be graunted only but once: because there is none ỹ is not in his owne conscience priuie through out his whole life of many weaknesses, which nede ỹ mercy of God. And truely not in vaine God promiseth this grace peculiarly to thẽ of his owne housholde: and not in vaine he commaundeth the same message of reconciliation to be daily offred vnto them. Therefore as throughout all our life we cary about vs the remnantes of sinne, vnlesse we be sustained with the continuall grace of the Lorde in forgiuing our sinnes, we shall scarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternall saluation. Therefore they ought to thinke that there is pardon alway ready for their sinnes. Wherfore we ought to holde assuredly, that by the liberality of God by meane of Christes deseruing through the Sanctificatiõ of the Spirit, sinnes, haue bin and are daily pardoned to vs which be called and grafted into the body of the Church.

22 To deale this benefit vnto vs, the keies were giuẽ to the Church For when Christ gaue the Apostles commaundement, and deliuered thẽ power to forgiue sinnes, he meant not this onely, that they should loose thẽ from sinnes that were frõ vngodlines cõuerted to the faith of Christ: but rather that they should continually execute this office among the faithfull. Which thing Paul teacheth, whẽ he writeth that the embassage of reconciliation was left with the ministers of the Church, whereby they shoulde oftentimes in Christes name exhorte the people to reconcile themselues to God. Therefore in the Communion of Saintes, by the ministery of the Church it selfe, sinnes are continually forgiuen vs, when the Priestes or Bishops, to whom that office is committed, do with the promises of the Gospell confirme godly consciences in hope of pardon and forgiuenes: and that as well publikely as priuately, accordinge as necessity requireth. For there be very many, which for their weakenes do neede a singular atonement. And Paul reporteth that not only in common preaching, but also in houses he had testified the Faith in Christ, and seuerally admonished euery one of the doctrine of saluation. Therefore we haue here thre things to be noted: First, that with how great holines soeuer the children of God do excell, yet they be alway in this estate, so long as they dwell in a mortall body, that without forgiuenesse of sinnes they can not stande before God. Secondly, that this benefit is so proper to the Church, that we canne not otherwise enioy it, but if we abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is distributed vnto vs by the miniſters and Paſtors, either by preachinge of the Goſpell, or by miniſtring of the Sacraments: & that in this behalfe principally appeareth the power of the keies, which the Lord hath giuen to the felowſhip of the faithful. Wherfore let euery one of vs think this to be his duety, no where elſe to ſeeke forgiuenes of ſinnes, than where the Lord hath ſet it. Of publike reconciliation which belongeth to diſcipline we ſhall ſpeake in place fit for it.

23 But foraſmuch as thoſe phrentike Spirites that I haue ſpoken of, do go about to plucke away from the Church this only anchore of ſaluation, conſciences are the more ſtrongly to be confirmed againſt a ſo peſtilent opinion. The Nouatiãs in old time troubled the Church with this doctrine: but not much vnlike to the Nouatiãs our age alſo hath many of the Anabaptiſtes which fall to the ſame dotages. For they faine that the people of God are in Baptiſme regenerate into a pure and Angelike life, that is corrupted with no filthines of the fleſh. But if any man offend after Baptiſme, they leaue vnto him nothing but ỹ vnappeaſable iudgemẽt of God. Briefly they graunt no hope of pardon to a ſinner fallẽ after grace receiued: becauſe they acknowledge no other forgiuenes of ſinnes but that whereby we be firſt regenerate. But although there be no lie more clearely confuted by the Scripture: yet becauſe theſe men finde ſome whom they may deceiue (as alſo in old time Nouatus had many folowers) let vs ſhortly ſhew how mad they be to their owne and others deſtruction. Firſt, whereas by the commaundement of the Lod, the holy ones do daily repeate this praier: forgiue vs our dettes: truely they do confeſſe themſelues detters. Neither do they craue it in vaine becauſe the Lorde hath alway appointed no other thinge to be asked, than that which he himſelfe would giue. Yea whereas he hath teſtified that the whole praier ſhalbe heard of his father, yet he hath alſo ſealed this abſolution with a peculiar promiſe. What wil we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones all their life long a confeſſion of ſinnes, yea and that continuall, & promiſeth pardon. What boldnes is it, either to exempt them from ſinne, or if they haue ſtumbled, vtterly to exclude them from grace? Now whom doth he will vs to forgiue ſeuenty times ſeuen times? not to our brethren? To what end did he commaund it, but that we ſhoulde folow his clemency. He forgiueth therefore, not once or twiſe: but as often as being ſtriken downe with the acknowledging of ſinnes they figh vnto him.

24 But that (we may begin in a maner at the very ſwadling cloutes of the Church) the Patriarches were circumciſed, being allured into partakinge of the couenant hauinge vndoutedly by their fathers diligence gence bin taught righteousnesse and innocence, when they conspired to murther their brother: this was a mischieuous act, to be abhorred euen of the most desperate theeues. At the last being meekened with the monitions of Iudas, they solde him: this was also an intolerable haynousnesse. Simeon and Leui, with wicked reuenge, and such as was also condemned by their owne fathers iudgement, vsed cruelty against the Sichemites. Ruben with most vncleane lust defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when he would giue himselfe to fornication against the law of nature, went into his sonnes wife. And yet so farre are they from being wiped out of the chosen people, that they be rather raised vp to be heades of it. But what did Dauid? when he was a gouernour of iustice, with how great wickednesse did he by sheding of innocent bloude open the way to his blinde lust? He was already regenerate, and among the regenerate garnished with notable praises of the Lord: neuertheless he committed that haynous offence, which is horrible euen amoge the Gentiles: and yet he obtained pardon. And (that we may not tary vpon single examples) how many promises there are in the law and the Prophetes of Gods mercy towarde the Israelites, so oft it is proued that the Lord sheweth himselfe appeaseable to the offenses of his people. For what doth Moses promise to come to passe, when the people beinge fallen into Apostasie shall returne vnto the Lord? He shall bringe thee backe out of captiuity, and shall haue mercy on thee, & shall gather thee together out of the peoples to whom thou hast bin dispersed. If thou be scattered euen to the borders of the heauen, I will from thense agayne gather thee together.

25 But I will not beginne a recital that shoulde neuer be ended. For the Prophetes are full of such promises, which do yet offer mercy to the people couered with infinite wicked doinges. What offense is there more hainous thā rebellion? for it is called a diuorce betwene God and the Church. But this is ouercome by the goodnesse of God. What man is there (fayth he by Ieremy) that if his wife giue foorth her body in common to adulterers, can abide to returne into fauour with her? but with thy fornications all the wayes are polluted, O Iuda, the earth hath bin filled with thy filthy loues. But returne vnto me, and I will receiue thee. Returne thou turne away, I will not turne away my face from thee: becausse I am holy, and am not angry for euer And truely he can be no otherwise minded, which affirmeth ý he willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be conuerted & liue. Therfore when Salomon did dedicate the temple, he appointed it also to this vse, that the praiers made for obtaininge pardon of sinnes shoulde be heard from thense. If (sayd he) thy sonnes shal sinne (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou beinge angry shalt deliuer them to their enemies, & they shal repent in their hart, and beinge turned shall entreate thee in their captiuity, sayinge, we haue sinned, we haue done wickedly, and shall pray towarde the lande which thou hast giuen to their fathers, and towarde this holy temple: thou shalt heare their praiers in heauen, and shalt be made mercifull to thy people that hath sinned against thee, and to all their wickednesses wherewith they haue offended thee. And not vainely the Lorde ordained in the lawe daily Sacrifices for sinnes. For if the Lord had not foreseene that his people should be troubled with continuall diseases of sinnes, he woulde neuer haue appointed these remedies for them.

26 Was this benefite taken away from the faithfull, by the comming of Christ, wherein the fulnes of grace was shewed forth, so that they dare not now pray for pardon of sinnes? that if they offende the Lord they may not obtaine any mercy? What shall this be else, but to say that Christ came to the destruction of them that be his, & not to their saluation, if that mercifulnesse of God in pardoninge sinnes which in the old testament was continually ready for the holy ones, be now sayd to be vtterly taken away? But if we beleue the Scriptures which expresly crie out, that in Christ only the grace & kindenes of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifulnesse of mercy was poured out, that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not doubt that there floweth vnto vs a more bountifull mercifulnes of the heauenly father, than that it is cut of or shortned. And hereof there want not examples. Peter which had heard that he should be denied before the Angels of God that cõfessed not the name of Christ before men, denied him thrise in one night, and that not without execration: yet he was not put away from pardon. They that liued inordinatly amonge the Thessalonians are so chastised, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Euen Symon the Magician himselfe is not cast in desperation, but he is rather commaunded to hope well, when Peter counselleth him to flee to praiers.

27 Yea most haynous sinnes haue sometime possessed whole Churches, out of which Paule rather gently vnwrapped them, than pronounced them accursed. The falling away of the Galathians was no meane offense. The Corinthians were so much lesse excusable thã they, as they abounded in mo & those nothing lighter sinnes: yet neither of thẽ are excluded from the mercy of God. Yea euen they that had sinned aboue the rest in vncleanes, fornication & vnchastity, are namely called to repentance. For the couenant of the Lorde remaineth & ſhall remaine for euer inuiolable, which he ſolemnely made with Chriſt the true Salomon & his members, in theſe wordes: If his ſonnes ſhall forſake my law, & ſhall not walke in my iudgementes, if they ſhal defile my righteouſneſſes, & not kepe my cõmaundements, I will viſite their iniquities with a rod, & their ſinnes with ſtripes: But my mercy I will not take away from him. Finally by the very order of the Creede we be taught, that there remaineth in the Church of Chriſt continuall pardon of ſinnes: for that when the Church is as it were ſtabliſhed, yet forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is adioyned. Pſa. 89. 32.

28 Some that be ſomewhat wiſer, when they ſee the doctrine of Nouatus to be confuted with ſo great plainneſſe of Scripture, make not euery ſinne vnpardonable, but wilful tranſgreſſing of the law, into which a man wittingly & willingly falleth. Now they that ſay ſo, do vouchſaue to graunt pardõ to no ſinne, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lord in the law cõmaundeth one ſorte of Sacrifices to be offred for clenſing of the wilful ſinnes of the faithfull, and other to redeme their ignorances: how great lewdnes ſhall it be to graunt no clenſing to wilful ſinne? I ſay that there is nothing plainer, than that the onely Sacrifice of Chriſt auaileth to forgiue the wilful ſinnes of the holy ones: foraſmuch as the Lorde hath teſtified the ſame by carnall Sacrifices as by ſignes. Againe who can excuſe Dauid by ignorance, whome it is euident to haue bin ſo well inſtructed in the law? Did Dauid not know, how great was the fault of adultry & manſlaughter, which daily puniſhed the ſame in other? Did brotherſlaughter ſeme to ỹ Patriarches a lawful thing? Had the Corinthians ſo ill profited that they thought that wantonneſſe, vncleanneſſe, whordom, hatreds & contentions pleaſed God? Did Peter beinge ſo diligently admoniſhed not know howe great a matter it was to forſweare his maiſter? Therefore let vs not with our owne enviouſneſſe ſtop vp the way againſt the mercy of God that ſo gently vttereth it ſelfe. Leui. 4.

29 Truely I am not ignorant that the olde wryters expounded thoſe ſinnes that are daily forgiuen to the faithfull, to be the light offenſes that crepe in by weakeneſſe of the fleſh: & that they thought that the ſolemne repentance which was then required for haynous miſdeedes might no more be iterate than Baptiſme. Which ſayinge is not ſo to be taken, as though they would either throw them downe headlonge into deſperation that after their firſt repentance had fallen againe, or extenuate thoſe other ſinnes as though they were ſmal in the ſight of God. For they knew that the holy ones do oftentimes ſtagger by infidelity that ſuperfluous othes do ſometimes fall from them, that they nowe and then are chafed vnto anger, yea that they breake out euen into manifeſt raylinges, & beſide theſe be troubled with other euils which the Lord not ſclenderly abhorreth: but they ſo called them, to put a difference betwene them and publike crimes ỹ with great offenſe came to the knowledge of the Church. But wher as they did ſo hardly pardon them that had cõmitted any thing worthy of Eccleſiaſticall correction, they did not this therefore, becauſe they thought that ſuch ſhould hardly haue pardon with the Lord: but by this ſeuerity they meant to make other afraid that they ſhould not raſhly runne into wicked doings, by the deſeruing wherof they might be eſtranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truely the word of the Lord which herein ought to be the only rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of diſcipline is ſo farre to be extended, that he that ought chiefely to be prouided for be not ſwallowed vp with heauines: as we haue before declared more at large.

The ij. Chapter.

A compariſon of the falſe Church with the true Church.

OF howe great value the miniſtery of the worde and Sacramentes ought to be with vs, and how farre the reuerence of it ought to proceede, that it be vnto vs a perpetuall token whereby to diſcerne the Church, it hath bin already declared. That is to ſay, wherſoeuer that miniſtery abideth whole and vncorrupted, there the faultes or diſeaſes of maners are no impediment, but that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the very miniſtery it ſelfe is by ſmall errours not ſo corrupted, but that it may be eſteemed lawful. Morouer we haue ſhewed that the errours that ought ſo to be pardoned, are thoſe wherby the principal doctrine of religiõ is not hurt, wherby thoſe chiefe pointes of religion that ought to be agreeably holden among the faithful are not deſtroied, and in the Sacramentes, thoſe that do not aboliſh nor empaire the lawefull inſtitution of him that ordained them. But ſo ſoone as lying is broken into the chiefe tower of religion, ſo ſoone as the ſumme of neceſſary doctrine is peruerted, and the vſe of the Sacramentes falleth: truely the deſtruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an end, when his throte is thruſt through or his hart deadly wounded. And Ephe. 2. 20. this is clearely proued by the wordes of Paule, when he teacheth that the fundation of the Church is layd vppon the doctrine of the Apoſtles

ſtles and Prophets, Chriſt himſelfe beinge the head corner ſtone. If the fundation of the Church be the doctrine of the Prophets & Apoſtles, by which the faithful are commaunded to repoſe their ſaluation in onely Chriſt: then take away that doctrine, and how ſhall the building ſtande any longer? Therefore the Church muſt needes fall downe, where that ſumme of religiō falleth which is only able to vpholde it. Againe, if the true Church be the piller & ſtay of the trueth, it is certaine, that there is no Church, where lying & falſhoode haue vſurped the dominion. 1. Tim. 3 15.

2 Sith it is in ſuch caſe vnder the Papiſtry, we may vnderſtande how much of the Church is there remaininge. In ſtede of the miniſtery of the word, there reigneth a peruerſe gouernement and made of lies mingled together, which partly quencheth and partly choketh the pure light. Into the place of the Lordes Supper is entred a moſt filthy ſacrilege: the forme of worſhippinge God is deformed with a manifold and intolerable heape of ſuperſtitions: the doctrine, without which Chriſtianity can not ſtande, is altogether buried and driuen out: the publike aſſemblies are the ſchooles of idolatry and vngodlineſſe. Therefore there is no perill leaſt in departing from a damnable partaking of ſo many miſchieues, we be plucked frō the Church of Chriſt. The communion of the Church was not ordained to this end, that it ſhould be a bond whereby we ſhould be entangled with idolatry, vngodlineſſe, ignorance of God, and other kindes of euils: but rather whereby we ſhould be faſt holden in the feare of God & obedience of truth. They do in dede glorioufly ſet out their Church vnto vs, that there ſhould ſeeme to be no other Church in the worlde: and afterward, as though the victory were gotten, they decree that al be Schiſmatikes that dare withdrawe themſelues from the obedience of that Church that they paint out: and that all be heretikes that dare once mutter againſt the doctrine thereof. But by what proues do they confirme that they haue the true Church? They alleage out of the auncient Chronicles, what in olde time was in Italy, in Fraunce, in Spaine. They ſay that they fetch their beginning from thoſe holy mē that with ſound doctrine founded & raiſed vp Churches, & ſtabliſhed the ſame doctrine & edifying of ỹ Church with their bloud. And that ſo the Church hath bin among thē ſo conſecrate both with ſpiritual giftes, & with the bloud of martyrs, & preſerued with continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops, ỹ it might not fall away. They rehearſe how much Ireneus, Tertullian, Origen, Auguſtine, & other eſtemed this ſucceſſion. But how trifling theſe things be, & how they be but very mockeries, I wil make them very eaſily to vnderſtande that wil be content a litle to wey them with me. Truely I woulde alſo exhort themſelues earneſtly to take hede hereunto, if I did truſt that I might any thing preuaile with them by teachinge. But foraſmuch as they, leauinge all regard of trueth, do bend themſelues to this only purpoſe, by all the wayes that they can, to defend their owne cauſe, I will only ſpeake a few thinges whereby good men and thoſe that loue the trueth, may winde themſelues out of their ſutle cauillatiõs. Firſt I aske of them, why they do not alleage Aphrike, and Egypt, and all Aſia? Euen becauſe in all thoſe countreyes this holy Succeſſion of Biſhops hath ceaſſed, by meane whereof they boaſt that they haue preſerued Churches. They come therefore to this point to ſay, that they therefore haue a true Church, becauſe ſince it firſt beganne to be, it hath not bin deſtitute of Biſhops: for in perpetuall courſe they haue ſucceded one an other. But what if I caſt Greece in their way? Therfore I aske againe of them, why they ſay that the Church is loſt among the Grecians, among whom that ſucceſſion of Biſhops was neuer interrupted, which in their opinion is the only keeper and preſeruer of the Church. They make ỹ Grecians Schiſmatikes, but by what right? becauſe in departing frõ the Apoſtolike ſea, they haue loſt their priuilege: what? Do not they much more deſerue to looſe it that depart from Chriſt himſelfe? It foloweth therfore, that the pretence of ſucceſſion is but vaine, vnleſſe the poſterity do kepe faſt and abide in the truth of Chriſt, which they haue receiued of their fathers from hand to hand.

3 Therefore the Romaniſtes at this day do alleage nothinge elſe but that, which it appeareth that the Iewes in old time alleaged whẽ they were by the Prophetes of the Lord reproued of blindenes, vngodlines and idolatry For they gloriouſly boaſted of the temple, Ceremonies & prieſthoodes, by which things, by great reaſon as they thinke they meaſured the Church. So in ſteede of the Church, they ſhewe certaine outwarde viſours, that oftentimes are farre from the Church, and without which the Church may very well ſtand. Therefore we neede to confute them with no other argument, then that wherewith Hieremy fought againſt the fooliſh preſumptuouſnes of the Iewes: that is, that they ſhould not boaſt in lying wordes, ſaying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, it is the temple of the Lorde. Foraſmuch as the Lord doth no where acknowledge any thinge for his, but where his word is heard and reuerently obſerued. So when the glory of God did ſit betwene the Cherubins in the Sanctuary, & he had promiſed them that that ſhould be his ſtedfaſt ſeate: yet when the Prieſtes once corrupted the worſhippinge of him with peruerſe ſuperſtitions, he remoued elſe where, & left the place without any holineſſe. If the ſame temple which ſeemed to be holily appointed to the perpetuall dwelling of God, might be forſakē of God and become vnholy: there is no cauſe why theſe men ſhould faine to vs that God is ſo bound to perſons or places, and ſo faſt tied to outward obſeruations, that he muſt needes abide with them that haue onely the title and ſhewe of the Church. And this is it about which Paule contendeth in the Epiſtle to the Romaines, from the 9. chapter to the 12. For this did ſore trouble weake cōſciences, that the Iewes when they ſeemed to be the people of God, did not only refuſe the doctrine of the Goſpell, but alſo perſecute it. Therfore after that he hath ſet out the doctrine, he remoueth this dout, and denieth that thoſe Iewes beinge enemies of the trueth are the Church, howſoeuer they wanted nothinge that otherwiſe might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, becauſe they embraced not Chriſt. But ſomwhat more expreſſly in the Epiſtle to the Galathians: wherein cōparing Iſmael with Iſaac, he ſayth that many hold place in the Church, to whom the inheritance belongeth not, becauſe they are not begotten of the free mother. From whence alſo he deſcendeth to the compariſon of two Hieruſalems. Becauſe as the lawe was giuen in the mount Sina, but the Goſpell came out of Hieruſalem. So many being ſeruilely borne and brought vp do without doutinge boaſt themſelues to be the children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly deſpiſe the naturall children of God, whē theſelues be but baſtards. On the other ſide alſo, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heauen: Caſt out the bond woman and her ſonne, let vs, ſtanding vppon this inuiolable decree, boldely deſpiſe their vnſauery boaſtings. For if they be proud by reaſon of outward profeſſion, Iſmael was alſo circumciſed: if they contende by antiquity, he was the firſt begotten, and yet we ſee that he is put away. If the cauſe be demaunded, Paule aſſigneth it, for that none are accompted children, but they that are begotten of the pure and lawful ſeede of doctrine. According to this reaſon God denieth that he is bounde to wicked Prieſtes by this that he couenanted with their Father Leui that he ſhoulde be his Angell or interpreter: yea he turneth againſt themſelues their falſe boaſting, wherwith they were wont to riſe vp againſt the Prophetes, that the dignity of Prieſthoode was to be had in ſingular eſtimation. This he willingely admitteth, and with the ſame condition he debateth with them, becauſe he is ready to keepe his couenant, but when they do not mutually performe their part to him, they deſerue to be reiected. Loe what ſucceſſion auaileth, vnleſſe therewithal be alſo ioyned an inuitation & euenly continuinge courſe: euen to this effect that the ſucceſſors, ſo ſoone as they be proued to haue ſwarued from their originall, be depriued of all honor. Vnleſſe perhappes becauſe Caiphas ſucceeded many Godly Biſhoppes (yea there was euen from Aaron to him a continuall vnbroken courſe of ſucceſſion) therfore that ſame miſchieuous aſſembly was worthy the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euen in earthly dominions, that the tyranny of Caligula, Nero, Heliogabalus and ſuch other, ſhould be called a true ſtate of Common weale, for that they ſucceeded the Brutes, Scipions, & Camilles. But ſpecially in the gouernement of the Church there is nothinge more fonde, than leauinge the Doctrine to ſet the ſucceſſion in the Perſons onely, but neither did the holy doctours whom they falſely thruſt in vnto vs, meane any thing leſſe, then to pray that preciſely as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there where Biſhops are ſucceſſiuely placed one after an other. But where as it was then out of controuerſie, that from the very beginninge to that age nothinge was chaunged in Doctrine, they alleaged that which might ſuffice to make an ende of all newe errours, that is, that by thoſe was that doctrine oppugned, which had bin euen from the Apoſtles conſtantly and with one agreeinge conſent retained. There is therefore no cauſe, why they ſhould any longer go forward to deceiue by pretending a falſe colour vnder the name of the Church, which we do reuerently eſteme as becommeth vs: but when they come to the definitiō of it, not only water (as the common ſayinge is) cleaueth vnto them, but they ſticke faſt in their owne myre becauſe they put a ſtinkinge harlot in place of the holy ſpouſe of Chriſt. That this putringe in of a changeling ſhoulde not deceiue vs, beſide other admonitions, let vs remēber this alſo of Auguſtine. For ſpeaking of the Church, he ſayth. It is it that is ſomtime darkened, & couered with multitude of offences as with a cloude: ſometime calmeneſſe of time appeareth quiet & free: ſometime is hidden and troubled with waue of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, ỹ oftentimes the ſtrongeſt pillers either valiantly ſuffred baniſhmēt for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world.

4 In like maner the Romaniſtes do vexe vs, and make afraid the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Chriſt, Therefore although they pretende the temple, the prieſthoode and the other ſuch outward ſhewes, this vaine gliſtringe wherewith the eies of the ſimple be daſeled ought nothing to moue vs to graunt that there is a Church where the Word of God doth not

appeare. For this is the perpetual marke wherwith God hath marked them that be his. He that is of the trueth (saith he) heareth my voice. Againe, I am that good shepeherd, and I know my shepe, & am knowen of them. My shepe heare my voyce, and I know them and they follow me. And a litle before he had sayd, that the shepe follow their shepeherd, because they know his voice: but they follow not a stranger, but runne away from him, because they knowe not the voice of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfully mad in iudging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoutful signe, which wheresoeuer it is seene can not deceiue, but that it certainely sheweth the Church to be there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing that can giue a true signification of the Church. For Paule rehearseth that the church was builded, not vpon the iudgementes of men, not vpon priesthoodes, but vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophetes. But rather Hierusalem is to be seuerally knowen from Babilon, and the Church of Christ from the conspiracy of Satan, by that difference wherewith Christ hath made them different one from the other. He that is of God (saith he) heareth ỹ Words of God. Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a summe, forasmuch as the church is the kingdom of Christ, & he reigneth not but by his word, can it be now doutfull to any man, but that those be the wordes of lyinge, by which Christes kingdome is fained to be without his scepter, that is to say without his holy word?

Ioh. 18. 37. Ioh. 10. 14. Ephe. 2. 20. Iohn. 8. 47.

5 But now where as they accuse vs of Schisme & heresie, because we both preach a contrary doctrine to them, & obey not their lawes, and haue our assemblies to Praiers, to Baptisme, to the ministration of the Supper, and other holy doings, seuerally from them: it is in deede a very sore accusation, but such as nedeth not a long or laborsome defence. They are called heretikes & schismatikes, which making a diuision, do breake in sunder the communion of the Church. And this communion is holden together with true bondes, that is to say, the agrement of true Doctrine, & brotherly charity. Wherupon Augustin putteth this difference betwene heretikes & schismatikes, that heretikes in dede do with false doctrines corrupt the purenes of faith, but the Schismatikes sometime euen where there is like faith, do breake the bonde of felowship. But this is also to be noted, that this conioyning of charity so hangeth vpon the vnity of Faith, that Faith ought to be the beginninge thereof, the ende, and finally the only rule. Let vs therefore remember that so oft as the vnity of the Church is commẽded vnto vs, this is required, that while our mindes agree in Christ, our wils also may be ioyned together w̃ mutuall wel willing in Christ.

Li. quesi. euãg secund. Matth.

Eph.4.5 Therefore Paule, when he exhorteth vs to that well willinge, taketh Phili.2. for his fundation that there is one God, one Faith, & one Baptiſme.
2. & 5. Yea wherſoeuer he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, he byandby addeth in Chriſt, or according to Chriſt: meaning ẏ it is a factious cõpany of the wicked, & not agrement of the faithful which is without the word of the Lord.

6 Cyprian alſo following Paul deriueth the whole foũtaine of the De ſim- agreement of the Church, from the only biſhoprike of Chriſt. He af-pl. præ- terward addeth the Church is but one, which ſpredeth abroad more
la. largely into a multitude with encreaſe of fruteſulneſſe: like as there be many ſunnebeames, but one light: and many braunches of a tree, but one body grounded vpon a faſt roote: And when many ſtreames do flow from one fountaine, although the number ſeeme to be ſcattered abroade by largenes of ouerflowing plẽty, yet the vnity abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the ſunne from the body, the vnity can ſuffer no diuiſion. Breake a braunch from the tree, the broken braunch can not ſpring. Cut of the ſtreame from the ſpring hed, being cut of it drieth vp. So alſo the church being ouerſpred with the light of the Lord, is extended ouer the whole world: yet there is but one light that is ſpred euery where. Nothing could be ſayd more fitly to expreſſe that vndiuidable knitting together, which all the mẽbers of Chriſt haue one with an other. We ſee how he continually calleth vs backe to the very head. Wherupon he pronounceth that hereſies & ſchiſmes do ariſe hereof, that men do not returne to the originall of trueth, nor do ſeke the head, nor kepe the doctrine of the heauẽly maiſter. Now let thẽ go & cry that we be heretikes that haue departed frõ their Church: ſith there hath bin no cauſe of our ſtranginge from them but this one, that they can in no wiſe abide the pure profeſſing of the trueth: but I tell not how they haue driuen vs out with curſinges and cruel execrations. Which very ſelfe doing doth abundãtly enough acquite vs, vnles they wil alſo condemne the Apoſtles Ioh.16. for Schiſmatikes, with whom we haue all one cauſe. Chriſt (I ſay) did
2. foreſay to his Apoſtles, that the time ſhould come when they ſhould be caſt out of the Sinagoges for his names ſake. And thoſe Sinagoges of which he ſpeaketh, were then accompted lawefull Churches. Sith therfore it is euident that we be caſt out, & we be ready to ſhewẏ the ſame is done for the names ſake of Chriſt, truely the cauſe ought firſt to be enquired of, before that any thinge be determined vpon vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they wil, I am cõtent to diſcharge them of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behoued that we ſhould depart from them, that we might come to Chriſt.

7 But it ſhall appeare yet more certainely, in what eſtimation we ought to haue all the Churches whom the tyranny of that Romiſhe idoll hath poſſeſſed, if it be compared with the old Church of the Iſraelites, as it is deſcribed in the Prophetes. There was then a true Church among the Iewes and Iſraelites, when they continued in the lawes of the couenant, for they obtained thoſe things by the benefit of God, wherupon the Church cõſiſteth. They had the trueth of doctrine in the law: the miniſtery thereof was among the Prieſtes & the Prophets: with the ſigne of circumciſion they entred into religion: by other Sacraments they were exerciſed to the confirmation of Faith. It is no dout that thoſe titles wherwith the Lorde hath honored his Church, fitly pertained to their felowſhip. After that, forſakinge the law of the Lord, they went out of kinde to idolatry and ſuperſtition, they partly loſt that prerogatiue. For who dare take away the name of the Church from them, with whom God hath left the preaching of his word and obſeruation of his myſteries? Againe, who dare cal that the Church without any exceptiõ, where ẏ word of ẏ Lord is openly & freely troden vnder foote? where the miniſtery therof, the chief ſinew, yea the very ſoule of the Church is deſtroyed?

8 What then? will ſome man ſay: was there therfore no parcel of a Church remaining among the Iewes after that they fel away to idolatry? The anſwere is eaſie. Firſt I ſay ẏ in the very falling away there were certaine degrees. For we wil not ſay that there was all one falle of Iuda, and Iſraell, at ſuch time as they both firſt ſwarued from the pure worſhipping of God. When Iarobeam firſt made calues, againſt the open prohibition of God, & did dedicate an vnlawfull place for worſhipping, he did vtterly corrupt religion. The Iewes did firſt defile themſelues with wicked & ſuperſtitious maners before ẏ they wrõgfully changed the order in the outward forme of religiõ. For althogh vnder Rechabeam they had already gotten them many peruerſe Ceremonies: yet becauſe there taried at Hieruſalem both the Doctrine of the Law, & the Prieſthoode, and the Ceremonious vſages in ſuch ſort as God had ordained thẽ, the godly had there a tolerable ſtate of Church. Amonge the Iſraelites vnto the reigne of Achab, there was no amendement of things, and from thenſe forth they fell from worſe to worſe. They that ſucceded afterward, to the very deſtruction of the kingdom, partly were like vnto him, & partly (when they minded to be ſomwhat better than he) they folowed the example of Iarobeam: but they all euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were nowe and then diuerſe changes, while ſome kinges peruerted the worſhippinge of God with falſe and forged ſuperſtitions, ſome other reſtored religion that was decaied: vntil the very prieſtes themſelues defiled the temple of God with prophane & abhominable vſages.

9 Now let the Papiſtes if they can howe much ſoeuer they extenuate their owne faultes, deny that among them the ſtate of religion is as corrupt and defiled as it was in the kingdom of Iſraell vnder Iarobeam. But they haue a groſſer idolatrie: & in doctrine they are not one droppe purer: vnleſſe paraduenture euen in it alſo they be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane iudgement, ſhalbe witneſſes with me, and the thinge it ſelfe alſo declareth, how herein I tell nothinge more then trueth. Nowe when they will driue vs to the communion of the Church, they require two thinges of vs: firſt, that we ſhoulde communicate with all their praiers, ſacramentes, and Ceremonies: then that whatſoeuer honor, power and iuriſdiction Chriſt giueth to his Church, we ſhoulde giue the ſame to their Church. As to the firſt point, I graunt that all the Prophets that were at Hieruſalem, when thinges were there very much corrupted, did neither ſeuerally ſacrifice, nor had aſſemblies to pray ſeueral from other men. For they had a commaundement of God, whereby they Exo.29. were commaunded to come together into Salomons temple: they
9. knew that the Leuiticall prieſtes, howeſoeuer they were vnworthy of that honor, yet becauſe they were ordained by the Lord miniſters of the holy Ceremonies, & were not as then depoſed, did yet ſtill rightfully poſſeſſe that place. But (which is the chiefe point of this queſtion) they were compelled to no ſuperſtitious worſhippinge, yea they tooke in hande to do nothing but that which was ordained by God. But among theſe men, I meane the Papiſtes, what like thing is there? For we can ſcarcely haue any meetinge together with them, wherein we ſhall not defile our ſelues with open idolatrie. Truely the principall bonde of their communion is in the maſſe, which we abhorre as the greateſt ſacrilege. And whether we do this rightfully or wrongfully, ſhalbe ſeene in an other place. At this preſent it is enough to ſhew that in this behalfe we are in other caſe thã the Prophets were, which although they were preſent at the Ceremonies of the wicked, were not cõpelled to behold or vſe any Ceremonies but ſuch as were inſtitute by God. And, if they will needes haue an example altogether like, lette vs take it out of the kingdom of Iſraell. After the ordinance of Ierobeam Circumciſion remayned, the ſacrifices were offered, the lawe was accompted holy, the ſame God was called vp-
1.King pon whom they had receiued of their Fathers: but for the forged and 12.31. forbidden formes of worſhippinge, God diſallowed and condemned

all that was there done. Shewe me one Prophet, or any one godly man that ones worshipped or sacrificed in Bethell. For they knewe they coulde not do it, but that they should defile themselues with some sacrilege. We haue then thus much, that the communion of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it should degenerate to prophane and filthy vsages, they should forth with of necessitie followe it.

10 But about the other pointe we contende yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whoes iudgement we ought to reuerence, whoes authoritie to regarde, whoes monitions to obey, with whoes chastisements to be moued, whoes communion in all things we ought religiously to obserue: then we can not graunt them a Church, but that we must of necessity be bounde to subiectiō and obedience vnto it. Yet we will willingly graunt them that which the Prophets graunted to the Iewes & Israelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or in better state. But we see howe eche where they crie out, that their assemblies are vnholy, to which it is no more lawefull to consent than it is to denie God. And truely if those were Churches, it followeth therfore that in Israell Helias, Micheas and such other: in Iurie, Esaie, Ieremie, Osee and other of that sorte, whom the Prophets, priests and people of that time hated and detested worse than any vncircumcised men, were straungers from the Church of God. If those were Churches, then the Church was not the piller of truth, but the stay of lieng: not the tabernacle of the liuing God, but the receptacle of idoles. Therefore it was needefull for them to depart from the consent of those assemblies, which was nothing els but a wicked conspiracie against God. In like maner if any man acknowledge the assemblies at these dayes being defiled with idolatrie, superstition and wicked doctrine, to be such in whoes full communion a Christian man ought to continue euen to the cōsente of doctrine, he shal greatly erre. For if they be Churches then they haue the power of the keyes. But the keyes are vnseparably knitte with the word, which is from thense quite driuen away. Again, if they be Churches, then the promise of Christ is of force among them, whatsoeuer ye binde. &c. But they contrariwise do banishe from their communion all such as do professe themselues not fainedly the seruātes of Christ. Therfore either the promise of Christ is vaine, or at least in this respect they are not Churches. Finally in stede of the ministerie of the word they haue scholes of vngodlinesse, and a sinke of all kindes of errors. Therefore either in this respecte they are not Churches, or there shall remaine no token whereby the lawefull aſſemblies of the faithfull may be ſeuerally knowen from the meetinges of Turkes.

11 But as in the olde time there yet remained among the Iewes certaine peculiar prerogatiues of the Church, ſo at this day alſo we take not from the Papiſtes ſuch ſteppes as it pleaſed the Lorde to haue remaining among them after the diſſipatiō of the Church. The Lorde hadde ones made his couenant with the Iewes. That ſame rather beinge vpholden by the ſtedfaſtneſſe of it ſelfe didde continue with ſtriuing againſt their vngodlineſſe, than was preſerued by them. Therefore (ſuch was the aſſuredneſſe and conſtancie of Godder goodneſſe) there remained the couenant of the Lord, neither could his faithfulneſſe be blotted out by their vnfaithfulneſſe: neither could Circumciſion be ſo prophaned with their vncleane handes, but that it ſtill was the ſigne and ſacrament of that couenante. Whereuppon the childern that were borne of them, the Lorde called his owne, which vnleſſe it were by ſpecial bleſſing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his couenaunt in Fraunce, Italy, Germany, Spaine, Englande: ſins thoſe prouinces haue bene oppreſſed with the tyranny of Antichriſt, yet that his couenaunt might remaine inuiolable, firſt he there preſerued Baptiſme, the teſtimonie of his couenant, which being cōſecrate by his owne mouth reteineth her owne force notwithſtanding the vngodlineſſe of man: then, with his prouidence he hath wrought that there ſhould remaine other remnantes, leaſt the Church ſhould be vtterly deſtroyed. And as oftentimes bildinges are ſo pulled downe, that the foundations and ruines remaine: ſo he hath not ſuffred his Church either to be ouerthrowen by Antichriſt from the very foundation, or to be laid euen with the grounde (howſoeuer to puniſh the vnthankfulneſſe of men that had deſpiſed his word, he ſuffreth horrible ſhaking and diſſipation to chaunce) but euen after the very waſting he willed that the bilding half pulled downe ſhould yet remaine.

12 Wheras therefore we will not ſimply graunt to the Papiſtes the title of the Church, we do not therfore deny that there be Churches among them: but onely we contende of the true and lawefull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the ſacraments which are the ſignes of profeſſion, but alſo ſpecially of doctrine. Daniel and Paule foretolde that Antichriſt ſhould ſitte in the temple of God. With vs we accompt the biſhop of Rome the captaine and ſtandard bearer of that wicked and abhominable kingdome. Whereas his ſeate is placed in the temple of God, thereby is meant that his kingdome ſhalbe ſuch as can not aboliſh the name of Christ nor of his Church. Hereby therfore appeareth, that we do not deny but that euen vnder his tyrannie remain Churches: but such as he hath prophaned with vngodlinesse full of sacrilege, such as he hath afflicted with outragious dominion, such as he hath corrupted and in maner killed with euill & damnable doctrines, as with poisoned drinkes: such wherein Christ lieth halfe buried, the Gospell ouerwhelmed, godlinesse banished, the worshipping of God in a maner abolished: such finally wherin all things are so troubled, that therin rather appereth the face of Babylon then of the holy citie of God. In a summe, I say that they be Churches, in respect that the Lorde there marueilously preserueth the remnauntes of his people howesoeuer they were dispersed and scattered abroade, in respecte that there remaine some tokēs of the Church, specially these tokens, the effectualnesse whereof neither the craft of the Deuil, nor the maliciousnesse of man can destroy. But on the other side becausse these markes are blotted out, which in this discourse we ought principally to haue respect vnto, i say that euery one of their assemblies and the whole body wanteth the lawefull forme of a Church.

Of the teachers and ministers of the Church, and of their election and office.

NOwe it is mete that we speake of the order, by which it was the Lordes will to haue his Church gouerned. For although in his Church he onely must rule and reigne, yea and beare preeminence or excelle in it, and this gouernment to be vsed or executed by his onely word: yet becausse he dwelleth not among vs in visible presence, so that he can presently with his owne mouth declare his will vnto vs, we haue sayed that in this he vseth the ministerie of men, and as it were the trauaille of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth he might do his owne worke, like as a workeman to do his worke vseth his instrument. I am compelled to repete againe those things that I haue already declared. He might in deede do it either by himselfe without any other helpe or instrument, or also by meane of Angells: but there are many causes why he had rather do it by men. For by this meane first he declareth his good will toward vs, when he taketh out of men them that shall do his message in the world, that shalbe the interpreters of his secret will, finally that shall represent his owne person. And so by experience he proueth that it is not vaine that commonly he calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men, as out of his ſanctuarie, he geueth aunſweres to men. Secondly, this is the beſt and moſt profitable exerciſe to humilitie, when he accuſtometh vs to obey his worde, howeſoeuer it be preached by men like vnto vs, yea ſometime our inferiors in dignity. If he himſelfe ſpake from heauen, it were no maruell if his holy Oracles were without delay reuerently receiued with the eares and mindes of all men. For who would not drede his power being in preſence? who would not be throwen downe at the firſt ſight of ſo great maieſty? who woulde not be confounded with that infinite brightneſſe? But when ſome ſilly man riſen out of the duſt ſpeaketh in the name of God, here with very good teſtimony we declare our godlineſſe and reuerent obedience toward God himſelfe, if to his miniſter we yelde our ſelues willing to learne, which yet in nothing excelleth vs. Therefore for this cauſe alſo he hath hidden the treaſure of his heauenly wiſedome in brickle & earthen veſſels, that he might haue the certainer profe howe much he is eſteemed of vs. Moreouer there was nothing fitter for the cheriſhing of mutuall charitie, than that men ſhould be bound together one to an other with this bonde, when one is made a paſtor to teach the reſt, and they that are commaunded to be ſcholars receiue all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euery man were able enough to ſerue himſelfe, and needed not the helpe of an other: ſuch is the pride of mans nature, that euery one would deſpiſe other, and ſhould againe be deſpiſed of them. Therfore the Lord hath bounde his Church with that knotte, which he forſawe to be the ſtrongeſt knotte to hould vnity together, when he hath lefte with men the doctrine of ſaluation, and of eternall life, that by their handes he might communicate it to the reſt. Hereunto Paule had reſpect when he wrote to the Epheſians, One body one ſpirit, as alſo ye be called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one Baptiſme. One God, and the father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is geuen according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Wherefore he ſaith: When he was gone vp on hy, he ledde captiuitie captiue, he gaue giftes to men. He that wente downe is the ſelfe ſame he, that wente vp, that he might fulfill all things. And the ſame hath geuen ſome to be Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Euangeliſtes, and other ſome Paſtors and teachers, vnto the reſtoring of the holy ones, to the worke of miniſtration, to the edifying of the body of Chriſt, vntil we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the Sonne of God, into a perfect man, into the meaſure of full growen age: that we be no more children that may be caried about with euery euery winde of doctrine: but following truth in charitie, let vs in all things growe into him that is the hed, euen Christ, in whome the whole body conioined and compacted together by all the ioint of submiſtratiō, according to the working in meaſure of euery parte, maketh encreaſe of the body, vnto the edifying of it ſelfe by charity.

2 By theſe words he ſheweth, that that miniſterie of men, which God vſeth in gouerning his Church is the chiefe ſinew, whereby the faithfull cleaue together in one body: and alſo he ſheweth that the Church can not otherwiſe be preſerued ſafe, but if it be vpholdē by theſe ſtaies, in which it pleaſed the Lord to repoſe the ſaluation of it. Chriſt (ſayeth he) is gone vp on hy, that he might fulfill all things. Eph.4. 10. This is the maner of fulfilling, that by his miniſters, to whom he hath committed that office, and hath geuen the grace to execute that worke, he diſpoſeth and diſtributeth his giftes to the Church, yea and after a certaine maner geueth himſelfe preſent, with extending the power of his ſpirit in this inſtitution, that it ſhould not be vain or idle. So is the reſtoringe of the holy ones performed: ſo is the body of Chriſt edified: ſo do we by all things growe into him that is the hed, and do grow together among our ſelues: ſo are we all brought into the vnitie of Chriſt, if prophecie flouriſh among vs, if we receiue the Apoſtles, if we refuſe not the doctrine miniſtred vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the diſſipatiō, or rather the ruine & deſtruction of the Church, whoſoeuer he be that either endeuoreth to aboliſh this Order of whom we ſpeake, and this kinde of gouernement, or miniſheth the eſtimatiō of it as a thing not ſo neceſſary. For neither the light and heate of the ſunne, nor meate & drinke are ſo neceſſary to nouriſh and ſuſteine this preſent life, as the office of Apoſtles and paſtors is neceſſarie to preſerue the Church in earth. Eph.4. 13.

3 Therefore I haue aboue admoniſhed, that God hath oftentimes with ſuch titles as he could, commended the dignitie thereof vnto vs, that we ſhould haue it in moſt hy honour and price, as the moſt excellent thing of all. He teſtifieth that he geueth to men a ſingular benefite, in raiſing them vp teachers, where he commaundeth the Prophet to crie out that faire are the feete, & bleſſed is the comming of them that bring tidings of peace: and when he calleth the Apoſtles the light of the world, and ſalte of the earth. Neither could this office be more honourably aduanced, than it was when he ſaid: He that heareth you, heareth me. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. But there is no place more plaine, than in Paule in his ſeconde Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he as it were of purpoſe entreateth of this matter. He affirmeth therefore, that there is nothing in the Eſa 52. 7. Mat. 5. 13. and 14. Luk 10. 16. 2 Cor. 4.6. 3 Cor. 3.9.

Church more excellēt or glorious than the miniſtery of the Goſpel, 2.Cor.3 9. foraſmuch as it is the adminiſtration of the Spirit, and of righteouſneſſe, and of eternall life. Theſe and like ſayings ſerue to this purpoſe, that that order of gouerning & preſeruing the Church by miniſters, which the Lord hath ſtabliſhed for euer, ſhould not growe out of eſtimation among vs, and ſo at length by very contempt grow out of vſe. And howe great is the neceſſity thereof, he hath declared not onely by wordes, but alſo by examples. When his will was to
Act. 10. 3. ſhine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his trueth, he ſente
Act. 9. 6 an Angell from heauen to ſende Peter vnto him. When his will was to call Paule to the knowledge of himſelfe, and to engraffe him into the Church, he ſpake not to him with his owne voice, but ſente him to a man, of whom he ſhould receiue both the doctrine of ſaluation, and the ſanctification of Baptiſme. If it be not done without cauſe, that an Angell, which is the interpreter of God, do himſelfe abſtaine from declaring the will of God, but commaundeth that a man be ſente for, to declare it: and not without cauſe that Chriſt the onely
2.Cor. 12.2. ſcholemaiſter of the faithfull committeth Paule to the ſchooling of a man, yea euen that ſame Paule whom he had determined to take vp into the thirde heauen, and to vouchſaue to graunt him miraculous reuelation of things vnſpeakable: who is there nowe that dare deſpiſe that miniſtery, or paſſe it ouer as a thing ſuperfluous, the vſe whereof it hath pleaſed God to make approued by ſuch examples?

4 They that haue rule of the gouernment of the Church ac-
Eph. 4. 11. cording to the inſtitution of Chriſt, are named of Paul firſt Apoſtles, then Prophets, thirdly Euangeliſtes, fourthly Paſtors, laſt of all teachers. Of which, the twoo laſt alone haue ordinarie office in the Church: the other three the Lorde raiſed vp at the beginning of his kingdome, and ſometime yet alſo raiſeth vp, as the neceſſitie of
Mar. 16. 15. times requireth. What is the Apoſtles office, appeareth by that commaundement: go, preache the Goſpell to euery creature. There are not certaine boundes appointed vnto them: but the whole world is aſſigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Chriſt: that in ſpreading the Goſpell among all nations whereſoeuer they ſhall be
Rom. 15 19. and 20. able, they may eche where raiſe vp his kingdome. Therefore Paule, when he wente about to proue his Apoſtleſhip, rehearſeth that he hath gotten to Chriſt not ſome one citie, but hath farre and wide ſpred abrode the Goſpell: and that he hath not layed his hāndes to an other mans fundatiō, but plāted Churches where the name of the Ephe. 4 11. Lorde had neuer bene heard of. Therefore the Apoſtles were ſente to bring backe the world from falling away, vnto true obedience of

God,

God, and eche where to ſtabliſh his kingdome by preaching of the Goſpell: or (if you like that better) as the firſt bilders of the Church, to lay the fundations thereof in all the world. Prophetes he calleth, not all expoſitors of Gods will whatſoeuer they be, but thoſe that by ſingular reuelation excelled, ſuch as at this time either be none, or are leſſe notable. By Euangeliſtes I vnderſtande thoſe, which when in dignity they were leſſe than the Apoſtles, yet in office were nexte vnto them, yea and occupied their roomes. Such were Luke, Timothee, Titus and other like: and paraduenture alſo the ſeuentie Diſciples, whom Chriſt appointed in the ſeconde place after the Apoſtles. According to this expoſition (which ſeemeth to me agreable both with the wordes and meaning of Paule) thoſe three offices were not ordeined in the Churche to this ende that they ſhould be perpetuall, but onely to ſerue for that time wherein Churches were to be erected, where were none before, or at leaſt to be remoued from Moſes to Chriſt. Albeit I denie not, but that afterward alſo the Lorde hath ſometime raiſed vp Apoſtles, or at leaſt in their places Euangeliſtes, as it hath bene done in our time. For it was needefull to haue ſuch, to bring backe the Church from the falling away of Antichriſt. Yet the office it ſelfe I do neuertheleſſe call extraordinarie, becauſe it hath no place in the Churches already well ſet in order. Next after theſe are Paſtors and Teachers, whome the Church may neuer lacke: betwene whom I thinke that there is this difference, that the Teachers are not appointed to beare rule of diſcipline, nor for the miniſtration of Sacramentes, nor admoniſhments or exhortations, but onely to expounde the Scripture, that pure and ſounde doctrine may be kept among the faithfull. But the office of Paſtor conteineth all theſe things within it. Luk. 10. 1. Luk. 11.

5 Nowe we haue, which were thoſe miniſteries in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were thoſe that were ordeined to endure perpetually. If we ioine the Euangeliſtes with the Apoſtles, we ſhal haue remaining two couples after a certaine maner aunſweringe the one to the other. For as our Teachers are like to the olde Prophets, in ſuch ſort are our Paſtors like to the Apoſtles. The office of Prophets was more excellent, by reaſon of the ſingular giſte that they had of reuelation: but the office of Teachers hath in a maner like order, and altogether the ſame ende. So thoſe. xij. whom the Lorde did chooſe, that they ſhould publiſh abroade to the world the newe preaching of the Goſpell, in degre and dignitie went before the reſt. For although by the meaning and propertie of the word, all the miniſters of the Church may be rightly called Luc. 6. 13. Gala. 1. 1.

Apoſtles, becauſe they are ſente of the Lorde, & are his meſſengers: yet becauſe it was much behouefull, that there ſhould be a certaine knowledge had of the ſending of them that ſhould bring a thing newe and vnheard of, it was neceſſarie that thoſe xij (to whoes number Paule was afterwarde added) ſhould be garniſhed with ſome peculiar title aboue the reſt. Paule himſelfe in deede in one place
Ro 16 7. geueth this name to Andronicus & Iunias, whom he ſayeth to haue bene notable among the Apoſtles: but when he meaneth to ſpeake properly, he referreth it to none other but to that principall degree.
Mat.10. 1. And this is the common vſe of the Scripture. Yet the Paſtors (ſauing that eche of them do gouerne ſeuerall Churches appointed to them) haue all one charge with the Apoſtles. Nowe what maner of thing that is, let vs yet heare it more plainly.

Mat.28 9. 6 The Lorde, when he ſente the Apoſtles, gaue them cõmaundement (as we ſaid euen nowe) to preach the Goſpell, and to baptiſe them that beleue vnto forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. He had before commaunded, that they ſhould diſtribute the holy ſignes of his body and bloud, as he had done. Loe here is a holy, inuiolable and perpetuall lawe layed vpon them that ſuccede in the Apoſtles place, whereby they receiue commandement to preache the Goſpell, and miniſter the Sacramẽts. Whereupon we gather, that they which neglect both theſe things, do falſly ſay that they beare the perſon of the Apoſtles.
1.Cor.4 1. But what of the Paſtors? Paule ſpeaketh not of himſelfe onely, but of them all, when he ſayeth: let a man ſo eſteeme vs as the miniſters
Tit.1.9. of Chriſt, and diſtributers of the miſteries of God. Againe in an other place, a Biſhop muſt be a faſt holder of that faithful word which is according to doctrine: that he may be able to exhorte by ſounde doctrine, and to conuince the gainſayers. Out of thoſe and like places, which are echwhere to be founde, we may gather, that alſo in the office of the Apoſtles theſe be the two principall partes, to preach the Goſpell, and to miniſter the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it conſiſteth not only in publike Sermons, but belongeth alſo Act.20 20. to priuate admonitions. So Paul calleth the Epheſians to witneſſe that he hath not fled from doing of any of thoſe things that were for their profit, but that he preached and taught them both openly and in euery houſe, teſtifying both to the Iewes and Grecians, repentãce and faith in Chriſt. Againe a little after: that he hath not ceaſſed with Act.20. 31. teares to admoniſhe euery one of them. Neither yet belongeth it to my purpoſe at this preſent to expreſſe all the qualities of a good Paſtor, but onely to point out what they profeſſe that call themſelues Paſtors: that is, that they are ſo made rulers of the Church, not that they

they ſhould haue an idle dignity, but that they ſhould with the doctrine of Chriſt inſtruct the people to true godlineſſe, miniſter the holy myſteries, and preſerue and exerciſe vpright diſcipline. For whoſoeuer be ſet to be watchemen in the Church, the Lorde declareth vnto them, that if any by their negligence periſh through ignorance, he will require the bloud at their handes. That alſo pertaineth to them all, which Paul ſayeth of himſelfe: wo to me vnleſſe I preach the Goſpell, foraſmuch as the diſtributing thereof is committed to me. Finally what the Apoſtles performed to the whole world, the ſame ought euery Paſtor to performe to his flocke to which he is appointed. Eze. 33. 17. 1. Cor. 9 16.

7 Albeit when we aſſigne to euery one their ſeuerall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bounde to one Church may helpe other Churches, if any troubleſome thing do happen that requireth his preſence, or if he be aſked counſell of any darke matter. But foraſmuch as for the keping of the peace of the Church, this policy is neceſſary, that there be ſette forth to euery man what he ſhould do, leaſt all ſhoulde be confuſely diſordered, runne about without calling, or raſhly runne altogether into one place, and leaſt ſuch as are more carefull for their owne commoditie than for the edification of the Church, ſhould at their owne will leaue their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to be kept ſo nere as may be, that euery man contented with his owne boũdes ſhould not breake into an other mans charge. And this is no inuention of man, but the ordinance of God himſelfe. For we reade that Paule and Barnabas created Prieſts in all the ſeuerall Churches of Liſtra, Antioche, Iconium: and Paule himſelfe commaundeth Titus that he ſhould appointe Prieſts in euery towne. So in one place he ſpeaketh of the Biſhoppes of Philippes, and in an other place of Archippus Biſhop of the Coloſſians. And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Prieſts of the Church of Epheſus. Whoſoeuer therefore ſhall take vpon him the gouernment and charge of one Church, let him knowe that he is bound to this lawe of Gods calling: not that as bounde to the ſoile (as the lawyers terme it) that is, made bonde and faſtened vnto it, he may not ones moue his foote from thenſe, if the common profit do ſo require, ſo that it be done well and orderly: but he that is called into one place ought not himſelf to thinke of remouing, nor ſeke to be deliuered as he ſhal thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then, if it be expedient that any be remoued to an other place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne priuate aduiſe, but to tary for publike authoritie. Act. 14. 22. Tit. 1. 5. Phil. 1. 1 Colo. 4. 17. Act 20. 18.

8 But whereas I haue without difference called them Biſhops, and Prieſts, and Paſtors, and Miniſters, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vſage of the Scripture, which indifferētly vſeth theſe wordes. For whoſoeuer do execute the miniſtery of the word, to them he geueth the title of Biſhops. So in Paule, where Titus is commaunded to appointe Prieſts in euery towne, it is immediatly added. For a Biſhop muſt be vnreprouable. &c. So in an other place he ſaluteth many Biſhops in one Church. And in the actes it is re-
Tit.1.5. Phi.1.1. Act.20.7. hearſed, that he called together the Prieſts of Epheſus, whom he himſelfe in his owne Sermon calleth Biſhops. Here nowe it is to be noted, that hetherto we haue recited none but thoſe offices that Rom.12.7. ſtande in the miniſterie of the word: neither doth Paule make men-
1.Cor.12.28. tion of any other in that fourth chapter which we haue alleged. But in the Epiſtle to the Romaines, and in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he reckeneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernement, caring for the poore. Of the which I omitted thoſe that endured but for a time, becauſe it is to no profitable purpoſe to tary vpon them. But there are two that do perpetually abide, that is to ſay, gouernement and care of the poore. Gouernours I thinke were the Elders choſen out of the people, that ſhould together with the Biſhops, haue rule of the iudgement of maners, and the vſing of diſcipline. For a man cannot otherwiſe expounde that which he ſayeth: let him that ruleth do it with carefulneſſe. Therefore at Rom.12.8. the beginninge euery Church had their Senate, gathered of godly, graue and holy men: which had that ſame iuriſdiction in correcting of vices, whereof we ſhall ſpeake hereafter. And that this was the order of more than one age, experience it ſelfe declareth. Therefore this office of gouernement is alſo neceſſarie for all ages.

9 The care of the poore was cōmitted to the Deacons. Howbeit to ỹ Romaines there are ſet two kindes. Let him that geueth (ſayeth Rom.12.9. Paule in that place) do it in ſimplicitie: let him that hath mercy, do it in cherefulneſſe. Foraſmuch as it is certaine that he ſpeaketh of the publike offices of the Church, it muſt needes be that there were two ſeuerall degrees. Vnleſſe my iudgement deceiue me, in the firſt point he meaneth Deacōs, that diſtributed the almes: in the other he ſpeaketh of them that had geuen themſelues to loking to the poore and ſicke: of which ſort were the widowes of whom he maketh mention to Timothee. For women could execute no other publik office, 1 Tim.5.10. but to geue themſelues to the ſeruice of the poore. If we graunt this, (as we muſt needes graunt it) thē there ſhalbe two ſortes of Deacōs: of which one ſort ſhall ſerue in diſtributing the things of the poore, the other in loking to ỹ poore of the Church themſelues. But although the very word Diaconia, Deaconrie extẽdeth further: yet the Scripture ſpecially calleth thẽ Deacons, to whom the Church hath geuen the charge to diſtribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were ſtewardes of the common treaſurie of the poore: whoes beginning, inſtitution and office, is deſcribed of Luke in the Actes. For when a murmuring was raiſed by the Grecians, for that in the miniſterie of the poore their widowes were neglected, the Apoſtles excuſing themſelues with ſaying that they could not ſerue both offices, both the preaching of the word and the miniſtring at tables, required of the multitude, that there might be choſen. vij. honeſt men, to whom they might commit that doing. Loe what maner of Deacons the Apoſtolike Church had, and what Deacons it were mete for vs to haue according to their example. Act. 6.3.

10 Now whereas in the holy aſſemblie all things are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherin that ought to be more diligently obſerued, than in ſtabliſhing the order of gouernement: becauſe there is no where greater perill if any thing be done vnorderly. Therefore to the ende that vnquiet and troubleſome men (which otherwiſe would happẽ) ſhould raſhly thruſt in themſelues to teach or to rule, it is expreſly prouided, that no man ſhould without calling take vpon him a publike office in the Church. Therefore that a man may be iudged a true miniſter of the Church, firſt he muſt be orderly called: then he muſt aunſwere his vocation, that is to ſay, take vpon him and execute the duties enioined him. This we may oftentimes marke in Paule: which when he meaneth to approue his Apoſtleſhip, in a maner alway with his faithfulneſſe in executing his office he allegeth his calling. If ſo great a miniſter of Chriſt dare not take vpon himſelfe the authoritie that he ſhoulde be heard in the Church, but becauſe he both is appointed thereunto by the commaundement of the Lord, and alſo faithfully performeth that which is committed vnto him: howe great ſhamefulneſſe ſhall it be; if any man wanting both or either of theſe, ſhall chalenge ſuch honor to himſelf? But becauſe we haue aboue touched the neceſſitie of executing the office, nowe let vs entreate onely of the calling.

11 The diſcourſe therof ſtandeth in foure pointes: that we ſhould knowe, what maner of miniſters, how, and by whom miniſters ought to be inſtitute, and with what vſage or what Ceremonie they are to be admitted. I ſpeake of the outwarde and ſolemne calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that ſecrete calling, whereof euery miniſter is priuy in his own conſciẽce before God, & hath not the Church witneſſe of it, I omitt it. It is a good witneſſe of our hart, that not by any ambition, nor couetouſneſſe, nor any other gredy deſire, but with pure feare of God and zele to edefie to the Church, we receiue the office offered vnto vs. That in deede is (as I haue ſayed) neceſſarie for euery one of vs, if we will approue our miniſterie allowable before God. Neuertheleſſe he is rightly called in preſence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euill conſcience, ſo that his wickednes be not open. They are wont alſo to ſay that euē priuate men are called to ỹ miniſterie, whom they ſee to be mete and able to execute it: becauſe verily learning ioined with godlineſſe and with the other qualities of a good Paſtor, is a certaine preparation to the very office. For whom the Lorde hath appointed to ſo great an office, he firſt furniſheth them with thoſe armures that are required to fulfill it, that they ſhould not come empty and 1.Cor. 12.7. vnprepared vnto it. Whereupon Paul alſo to the Corinthians, when he meante to diſpute of the very offices, firſt rehearſed the giftes which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But becauſe this is the firſt of thoſe fower pointes that I haue propounded, let vs nowe go forwarde vnto it.

Tit.1.9. 2.Tim. 3.1. 12 What maner of Biſhoppes it is mete to chooſe, Paule doth largely declare in two places, but the ſumme commeth to this effect, that none are to be choſen, but they that are of ſounde doctrine, and of holy life, & not notable in any vice, which might both take away credite from them, & procure ſlaunder to their miniſtery. Of Deacōs and Elders there is altogether like conſideration. It is alway to be looked vnto, that they be not vnable or vnfit to beare the burden that is layed vppon them, that is to ſay, that they may be furniſhed with thoſe powers that are neceſſarie to the fulfilling of their office.
Luc.21. 15. and 24.49. Mar.16. 15. Act 1.8 So when Chriſt was about to ſende his Apoſtles, he garniſhed them with thoſe weapons & inſtruments which they could not wante. And
1.Tim.5 22. Paule when he had painted out the image of a good & true Biſhop, warneth Timothee, that he ſhould not defile himſelfe with chooſing any man that differeth from it. I referre this word Howe, not to the ceremonie of chooſing, but to the reuerente feare that is to be kept in the chooſing. Hereupon come the faſtings and prayers, which Luke recireth that the faithfull vſed when they made Prieſts. For whereas they vnderſtoode that they medled with a moſt earneſt matter, they durſt attempt nothing, but with great reuerence and carefulneſſe. But they chefely applied themſelues to prayers, whereby they might craue of God the Spirit of counſell and diſcretion.

13 The third thing that we haue ſet in our diuiſiō was, by whom

miniſters are to be choſen. Of this thing no certaine rule can be gathered out of the inſtitution of Apoſtles, which had ſome difference from the common calling of the reſt. For, becauſe it was an extraordinary miniſterie, that it might be made diſcernable by ſome more notable marke, it behoued that they which ſhould execute it, ſhould be called and appointed by the Lordes owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hande their doing, being furniſhed by no mans election, but by the onely commaundement of God and of Chriſt. Hereupon Act. 1. commeth that when the Apoſtles would put an other in the place of 13. Iudas, they durſt not certainly name any one man, but they brought forth two, that the Lorde ſhoulde declare by lot, whether of them he would haue to ſuccede. After this maner alſo it is mete to take this, that Paule denieth that he was creat Apoſtle of men or by man, Gala. 1. but by Chriſt and God the father. That firſt pointe, that is to ſay of 12. men, he had common with all the Godly miniſters of the worde. For no man could rightly take vppon him that execution, but he that were called of God. But the other point was proper and ſingular to himſelfe. Therefore when he glorieth of this, he doth not onely boſt that he hath that which belongeth to a true and lawefull Paſtor, but alſo bringeth foorth the ſignes of his Apoſtleſhip. For whē there were ſome among the Galathians, which trauailing to diminiſh his authoritie, made him ſome meane diſciple, put in office vnder them by the principall Apoſtles: he, to defende in ſafetie the dignitie of his preaching, which he knewe to be ſhot at by thoſe ſuttle deuiſes, needed to ſhewe himſelfe in all pointes nothing inferior to the other Apoſtles. Therefore he affirmeth that he was choſen, not by the iudgement of men, like ſome common Biſhop, but by the mouth and manifeſt Oracle of the Lorde himſelfe.

14 But no man that is ſober will deny, that it is according to the order of lawefull calling, that Biſhops ſhould be appointed by men: foraſmuch as there are ſo many teſtimonies of ỹ Scripture for profe thereof. Neither doth that ſaying of Paule make to the contrary, as it Gal. 1. 1 is ſaid, that he was not ſent of men, nor by men: foraſmuch as he ſpeaketh not there of the ordinary chooſing of miniſters, but chalengeth to himſelfe that which was ſpecial to the Apoſtles. Howbeit God alſo ſo appointed Paule by himſelfe by ſingular prerogatiue, that in the meane time he vſed the diſcipline of Eccleſiaſtical calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apoſtles were faſting and praying, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid: Separate vnto me Paule and Barnabas Act. 13. to the worke to which I haue ſeuerally choſen them. To what pur- 2. poſe ſerued that ſeparation and putting on of handes, ſith the Holy

Ghoſt hath teſtified his owne election, but that the diſcipline of the Church in appointing miniſters by men, might be preſerued: Therefore the Lord could by no plainer example approue ſuch order, than he did when hauing firſt declared that he had ordained Paul Apoſtle for the Gentiles, yet he willeth him to be appointed by the Church.

Act. 1. 23. Which thing we may ſee in the chooſing of Mathias. For, becauſe the office of Apoſtleſhip was of ſo greate importance, that they durſt not by their owne iudgement chooſe any one man into that degree, they did ſet two men in the middes, vpon the one of whom the lot ſhould fall: that ſo both the election might haue an open teſtimonie from heauen, and yet the policie of the Church ſhould not be paſſed ouer.

15 Nowe it is demaunded whether the miniſter ought to be choſen of the whole Church, or only of the other of the ſame office, and of the Elders that haue the rule of diſcipline, or whether he may be made by the authority of one man. They that geue this authority to one man, allege that which Paule ſayth to Titus: Therefore I haue

Tit. 1.5. leſte thee in Creta, that thou ſhouldeſt appointe in euery towne

1. Tim. 5.22. Prieſtes. Againe to Timothee: lay not handes quickly vppon any man. But they are deceiued if they think, that either Timothee at Epheſus, or Titus in Creta, vſed a kingly power, that either of them ſhould diſpoſe all things at his owne will. For they were aboue the reſt, only to go before the people with good and holſome counſells: not that they onely, excluding all other, ſhould do what they liſted. And that I may not ſeeme to faine any thing, I will make it plaine by a like

Act. 14. 23. example. For Luke rehearſeth that Paule and Barnabas appointed Prieſts in diuerſe Churches: but he alſo expreſſeth ỹ order or maner howe, when he ſayeth that it was done by voices: ordeining Prieſts (ſayeth he) by lifting vp of handes in euery Church. Therefore they two did creat them: but the whole multitude, as the Grecians maner was in elections, did by holding vp their handes declare whom they would haue. Euen in like maner the Romaine hiſtories do oftētimes ſay, that the Conſul which kept the aſſemblies, created newe officers, for none other cauſe but for that he receiued the voices & gouerned the people in the election. Truely it is not likely that Paule graunted more to Timothee and Titus than he toke to himſelfe. But we ſee that he was wonte to creat Biſhops by voices of the people. Therfore the places aboue are ſo to be vnderſtanded, that they miniſh nothing of the cōmon right and libertie of the Church. Therefore Ciprian ſayeth well, when he affirmeth that it commeth from the authoritie of God, that the Prieſt ſhould be choſen in preſence of the people before before the eyes of all men, and ſhould by publike iudgement and teſtimonie be allowed for worthy & mete. For we ſee that this was by the commaundemẽt of the Lorde obſerued in the Leuiticall Prieſts, that before their cõſecratiõ they ſhould be brought into the ſight of the people. And no otherwiſe is Mathias added to the fellowſhip of the Apoſtles: and no otherwiſe the ſeuen Deacons were created: but the people ſeing and allowing it. Theſe examples (ſayeth Ciprian) do ſhewe, that the ordring of a Prieſt ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people ſtanding by: that the ordering may be iuſt and lawfull, which hath bene examined by the witneſſe of all. We are therefore come thus farre, that this is by the word of God a laweſull calling of a miniſter, when they that ſeeme mete are created by the conſent and allowaunce of the people, And that other Paſtors ought to beare rule of the election, that nothing be done amiſſe of the multitude either by lightneſſe, or by euill affections, or by diſorder.

Leui. 8. 6. Numb. 20. 26. Act. 1. 15. and 6. 2.

16 Now remaineth the forme of ordering, to which we aſſigned the laſt place in the calling. It is euident that the Apoſtles vſed no other ceremonie, when they admitted any man to miniſterie, but the laying on of handes. And I thinke that this vſage came from the maner of the Hebrues, which did as it were preſente vnto God by laying on of handes that which they would haue bleſſed & hallowed. So when Iacob was about to bleſſe Ephraim and Manaſſe, he layed his handes vpon their heds. Which thing our Lorde followed, when he prayed ouer the infantes. In the ſame meaning (as I thinke) the Iewes, by the ordinãce of the lawe, layed handes vpon the Sacrifices. Wherefore the Apoſtles by laying on of handes did ſignifie that they offered him to God, whom they admitted into the miniſterie. Albeit they vſed it alſo vppon them, to whom they applied the viſible graces of the Spirit. Howeſoeuer it bee, this was the ſolemne vſage, ſo ofte as they called any man to the miniſterie of the Church. So they conſecrated Paſtors and teachers, and ſo alſo Deacons. But although there be no certaine commaundement concerning the laying on of handes, yet becauſe we ſee that it was continually vſed among the Apoſtles, their ſo diligent obſeruinge of it ought to be to vs in ſtede of a commaundement. And truely it is profitable, that by ſuch a ſigne, both the dignitie of the miniſtery ſhould be cõmended to the people, and alſo that he which is ordered ſhould be admoniſhed, that he is not nowe at his own liberty, but made bonde to God & the Church. Moreouer it ſhall not be a vaine ſigne, if it be reſtored to the naturall beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordeined nothing in the Church in vaine, we muſt thinke that this Ceremonie,

Gen. 48 14. Mat. 19. 15. Act. 19. 6.

ſith it proceded from him, is not vnprofitable, ſo that it be not turned into a ſuperſtitious abuſe. Laſt of all this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did lay their handes vpon the miniſters, but the Paſtors onely. Howbeit it is vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their handes or no. But it is euident that that was done in the Act 6. Deacons, in Paule and Barnabas, and a fewe other. But Paule him-

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the ſtate of the olde Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vſe before the Papacie.

HItherto we haue intreated of the order of gouerning the Church, as it hath bene deliuered vs out of the pure word of God: and of the miniſteries, as they were inſtitute by Chriſt. Nowe that all theſe things may be more clerely and familiarly opened, and alſo be better faſtened in our mindes: it ſhalbe profitable in theſe things to cõſider the forme of the Olde Church, which ſhall repreſent to our eyes a certaine image of Gods inſtitutiõ. For although the Biſhops of thoſe times did ſet forth many Canons, wherin they ſeemed to expreſſe more thã was expreſſed in the holy Scripture: yet they with ſuch hedefulneſſe framed all their order after the onely rule of Gods word, that a man may eaſily ſee that in this behalf they had in a maner nothing diſagreing from the word of God. But although there might be ſomewhat wantinge in their ordinances, yet becauſe they with ſincere zeale endeuoured to preſerue Gods inſtitutiõ, & they ſwarued not much frõ it, it ſhal be very profitable here ſhortely to gather what maner of obſeruation they had. As we haue declared that there are thre ſortes of miniſters cõmẽded vnto vs in the Scripture: ſo all the miniſters ỹ the olde Church had, it diuided into thre Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly choſen Paſtors and Teachers: the reſt of them had the rule of the iudgement and correction of maners. To the Deacons was committed the care of the poore, and the diſtributing of the almes.

As

As for the Readers and Acoluth, were not names of certaine offices: but those whom they called Clerkes, they trained from their youth vpward in certaine exercises to serue the Church, that they might be ỹ better vnderstande to what purpose they were appointed, & might in time come ỹ better prepared to their office: as I shal by and by shew more at large. Therefore Hierome, when he had appointed fiue orders of the Church, reckeneth vp Bishops, Priestes, Deacons, Beleuers, and Cathecumeni: to the rest of the Clergy & monkes he giueth no proper place. In Esa. cap. 9.

2 Therefore to whom the office of teachinge was enioyned, all them they named Priestes. In euery city they chose out of their own number one man, to whom they specially gaue the title of Bishoppe: that dissentions shoulde not grow of equality, as it is wont to come to passe. Yet the Bishop was not so aboue the rest in honor and dignity, ỹ he had a dominion ouer his felowes. But what office ỹ Consul had in the Senate, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to go before the other with counselling, monishing and exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authority, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counsell: the same office had the Bishop in the assembly of the Priestes. And the olde wryters themselues confesse, that the same was by Mens consent brought in for the necessity of the times. Therefore Hierome vpon the Epistle to Titus saith: The same was a Priest which was a Bishop. And before that by the instinction of the Deuill, there were dissentions in religion, and it was said amonge peoples: I am of Paule, I am of Cephas, Churches were gouerned by common counsell of Elders. Afterward, that the seedes of dissentions might be plucked vppe, all the care was committed to one man. As therfore the Priests do know, that by custome of the Church they are subiect to him that is set ouer them: so let the Bishops know, that they are aboue the Priests, rather by custome, than by the truth of the Lordes disposing, and that they ought to gouerne the church in common together. But in an other place he teacheth, how auncient an institutiō it was. For he sayth that at Alexandria, from Marcke the Euangelist euen to Heraclas and Dionysius, the Priestes did alway choose out one of thēselues, and set him in a hyer degree, whom they named a Bishop. Therfore euery city had a company of Priestes which were Pastors and Teachers. For they all did execute amonge the people that office of teaching, exhorting and correcting, which Paul appointeth to the Bishops: and that they might leaue seede after them, they trauailed in teaching the yonger men, that hadde professed themselues souldiours in the holy warfare. To euery city there Epist. ad Eua. Tit. 1. 3.

was appointed a certaine countrey, that ſhould take their Prieſtes from thence, and be accompted as it were into the body of that Church. Euery company (as I haue before ſayd) only for preſeruatiō of Policy and Peace, were vnder one Biſhop: which was ſo aboue the reſt in dignity, that he was ſubiect to the aſſembly of his brethren. If the compaſſe of ground that was vnder his Biſhoprike were ſo great, that he coulde not ſuffiſe to ſerue all the offices of a Biſhop in euery place of it, in the countrey it ſelfe there were in certaine places appointed Prieſtes which in ſmall matters ſhould execute his authority. Them they called countreybiſhops, becauſe in the countrey they repreſented the Biſhop.

3 But, ſo much as belongeth to the office, wherof we now ſpeake, as well the Biſhops as the Prieſtes were bound to apply the diſtributing of the word and Sacramentes. For it was ordained only at Alexandria, (becauſe Arrius had there troubled the Church) ỹ the prieſt ſhould not preach to the people, as Socrates ſayth in the 9. booke of the Tripartite hiſtory. Which yet Hierome confeſſeth that he miſliketh not. Truely it ſhould be counted monſtruous, if any man had giuen out himſelfe for a Biſhop, that had not alſo in very dede ſhewed himſelfe a true Biſhop. Therefore ſuch was ỹ ſeuerity of thoſe times, that all miniſters were driuen to the fulfillinge of ſuch office, as the Lord requireth of thē. Neither do I rehearſe the maner of one age alone: For euen in Gregories time, when the Church was now almoſt decaied (certainely it was much degenerate from the auncient purenes) it had not bin tolerable that any Biſhop ſhoulde abſtaine from preaching. The Prieſt (ſayth he in one place) dieth if there be no ſoūd heard of him: becauſe he asketh againſt himſelfe the wrath of the ſecrete iudge, if he go without ſounde of preachinge. And in an other place: When Paule teſtifieth that he is cleane from the bloud of all: in this ſaying we be conuinced, we be bounde, we be ſhewed to be gilty, which are called Prieſtes, which beſide the euils that we haue of our owne, adde alſo the deathes of other: becauſe we kill ſo many as we beinge luke warme and ſilent do daily ſee to go to death. He calleth himſelfe & other ſilent, becauſe they were leſſe diligēt in their worke than they ought to be. When he ſpareth not them, that did halfe performe their duety: what thinke you he would haue done, if a man had altogether ſitte idle? Therefore this was a great while holden in the Church, that the chiefe duty of the Biſhop was to feede Gods people with the word, or both publikely and priuately to edifie the Church with ſound doctrine.

Epiſto. ad Eua.

Epi. 4. Homel. in Eze.

Act. 20. 16.

4 But whereas euery prouince hadde among their Biſhoppes one Archebi-

Archebiſhop: alſo where in the Nicene Synode there were ordained Patriarches, which ſhoulde in degree & dignity be aboue the Archbiſhops, that pertained to the preſeruinge of diſcipline. Howebeit in this diſcourſe, that which was moſt rarely vſed may not be omitted. For this cauſe therfore chiefely theſe degrees were ordained, that if any thinge hapned in any Church, that could not well be ended by a fewe, might be referred to a prouinciall Synode. If the greatneſſe or difficulty of the matter required a greater diſcuſſinge, the Patriarches were alſo called to it with the Synodes, frō whom there might be no appelle but to a General Councel. The gouernment ſo ordered many called a Hierarchie, by a name (as I thinke) vnproper, and truely vnuſed in the Scriptures. For the holy Ghoſt willed to prouide, that no mā ſhould dreame of a principality or dominion whē the gouernment of the Church is ſpoken of. But if, leauinge the word we looke vpon the thing, we ſhall finde that the old Biſhops ment to forge no forme of ruling the Church, diſſering from that which the Lord appointed by his word.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other then it was vnder the Apoſtles. For they receiued the daily offringes of the Faithfull, and the yearely reuenues of the Church, to beſtowe them vpon true vſes, that is to ſay, to diſtribute thē to fede partly the miniſters, & partely the poore: but by the appointment of the Biſhop, to whome alſo they yearely rendred accomptes of their diſtribution. For whereas the Canons do euery where make the Biſhop diſtributer of all the goods of the Church, it is not ſo to be vnderſtanded, as though he did by himſelfe diſcharge that care: but becauſe it was his part to appoint to the Deacon, who ſhould be receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whome it ſhould be giuen, & how much to euery one: becauſe he had an ouerſeeing whether the Deacon did faithfully execute that which belōged to his office. For thus it is red in the canons which they aſcribe to the Apoſtles: We commaunde that the Biſhoppe haue the goodes of the Church in his owne power. For if he be put in truſt with the ſoules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that he haue charge of money: ſo that by his power all thinges may be diſtributed to the poore by the Elders and Deacons: that they may be miniſtred with all feare and carefulneſſe. And in the Councel of Antioche Cap. 35 it is decreed, that the Biſhops ſhoulde be reſtrained that meddle with the goodes of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point we neede to make no longer diſputation, ſith it is euident by many epiſtles of Gregorie, that euen at that time, when otherwiſe the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this obſeruation continued, that the Deacons ſhoulde vnder the Biſhop be the ſtewardes of the poore. As for Subdeacons, it is likely ẏ at the beginning they were ioyned to the Deacõs, that they ſhould vſe their ſeruice about the poore: but that difference was by litle and litle confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plenty of the goods, required a new and more exact maner of diſpoſing them: Albeit Hierome doth ſay, that it was euen in his age. In their charge was the ſumme of their reuenues, poſſeſſions, and ſtore, and the collection of the daily offeringes. Whereupon Gregory declareth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he ſhoulde be holden gilty if any of the goodes of ẏ Church periſhed either by his fraud or negligence. But whereas it was giuen to them to reade the Goſpel to the people, and to exhort them to prayer: and whereas they were admitted to deliuer the Cuppe in the holy Supper, that was rather done to garniſh their office, that they ſhoulde execute it with the more reuerence, whẽ by ſuch ſignes they were admoniſhed that it was no prophane bailiwike that they exerciſed, but a ſpirituall function and dedicate to God.

Epi. ad Nepot. Epiſt. 10 lib. 1.

6 Hereby alſo we may iudge what vſe there was, and what maner of diſtribution of the Church goods. Ech where both in the decrees of the Synodes, and among the old wryters it is to be found, that whatſoeuer the Church poſſeſſeth either in landes or in money, is the patrimony of the poore. Therefore oftentimes there this ſong is ſunge to the Biſhops and Deacons, that they ſhoulde remember, that they medle not with their owne goodes, but the goodes appointed to the neceſſity of the poore: which if they vnfaithfully ſuppreſſe or waſt, they ſhalbe gilty of bloud. Whereby they are admoniſhed, with great feare & reuerence, as in the ſight of God, without reſpect of perſons, to diſtribute them to whom they be due. Hereupon alſo come thoſe graue proteſtations in Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, and other like Biſhoppes, whereby they affirme their owne vprightneſſe to the people. But ſith it is equity, and eſtabliſhed by the law of the Lorde, that they which employ their ſeruice to the Church, ſhoulde be fed with the common charges of the Church, and alſo many Prieſtes in that age, conſecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the diſtributinge was ſuch, that neither the miniſters wanted ſuſtenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the meane time it was prouided, that the miniſters themſelues, which ought to giue exãple of honeſt ſparing to other, ſhould not haue ſo much, wherby they might abuſe it to riotous exceſſe or deliciouſnes, but only wherwith with to ſuſtaine their owne nede. For thoſe of the Clergy (ſayth Hierome) which are able to liue of the goods of their parents, if they take that which is the poores, do commit ſacrilege, & by ſuch abuſe they eate and drinke to themſelues damnation.

7 Firſt the miniſtration was free and voluntary, whereas the Biſhops and Deacons were of their owne wil faithfull, and vprightneſſe of conſcience and innocence of life were to them in ſtede of lawes. Afterwarde when euill examples grewe of the gredineſſe or peruerſe affections of ſome, to correct thoſe faultes, the canons were made, which diuided the reuenues of the Church into foure partes: of which they aſſigned one part to thē of the Clergy, the ſecond to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildinges, the fourth to the poore as well ſtraungers as of their owne countrey. For whereas the other canons, giue this laſt parte to the Biſhop, that varieth nothing frō my aboueſaid diuiſion. For they meane not that that part ſhould be his owne, that either he himſelfe alone ſhoulde deuoure it, or poure it out, vpon whom or what he liſt, but that it ſhould ſuffice to maintaine the Hoſpitality which Paul requireth of that order. And ſo do Gelaſius & Gregory expound it. For Gelaſius bringeth no other reaſon why the Biſhop ſhould chalenge any thinge to himſelfe, but that he might giue it priſoners and ſtrangers. And Gregory ſpeaketh yet more plainely. It is the maner (ſayth he) of the ſea Apoſtolike, to giue cōmaundement to the Biſhop when he is ordred, that of all the reuenue that ariſeth, there be made foure portions: that is to ſay, the one to the Biſhop and his family for Hoſpitality, & entertainment: the ſecond to the Clergy: the third to the poore: the fourth to the repairing of Churches. Therfore it was lawfull for the Biſhoppe to take nothing to his owne vſe, but ſo much as were enough for moderate & meane foode and clothing. If any began to excede, either in riotous expenſe, or in oſtentation and pomp, he was byandby repreſſed by his felowes, & if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignity. 1. Tim. 3 2.

8 As for that which they beſtowed vppon garniſhinge of holy thinges, at the firſt it was very litle. Afterward when the Church became ſomwhat richer, yet in that behalfe they ſtil kept a meane. And yet all the money that was beſtowed therupon, remained ſafe for the poore, if any greater neceſſity happened. So when famine poſſeſſed the Prouince of Hieruſalem, and the nede could not otherwiſe be relieued, Cyrillus ſolde the veſſels and garmentes, and ſpent them vpon ſuſtenance of the poore. Likewiſe Acatius Biſhop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Perſians, in a maner ſtarued for hunger, called Tripar. hiſt li. 5 Lib. 11. cap. 16.

together the Clergy, and when he had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither dishes nor cuppes, because he neither eateth nor drinketh, he molt the vessels, to make thereof both meate & ransome for mē in misery. Hierom also, when he inueyeth against the to much gorgiousnes of temples, doth with honor make mentiō of Exuperius Bishop of Tholosa in his time, which caried the Lords body in a wicker basket, and his bloud in glasse, but suffred no poore mā to be hungry. That which I euen now sayd of Acatius, Ambrose rehearseth of himselfe. For when the Arrians charged him, for ẏ he had broken ẏ holy vessels to ransom prisoners, he vsed this most godly excuse: He that sent ẏ Apostles without golde, gathered Churches together without gold. The Church hath gold, not to kepe it, but to bestow it, & to giue reliefe in necessities. What neede is to kepe that which helpeth not? Do we not know, how much golde and siluer the Assyrians tooke out of the temple of the Lord? Doth not the Priest better to melt them for the sustenance of the poore, if other reliefes do faile, than an enemy a robber of God to beare them away? Will not the Lord say: Why hast thou suffred so many nedy to die for hunger? & verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightest haue ministred them sustenance. Why were so many led away captiue, & not ransomed? why were so many slaine by the enemy? It had bin better that thou shouldest saue the vessels of liuinge men, than of metalles. To these thinges thou shalt not be able to aunswere. For what wouldest thou say? I feared least Gods tēple should want garnishing. He would answere: Sacraments require not golde: neither do those things please with golde that are not bought with golde. The ransoming of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacraments. In summe, we see that it is most true which the same man sayeth in an other place, that whatsoeuer the Church thē possessed was the store of the nedy. Againe: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poores.

Ad Nepotia.

Lib. 5. epist. 31. & 33.

9 These that we haue rehearsed were the ministeries of the Old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiasticall wryters make mention, were rather certaine exercises and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might leaue a store for the Church after them, receiued into their charge, gouernance & discipline, yong men which with the consent & authority of their parentes, professed themselues souldiours of the spirituall warfare: & they so framed them from their tēder age, that they should not come vnskilful & raw to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called Clerkes. I would in dede that some other proper name hadde rather bin giuen them. For this name grew of errour, or of corrupt affectiō: foraſmuch as Peter calleth the whole Church the Clergy, that is to ſay, the Lordes inheritance. 1.Pet.3. But the inſtitution it ſelfe was very holy and profitable, that they which woulde conſecrate themſelues and their ſeruice to the Church, ſhold be ſo brought vp vnder the keping of the Biſhop, that none ſhould miniſter to the Church, but he that were well informed aforehande, and that had from his very youth both ſucked holy doctrine, and by ſeuere diſcipline put in a certaine continuing quality of grauity & holy life, & were eſtranged from worldly cares, & were accuſtomed to ſpiritual cares and ſtudies. But as yong ſouldiours are by certaine counterfait skirmiſhes inſtructed to learne true and earneſt fight, ſo there were alſo certaine rudimentes, whereby they were exerciſed while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the very offices. Therefore firſt they committed to the Clerkes the charge to open and ſhut the Church, and they named them Oſtiarij, dorekepers. Afterward they called them Acoluthi, folowers, which waited vpon the Biſhop in his houſhold ſeruices, and did continually accompany him, firſt for honors ſake, & then that no ſuſpition ſhould ariſe of them. Morouer ỹ by litle & litle they might become knowen to the people, and get to themſelues commendation: alſo that they might learne to abide the ſight of all men, & to ſpeake before al men: that being made Prieſtes, when they came forth to teach, they ſhould not be abaſhed with ſhame: therfore place was appointed thē to read in the pulpet. After this maner they were promoted by degrees, to ſhew proofe euery one of their diligēce in all their ſeuerall exerciſes, till they were made Subdeacons. This only is my meaning, that thoſe were rather groſſe beginnings, than ſuch offices as were accompted among the true miniſteries of the Church.

10 Wheras we ſaid ỹ the firſt & ſecond point in the calling of miniſters, are, what maner of men they ought to chooſe, & how great a religious carefulnes they ought to vſe in that matter: therin the old Church hath folowed the preſcribed order of Paul, & the examples of the Apoſtles, For they were wōt to come together to chooſe ỹ paſtors with moſt great reuerence, & carefull callinge vpon the name of God. Beſide this they had a forme of examination, wherby they tried the life & doctrine of thē that were to be choſen by that rule of Paul. Only they ſomwhat offended herein with too great ſeuerity, becauſe they would require more in a Biſhop than Paule required, & ſpecially 1.Tim.3. in proceſſe of time they required vnmaried life. But in ỹ other points 2. their obſeruation was agreeinge with Paules deſcription. But in this which we made the third point, that is to ſay, who ought to inſtitute ministers, they kept not alway one order. In olde time, none was receiued into the company of Clerkes without the consent of all the people: insomuch that Cyprian laboreth earnestly to excuse that he appointed one Aurelius to be a Reader without asking aduise of the Church, because that was done beside the custome, though not without reason. For this he sayth before; In ordering of Clerkes, dere brethren, we are wont first to aske you aduise, and by common counsell to wey the maners and deseruings of euery one. But because in these lesser exercises there was not much peril: because they were chosen to a longe proose, and not to a great office, therefore the consent of the people therin cessed to be asked. Afterward in the other degrees also, except the Bishoprike, the people commonly left the iudgemēt and choise of them to the Bishop and the Priestes, that they shoulde examine who were meete and worthy: sauinge peraduenture when new Priestes were appointed for paroches: for then it behoued that the multitude of that place namely should consent. Neither is it any maruaill, that the people in this behalfe was litle carefull in keepinge their owne right: For no man was made a Subdeacon, that had not shewed a longe proose of himselfe in his beinge a Clerke, vnder that seuerity of discipline, which then was vsed. After that he hadde bin tried in that degree, he was made a Deacon. From thense he came to the honor of priesthoode if he had behaued himselfe faithfully. So no man was promoted, of whom there had not bin in deede a triall had many yeares before the eies of the people. And there were many canōs to punish their faultes: so that the Church could not be troubled with euil Priestes or Deacons, vnles it neglected the remedies. Howbeit in the Priestes also there was alway required the cōsent of them of the same city: which the very first canon testifieth in the 67. distinction, which is fathered vpon Anacletus. Finally all the admissions into orders were therefore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no man should priuily crepe in without the consent of the faithfull, or shoulde with too much easinesse be promoted without witnesses.

Lib 2. epist. 5.

11 In chooſing of Bishops the people had the liberty longe preserued, that none shoulde be thrust in that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the counsell at Antioche, that none shoulde be thrust in to them against their will. Which thinge also Leo the first doth diligently confirme. Hereupon came these sayings: Let him be chosen, whom the Clergy, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule ouer al, be chosen of all. For it must needes be, that he that is made a ruler being

vnkowen and not examined, is thrust in by violence. Againe, Lette him be chosen, that is both chosen by the Clerkes, and desired by the people:& let him be consecrate by them of that Prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitane. The holy Fathers tooke so great heede that this liberty of the people should by no meane be diminished, that when the generall Synode gathered together at Constantinople did order Nectarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the whole Clergy & people, as they testified by their epistle to the Synode at Rome. Therfore when any Bishop did appoint a successor to himselfe, it was not otherwise stablished, vnles the whole people did confirme it. Whereof you haue not onely an example, but also the very forme in Augustine in ỹ naming of Eradius. And Theodorite, when he reherseth that Peter was named by Athanasius to be his successour, by and by addeth, that the order of priestes confirmed it, & the magistrate, and nobility, & the people approued it with their allowing showte. Epist. 10 Theod. lib. 4. cap. 20.

12 I graunt indede that this also was by very good reason stablished in the Councell at Laodicea, that the Election should not be left to multitudes. For it scarcely happeneth at any time, that so many heades should wel order any thing with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the vncertaine communalty is diuided into contrary affections. But for this peril there was vsed a very good remedy. For first the Clerkes onely did choose: whom they had chosen they presented to the Magistrate, or to the Senate and chiefe men of the people. They, after consultation hadde, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did choose an other, whome they did rather allow. Then the matter was moued to the multitude, which although they were not bound to those fore iudgementes, yet thereby they could the lesse be disordered. Or if they began at the multitude: that was done onely to learne whom they did chiefly desire. When the desires of the people were heard, thē they of ỹ Clergy did choose him. So neither was it lawfull for the Clergy to appoint whom they listed, neither were they bounde to obey the foolishe desires of the people. Leo appointeth this order in an other place, when he sayth: There are to be looked for, both the desires of the citizens, the peoples testimonies, the iudgement of the honorable, & the election of the clerkes. Againe, Let there be holden the testimony of the honorable, the subscription of the clerkes, the consent of the order & cōmunalty. No reason (sayth he) suffreth it to be otherwise done. And nothinge else meaneth ỹ decree of thē Synode at Laodicea, but that the clergy, & chiefe of the people, should not suffer themselues to be Cap. 13 Epist. 87.

caried away by the vndiſcrete multitude: but rather that with their wiſdom & grauity they ſhould repreſſe the peoples fooliſh affections, if at any time nede ſhould ſo require.

13 This order of chooſing was yet in force in the time of Gregory: & it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epiſtles of his, that giue euident teſtimony of this matter. For ſo oft as he hath to do with the creating of any new Biſhop, he vſeth to wryte to the clergy, to the order, & to the people, & ſomtime alſo to the ruler, according as the gouernment of the city is appointed. But if by reaſon of the diſordered ſtate of the Church, he cõmitteth to any Biſhop adioyninge, the charge of ouerſeeinge in the election, yet he alway requireth a ſolemne decree ſtrẽgthened with the ſubſcriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Conſtantius create Biſhop at Milaine, and that many of the Millaneis were by reaſon of the inuaſion of the barbarous nations fled to Genua: he thought that the election could not otherwiſe be lawful, vnleſſe they alſo were called together & gaue their aſſent. Yea there are not yet fiue hundred yeares paſt, ſince Pope Nicolas decreed thus of the election of the Biſhop of Rome: that the Cardinall Biſhops ſhoulde beginne, then that they ſhoulde ioyne to them the reſt of the clergy, laſt of all that the election ſhould be confirmed by the conſent of the people. And in the ende he reciteth that decree of Leo, which I euen now alleaged, & commaundeth it from thenſe foorth to be in force. But if the malice of wicked men ſhall ſo preuaile, that the clerkes to make a true election be compelled to depart out of the city: yet he commaũdeth that ſome of the people be preſent with them. As for the Emperours conſent, ſo farre as I can perceiue, was required only in two Churches, that is, Rome and Conſtantinople: becauſe there were the two ſeates of the Empire. For whereas Ambroſe was ſent to Milaine with a power from Valentinian to gouerne the election of the new Biſhop: that was extraordinarily done, by reſon of grieuous factions wherewith the citizens then boyled among themſelues. But at Rome in old time the Emperours authority was of ſo great force in creatinge of the Biſhop, that Gregory ſayeth, that he was ſet by his commaundement in the gouernment of the Church: when yet by ſolemne vſage he was deſired by the people. This was the maner, that whẽ the clergy & the people had appointed any biſhop, the clergy ſhould forthwith moue it to the Emperour, that he ſhould either by his allowance confirme the election, or by diſalowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnant to this cuſtome: wherein is nothinge elſe ſayd, but that it is in no wiſe to be ſuffred, that takinge away the canonicall election, a kinge ſhoulde appoint a Biſhop after his owne luſt: & that the Metropolitan ſhould cõſecrate none that were ſo promoted by violent powers. For it is one thinge to ſpoyle the Church of her right, that all ſhould be transferred to the luſt of one man: and an other thinge to graunt this honor to a kinge or an Emperour, that by his authority he may confirme a lawfull election.

14 Now it followeth, that we entreate, with what forme the miniſters of the Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordinatiõ or Conſecration: the Grekes haue called it Cheirotonia, liftinge vp of handes, and ſometime alſo Cheirotheſia, laying on of handes. Howbeit Cheirotonia is properly called that kinde of electiõ, where mens conſentes are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth a decree of the Nicene coũcel, that the Metropolitane ſhould mete together with al the Biſhops of the prouince to order him which is choſen. But if ſome of them be hindered either by length of ỹ way, or by ſickenes, or by any neceſſity, that yet three at the leaſt ſhould mete: and that they that are abſent ſhoulde by letters teſtifie their conſent. And this Canon, when with diſcontinuãce it grew out of vſe, was afterward renued with many Synodes. But all, or at leaſt as many as had no excuſe, were therefore cõmaunded to be preſent, that they might haue the grauer triall of the learninge and maners, of him that was to be ordered: for the matter was not done without triall. And it appeareth by Ciprians words, that in the old time they were wont not to be called after the election, but to be preſent at the election: and to this ende that they ſhould be as it were gouernours, that nothing ſhould be troubleſomly done in the multitude. For where he ſayd that the people haue power either to chooſe worthy Prieſtes, or to refuſe vnworthy, within a litle after he addeth: Wherefore accordinge to the tradition of God & of the Apoſtles, it is to be diligently kept and holden (which is yet holden with vs alſo & in a maner throughout all prouinces) that for the right celebration of orderings, all the Biſhops adioyninge of the ſame prouince ſhould come together to that people for which a gouernour is ordered, and that the Biſhop be choſen in preſence of the people. But when they were ſomtime ſlowly gathered together, and there was peril leaſt ſome would abuſe that delay to occaſion of ambitious ſuing: it was thought that it ſhould be enough if after the election made, they ſhould mete and after allowance vpon lawfull examination conſecrate him. Epiſt 4. lib. 1.

15 When this was ech where done without exception, by litle & litle a diuerſe maner grew in vſe, that they which were choſẽ ſhould reſorte to the Metropolitane city to fetche their orderinge. Which came to paſſe rather by ambition, and by deprauation of the firſt inſtitution, than by any good reaſon. And not long after, when the authority of the ſeae of Rome was now encreaſed, there came in place yet a worſe cuſtome, that the Biſhoppes almoſt of all Italy ſhoulde fetche their conſecration from thenſe. Which we may note out of the Epiſtles of Gregorie. Onely a fewe cities, which did not ſo eaſily giue place, hadde their auncient right preſerued: as there is an example had of Millaine. Paraduenture the onely Metropolitane cities kept their priuiledge. For all the Biſhoppes of the Prouince were wont to come together to the chiefe citie to conſecrate the Archebiſhoppe. But the Ceremonie was laying on of handes. For I reade of no other Ceremonies vſed: ſauinge that in the ſolemne aſſembly the Biſhops had a certaine apparell whereby they might be diſtinctly knowen from other Prieſtes. They ordered alſo Prieſtes and Deacons with onely layinge on of handes. But euery Biſhoppe with the company of Prieſts ordered his owne Prieſtes. But although they did all the ſame thing: yet becauſe the Biſhop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guidinge, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the old writers haue oft this ſaying: that a Prieſt differeth from a Biſhop in no other thinge, but becauſe he hath not the power of ordering.

Lib. 2. Epi. 69. 46.

The v. Chapter.

That the olde forme of gouernment is vtterly ouerthrowen by the tyranny of the Papacy.

NOw it is good to ſet before mēs eies the order of gouerning the Church, that the ſeae of Rome and all the champions thereof do kepe at this day, & the whole image of that Hierarchie which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the firſt & old Church which we haue deſcribed: ẏ by the cōpariſon it may appeare what maner of Church they haue, which vſe this only title to charge or rather to ouerwhelm vs. But it is beſt to begin at Callinge, that we ſee both who, and what maner of mē, and by what order they be called to this miniſtery. And then afterward we ſhal conſider how faithfully they execute their office. We will giue the firſt place to Biſhops: to whom I would to God this might be an honor, to haue ẏ firſt place in this diſcourſe. But the matter it ſelfe doth not ſuffer me, ones to touch this thing be it neuer ſo lightly, without their great ſhame. And yet I will remember, in what kinde of wryting I am now occupied: & will not ſuffer my talke, which ought to be framed onely to ſimple doctrine, to flow abroade beyonde due boũdes. But let ſome one of them that haue not vtterly loſt all ſhame, annſwere me, what maner of biſhoppes are at this day commonly choſen. Truely it is now growen too much out of vſe, to haue any examinatiõ had of their learninge: but if there be had any reſpect of learning, they chooſe ſome lawyer that can rather brawle in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certaine, that theſe hundred yeares there hath ſcarcely bin euery hundreth man choſen that vnderſtoode any thing of holy doctrine. I do not therefore ſpare the former ages, for ẏ they were much better, but becauſe we haue now only the preſent Church in queſtiõ. If iudgement be had of their maners, we ſhall finde that there haue bin few or almoſt none, whom the olde Canons woulde not haue iudged vnworthy. He that was not a dronkard was a whoremonger: he that was alſo cleane from this wickedneſſe, was either a dycer, or a hunter, or diſſolute in ſome parte of his life. For there be lighter faultes, which by the olde Canons do exclude a man frõ being a biſhop. But this is a moſt great abſurdity, ẏ very children ſcarcely ten yeares olde, are by the Popes graunt made biſhops. They are growen to ſuch ſhameleſnes, and ſenſeleſſe dulnes, that they dreaded not that extreme yea & monſtruous wicked doing, which is vtterly abhorring from the very ſenſe of nature. Hereby appeareth howe religious their elections were, where the negligence was ſo careleſſe.

2 Now in election, all that right of the people is takẽ away. Their deſirings, their aſſentings, their ſubſcribings, and all ſuch thinges are vaniſhed: the whole power is transferred to the Canons onely. They beſtowe the biſhoprike vpon whom they will, and afterwarde bringe him forth into the ſight of ẏ people, but to be worſhipped, not to be examined. But Leo crieth on the other ſide, that no reaſon ſuffreth it, and he pronounceth that it is a violent impoſition. Ciprian, when he teſtifieth that it proceedeth from the law of God that it ſhould not be done but by the conſent of the people, ſheweth that the cõtrary maner is repugnãt to the word of God. The decrees of ſo many Synodes do moſt ſeuerely forbid it to be otherwiſe done: & if it be done, they commaunde it to be voide. If theſe thinges be true, there now remaineth in ẏ Papacy no Canonical election, neither by Gods law nor by the Eccleſiaſtical law. But although there were no other euil, yet how ſhal they be able to excuſe this that they haue ſo ſpoyled the Church of her right? But (ſay they) the corruption of times ſo required, that becauſe in appointinge of biſhops, hatreds and affections more preuailed with the people and the Magiſtrates, than right and ſounde iudgement,therfore the rule thereof ſhould be giuen to a few. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedy of a miſchiefe in deſpeired caſe.But ſith the medecine it ſelfe hath appeared more hurtfull than the very diſeaſe,why is not this new euil alſo remedied?But (ſay they)it is exactly preſcribed to the Canons,what they ought to folow in the election.But do we dout,but that the people in old time did vnderſtand that they were bound to moſt holy lawes,when they ſaw that they had a rule ſet thē by the word of God,when they came together to chooſe a biſhop?For that only voyce of God,wherby he deſcribeth the true Image of a biſhop,ought worthily to be of more value than infinit thouſandes of Canons. But neuertheleſſe the people,corrupted with a moſt euill affection,had no regard of the lawe or of equity.So at this day though there be very good lawes writtē, yet they remaine buried in papers.Yet for the moſt part it is vſed in mens maners,yea and alowed as though it were done by good reaſon, that dronkards,whoremongers,dycers,are commonly promoted to this honor:(it is but litle that I ſay)that biſhoprikes are the rewardes of adulteries and bawderies. For when they are giuen but to hunters and falconers,it is to be thought to be gaily well beſtowed.Any way to excuſe ſo haynous indignity,it is too much wicked. The people (ſay I) had in olde time a very good Canon to whom Gods word preſcribed, that a biſhoppe ought to be vnreprouable, a teacher, no fighter.&c.Why therefore is the charge of chooſinge remoued from the people to theſe men? Becauſe forſooth the word of God was not heard among the tumultes & ſeditious partakings of the people. And why ſhoulde it not at this day be remoued againe from theſe men, which not onely do breake all lawes, but caſtinge away all ſhame, do wantonly, couetouſly,ambitiouſly,mingle and confounde Gods and mens matters together?

3 But they lye,when they ſay,ỹ this was deuiſed for a remedy.We often read that in old time Churches were in tumultes at the chooſing of biſhops:yet neuer any man durſt thinke of taking away the authority from the people. For they had other wayes whereby they might either preuent theſe faultes,or amend thē if they were alredy cōmitted.But I will tell what it is. When the people began to be negligent in makinge the elections, and did caſt that care vpon the Prieſtes as litle belonging to them, they abuſed this occaſion to vſurp a tyranny to themſelues, which afterwarde they ſtabliſhed by new Canons ſet forth. As for their ordering,it is nothing els but a mere mockage.For the ſhew of examination that they there ſet out is ſo vaine and hungry,that it wanteth euen all colour. Therfore wheras in ſome places

Princes

Princes haue by couenãt obtained of the biſhops of Rome, that they themſelues might name biſhops, therein the Church ſuffered no new loſſe: becauſe the election was taken away, onely from the Canons, which had by no right violently takẽ it, or verily ſtolen it. Truely this is a moſt fowle example, ỹ out of the court are ſent biſhops to poſſeſſe Churches: & it ſhould be the worke of godly Princes to abſtaine from ſuch corruption. For it is a wicked ſpoyling of ỹ Church, when there is thruſt vnto any people a biſhop, whom they haue not deſired, or at leaſt with free voice allowed. But that vnorderly maner which hath longe ago bin in the Churches, gaue occaſion to Princes to take the preſentation of biſhops into their owne handes. For they had rather that it ſhould be their gift, than thoſe mens, to whom it nothing more belonged, and which did no leſſe wrongfully abuſe it.

4 Loe here is a noble calling, by reaſon whereof the biſhops boaſt themſelues to be the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles. But they ſay that the authority to create Prieſtes belongeth to them only. But in this they moſt lewdly corrupt the old inſtitution: becauſe they do not by their ordering create Prieſtes to rule and fede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewiſe when they conſecrate Deacons, they do nothinge of their true & proper office, but they ordaine them only to certaine Ceremonies about the chalice and the paten. But in the Synode at Chalcedon, it is contrariwiſe decreed, that the orderings ſhould not be abſolutely giuen, that is to ſay, but that a place ſhoulde be therewithall aſſigned to them that are ordered, where they ſhall exerciſe their office. This decree is for two cauſes very profitable. Firſt, that the Church ſhoulde not be burdened with ſuperfluous charges: nor that that ſhould be ſpent vppon idle men which ſhould be giuen to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, ſhould thinke that they be not promoted to an honor, but that there is an office committed vnto them, to the execution whereof they are bounde by ſolemne proteſtation. But the Romiſhe maiſters (which thinke that there is nothinge in religion to be cared for, but their bellie) firſt do expounde title to be the reuenue that may ſuffice to ſuſtaine them, whether it be by their owne liuelyhoode or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Prieſt, without taking care where they ought to miniſter, they giue them the order, if they be rich enough to finde themſelues. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Councell requireth, ſhoulde be the yearely reuenue for their ſuſtenance? But nowe becauſe the later Canons condemned the biſhoppes with penalty to finde them whom they had ordered without ſufficient title, by this meane to reſtraine their too much easie admitting: there hath bin also a suttelty deuised to mocke out this penalty. For he that is ordered, naminge any title whatsoeuer it be, promiseth that he wilbe content therewith: by this shift he is driuen from his action for his finding. I passe ouer a thousande fraudes that are herein vsed: that when some do falsely name vaine titles of benefices, wherupon they can not make fiue shillinges by yere: other some vnder secret couenãt do borow benefices, which they promise that they wil byandby restore againe, but somtime they restore not at all. And such other misteries.

5 But although these grosser abuses were takẽ away, is not this alway an absurdity, to appoint a Priest to whom you assigne no place? Also they order no man but to Sacrifice. But the true ordinãce of a Priest is, to be called to the gouernment of the Church: & a Deacon to be called to the gathering of ỹ almes: they do in deede with many pompes shadow their doing, that in the very show it may haue a reuerẽce among the simple. But among men that haue their sound wit, what can these disguisings auaile, if there be no sound stuffe or trueth vnderneth them? For they vse Ceremonies about it, either fetched out of Iewishnes, or fained of thẽselues: which it were better to forbeare. But of true examination, (for I nothinge passe vpon the shadow which they retaine) of the peoples cõsent, & of other things necessary, they make no mention. I call a shadow their fooliſh gesturings mete to be laughed at, framed to a fond & colde counterfaiting of antiquity. The bishops haue their deputies which before the ordering may enquire of their learninge. But what? whether they can reade their masses: whether they can decline a common nowne, that they shal light vpon in reading, or coniugate a verbe, or do know the signification of one word, for it is not necessary that they be cunning enough to construe a verse. And yet they be not put backe fr̃o Priesthoode, which faile euen in the childish rudiments, so that they bring any money or commendation of fauour. Of like sort it is, that when they are brought to ỹ altare to be ordered, it is asked thrise in a tong not vnderstanded, whether they be worthy of that honor. One aunswereth (which neuer saw them: but because nothinge should want of the forme, he hath that part in the play) They are worthy. What may a man blame in these reuerend fathers, but that with mockinge in so open Sacrileges, they do without shame laugh to scorne both God and men? But because they are in long possession therof, they thinke that nowe it is lawefull for them. For whosoeuer dare once open his mouth against these so euident and so haynous wicked doinges, he is foorthwith haled by them to punishment of death, as though it were one that had in olde time disclosed abrode the holy misteries of Ceres, would they do this if they thought that there were any God?

6 Nowe howe much do they behaue themselues better in bestowinge of benefices: which thing was ones ioined with ỹ ordering, but nowe it is altogether separate? There is among them a diuerse maner. For the Bishops onely do not conferre benefices: and in those whereof they are said to haue the conferring, they haue not the full right: but other haue the presentation, and they reteine onely the title of collation for honors sake. There are also nominatiõs out of scholes, & resignations, either simple, or made for cause of eschange, commendatorie writings, preuentions, and whatsoeuer is of that sorte. But they also behaue themselues that none of thẽ can reproch an other with any thing. So I affirme, that scarcely euery hundreth benefice, is bestowed at this day in the papacy without Simonie, as the olde writers defined Simony. I do not say that they all buy them with ready money: but shewe me one of twentie that commeth to a benefice without some by commendation, some either kinred or alliance promoteth, and some the authoritie of their parentes: some by doing of pleasures do get themselues fauor. Finally benefices are geuen to this ende, not to prouide for the Churches, but for them that receiue them. Therefore they call them benefices, by which worde they do sufficiently declare, that they make no other accompt of them, but as the beneficiall giftes of princes, whereby they either get the fauour of their soldiars or rewarde their seruices. I omit how these rewardes are bestowed vpon barbers, cookes, moile kepers, and such dreggishe men. And nowe iudiciall courtes do ring of no matters more, than aboute benefices: so that a man may say that they are nothing els but a pray cast afore dogs to hunt after. Is this tolerable euen to be heard of, that they should be called Pastors, which haue brokẽ into the possessiõ of a Church as into a ferme of their enemy? that haue gotten it by brawling in the lawe? that haue bought it for money? that haue deserued it by filthy seruices? which being childrẽ yet scantly able to speake, haue receiued it, as by inheritance from their vncles and kinsmen, and some bastardes from their fathers?

7 Would euer the licentiousnesse of the people, though they had bene neuer so corrupt and laweleſſe, haue gone so farre? But this is also more monstrous, that one man, (I will not say what maner of man, but truely such a one as can not gouerne himselfe) is set to gouerne fiue or six Churches. A man may see in these dayes in Princes courtes, yong men that haue thre abbaties, two Bishoprikes, one Archbishoprike. But there be cõmonly Canons with fiue, six or seuen benefices, whereof they haue no care at all, but in receiuing the renenues. I will not obiecte, that it is eche where cried out againſt by the word of God, which hath long ago ceſſed to be of any eſtimation at all among them. I will not obiect, that there haue bene many moſt ſeuere penall ordinances in many councells made againſt this wickednes: for thoſe alſo they boldly deſpiſe as oft as they liſt. But I ſay that both are monſtrous wicked doings, which are vtterly againſt God & nature and the gouernment of the Church, that one robber ſhall oppreſſe many Churches at ones, and that he ſhould be called a Paſtor, which can not be preſente with his flocke though he would: and yet (ſuch is their ſhameleſneſſe) they couer ſuch abhominable filthineſſe with the name of the Church, to deliuer themſelues from all blame. But alſo (and God will) in theſe lewdeneſſes is conteined that holy ſucceſſion, by the merit whereof they boſt that it is wrought that the Church may not periſhe.

8 Now (which is the ſeconde marke in iudging a lawfull Paſtor) let vs ſee howe faithfully they exerciſe their office. Of the Prieſts that be there created, ſome be Monkes, ſome be (as they call them) Secular. The firſt of theſe two companies was vnknowen to the olde Church: and it is ſo againſt the profeſſion of Monkes, to haue ſuch a place in the Church, that in olde time when they were choſen out of Monaſteries into the clergie, they ceſſed to be Monkes. And Gregorie, whoes time had much dregges, yet ſuffered not this confuſion to be made. For he willeth that they be put out of the Clergie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly be together both a Monke and a clerke: ſith the one is a hinderance to the other. Nowe if I aſke, howe he well fulfilleth his office, whom the Canons declare to be vnmete: what I pray you, will they aunſwere? They will forſoth allege vnto me thoſe vntimely borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby Monkes are ſo receiued into the honor and power of Prieſthode, that they might ſtill abide in their Monaſteries. But what reaſon is this, that euery vnlearned aſſe, ſo ſone as he hath ones poſſeſſed the ſea of Rome, may with one word ouerthrowe all antiquity? But of this matter we ſhall ſpeake hereafter. Let this ſuffice for this time, that in the purer Church it was holden for a great abſurdity, if a Monke did execute the office of Prieſthode. For Hierome ſayeth that he doth not execute the office of a Prieſt, while he is conuerſant among Monkes: and maketh himſelfe one of the common people to be ruled by the Prieſts. But, although we graunt them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the mendicantes ſome do preach: all the other Monkes either ſing or mumble vp maſſes in their dennes. As though either Christ willed, or the nature of the office suffereth, Priests to be made to this purpose. Whereas the Scripture plainly testifieth, that it is the priests office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne an other way, yea vtterly to change the holy institution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expressly forbidde to do the things that God cõmaundeth all priests. For this song is song to them: let a Monke, cõtente with his cloister, not presume to minister the Sacramentes, nor to execute any thing belonging to publike office. Let them deny, if they can, that it is an open mockerie of God, that any priest should be made to this purpose, to absteine from his true and naturall office: and that he which hath the name, may not haue the thing. Act. 10. 25.

9 I come to the secular priests: which are partly beneficed men, (as they call them) that is to say, haue benefices whereupon to liue: and partly do let out their daily laboure to hire, in massing, or singing, and liue as it were of a stipende gathered thereupon. Benefices haue either care of soules, as bishoprikes, and cures of paroches: or they be the stipendes of deintie men, that get their liuing with singing, as prebendes, Canonships, personages, and dignities, chaplainships, and such other. Howbeit, sins things are nowe turned vpside downe, Abbaties and priories are geuen to very boyes, by priuilege, that is to say by common and vsuall custome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their liuing from day to day, what should they do otherwise than they do? that is in seruile and shameful maner to giue out themselues for gaine, specially sith there is so great a multitude as nowe the world swarmeth with? Therefore when they dare not beg openly, or forasmuch as they thinke they shoulde but little profite that way, they go about like hungry dogs, and with their importunacie, as with barking, they enforce out of men against their willes somewhat to thrust into their bealy. Here if I would go about to expresse in wordes, howe great a dishonour it is to the Church, that the honor and office of priesthod is come to this point, I should haue no ende. Therefore it is not mete that the readers should looke for at my hande such a long declaration as may be proportionall to so heinous indignitie. Brefely I say, if it be the office of priesthod, (as the word of God prescribeth, and the auncient canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the spirituall kingdome of Christ: all such sacrificers as haue none other worke or wages, but in making a market of masses, are not onely idle in their office, but also haue no office at all to exercise. For there is no place assigned them to teach: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally there is nothing 1. Cor. 4 21.

lefte to them, but the altar, whereupon to ſacrifice Chriſt: which is not to offer to God, but to deuils, as we ſhall ſee in an other place.

10 I do not here touch the outwarde faultes, but onely the inwarde euill, which ſticketh faſt by the roote in their inſtitution. I will adde a ſaying, which will ſound ill in their eares: but becauſe it is true, I muſt ſpeake it: that in the ſame degree are to be accompted Canons, Deanes, Chaplains, Prouoſts, and all they that are fedde with idle benefices. For what ſeruice can they do to the Church? For they haue put from themſelues the preaching of the word, the care of diſcipline, and miniſtration of Sacraments, as to much troubleſome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boaſt themſelues to be true prieſts? Singing forſooth, and a pompe of Ceremonies. But what is that to ỹ purpoſe? If they alledge Cuſtome, if vſe, if preſcription of long time: I againe on the other ſide do lay vnto them the definition of Chriſt, whereby he hath expreſſed vnto vs both true prieſts, and what they ought to haue that will be accompted ſuch. But if they can not beare ſo hard a lawe, to ſubmit themſelues to Chriſtes rule: at the leaſt let them ſuffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitiue Church. But their caſe ſhall be neuer the better, if their ſtate be iudged by the olde canons. They that haue degenerate into Canons, ſhould haue bene prieſts, as they were in olde time, that ſhould rule the Church in cõmon with the Biſhop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Paſtor. Thoſe Chapiter dignities as they call them, do nothing at all belong to the gouerning of the Church: much leſſe, chapleinſhips, and the other dregges of like names, What accompt then ſhall we make of them all? Truely both the word of Chriſt, and the vſage of the Church excludeth them from the honor of prieſthode. Yet they ſtiffely holde that they be prieſts: but we muſt plucke of their viſour ſo ſhall we finde, that their whole profeſſion is moſt ſtrange and far remoued from that office of prieſts, both which the Apoſtles deſcribe vnto vs, and which was required in the primitiue Church. Therefore all ſuch Orders, with what titles ſoeuer they be notified, ſith they be newe, being verily neither vpholden by the inſtitution of God, nor by the auncient vſage of the Church, ought to haue no place in the deſcription of the ſpiritual gouernment, which the Church hath receiued conſecrate with the Lordes owne mouth. Or (if they will rather haue me to ſpeake more ſimply and groſſely) for as much as chaplains, canons, Deanes, Prouoſts, & other idle bealies of the ſame ſorte, do not ſo much as with their litle finger touch any ſmall parcell of that office, which is neceſſarily required in prieſts, it is not to be

ſuffred, that in wrongfully taking a fals honor vpon themſelues, they ſhould breake the holy inſtitution of Chriſt.

11 There remaine Biſhops, and perſons of Paroches: who, I would to God they did ſtriue to reteine their office. For we would willingly graunt vnto them, that they haue a godly and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accõpted Paſtors, while they forſake the Churches committed to them, and caſt the care of them vpon other, they do as if it were the Paſtors office to do nothing. If an vſurer ẏ neuer ſtirred his foote out of the city, would profeſſe himſelf a plowman, or a keper of a vineyarde: if a ſouldiour that had bene continually in the bataile and in the campe, and hadde neuer ſeene iudiciall court or bookes, would boaſt himſelfe for a lawyer, who could abide ſuch ſtinking folies? But theſe mẽ do ſomewhat more abſurdly, that will ſeeme and be called lawefull Paſtors of the Church, and yet will not be ſo. For howe many a one is there, that doth ſo much, as in ſhewe, exerciſe the gouernement of his Church? Many do all their life long deuoure the reuenues of Churches, to which they neuer come ſo much as to loke vpon them. Some other do ones by yeare either come themſelues, or ſende their ſteward, that nothing ſhould be loſt in the letting to ferme. When this corruption firſt crept in, they that would enioy this kinde of vacation, exempted themſelues by priuiledges: nowe it is a rare example, to haue one reſident in his owne Church. For they eſteeme them none otherwiſe than farmes, ouer which they ſet their vicars as bailies or farmers. But this very naturall reaſon reiecteth, that he ſhould be paſtor of a flocke, that neuer ſawe one ſhepe thereof.

12 It appereth that euen in the time of Gregorie, there were certaine ſeedes of this miſchief, that the rulers of Churches, began to be negligẽt in teaching: for he doth in one place grieuouſly complaine of it. The world (ſayeth he) is full of prieſts: but yet in the harueſt there are ſeldome workemen founde: becauſe in deede we take vppon vs the office of prieſt, but we fulfill not the worke of the office. Againe, becauſe they haue not the bowelles of charitie, they will ſeeme Lordes: they acknowledge not themſelues to be fathers. They change the place of humilitie into the aduauncing of lordlineſſe. Againe, but what do we, O paſtours, which receiue ẏ rewarde, and are no workemen? We are fallen to outwarde buſineſſe, and we take in hande one thing, and performe an other. We leaue the miniſterie of preaching: and to our puniſhment, as I ſee, we are called Biſhops, that keepe the name of honor and not of vertue. Sith he vſeth ſo great ſharpneſſe of wordes againſt them, which were but leſſe Homil. 17.

continuing and leſſe diligent in their office: What I pray you, would he ſay, if he ſawe of the Biſhops almoſt none, or truely very fewe, and of the reſt ſcarcely euery hundreth man ones in all his life to go vp into a pulpet? For men be come to ſuch madneſſe, that it is commonly compted a thing to baſe for the dignitie of a Biſhop, to make a ſermon to the people. In the time of Bernarde, things were ſomewhat more decayed: but we ſee alſo with howe ſharpe chidings he inueyeth againſt the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue bene then much purer than it is nowe.

13 But if a man do well wey & examine this outward forme of eccleſiaſticall gouernement that is at this day vnder the papacy, he ſhall finde that there is no theuiſh corner wherin robbers do more licenciouſly range without lawe and meaſure. Truely all thinges are there ſo vnlike the inſtitution of Chriſt, yea ſo contrary to it, they are ſo degenerate from the auncient ordinances and maners of the Church, they are ſo repugnant to nature and reaſon, that there can be no greater iniurie done to Chriſt, than when they pretend his name to the defence of ſo diſordred gouernement. We (ſay they) are the pillers of the Church, the chief Biſhops of religiõ, ỹ vicars of Chriſt, the heades of the faithfull: becauſe the power of the Apoſtles is by ſucceſſion come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of theſe follies, as though they talked vnto ſtockes. But ſo oft as they ſhall boaſt of this, I will aſke of them againe, what they haue common with the Apoſtles. For we ſpeake not of any inheritably deſcending honor, that may be geuen to men euen while they ly ſleping: but of the office of preaching, which they ſo much flee from. Likewiſe when we affirme that their kingdom is the tyranny of Antichriſt, byandby they aunſwer, that it is that reuerende Hierarchie, ſo ofte praiſed of notable and holy men. As though the holy fathers, when they commended the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchie or ſpirituall gouernement, as it was deliuered them from hande to hande from the Apoſtles, did dreame of this miſſhapen and waſte diſordred heape, where the Biſhops are for the moſt part, either rude aſſes, which knowe not the very firſt and common principles of faith, or ſometime children yet newe come from the nourſe: and if any be learnieder (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a Biſhoprike to be nothing els but a title of glorioufneſſe and magnificence: where the perſones of Churches thinke no more of feedinge the flocke, than a ſhoemaker doth of plowing: where all things are confounded with more than Babylonicall diſperſing, that there remaineth no more any one ſteppe whole of that ordinance of the Fathers.

14 What if we descende to their maners? where shalbe that light of the world, which Christ requireth? where is the salte of the earth? where is that holinesse, which may be as a perpetuall rule to iudge by? There is no degree of men at this day more il spoken of for riot, wantonnesse, deintinesse, finally all kinde of lustes. There are of no degree men either fitter, or conninger maisters of all deceit, fraude, treason, and breach of faith: there is no where so great conning or boldnesse to do hurt. I passe ouer their disdainfulnesse, pride, extorcion, crueltie. I passe ouer the dissolute licenciousnesse in all the parts of their life. In suffering whereof the world is so weried, that it is not to be feared, that I should seeme to enforce any thing to much. This one thing I say, which they themselues shall not be able to denie: that of the Bishops there is almost none, of the Parsons of paroches not the hundreth man, but if iudgemēt should be geuen of his maners, according to the olde Canons, he should be either to be excommunicate, or at lest to be put from his office. I seeme to say somwhat incredible: so farre is that auncient Discipline growen out of vse, that commaunded an exacter triall to be had of the maners of the clergie: but the truth is so. Now let them go, that fighe vnder the standerd and guiding of the see of Rome, & let them bost among themselues of the order of priestehode. As for the order that they haue, truely it is euident, the it is neither of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the fathers, nor of the olde Church. Matt. 5. 14.

15 Nowe let the Deacons come forth, and that most holy distributing that they haue of the goods of the Church, Howbeit they do not nowe creat their Deacons to that purpose, for they enioine them nothing els but to minister at the altar, to read and sing the Gospell, and do I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almes, nothing of the care of the poore, nothing of all that functiō which they in olde time executed. I speake of the very institution. For if we haue respect what they do, in deede it is not to them an office, but onely a steppe toward priesthoode. In one thing, they that kepe the Deacons place at the masse, do represente a voide image of antiquity. For they receiue the offrings before the consecration. This was the auncient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did kisse one an other, and offer their almes at the altar: so first by a signe, & afterward by very liberalitie they shewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mens steward, receiued that which was giuen, to distribute it. Nowe of those almes, there cometh no more to the poore, than if they were throwen into the sea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truely therin they haue nothing like, neither to the inſtitution of the Apoſtles,nor to the auncient vſage. But the very deſtribution of the goods they haue cõueyed an other way: and haue ſo framed it, that nothing can be deuiſed more vnorderly. For as theues, when they haue cutte mens throtes, do diuide the pray among them: ſo theſe, after the quenching of the light of Gods word, as though the Church were ſlaine, do thinke that whatſoeuer was dedicate to holy vſes is laid open for pray and ſpoile. Therefore making a diuiſion, euery one hath ſnatched to himſelfe as much as he coulde.

16 Here all theſe olde orders, that we haue declared, are not onely troubled, but vtterly wiped out and raſed. The Biſhops and prieſts of cities, which being made riche by this pray, were tourned into canons, haue made hauocke of the chiefe part among them. But it appereth that the partition was vnorderly, becauſe to this day they ſtriue about the boundes. Whatſoeuer it be, by this diuiſion it is prouided, that not one halfepeny of the goodes of the Church ſhould come to the poore, whoes had bene the halfe part at leaſt For the canons do giue them the fowerth part by name: and the other fowerth parte they do therefore appoint to the Biſhops, that they ſhoulde beſtowe it vpon hoſpitalitie, and other duties of charitie. I ſpeake not what the clerkes ought to do with their portion, and to what vſe they ought to beſtowe it. For we haue ſufficiently declared, that the reſt which is appointed: for temples, buildings and other expenſes, ought to be open for the poore in neceſſitie. I pray you, if they had one ſparke of the feare of God in their hart, would they abide this burden of conſcience, that all that they eate, and wherewith they be clothed, cometh of theſte, yea of ſacrilege? But ſith they are litle moued with the iudgement of God, they ſhould at leaſt thinke, that thoſe be men endued with wit and reaſon, to whome they would perſuade, that they haue ſo goodly and well framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boaſt. Let them aunſwer me ſhortly, whether deaconrie be a licéce to ſteale and robbe. If they denie this, they ſhall alſo be compelled to confeſſe, that they haue no deaconrie left: for as much as among them, all the diſpoſition of the goodes of the Church is openly tourned into a ſpoiling full of ſacrilege.

17 But here they vſe a very faire colour. For they ſay, that the dignitie of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomlily vpholden. And they haue of their ſecte ſome ſo ſhameleſſe, that they dare openly boaſt, that ſo onely are fulfilled thoſe prophecies, whereby the olde Prophets deſcribe the glorioufneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſt, when that kingly gorgeouſneſſe is ſeen in the prieſtly order. Not in

vayne (say they) God hath promised these things to his Church: Kings shall come, they shall worship in thy sight, they shall bring thee giftes. Arise, arise, clothe thee with thy strength, O Syon: clothe thee with the garmentes of thy glorie, O Hierusalem: All shall come from Saba, bringing golde and incense, and speaking praise to the Lorde. All the cattell of Cedar shalbe gathered together to thee. If I should tarie long vpon confuting this lewdnesse, I feare least I should seeme fonde. Therefore I will not lose wordes in vaine. But I aske: if any Iewe would abuse these testimonies, what solution would they geue? Verily they would reprehende his dullnesse, for that he transferred those things to the flesh and the world, that are spiritually spoken of the spirituall kingdome of Christ. For we knowe, that the Propheres vnder the image of earthly things, did paint out vnto vs the heauenly glorie of God, that ought to shine in the Church. For the Church had neuer lesse abundance of these blessings, which their wordes expresse, than in the time of the Apostles: and yet all confesse, that the force of the kingdome of Christ then chiefly florished abroade. What then mean these sayings? Whatsoeuer is any where precious, hy, excellent, it ought to be made subiect to the Lord. Where as it is namely spoken of kings, that they shal submit their scepters to Christ, that they shall throwe downe their crownes before his feete, that they shall dedicate their goodes to the Church: when (will they say) was it better and more fully performed, than when Theodosius, casting away his purple roabe, leauing the ornamentes of the empire, as some one of the common people, submitted himselfe before God and the Church, to solemne penance? then when he and other like godly princes bestowed their endeuors and their cares to preserue pure doctrine in the Church, and to cherish and defende sounde teachers? But howe priests at that time exceded not in superfluous richesse, that onely sentence of the Sinode at Aquileia, where Ambrose was chief, sufficiently declareth: Glorious is pouertie in the priests of the Lord. Truely the Bishops had at that time some richesse, wherewith they might haue set out the Churches honor, if they had thought those to be the true ornamentes of the Church. But when they knew that there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glister and shew themselues proudly with deintinesse of fare, with gorgeousnesse of garments, with great train of seruantes, with stately palaces, they followed & kept the humblenesse & modestie, yea the very pouertie which Christ holily appointed amõg his ministers.

Psa. 72. 10. Esa. 52. 1. & 60. 6.

18 But, that we may not be to long in this point, let vs againe gather into a short summe, howe farre that dispẽsation or dissipation of the goods of the Church, that is nowe vsed, differeth from the true deaconrie, which both the word of God commendeth vnto vs, and the auncient Church obserued. As for that which is bestowed vpon the garnishing of temples, I say it is ill bestowed, if that measure be not vsed, which both the very nature of holy things appointeth, and the Apostles and other holy fathers haue prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seen at this day in the temples? whatsoeuer is framed, I will not say after that auncient sparing, but to any honest meane it is reiected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which sauoureth of riot and the corruption of times. In the meane time they are so farre frō hauing due care of the liuely temples, that they woulde rather suffer many thousandes of the poore to perish for hunger, than they would breake the least chalice or cruet, to releue their neede. And that I may not pronounce of my selfe any thing more greuously against them, this onely I would haue the godly readers to thinke vpon: if it should happen that same Exuperius bishop of Tholosa, whom we euen nowe rehearsed, or Acatius, or Ambrose, or any such to be raised from death, what they would say. Truely they would not allowe that in so great necessitie of the poore, richesse in a maner superfluous should be tourned an other way. Admit I speake nothing howe these vses vpon which they be bestowed, (although there were no poore) are many waies hurtful, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leaue to speake of men. These goodes are dedicate to Christ: therfore they are to be disposed after his will. But they shall in vaine say, that this part is bestowed vpon Christ, which they haue wasted otherwise than he commaunded. Howbeit, to confesse the trueth, there is not much of the ordinarie reuenue of the Church abated for these expenses. For there are no bishoprikes so welthy, no abbaties so fatte, finally neither so many, nor so large benefices, that may serue to fill the gluttonie of priests. But while they seke to spare themselues, they persuade the people by superstition, to turne that which should be bestowed vpon the poore, to builde temples, to sette vp images, to buy iewels, to gette costly garmentes. So with this gulfe are the daily almes consumed.

19 Of the reuenue, that they receiue of their landes and possession, what els shall I say, but that which I haue already said, & which is before all mens eyes? We see with what faithfulnesse they which are called bishops and Abbots do dispose the greatest parte. What madnesse is it, to seeke here for an ecclesiasticall order? Was it meete that they, whose life ought to haue bene a singular example of frugalitie, modestie, continence, and humilitie, should contende with the royaltie of princes in number of goodes, in gorgiousnesse of houses, in deintinesse of apparell and fare? And howe much was this contrary to their office, that they, whom the eternall and inuiolable cō- Tit.1.7

maundement of God forbiddeth to be desirous of filthy gaine, and biddeth to be cōtente with simple liuing, should not only lay handes ypon townes and castels, but also violently entre vpon the greatest lordships, finally possesse forceably very empires? If they despise the word of God: what will they aunswere to those auncient decrees of the Synodes: whereby it is decreed that the bishop should haue a small lodging not farre from the Church, meane fare & householde stuffe? what will they say to that praise of the Synode at Aquileia: where pouertie is reported glorious in the priests of the Lorde? For perhappes they will vtterly refuse as to much rigorous, that which Hierome aduiseth Nepotianus, that poore men and strangers, and among them Christ as a gueste, may knowe his table. But that which he by and by addeth, they will be ashamed to denie, that it is the glory of a bishop to prouide for the goodes of the poore: that it is the shame of all priests to study for their owne richesse. But they can not receiue this, but they must all cōdemne themselues of shame. But it is not needefull in this place to speake more hardly against them, sith my meaning was nothing els, but to shewe, that among them the lawefull order of deaconry is long ago taken away: that they may no more glorie of this title to the commendation of their Church: which I thinke I haue already sufficiently shewed.

Concil liū Carthag 4. cap. 14 and 15.

Of the Supremacie of the See of Rome.

HItherto we haue rehersed those ordets of ỹ Church, which were in the gouernement of the olde Church: but afterwarde corrupted in times, and from thencefoorthe more and more abused, do nowe in the Popishe Church reteine onely their name, and in deede are nothing els but visours: that by comparison the godly reader might iudge, what maner of Church the Romanistes haue, for whoes sake they make vs schismatikes, because we haue departed from it. But as for the hed and top of the whole order, that is to say, the supremacy of the see of Rome, whereby they trauaile to proue that they only haue the catholike Church, we haue not yet touched it: because it toke beginning neither from the institution of Christ, nor from the vse of the olde Church, as those former partes did: which we haue shewed to haue so proceded from antiquitie, that by wickednesse of times they are vtterly degenerate, and haue put on alltogether a new forme. And yet they go about to perſuade the world, that this is the chief and in a maner onely bonde of the vnitie of the Church, if we cleaue to the ſee of Rome, and continue in the obedience thereof. They reſt (I ſay) principally vppon this ſtay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themſelues, for that they kepe the head, vpon which the vnitie of the Church hangeth, and without which the Church muſt needes fall aſunder and be broken in pieces. For thus they thinke, that the Church is as it were a maimed and headleſſe body, vnleſſe it be ſubiect to the ſee of Rome, as to her head. Therefore when they talke of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the biſhop of Rome (as the vicar of Chriſt, which is the head of the Church) is in his ſteede Preſident of the vniuerſall Church: and that otherwiſe the Church is not well ordred, vnleſſe that See do holde the Supremacie aboue all other. Therefore this alſo is to be examined, of what ſort it is: that we may omitt nothing that perteineth to a iuſt gouernement of the Church.

2 Let this therfore be the principal point of the queſtion: Whether it be neceſſary for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they call it) or eccleſiaſticall order, that one See ſhould be aboue the other both in dignitie & in power, that it may be the heade of ỹ whole body. But we make the Church ſubiect to too vniuſt lawes, if we lay this neceſſity vpon it, without the word God. Therfore if the aduerſaries will proue that which they require, they muſt firſt ſhew ỹ this diſpoſition was ordeined by Chriſt. For this purpoſe they alledge out of the law the hy prieſthode, alſo the hy iudgement, which God did inſtitute at Hieruſalem. But it is eaſy to geue a ſolution, and that many wayes, if one way do not ſatisfie them. Firſt no reaſon compelleth to extẽde that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole world ſhall be farre different. Becauſe the Iewes were on eche ſide compaſſed with idolatrers: that they ſhould not be diuerſely drawen with varietie of religions, God appointed the place of worſhipping him in the middeſt part of the lande: there he ordeined ouer them one head biſhop, whom they ſhould all haue regard vnto, that they might be ỹ better kepte together in vnitie. Nowe, when religion is ſpred abroade into the whole world, who doth not ſee that it is altogether an abſurdity, that the gouernment of the Eaſt and Weſt be geuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man ſhould affirme, that the whole world ought to be gouerned by one ruler, becauſe one piece of lande hath no mo rulers but one. But there is yet an other reason, why that ought not to be made an exãple to be followed. No man is ignorant that that hy bishop was a figure of Christ. Nowe, sins the priesthode is remoued, that right must also be remoued. But to whom is it remoued? Truely, not to the Pope (as he himselfe is so bold shameleſſely to boast) when he draweth this title to himselfe: but to Christ, which as he alone susteineth this office, without any vicar or succeſſor, so he resigneth the honor to none other. For the priesthode consisteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appeasing of God, which Christ hath fully wrought by his death, and in that interceſſiõ which he nowe vseth with his Father. Hebr. 7. 12.

3 There is therefore no cause why they should bind vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which we haue sene to be enduring but for a time. Out of the newe testament they haue nothing to bring forth for proofe of their opinion, but that it was sayed to one: Thou art Peter, & vpon this stone I will builde my Church. Againe, Peter, Loueſt thou me? Feede my shepe. But admitting that these be strong proues, they must first shewe, that he which is commaunded to feede the flocke of Christ, hath power committed to him ouer all Churches: and that to binde and to loſe is nothing els but to be ruler of all the world. But as Peter had receiued the cõmaundement of the Lorde, so he exhorteth all other priests to feede the Church. Hereby we may gather, that by this saying of Christ, there was either nothing geuen to Peter more then to the rest, or that Peter did egally communicate with other the power that he had receiued. But, that we striue not vainly, we haue in an other place a cleare expoſition out of the mouth of Christ, what is to binde and to loſe: that is to say, to reteine and to forgeue sinnes. But the maner of binding and looſing, both the whole Scripture eche where sheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when he saith that the miniſters of the Goſpell, haue cõmaundement to reconcile men to God, and also haue power to punishe them that refuſe this benefite. Mat. 16 18. Ioh. 21. 15. 1. Pet. 5. 2. Ioh. 20. 23. 2. Cor. 5. 18. & 10. 16.

4 Howe shamefully they wreſt thoſe places, that make mention of binding and looſing, I both haue already shortly touched, and a litle hereafter I shall haue occaſion to declare more at large. Nowe it is good to ſe onely, what they gather of that famous aunſwere of Christ to Peter. He promiſed him ỹ keyes of the kingdome of heauẽ: he sayed that whatſoeuer he bounde in earth, should be bounde in heauen. If we agree vpon the word keyes, and the maner of binding, all contention shall by and by ceſſe. For the Pope himselfe will gladly geue ouer the charge enioined to the Apoſtles, which being full of

trauaile and grief, ſhould ſhake from him his pleaſures, without gaine. Foraſmuch as the heauens are opened vnto vs by the doctrine of the Goſpell, it is with a very fit metaphore expreſſed by the name of keyes. Nowe men are bounde and looſed in no other wiſe, but when faith reconcileth ſome to God, and their owne beleſe bindeth other ſome. If the Pope did take this onely vpon him: I thinke there will be no man that would either enuie it or ſtriue about it. But becauſe this ſucceſſion being trauailſome and nothing gainefull pleaſeth not the Pope, hereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Chriſt promiſed to Peter. Therefore I gather by the very matter it ſelfe, that there is nothing meant by the dignitie of the office of an Apoſtle, which can not be ſeuered from the charge. For if that definitiõ which I haue rehearſed, be receiued (which can not but ſhamelesly be reiected) here is nothing geuen to Peter, that was not alſo common to his other fellowes; becauſe otherwiſe there ſhould not only wrong be done to the perſons, but the very maieſtie of doctrine ſhould halt. They crie out on the other ſide: what auaileth it, I pray you, to run vpon this rocke? For they ſhall not proue, but as the preaching of one ſame Goſpell was enioined to all the Apoſtles, ſo they were alſo all alike furniſhed with power to binde & looſe. Chriſt (ſay they) appointed Peter Prince of the whole Church, when he promiſed that he would geue him the keyes. But that which he then promiſed to one, in an other place he gaue it alſo to all the reſt, and deliuered it as it were into their hãdes. If the ſame power were graunted to all, which was promiſed to one, wherein ſhall he be aboue his fellowes? Herein (ſay they) he excelleth, becauſe he receiued it both in cõmon together with them, & ſeuerally by himſelfe, which was not geuen to the other, but in common. What if I anſwere with Cyprian and Auguſtine, that Chriſt did it not for this purpoſe, to prefer one man before other, but ſo to ſet out ỹ vnitie of the Church. For thus ſayeth Cyprian, that God in the perſon of one gaue the keyes to all, to ſignifie the vnitie of all: and that the reſt were the ſame thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honor and power: but that the beginning is taken at vnitie, that the Church of Chriſt may be ſhewed to be one. Auguſtine ſayeth: If there were not in Peter a miſtery of the Church, the Lorde would not ſay to him, I will geue thee the keyes. For if this was ſayed to Peter, the Church hath them not: but if the Church haue them, then Peter, when he receiued the keyes, betokened the whole Church. And in an other place. When they were all aſked, onely Peter aunſwered, thou art Chriſt: and it is ſaid to him, I will geue thee the keyes, as though he alone had receiued ceiued the power of binding and looſing: whereas both he being one ſaid the one for all, and he receiued the other with all, as bearing the perſon of vnitie. Therefore one for all, becauſe there is vnitie in all.

5 But this, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will bilde my Church, is no where red ſpoken to any other. As though Chriſt ſpake there any other thing of Peter, than that which Paul and Peter himſelfe ſpeaketh of all Chriſtians. For Paule maketh Chriſt the chiefe and corner ſtone, vpon which they are bilded together that growe into a holy temple to the Lorde. And Peter biddeth vs to be liuely ſtones which being founded vpon that choſen and precious ſtone, do by this ioynt and coupling together with our God, cleaue alſo together among our ſelues. He (ſay they) aboue the reſt: becauſe he hath the name peculiarly. In deede I do willingly graunt this honor to Peter, that in the bilding of the Church he be placed among the firſt, or (if they will haue this alſo) the firſt of all the faithfull: but I will not ſuffer them to gather thereupon, that he ſhould haue a Supremacie ouer ỹ reſt. For what maner of gathering is this? He excelleth other in feruentneſſe of zele, in learning, and courage: therefore he hath power ouer thē. As though we might not with better colour gather, that Andrewe is in degree before Peter, becauſe he went before him in time, and brought him to Chriſt. But I paſſe ouer this. Let Peter truly haue ỹ firſt place: yet there is great difference betwene ỹ honor of degree and power. We ſee that the Apoſtles commonly graunted this to Peter, that he ſhould ſpeake in aſſemblies, & after a certaine maner go before them with propounding, exhorting, and admoniſhing: but of his power we reade nothing at all.

6 Howbeit we be not yet come to diſpute of that point: onely at this preſent I would proue, that they do to fondly reaſon, when by the onely name of Peter they would bilde an Empire ouer the whole Church. For thoſe olde follies wherwith they went about to deceiue at the beginning, are not worthy to be rehearſed, much leſſe to be cōfuted, that the Church was bilded vpon Peter, becauſe it was ſaid vpon this rock. &c. But ſome of the Fathers haue ſo expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrary, to what purpoſe is their authoritie alleged againſt God? Yea, why do we ſtriue about the meaning of theſe wordes, as though it were darke or doutfull, whē nothing can be more plainly nor more certainly ſpokē? Peter had cōfeſſed in his owne and his brethrens name, that Chriſt is the ſonne of God. Vpon this rocke Chriſt bildeth his Church: becauſe it is (as Paule ſayeth) the onely foundation, beſide which there can be layed none other. Neither do I here therfore refuſe the authority of the Fathers, because I wante their testimonies, if I listed to allege them: but (as I haue sayed) I will not with contending about so cleare a matter trouble the readers in vaine, specially sith this point hath bene long agoe diligently enough handeled and declared by men of our side.

7 And yet in deede no man can better assoile this question, than the Scripture it selfe, if we compare all the places, where it teacheth, what office and power Peter had among the Apostles, howe he behaued himselfe, and howe he was accepted of them. Runne ouer all that remaineth written, you shall finde nothing els, but that he was one of the .xij. egall with the rest, and their fellowe, but not their Act.15. 5. Lorde. He doth in deede propounde to the councell, if any thing be to be done, and geueth warning what is mete to be done: but therewithall he heareth other, and doth not onely graunte them place to speake their minde, but leaueth the iudgement to them: when they had determined, he followed and obeyed. When he writeth to the 1.Pet. 5.1. Pastors, he doth not commaunde them by authoritie, as Superior: but he maketh them his companions, and gently exhorteth them, as egalles are wont to do. When he was accused for that he had gone in Act. 11. 3. to the Gentiles, although it were without cause, yet he aunswered & purged himselfe. When he was commaunded by his fellowes, to go Act.8. 24. with Iohn into Samaria, he refused not. Whereas the Apostles did send him, they did thereby declare that they helde him not for their superior. Wheras he obeyed and toke vpon him the embassage committed to him, he did thereby confesse, that he had a fellowship with them, and not an authority ouer them. If none of these things were, Gala 1. 18.& 2. 8. yet the only Epistle to the Galathias may easily take all douting from vs: where almost in two whole Chapters together Paule trauaileth to proue nothing els, but that he himselfe was egall to Peter in honor of Apostleship. Then he rehearseth that he came to Peter, not to professe subiection, but onely to make their consent of doctrine approued by testimonie to all men: and that Peter himselfe required no such thing, but gaue him his right hande of fellowship, to worke in common together in the Lordes vineyarde: & that there was no lesser grace geuen to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Iewes: Finally that when Peter dealt not very faithfully, he was corrected by him, and obeyed his reprouing. All these things do make plaine, either that there was an equalitie betweene Paule and Peter, or at least that Peter had no more power ouer the rest, than they had ouer him. And (as I haue already sayed) Paule of purpose laboureth about this, that none shoulde preferre before him in the

Apoſtleſhip either Peter, or Iohn, which were felowes not Lordes.

8 But, to graunt them that which they require concerninge Peter, that is, that he was the Prince of the Apoſtles, and excelled the reſt in dignity: yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould of a ſingular example make an vniuerſall rule, and drawe to perpetuity that which hath bin once done: ſith there is a farre differinge reaſon. One was chiefe among the Apoſtles: forſooth, becauſe they were few in number. If one were the chiefe of twelue men, ſhall it therefore folow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thouſande menne? It is no maruell that twelue had one amonge them that ſhould rule them all: For nature beareth this, and the witte of men requireth this, that in euery aſſembly, although they be all egal in power, yet there be one as a gouernour, whome the reſt may haue regarde vnto. There is no court without a Conſull: no ſeſſió of iudges without a pretor, or propounder, no company without a ruler, no felowſhip without a maiſter. So ſhoulde it be no abſurdity, if we confeſſed that the Apoſtles gaue to Peter ſuch a ſupremacy. But ẏ which is of force among few, is not byandby to be drawen to the whole world, to the ruling wherof no one man is ſufficiẽt. But (ſay they) this hath place no leſſe in the whole vniuerſality of nature, than in all the partes, that there be one ſoueraigne head of all. And hereof (and God will) they fetche a proofe from cranes and bees, which alway chooſe to themſelues one guide, not many. I allow in dede the exãples which they bring forth: but do bees reſorte together out of all the worlde to chooſe them one kinge? euery ſeuerall king is content with his owne hyue. So among cranes, euery heard hath their owne king. What elſe ſhall they proue hereby, but that euery Church ought to haue their own ſeueral biſhop appointed them? Then they call vs to ciuile examples. They alleage ẏ ſaying of Homere, It is not good to haue many gouernours: & ſuch things as in like ſenſe are red in prophane writers to the commendation of Monarchie. The anſwere is eaſie. For Monarchie is not praiſed of Vlyſſes in Homere, or of any other, in this meaninge, as though one ought to be Emperor of ẏ whole world: but they meane to ſhew that one kingdom can not hold two kinges: & that power (as he calleth it) can abide no companion.

9 But let it be, as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole worlde be holden vnder Monarchie, which yet is a very great abſurdity: but let it be ſo: yet I will not therefore graunt that the ſame ſhould take place in the gouernment of the Church. For the Church hath Chriſt her only head, vnder whoſe dominion we al cleaue together, according to that order and that forme of policy which he hath Ephe.4. 15. prescribed. Therfore they do a great wronge to Christ, when by that pretense they wil haue one man to be ruler of the vniuersal Church, because it cā not be without a head. For Christ is the head, of whom the whole body coupled and knit together in euery ioint, wherewith one ministreth to an other, according to the working of euery member in the measure therof, maketh encrease of the body. See you not, how he setteth all men without exception in the body, & leaueth the honor & name of head to Christ alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certaine measure, & a determined & limited function: wherby both the perfection of the grace & the soueraigne power of gouernāce may remaine with Christ only? Neither am I ignorant what they are wont to cauill, whē this is obiected against them: they say that Christ is properly called the only hed, because he alone reigneth by his own authority & in his owne name: but that this nothing withstandeth, but that there may be vnder him an other ministerial heade (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this cauillation they preuaile nothing, vnlesse they first shew that this ministery was ordained by Christ. For the Apostle teacheth, that the whole ministratiō is dispersed through the members, & that the power floweth from the one heauenly head. Or if they wil haue it any plainer spoken, sith the Scripture testifieth that Christ is the hed, & claimeth that honor to him alone, it ought not to be transferred to any other, but whom Christ himself hath made his vicar. But ẏ is not only no where red, but also may be largely confuted by many places.

Ephe.1. 22 & 4. 15. & 5. 23. Colos.1 18 & 2. 10.

Ephe.4. 10. 10 Paul somtimes depainteth vnto vs a liuely image of ẏ Church of one head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his description we may gather, that it is disagreing frō the institution of Christ. Christ at his ascending tooke frō vs the visible presence of himself: yet he went vp to fulfill all thinges. Now therefore the Church hath him yet present, and alway shall haue. When Paule goeth about to shew the meane wherby he presenteth himself, he calleth vs backe to the ministeries which he vseth. The Lord (sayth he) is in vs all, according to ẏ measure of grace ẏ he hath giuen to euery mēber. Therfore he hath appointed some Apostles, some Pastors, some Euangelistes, other some Teachers &c. Why doth he not say, that he hath set one ouer all, to be his vicegerent? For the place required that principally, and it could by no meanes haue bin omitted, if it had bin true. Christ (sayth he) is with vs. How? by the ministery of men, whom he hath appointed to gouerne the Church. Why not rather by the ministerial head, tō whom he hath cōmitted his stede? He nameth vnity: but in God, & in the faith of Christ. He assigneth to men nothing but

common ministery, & to euery one a particular measure. In that cõmendatiõ of vnity, after that he had sayd that there is one body, one Spirite, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptisme, why hath he not also immediatly added one chiefe Bishop, that may hold the Church together in vnity? For nothing, could haue bin more fitly spoken, if it had bin true. Let that place be diligently weyed. It is no dout but that he meant there altogether to represent the holy & spirituall gouernment of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. As for Monarchy among ministers, he not only nameth none, but also sheweth that there is none. It is also no dout but ẏ he meant to expresse the maner of cõioyning, wherby the faithfull cleaue together with Christ their head. There he not only speaketh of no ministeriall head, but appointeth to euery of the mẽbers a particular working according to ẏ measure of grace distributed to euery one. Neither is there any reason why they shoulde suttelly dispute of the comparison of the heauenly and earthly Hierarchie. For it is not safe to know beyond measure of it. And in framing this gouernment we must follow no other figure, than the Lord himselfe hath painted out in his word.

11 Now although I graunt them an other thing, which they shal neuer winne by proofe before sober men, that the supremacy of the Church was so stablished in Peter, that it shoulde alway remaine by perpetuall succession: yet how wil they proue, that his seate was so placed at Rome, that whosoeuer is Bishop of that Church, shoulde be set ouer the whole world? By what right do they binde this dignity to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (say they) liued & died at Rome. What did Christ himself? Did not he, while he liued, exercise his Bishoprike, & in dying fulfill the office of Priesthoode, at Hierusalem? The Prince of Pastors, the soueraigne Bishop, the heade of the church, could not purchace honor to the place: & could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not these follies more than childish? Christ gaue the honor of supremacy to Peter: Peter sate at Rome: therfore he there placed the see of Supremacy. By this reason, the Israelites in old time might haue set the seate of Supremacy in the desert, where Moses the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophets executed his ministery and died. Deu. 34 5.

12 Let vs see howe trimly they reason. Peter (say they) hadde the Supremacy amonge the Apostles: therefore the Church where he sate ought to haue that priuilege. But where sate he first? At Antioche, say they. Therefore the Church of Antioche doth rightly claime to it selfe the supremacy. They cõfesse that it was in old time the firſt: but they ſay, that in remouing thenſe, he remoued to Rome the honor that he brought with him. For there is an Epiſtle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the biſhops of Antioche, where he ſayth thus: Peters ſeate was at the beginninge with you, which afterward by the Lordes commaundement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioche, which was ones the chiefe, hath giuen place to the ſee of Rome. But by what Oracle had that good mā learned, that the Lorde ſo commaunded? For if this cauſe be to be determined by the law, it is neceſſary that they anſwere, whether they will haue this priuilege to be perſonall, or reall, or mixt. For it muſt be one of theſe three. If they ſay that it is perſonall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they ſay that it is real, then when it is once giuē to the place, it is not taken away by reaſon either of the death or departure of the perſon. It remaineth therefore that they muſt ſay it is mixt: but then that place ſhal be not ſimply to be conſidered, vnleſſe the perſon do alſo agree. Let them chooſe which ſoeuer they will, I will byandby inferre and eaſily proue, that Rome can by no meane take the ſupremacy vpon it ſelfe.

13 But be it, that as (they triflingly ſay) the ſupremacy was remoued from Antioche to Rome: yet why did not Antioche keepe the ſecond place? For if Rome haue therefore the firſt place, becauſe Peter ſate there to ỹ end of his life: to whom ſhal the ſecond place rather be graunted, than where he had his firſt ſeate? How came it to paſſe thē, that Alexandria went before Antioch? How agreeth it, that ỹ Church of one diſciple ſhould be aboue the ſeate of Peter? If honor be due to euery Church, accordinge to ỹ worthines of ỹ founder, what ſhall we ſay alſo of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that ſemed to be pillers, Iames, Peter and Iohn. If the firſt place were giuen to the ſee of Rome in the honor of Peter: do not the ſees of Epheſus, & Hieruſalem, where Iohn & Iames ſate, deſerue the ſecond & third place? But among the Patriarches Hieruſalem had the laſt place: Epheſus could not ſit ſo much as in the vttermoſt corner. And other Churches were left out, both all thoſe that Paule founded, & thoſe that the other Apoſtles were rulers of. The ſeate of Marcke, which was but one of their diſciples, obtained the honor. Therfore they muſt either cōfeſſe that that was a prepoſterous order, or they muſt graūt vs that this is not a perpetuall rule, that there be due to euery Church the ſame degree of honor which the founder had.

Gal. 2. 9

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters ſitting in the Church of Rome, I ſee not what credit it ought to haue. Truely that which is in Euſebius, that he ruled there fiue & twenty yeares, is very easily confuted. For it is euident by the first and second Chapter to the Galathians, that about twenty yeares after the death of Christ, he was at Hierusalem, and that then he went to Antioche: where how long he was, is vncertaine. Gregory reckeneth seuen yeares, & Eusebius twenty & fiue. But from the death of Christ, to the end of Neroes Empire, (in whose time they say ẏ he was slayne) there shalbe found but thirty and seuen yeares. For the Lord suffred vnder Tiberius, the eighteenth yeare of his Empire. If you rebate twenty yeres, duringe the which Paule is witnesse that Peter dwelt at Hierusalem, there will remayne but seuenty yeares at the most, which must nowe be deuided betwene two bishoprikes. If he taried longe at Antioche he coulde not sitte at Rome, but a very litle while. Which thinge we may yet also more plainely proue. Paule wrote to the Romines, when he was in his iourney going to Hierusalem, where he was taken and frō thense brought to Rome. It is not likely that this Epistle was written foure yeares before that he came to Rome. Therein is yet no mentiō of Peter, which should not haue bin left out, if Peter had ruled that Church. Yea and in the end also, when he rehearseth a great number of the godly, whom he biddeth to be saluted, where verily he gathereth together all those ẏ he knew, he yet sayth vtterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it nedeful here to make a long or curious demōstration to men of sounde iudgement: for the matter it selfe, and the whole argument of the Epistle crieth out, that he should not haue ouerpassed Peter, if he had bin at Rome.

Gala. 1. 18. Gala. 1. Rom. 15 15. Rom. 16 2.

15 Then Paule was brought prisoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that he was receiued of the brethren, of Peter he sayth nothing. He wrote from thense to many Churches: & in some places also he wryteth salutatiōs in the names of certaine: but he doth not in one word shew that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you shall thinke it likely, that he could haue passed him ouer with silence, if he had bin present: Yea to the Philippians, where he sayd that he had none that so faithfully looked vntō the worke of the Lord, as Timothee, he cōplained that they did all seeke their owne. And to the same Timothee he maketh a more grieuous cōplaint, that none was with him at his first defense, but all forsooke him: where therefore was Peter then? For if they say that he was then at Rome, howe great a shame doth Paul charge him with, ẏ he was a forsaker of the Gospel? For he speaketh of the beleuers: because he addeth, God impute it not vnto thē. How long therfore, & in what time did Peter kepe that seate? But it is a constant opinion of writers, that he gouerned that Church euen to his death. But amonge the wryters themselues it is not certaine who was his succeſſor, becauſe ſome ſay Linus, & other ſome ſay Clemens. And they tell many fond fables, of the diſputation had betwene him & Simon the magician. And Auguſtine ſtieketh not to confeſſe, when he entreateth of Superſtitions, that by reaſon of an opinion raſhely conceiued, there was a cuſtome groven in vſe at Rome, that they ſhould not faſt that day that Peter got the victory of Simon the magician. Finally the doings of that time are ſo entangled with diuerſity of opinions, that we ought not raſhly to beleue where we finde any thing written. And yet by reaſon of this cõſent of writers, I ſtriue not againſt this, that he died there: but yet that he was Biſhop there, and ſpecially a long time, I can not be perſwaded, neither do I much paſſe vpõ that alſo: forasmuch as Paul teſtifieth that Peters Apoſtleſhip did peculiarly belonge to the Iewes, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that felowſhip which they couenanted betwene themſelues, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghoſt may ſtand in force amonge vs, we ought to haue reſpect rather to the Apoſtleſhip of Paul than of Peter. For the holy Ghoſt ſo diuided the prouinces bewene them, that he appointed Peter to the Iewes, and Paul to vs. Now therefore let the Romaniſtes go and ſeeke their ſupremacy elſe where than in the word of God, where it is founde not to be grounded.

Aug. ad Sannar.

16 Now let vs come to the olde Church, that it may alſo be made to appeare plainely, ẏ our aduerſaries do no leſſe cauſeleſly, & falſely boaſt of the conſent therof, than they do of the witneſſe of the word of God. When therfore they brag of that principle of theirs, that the vnity of the Church can not otherwiſe be kept together, but if there be one ſupreme head in earth, to whom al the members may obey, & that therfore the Lord gaue the ſupremacy to Peter, and from thenſe forth to the ſee of Rome by right of ſucceſſion, that the ſame ſhould remaine in it to the end: they affirme, that this hath bin alway obſerued from the beginning. But forasmuch as they wrongfully wreſt many teſtimonies. I wil firſt ſay this aforehand, that I deny not but that the olde wryters do eche where giue great honor to the Church of Rome, & do ſpeake reuerently of it. Which I thinke to be done ſpecially for three cauſes. For ẏ ſame opinion, which I wot not how was growen in force, that it was founded & ordained by the miniſtery of Peter, much auailed to procure fauour & eſtimatiõ vnto it. Therfore in the Eaſt parts it was for honors ſake called the ſee Apoſtolike. Secondly, when the heade of the Empire was there, & that therefore it was likely, that in ẏ place were men more excellent both in learninge & wiſdom, & skil, & experience of many things, than any where elſe: there there was worthily consideration had therof, that both the honor of the citie, and also the other more excellent giftes of God shoulde not seeme to be despised. There was beside these also a third thinge, that when the Churches of the East, and of Grecia, yea & of Affrica, were in tumultes among themselues with disagrementes of opinions, the Church of Rome was quieter & lesse full of troubles thā the rest. So came it to passe, that the godly & holy Bishops, beinge driuen out of their seates, did oftentimes flee thither as into a Sanctuary or certaine hauen. For as the Westerne men are of lesse sharpenes & swiftnes of wit, than the Asians or Africans be, so much are they lesse desirous of alteratiōs. This therfore added much authority to ỹ Church of Rome, that in those doutful times it was no so troubled as the rest, & did holde the doctrine once deliuered them, faster thā all the rest, as we shal byandby better declare. For these three causes (I say) it was had in no small honor, & commended with many notable testimonies of the old wryters.

17 But when our aduersaries will thereupon gather that it hath a supremacie and soueraigne power ouer other Churches, they do too much amisse, as I haue already sayd. And that the same may the better appeare, I will first briefly shew what the olde fathers thought of this vnity which they enforce so earnestly. Hierome, wryting to Nepotianus, after that he had recited many examples of vnity, at the last descēded to the Hierarchie of the Church. Eche Bishop of euery seuerall Church, eche Archpriest, eche Archdeacon, & all the ecclesiasticall order, do rest vppon their owne rulers. Here a Romaine Priest speaketh, he commendeth vnity in the ecclesiasticall order: why doth he not rehearse that all Churches are knitte together with one heade as with one bonde? Nothing could haue more fitly serued the matter ỹ he had in hand: & it can not be said that it was for forgetfulnes, that he omitted it: for he would haue done nothing more willingly if the matter had suffred him. He saw therfore without dout, that that is the true reson of vnity which Ciprian excellently wel describeth in these words: The bishoprike is one, whereof ech hath a part wholly: & the Church is one, which is with encrease of frutefulnesse more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many sunbeames & one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded on a fast holding roote: and like as from one fountaine flow many streames, & though the multitude seme to be diuerfly spread abroad with largenesse of ouerflowinge plenty, yet the vnity is kept whole in the originall: so the Church also being ouerspread with the light of the Lord, extendeth her beames abroad throughout ỹ whole world, yet is it but De simpli. pre.

one that is ech where poured forth, and the vnity of the body is not seuered: she spreadeth her branches ouer the whole worlde, she sendeth out her ouerflowinge streames: yet is there but one heade and one beginninge &c. Afterward The spouse of Christ can not be an adultresse: she knoweth one onely house, she keepeth the holinesse of one onely chamber with chast shamefastnesse. You see how he maketh the vniuersall bishoprike to be Christ onely, which comprehendeth the whole Church vnder him: and sayth that all they that execute the office of bishop vnder this heade, haue their partes thereof wholly. Where is the supremacy of the see of Rome, if the whole bishoprike remaine with Christ only, & ech bishop hath his part thereof wholly? These things therefore make to this purpose, that the reader may vnderstande by the way, that the olde fathers were vtterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanistes do take for confessed & vndouted, concerning the vnity of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

The vij. Chapter.

Of the beginninge and encreasinge of the Papacie of Rome, vntill it aduaunced it selfe to this height, wherby both the liberty of the Church hath bin oppressed, and all the right gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

AS concerning the auncientnesse of the supremacy of the see of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquity to stablishe it, than that decree of the Nicene Synode, wherin the bishop of Rome both hath the first place among the Patriarches giuen vnto him, and is commaunded to looke vnto the Churches adioyning to the city. Whē the Councel maketh such diuision betwene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euery one their boundes: truely it doth not appoint him the heade of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vitus and Vincentius in the name of Iulius, which then gouerned the Church of Rome: to them was giuen the fourth place. I beseeche you, if Iulius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legats be thrust into the fourth seate? Should Athanasius be chiefe in the Councel, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to be seene? In the Synode at Ephesus it appeareth, that Celestinus which was then bishoppe of Rome, vsed a crooked suttle meane, to prouide for the dignitie of his seate. For when he sent his deputies thither, he committed his steede to Cyrillus of Alexandria, which shoulde notwithstandinge otherwise haue bin the chiefe. To what purpose was that ſame committing, but that his name might by what meane ſoeuer abide in the firſt place. For his Legates ſate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the reſt, & ſubſcribed in their order: in the meane time ỹ Patriarch of Alexandria ioyned Celeſtins name with his owne. What ſhall I ſay of the ſeconde councell at Epheſus: where when Leos Legates were preſent, yet Dioſcorus Patriarche of Alexandria ſate the chiefe as by his owne right? They wil take exception that it was no vpright councel, by which both the holy mā Flauianus was condemned, & Eutyches acquited, & his vngodlines allowed. But when the Synode was gathered, when the Biſhoppes tooke their places in order, verily the Legates of the Biſhop of Rome ſate there among the reſt none otherwiſe than in a holy & lawful Councell. Yet they ſtriued not for the firſt place, but yeelded it to an other: which they wold neuer haue done, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the Biſhops of Rome were neuer aſhamed to enter into the greateſt contẽtions for their honors, & for this only cauſe oftentimes to vexe & trouble the Church with many and hurtfull ſtriues. But becauſe Leo ſaw that it ſhoulde be a too much vnreaſonable requeſt, if he ſhould ſeke to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he ſurceſſed it.

1 Then folowed ỹ Councell of Chalcedon, in which by the graũt of the Emperour ỹ Legates of the Church of Rome ſate in the chiefe place. But Leo himſelfe cõfeſſeth that this was an extraordinary priuilege. For whẽ he made petition for it to the Emperour Marcianus, & Pulcheria the Empreſſe, he did not affirme that it was due to him, but only pretended, that the Eaſterne Biſhops, which ſate as chief in the councel at Epheſus, troubled all things, & ill abuſed their power. Wheras therfore it was nedeful to haue a graue gouernour, & it was not likely that they ſhould be mete for it, which had once bin ſo light & diſordered: therfore he praied, that by reaſon of the default & vnſtedfaſtneſſe of other, the office of gouerning might be remoued to him. Truely that which is gotten by ſingular priuilege and beſide order, is not by common law. Where this only is pretended, that there nedeth ſome new gouernour, becauſe the former gouernours had behaued themſelues ill, it is euident that it neither was ſo before, nor ought to cõtinue ſo for euer, but is done only in reſpect of preſent danger. The Biſhop of Rome therfore had the firſt place in the Councell at Chalcedon: not becauſe it was due to his ſee, but becauſe the Synode was at that time deſtitute of a graue and fit gouernour, while they ỹ ought to haue bin the chiefe, did through their owne intemperance & corrupt affectiõ, thruſt themſelues out of place. And this that I ſay, Leos succeſſour did in dede proue. For when he ſent his Legates to the firſt Synode at Conſtãtinople, which was holden long time after, he brauled not for the firſt ſeate, but eaſily ſuffred Menna the Patriarche of Conſtantinople to ſitte as chiefe. So in the councell at Carthage, at which Auguſtine was preſent, we ſee that not the Legates of the ſee of Rome, but Aurelius Archbiſhop of that place ſate as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the authority of the Biſhop of Rome.

Yea there was alſo a generall councel holden in Italy it ſelfe, at which ỹ Biſhop of Rome was not preſent. Ambroſe was chiefe there, which was in very great authority with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the Biſhop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to paſſe by the dignity of Ambroſe, that the ſee of Millain was more noble than the ſee of Rome.

3 As concerning the title of ſupremacy, and other titles of pride, wherupon it now maruelouſly boſteth it ſelfe, it is not hard to iudge, whẽ & in what ſort they crept in. Ciprian oftentimes maketh mentiõ of Cornelius. He ſetteth him out with no other name, but by the name of brother, or felow biſhop, or felow in office. But when he writeth to Stephen the ſucceſſor of Cornelius, he doth not only make him egal with himſelfe & the reſt, but alſo ſpeaketh more hardly to him, charging him ſometime with arrogance, ſomtime with ignorance. Since Ciprian we haue what all the Church of Affrica iudged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbid that any ſhoulde be called Prince of Prieſts, or chiefe Biſhop, but only biſhop of the chiefe ſee. But if a man turne ouer the auncienter monumentes, he ſhal find that the biſhop of Rome at that time was content with the cõmon name of brother. Certainly ſo long as the face of the Church cõtinued true & pure, all theſe names of pride, where with ſince that time the ſee of Rome hath begon to waxe outragious, were vtterly vnheard of: it was not knowen, what was the hieſt biſhop, & the only head of the church in earth. But if the biſhop of Rome had bin ſo bold to haue takẽ ſuch a thing vpon him, there were ſtout & wiſe men that woulde haue by-&by repreſſed his foly. Hierom foraſmuch as he was a prieſt at Rome, was not ill willing to ſet out the dignity of his owne Church, ſo much as the matter & ſtate of the time ſuffred: yet we ſee how he alſo bringeth it downe into felowſhip with the reſt. If authority (ſayth he) be ſought for, the world is greater thã a city. Why doeſt thou alleage to me the cuſtome of one city? Why doeſt thou defend ſmalnes of nũber, out of which hath growẽ pride, againſt the lawes of the Church? Whereſoeuer there be a biſhop, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Conſtantinople, or at Rhegium, he is of the ſame merite & of the ſame ſame Prieſthoode. The power of richeſſe or baſenes of pouerty maketh not a biſhop hier or lower.

4 About the title of vniuerſal biſhop the contention firſt began in the time of Gregory, which was occaſioned by the ambition of Iohn biſhop of Cõſtantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) would haue made himſelfe vniuerſall biſhop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alleage that the right is taken away which was due to himſelfe: but ſtoutly crieth out againſt it, that it is a prophane name, yea ful of ſacrilege, yea the forewarner of Antichriſt. The whole Church (ſayth he) falleth downe from her ſtate, if he fall, which is called vniuerſall. In an other place: It is very ſorowefull, to ſuffer paciently, that our brother and felow biſhop, deſpiſing all other, ſhould only be named Biſhop. But in this his pride what els is betokened but ỹ times of Antichriſt nere at hand? becauſe verily he foloweth him, that deſpiſing the felowſhip of Angels, went about to climbe vp to the toppe of ſingularity. In an other place he wryteth to Eulolius of Alexandria, and Anaſtaſius of Antioch. None of my predeceſſors at any time woulde vſe that prophane word: for if one be called vniuerſall Patriarch, the name of Patriarches is abated from the reſt. But farre may this be from a chriſtian minde, that any ſhoulde haue a will to take that vpon him, wherby he may in any part, be it neuer ſo litle, diminiſh the honor of his brethren. To conſent in this wicked word is nothing elſe but to leſe the faith. It is one thing (ſayth he) that we owe to the preſeruing of the vnity of faith, and an other thinge that we owe to the keping downe of pride. But I ſay it boldly, becauſe who ſoeuer calleth himſelfe or deſireth to be called vniuerſall biſhop, he doth in his proude aduãcing runne before Antichriſt, becauſe he doth with ſhewing himſelfe proude preferre himſelfe aboue the reſt. Again to Anaſtaſius biſhop of Alexandria: I haue ſayd that he can not haue peace with vs, vnleſſe he amẽded the aduancing of the ſuperſtitious & proude word, which the firſt apoſtata hath inuẽted. And (to ſpeake nothing of the wrong done to your honor) if one be called vniuerſal Biſhop, the vniuerſal Church falleth when that vniuerſal one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honor was offred to Leo in the Synode at Chalcedõ, it hath no colour of truth. For neither is there any ſuch thing red in the actes of that Synode. And Leo himſelfe, which with many Epiſtles impugneth ỹ decree there made in honor of the ſee of Conſtantinople, without dout would not haue paſſed ouer this argumẽt, which had bin moſt to be liked of al other, if it had bin true, that he refuſed that which was giuen him: & beinge a man otherwiſe too much deſirous of honor, he woulde not haue omitted that which made for his praiſe. Therfore Gregorie was deceiued in this, that he thought that that title was offered to the ſee of Rome by the Synode at Chalcedon: to ſpeake nothinge, how fonde it is, that he both teſtifieth it to haue proceeded from the holy Synode, & alſo at the ſame time called it wicked, prophane, abhominable, proude, & full of ſacrilege, yea deuiſed by the deuill, & publiſhed by the crier of Antichriſt. And yet he addeth that his predeceſſor refuſed it, leaſt all Prieſtes ſhould be depriued of their due honor, when any thing were priualy giuen to one. In an other place: No man at any time hath willed to be called by that word: No mã hath taken to himſelfe that preſumptuous name: leaſt if he ſhould in the degree of biſhoprike take to him ſelfe a glory of ſingularity, he ſhoulde ſeeme to haue denied the ſame to all his brethren.

5 Now I come to the iuriſdictiõ, which the biſhop of Rome affirmeth that he hath ouer all Churches. I know how great contentions haue bin in olde time about this matter: For there hath bin no time wherein the ſee of Rome hath not coueted to gette an Empire ouer other Churches. And in this place it ſhall not be out of ſeaſon, to ſearch by what meanes it grew then by litle & litle to ſome power. I do not yet ſpeake of that infinite Empire, which it hath not ſo long ago taken by force to it ſelfe: for we wil differre that to a place conuenient. But here it is good to ſhew briefly, how in old time & by what meanes it hath aduaunced it ſelfe, to take to it ſelfe any power ouer other Churches. When the Churches of the Eaſt were diuided and troubled with the factions of the Arrians vnder the Emperours, Cõſtantius & Conſtans the ſonnes of Conſtantine the Great, & Athanaſius the chiefe defendour there of the true faith was driuen out of his ſee: ſuch calamity compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authority of the ſee of Rome he might both after a ſort repreſſe the rage of his enemies, & confirme the godly that were in diſtreſſe. He was honorably receiued of Iulius then Biſhop, and obtained that the Biſhops of the Weſt tooke vpon thẽ the defence of his cauſe. Therfore when the godly ſtoode in great nede of foreine ayde, & ſaw that there was very good ſuccour for them in the Church of Rome, they willingly gaue vnto it the moſt authority that they could. But all that was nothing elſe, but that the communion thereof ſhould be hiely eſteemed, & it ſhould be compted a great ſhame, to be excommunicate of it. Afterward euill and wicked men alſo added much vnto it. For, to eſcape lawefull iudgementes, they fled to this ſanctuary. Therefore if any prieſt were condemned by his Biſhop, or any Biſhop by the Synod of his prouince, they byandby appelled to Rome. And the Biſhops of Rome receiued ſuch appellatiõs more gredily thã was mete: becauſe it ſeemed to be a forme of extraordinary power, ſo to entermedle with matters farre & wide about them. So when Eutyches was condemned by Flauianus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wronge done vnto him. Leo without delay, no leſſe vndiſcretely thẽ ſudenly, tooke in hand the defence of an euil cauſe: he grieuouſly inueyed againſt Flauianus, as though he had, without hearing the cauſe, condemned an innocent: and by this his ambition he cauſed that the vngodlineſſe of Eutyches was for a certaine ſpace of time ſtrengthened. In Affrica it is euident ẏ this oftẽtimes chaunced. For ſo ſoone as any lewd man had taken a foile in ordinary iadgement, he byandby flew to Rome, and charged his countreemen with many ſclaũderous reports: & the ſee of Rome was alway ready to entermedle. Which lewdnes compelled the biſhops of Affrica to make a law, that none vnder paine of excommunication ſhould appelle beyond the ſea.

6 But whatſoeuer it were, lette vs ſee what authority or power the ſee of Rome then had. Eccleſiaſticall power is contained in theſe four pointes, orderinge of Biſhops, ſummoning of Councels, hearinge of Appealles or iuriſdiction, Chaſtiſinge admonitions or cenſures. All the old Synodes commaund Biſhops to be conſecrate by their owne Metropolitanes: and they neuer bid the biſhop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by litle and litle it grewe in vſe, that all the Biſhops of Italy came to Rome to fetche their conſecration, except the Metropolitans, which ſuffred not themſelues to be brought into ſuch bondage: but when any Metropolitane was to be conſecrate, the biſhop of Rome ſent thither one of his prieſts, which ſhould only be preſent, but not preſident. Of which thinge there is an example in Gregorie: at the conſecration of Conſtantius Biſhoppe of Millain after the death of Laurence. Howebeit I do not thinke that that was a very auncient inſtitution: but when at the beginninge for honor & good wils ſake they ſent one to an other their Legates, to be witneſſes of the conſecration, and to teſtifie their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntary, began to be holden for neceſſary. Howſoeuer it be, it is euident that in olde time the Biſhop of Rome had not the power of conſecrating, but in the prouince of his owne Patriarchie, that is to ſay in the Churches adioining to the city, as the canon of the Nicene Synode ſayth. To the Conſecration was annexed the ſending of a Synodicall Epiſtle, in which he was nothing aboue the reſt. For the Patriarches were wont immediatly after their conſecration, by ſolemne wrytinge to declare their fayth, whereby they profeſſed that they ſubſcribed to the holy & catholicke Councelles. So, rendringe an accompt of their Fayth, they didde approue themſelues one to an other. If the biſhoppe of Rome had receiued of other, and not himſelfe giuen this confeſſion, he hadde thereby bin acknowledged ſuperior: but when he was no leſſe bound to giue it, than to require it of other, and to be ſubiect to the common lawe: truely that was a token of felowſhip, not of dominion. Of this thinge there is an example in Gregories Epiſtle to Anaſtaſius and to Cyriacus of Conſtantinople, and in other places to all the Patriarches together.

7 Then follow admonitions or cenſures: which as in old time the biſhops of Rome vſed toward other, ſo they did againe ſuffer them of other. Ireneus grieuouſly reproued Victor, becauſe he vndiſcretly for a thing of no value, troubled the Church with a pernicious diſſentiō. Victor obeied, and ſpurned not againſt it. Such a liberty was then in vre among the holy biſhops, that they vſed a brotherly authority toward the biſhop of Rome, in admoniſhing and chaſtiſinge him if he at any time offended He againe, when occaſion required, did admoniſhe other of their duety: & if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cypriā, when he exhorteth Stephen to admoniſh the biſhoppes of Fraunce, fetcheth not his argumēt from the greater power, but from the common right that prieſtes haue among themſelues. I beſeech you, if Stephen had thē bin ruler ouer Fraunce, would not Cyprian haue ſaid: Reſtraine them, becauſe they be thine? but he ſayth farre otherwiſe. This (ſayth he) the brotherly felowſhip, wherewith we be bound one to an other requireth that we ſhould admoniſh one an other. And we ſee alſo with how great ſharpnes of words he being otherwiſe a man of a mild nature inueyeth againſt Stephen himſelfe, whē he thinketh him to be too inſolent. Therfore in this behalfe alſo there appeareth not yet, ẏ the biſhop of Rome had any iuriſdiction ouer thē that were not of his owne prouince.

Epi. 13. lib. 3. Ad pōp. cō tra epi. Stepha.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of euery Metropolitane, at certaine appointed times to aſſemble a Prouinciall Synode. There the biſhop of Rome had no authority. But a Generall councel the Emperour only might ſummon. For if any of the biſhoppes had attempted it, not only they that were out of his prouince, would not haue obeyed his calling, but alſo there would byandby haue riſen an vprore. Therfore the Emperor indifferently warned them all to be preſent. Socrates in dede reporteth, that Iulius did expoſtulate with the biſhops of the Eaſt, becauſe they called him not to the Synode of Antioch, whereas it was forbidden by the Canons, that that any thing ſhoulde be decreed without the knowledge of the Biſhop of Rome. But who doth not ſee that this is to be vnderſtanded of ſuch decrees as binde the whole vniuerſal Church? Nowe it is no maruel, if thus much be graunted both to ỹ antiquity & honor of the city, & to the dignity of the ſee, that there ſhould be no generall decree made of religion, in the abſence of the biſhop of Rome, if he refuſe not to be preſent. But what is this to ỹ dominion ouer the whole Church? For we deny not, that he was one of the chiefe: but we will not graunt, that which the Romaniſtes now affirme, that he had a dominion ouer all.

9 Now remaineth the fourth kind of power, which ſtãdeth in appealles. It is euident that he hath the chiefe power, to whoſe iudgement ſeate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appelled to the Biſhop of Rome: and he himſelfe alſo went about to draw the hearinge of cauſes to himſelfe: but he was alway laughed to ſcorne, whẽ he paſſed his owne boundes. I will ſpeake nothing of the East and of Grecia: but it is certaine that the biſhops of Fraunce ſtoutly withſtoode him, when he ſeemed to take to himſelfe an empire ouer them. In Affrica there was longe debate about that matter. For where at the Mileuitane Councell, at which Auguſtine was preſent, they were excommunicate that appelled beyond the ſea, the biſhop of Rome trauailed to bringe to paſſe, that that decree might be amended. He ſent his legates to ſhew that that priuilege was giuen to him by ỹ Nicene Councell. The Legates brought foorth the acts of the Nicene Coũcell, which they hadde fetched out of the ſtorehouſe of their owne Church. The Affricans withſtoode it, and denied that the biſhops of Rome ought to be credited in their owne cauſe: and ſayd that therefore they would ſend to Conſtantinople, & into other cities of Grecia, where copies were to be had ỹ were leſſe ſuſpicious. It was foũd, that therein was no ſuch thing written, as the Romains had pretẽded. So was ỹ decree confirmed, which tooke the chiefe hearing of cauſes from the biſhop of Rome: In which doing the lewde ſhameleſneſſe of the Biſhoppe of Rome himſelfe appeared. For when he guilefully did thruſt in the Synode at Sardos in ſtede of the Nicene Synode, he was ſhamefully taken in a manifeſt falſehoode. But yet greater and more ſhameleſſe was their wickedneſſe, that added a forged Epiſtle to the Councell, wherein I wote not what biſhoppe of Carthage, condemninge the arrogance of Aurelius his predeceſſour, for that he was ſo bold to withdraw himſelfe from the obediẽce of the ſee Apoſtolike, and yeldinge himſelfe & his Church, humbly craueth pardon. Theſe be the goodly monumentes of antiquity, whereupon the maieſty of the ſee of Rome is founded, while they ſo childiſhely lye, vnder the pretence of Antiquity, that very blinde men may finde it out by gropinge. Aurelius (ſayth he) puffed vp with deueliſhe boldeneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe, rebelled againſt Chriſt, and ſaint Peter, and therfore to be condemned with curſe. What ſayd Auguſtine? But what ſayd ſo many fathers that were preſent at the Mileuitane Councel? But what neede is it to ſpende many wordes in confuting that fooliſh writing, which the Romaniſtes themſelues, if they haue any face left, can not looke vpon without great ſhame? So Gratian, I can not tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearſed that decree, that they ſhoulde be excommunicate that appelle beyonde the ſea, addeth an exception: Vnleſſe paraduenture they appelle to the ſee of Rome. What may a man do to theſe beaſtes, which are ſo voide of common reaſon, that they except that only thing out of ỹ law, for whoſe cauſe euery man ſeeth that the lawe was made? For the Councell when it condemneth appelles beyond the ſea, forbiddeth only this, that none ſhould appelle to Rome. Here the good expoſitor excepteth Rome out of the common law.

10 But (to determine this queſtion at once) one hiſtory ſhal make plaine what maner of iuriſdictiõ the biſhop of Rome had in old time. Donate of the blacke houſes had accuſed Cecilian biſhoppe of Carthage. The man accuſed was condemned, his cauſe not hearde. For when he knew that the biſhops had conſpired againſt him, he would not appeare. Then the matter came to the Emperour Conſtantine. He, foraſmuch as he willed to haue the matter ended by eccleſiaſticall iudgement, committed the hearinge of it to Melciades biſhop of Rome. To whom he adioyned felow commiſſioners many biſhops of Italy, Fraunce and Spaine. If that belonged to the ordinary iuriſdiction of the ſee of Rome, to heare an appelle in an eccleſiaſtical cauſe: why doth he ſuffer other to be ioyned with him at the will of the Emperour? Yea why did he himſelfe take the iudgement vppon him rather by the Emperours commaundement, than by his owne office?

But let vs heare what hapned afterward. There Cecilian got ỹ victory. Donate of the blacke houſes was condẽned for ſclaũder: he appelled: Conſtantine cõmitted the iudgement of ỹ appelle to ỹ biſhop of Orleance. He ſate as iudge, to pronounce what he thought, after the biſhop of Rome. If the ſee of Rome hath ỹ chief power without appellatiõ: why doth Melciades ſuffer himſelf to receiue ſo great a ſhame, ỹ ỹ biſhop of Orleance ſhould be preferred aboue him? And what Emperor doth this? euẽ Conſtantine of whom they boaſt ỹ he employed not only al his endeuor, but in a maner al the richeſſe of the empire to encreaſe encreaſe the dignitie of their ſee. We ſe therefore nowe, howe farre the biſhop of Rome was at that time by all meanes from that ſupreme dominiō, which he affirmeth to be geuen vnto him by Chriſt ouer all Churches, and which he liengly ſayeth that he hath in all ages poſſeſſed by the conſent of the whole world.

11 I knowe howe many epiſtles there be, howe many writings and decrees, wherin the biſhops do geue much, and boldly chalenge much vnto it. But this alſo all men that haue but a very little wit and ieming do knowe, that the moſt part of thoſe are ſo vnſauerie, that by the firſt taſt of them a man may ſoone find out of what ſhop they came. For what man of ſounde wit and ſobre, will thinke that that goodly interpretation is Anacletus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anacletus: that is, that Cephas is a head? The Romaniſts do at this day abuſe for defence of their ſee, many ſuch trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without iudgement: and yet ſtill in ſo great light they will ſell ſuch ſmokes, wherewith in olde time they were wont to mocke out the ignorāt in darkeneſſe. But I will not beſtowe much labor in confuting thoſe things, which do openly confute themſelues by reaſon of their vnſauory folie. I graunt that there remain alſo true epiſtles of the olde biſhops, wherin they ſet forth the honor of their ſee with glorious titles: of which ſort are ſome epiſtles of Leo. For that man, as he was learned and eloquent, ſo was he alſo aboue meaſure deſirous of glory and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleued his teſtimonie when he ſo aduanced himſelfe, that in deede is it that is in controuerſie. But it appereth that many offended with his ambition, did alſo withſtād his gredie deſire. Sometimes he appointed in his ſteede the biſhop of Theſſalonica throughout Grecia and other countrees adioining: ſometime he appointed the biſhop of Otleance, or ſome other throughout Fraunce. So he appointed Hormiſdas biſhop of Hiſpalis to be his vicar in Spain, but euery where he excepteth, that he geueth out ſuch apointements vpon this condition, that the Metropolitans may haue their auncient priuileges remaining ſafe and whole. But Leo himſelf declareth, that this is one of their priuileges, that if any dout happen about any matter, the Metropolitane ſhould firſt be aſked his aduiſe. Therefore thoſe appointements of vicars in his ſteede were vpon this condition, that neither any biſhop ſhould be letted in his ordinary iuriſdictiō, nor any Metropolitane in being iudge of Appealles, nor any prouincial Councel in ordering of their Churches. What was this els but to abſteine from all iuriſdiction: but to entermedle to the appeaſing of diſcordes, onely ſo farre as the lawe and nature of the communion of the Church ſuffreth.

12 In Gregories time that auncient order was already much changed. For when the Empire was ſhaken, & torne in peeces, when Fraunce and Spaine were afflicted with many ouerthrowes receiued, Slauonia waſted, Italie vexed, and Africa in a maner deſtroyed with continuall calamities: that in ſo great a ſhakinge of ciuil affaires, at leaſt the integritie of faith might remaine, or yet not vtterly periſh, all the biſhops from eche part did the rather ioine themſelues to the biſhop of Rome. Thereby it came to paſſe, that not only the dignity, but alſo the power of that ſee greatly encreaſed. Howebeit I do not ſo much paſſe by what meanes it was brought about. Truely it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from being an vnbridled dominion, that one man might beare rule ouer other after his owne will. But the ſee of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie ſubdue and repreſſe the lewde and obſtinate that coulde not by the other biſhops be kept within their dutie. For Gregorie deth oftentimes diligently teſtify this, that he doth no leſſe faithfully preſerue to other men their rightes, than he requireth his owne of them. Neither do I (ſaith he) pricked on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I deſire in all things to honor my brethren. There is no ſaying in his writings wherin he doth more proudely boſt of the largeneſſe of his Supremicie, than this: I knowe not what biſhop is not ſubiect to the ſee Apoſtolike when he is founde in faulte. But he by and by adioineth, Where fault requireth not, all according to the order of humilitie are egall. He geueth to himſelfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all do their dutie, he maketh himſelfe egall with the reſt. But he himſelfe geueth himſelfe this power: and they aſſented to it that would: and other that liked it not, might freely gainesay it, which it is well knowen that the moſt parte of them did. Beſide that he ſpeaketh there of the Primate of Conſtantinople which when he was condemned by the prouinciall Synode, refuſed the whole iudgement. His fellowe biſhops informed the Emperour of this ſtubborneſſe of him. The Emperour willed Gregorie to be iudge of the cauſe. We ſee therfore that he both attempteth nothing, whereby he may breake the ordinary iuriſdiction, and the ſame thing that he doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the commaundement of the Emperour.

13 This therfore was then all the power of the biſhop of Rome, to ſet himſelf againſt obſtinate & vntamed heds, when there needed any extraordinary remedy: and that to helpe & not to hinder other biſhops. Therefore he taketh no more to himſelfe ouer all other, than in an other place he graunteth to all other ouer himſelfe, when he confeſſeth that he is redy to be corrected of all, to be amended of all. So in an other place he doth in deede commaunde the biſhop of Aquileia to come to Rome, to pleade his cauſe in a controuerſy of faith that was riſen betweene him and other: but he doth not commaunde him of his owne power, but becauſe the Emperor had ſo commaunded. Neither doth he geue warning that he alone ſhalbe iudge, but promiſed that he will aſſemble a Synode by whom the whole matter may be iudged. But although there was yet ſuch moderatiõ, that the power of the ſee of Rome had her certaine bounds, which it might not paſſe, and the biſhop of Rome himſelfe was no more aboue than vnder other: yet it appeareth howe much Gregory miſliked ſuch ſtate. For he nowe and then complaineth, that vnder color of biſhoprike he was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had ſerued them while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppreſſed with tumult of worldly affaires. In an other place: ſo great burdens (ſaith he) of buſineſſe do holde me downe, that my minde can nothing at all be raiſed vp to things aboue. I am ſhakẽ with many waues of cauſes: and after thoſe leiſures of reſt I am toſſed with tempeſtes of troubleſome life: ſo that I may rightly ſay, I am come into ỹ depth of the ſea, and the tempeſte hath drowned me. Hereby gather, what he would haue ſayed, if he had happened to be in theſe times. Although he fulfilled not the office of a Paſtor, yet he was doing it. He abſteined from the gouernment of the ciuil Empire, and confeſſed himſelfe to be ſubiect to the Emperor as other were. He did not thruſt himſelf into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by neceſſitie. And yet he thinketh himſelfe to be in a maze, becauſe he can not apply himſelfe altogether onely to the office of a biſhop.

14 At that time the biſhop of Conſtantinople ſtriued with the biſhop of Rome for the Supremicie, as it is already ſaid. For after that the ſeat of the Empire was ſtabliſhed at Conſtantinople, the maieſty of the Empire ſeemed to require, that that Church alſo ſhould haue the ſeconde place of honor after the Church of Rome. And truely at the beginning, nothing more auailed to cauſe the Supremicie to be geuen to Rome, but becauſe the hed of the Empire was there at that time. There is in Gratian a writing vnder the name of Pope Lucinus, where he ſaith, that cities were no otherwiſe diuided, where Metropolitanes and Primates ought to ſit, than by the reaſon of the ciuil gouernment that was before. There is alſo an other vnder the name of Pope Clement, where he ſaith, that Patriarches were ordained in thoſe cities that had had the chefe Flamines in thē. Which, although it be falſe, yet is taken out of a truth. For it is certaine, that, to the ende there ſhould be made as litle change as might be, the prouinces were diuided according to the ſtate of thinges that then were: and that Primates and Metropolitanes were ſet in thoſe cities that excelled the other in honors and power. Therefore in the Councell at Cap.1. Taurinū it was decreed, that thoſe cities which in the ciuile gouernment where the chiefe cities of euery prouince, ſhould be the cheefe ſees of biſhops. And if it happened the honor of the ciuile gouernment to be remoued from one citie to an other, that then the right of the Metropolitane citie ſhould therewithall be remoued thether. But Innocentius biſhop of Rome, when he ſawe the auncient dignity of his citie to growe in decay, after that the ſeate of the Empire was remoued to Conſtantinople, fearing the abacement of his ſee, made a contrary lawe: wherein he denieth it to be neceſſary that the eccleſiaſticall mother cities ſhould be changed as the Imperiall mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synode ought of right to be preferred aboue one mans ſentence. Alſo we ought to ſuſpecte Innocentius himſelfe in his owne cauſe. Howeſoeuer it be, yet by his owne prouiſo he ſheweth, that from the beginning it was ſo ordered, that the Metropolitane cities ſhould be diſpoſed according to the outwarde order of the Empire.

15 According to this auncient ordinance, it was decreed in the firſt councell at Conſtantinople, that the biſhop of the citie ſhould haue the priuileges of honor next after the biſhop of Rome, becauſe it was a newe Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalcedon, Leo ſtoutly cried out againſt it. And he not only gaue himſelfe leaue to eſteeme as nothing that which fixe hundred biſhops or mo had decreed: but alſo bitterly taunted them, for that they toke from other ſees that honor which they were ſo bolde to geue to the Church of Conſtātinople. I beſech you, what other thing could moue a man to trouble the world for ſo ſmal a matter, but mere ambition? He ſayth that ẏ ought to be inuiolable, which the Nicene Synode hath ones decreed. As though forſooth the Chriſtian faith were endangered, if one Church be preferred before an other: or as though Patriarchies were there diuided to any other end, but for policies. But we know ẏ policy receiueth, yea requireth diuerſe chaunges, according to the diuerſity of times. Therfore it is fond that Leo pretendeth, that the honor, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synode was geuen to the ſee of Alexandria, ought not to be geuen to the ſee of Conſtantinople. For common reaſon telleth this, that it was ſuch a decree, as might be taken away according to the reſpect of times. Yea none of the biſhops of the Eaſt withſtode it, whom that thing moſt of all concerned. Truely Proterius was preſent, whom they had made biſhop of Alexãdria in the place of Dioſcorus. There were preſente other Patriarches, whoes honor was diminiſhed. It was their parte to withſtand it, not Leos which remained ſafe in his owne place. But when all they holde their peace, yea aſſent vnto it, and onely the biſhop of Rome reſiſteth: it is eaſy to iudge, what moueth him: that is, he foreſaw that which not long after happened, that it would come to paſſe, that, the glory of olde Rome decaying, Conſtantinople not contented with the ſeconde place, would ſtriue with Rome for the Supremicie. And yet with his crying out he did not ſo much preuaile, but that the decree of the councell was confirmed. Therefore his ſucceſſors, when they ſawe themſelues ouercome, quietly gaue ouer that ſtiffeneſſe: for they ſuffred that he ſhould be accompted the ſeconde Patriarche.

16 But within a litle after, Iohn which in Gregories time ruled the Church of Conſtantinople, brake forth ſo farre that he called himſelfe the vniuerſall Patriarche. Here Gregorie, leſt he ſhould in a very good cauſe faile to defende his owne ſee, did conſtantly ſet himſelf againſt him. And truely both the pride and madneſſe of Iohn was intolerable, which deſired to make the boũdes of his biſhoprike egall with the boundes of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himſelfe, that which he denieth to an other: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abhominable, whoſoeuer take it vpon him. Yea and alſo in one place he is angry with Eulolius biſhop of Alexandria, which had honored him with ſuch a title. Beholde (ſayeth he) in the preface of the Epiſtle which ye directed to my ſelfe that haue forbidden it, ye haue cared to emprinte the word of proude calling, in naming me vniuerſall Pope. Which. I pray that your holineſſe will no more do becauſe that is withdrawen from you, which is giuen to an other more than reaſon requireth. I compt it no honor, wherin I ſe the honor of my brethren to be diminiſhed. For my honor is the honor of the vniuerſall Church, and the ſounde ſtrength of my brethren. But if your holineſſe call me the vniuerſall Pope, it denieth it ſelfe to be that which it cõfeſſeth me to be wholly. Truely Gregorie ſtode in a good and honeſt cauſe. But Iohn holpen by the fauor of Maurice the Emperor, could neuer be remoued from his purpoſe. Cyriacus alſo his ſucceſſor neuer ſuffered himſelfe to be entreated in that behalfe.

Libr. 7. Epiſt. 30.

17 At the laſt Phocas, which when Maurice was ſlaine, was ſet in his place (I wote not for what cauſe being more frendly to the Romaines, but becauſe he was there crowned without ſtrife) graunted to Boniface the third, that which Gregorie neuer required, that Rome ſhould be the hed of all Churches. After this maner was the controuerſy ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperor, could not ſo much haue profited the ſee of Rome, vnleſſe other things alſo had afterwarde happened. For Grecia & all Aſia were within a litle after cut of from the communion of Rome. Fraunce ſo much reuerenced him, that it obeyed no further than it liſted. But it was then firſt brought into bondage when Pipine vſurped the kingdome. For when Zacharie biſhop of Rome had bene his helper to the breache of his faith, and to robbery, that thruſting out the lawefull king, he might violently enter vpon the kingdome as layed open for a pray: he receiued this rewarde, that the ſee of Rome ſhould haue iuriſdiction ouer the Churches of Fraunce: As robbers are wonted in parting to deuide the common ſpoile: ſo theſe good men ordered the matter betweene themſelues, that Pipine ſhould haue the earthly and ciuile dominion, ſpoiling the true king: and Zacharie ſhould be made hed of all biſhops and haue the ſpirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake, (as it is wont to be in newe things) was afterward confirmed by the authority of Charles, in maner for a like cauſe. For he was alſo indetted to the biſhop of Rome, for that by his endeuor he had atteined to the honor of the Empire. But although it be credible, that Churches eche where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certaine that the olde forme of the Church was then firſt vtterly defaced in Fraunce and Germanie. There remaine yet in the recordes of the court of Pariſe breſe notes of theſe times, which, where they entreate of the matters of the Church, make mention of the couenant both of Pipine and of Charles with the biſhop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then was an alteration made of the olde ſtate.

18 Sins that time, when things did eche where daily fall from worſe to worſe, the tyranny of the ſee of Rome was nowe and then alſo ſtabliſhed and encreaſed, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the ſlouthfulneſſe of the biſhops. For when one man toke all things vpon him, and without meaſure proceded more and more to aduaunce himſelfe againſt lawe and right: the biſhops did not with ſuch zele as they ought, endeuor themſelues to reſtraine his luſt, & though they wãted not courage, yet they were deſtitute of true learning and knowledge: ſo that they were nothing fitt to attempte ſo great great a matter. Therfore we ſee what & howe Monſtruous an vnholy defiling of all holy things, & a ſcattering abrode of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernardes time. He cõplaineth that there reſort by heapes to Rome out of all the world, ambitious men, couetous, Simoniãs, robbers of God, kepers of concubines, cõmitters of inceſt, and all ſuch monſters, to obteine or reteine eccleſiaſticall honors by the Apoſtolike authority: & that fraud and vndermining, & violence were growen in force. He ſaith that that maner of iudging which thẽ was vſed, was abhominable, and vnſemely, not onely for the Church, but alſo for a iudiciall court. He crieth out that the Church is full of ambitious men: and that there is none that more dredeth to cõmit miſcheuous Actes, than robbers do in their caue, when they deuide the ſpoiles of waifaring men. Fewe (ſayeth he) do loke vnto the mouth of the lawgeuer, but vnto his handes. But not without cauſe. For thoſe hãdes do all the Popes buſineſſe. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the ſpoiles of Churches, that ſay to thee, oh well done, well done? The life of the poore is ſowen in the ſtretes of the riche: ſiluer gliſtereth in the mire: men run to it from all places: not the poore, but the ſtranger taketh it vp, or he paraduenture that runneth faſteſt before. But this maner, or rather this death, came not of thee, I would to God it might ende in thee. Among theſe things thou a Paſtor goeſt forward compaſſed with much and precious aray. If I durſt ſay it, theſe are rather the Paſtors of deuils, than of ſhepe. Forſoth Peter did thus, Paule played thus. Thy court is more accuſtomed to receiue men good than to make them good. For the ill do not there profit, but the good do decay. Nowe as for the abuſes of appealle that he rehearſeth, no godly man can reade them without great horror. At the laſt he thus cõcludeth of that vnbrideled gredineſſe of the ſee of Rome in the vſurping of iuriſdiction: I ſpeake the murmour and common complaint of the Churches. They crie out that they be mangled and diſmembred. There are either none or fewe that do not either bewaile or feare this plage. Aſkeſt thou what plage? The Abbotes are plucked from the biſhops, the biſhops from the Archebiſhops, &c. It is maruelous if this may be excuſed. In ſo doing ye proue that ye haue fulneſſe of power, but not of righteouſneſſe. Ye do this, becauſe ye can do it: but whether ye alſo ought to do it, is a queſtion. Ye are ſett to preſerue, not to enuie to euery man his honor and his owne degree. Theſe fewe things of many I liſted to rehearſe, partly that the rede rs may ſee, how ſore the Church was then decayed, and partly that they may know in howe great ſorowe and mourning this calamitie helde all the godly.

19 But nowe, albeit that we graunte to the bishop of Rome at this day that preeminence and largenesse of iurisdiction, which that see had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregory: what is that to the present state of the Papacie? I do not yet speake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuil power thereof, which we will afterwarde consider in place fit for it: but the very spirituall gouernment y they boste of, what hath it like to the state of those times? For they define the Pope none otherwise than the Supreme hed of the Church in earth, and the vniuersall bishop of the whole world. And the bishops themselues, when they speake of their owne authoritie, do with great stoutnesse of countenance, pronounce that to them belongeth the power to commaunde, & other are bounde to the necessitie to obey, that so all their decrees are to be holden as confirmed with the diuine voice of Peter: that the prouinciall Synodes, are without force, because they want the presence of the Pope that they may order clerkes of any Church that they will: and may call them to their see that haue bene ordered els where. Innumerable of that sorte are in Gratians packe, which I do not nowe rehearse, least I should be to tedious to the Reders. But this is the summe of them, that onely the bishop of Rome hath the Supreme hearing and determining of all ecclesiasticall causes, whether it be in iudging and defining of doctrines, or in making of lawes, or in stablishing of discipline, or in executing or iudgements: It were also long and superfluous to rehearse the priuileges that they take to themselues in reseruations, as they call them. But, (which is most intollerable of all other) they leaue no iudgement in earth to restraine and bridle their outragious lust, if they abuse so immeasurable power. It is rawefull for no man (say they) to reuoke the iudgement of that see, because of the Supremicie of the Church of Rome. Againe. The iudge shalbe iudged neither by the Emperor, nor by kinges, nor by all the Clergie, nor of the people. That is in deede to imperiously done, that one man maketh himselfe iudge of all men, and suffreth himselfe to obey the iudgement of no man. But what if he vse tyranny ouer the people of God? if he scatter abroade and waste the kingdome of Christ? if he trouble the whole Church? if he turne the office of Pastor into robberie? Yea though he be neuer so mischeuous, he sayeth that he is not bounde to yelde accompte. For these be the sayinges of the bishops: Gods wil was to determine the causes of other men by men, but he hath without question reserued the bishop of this see to his owne iudgement. Againe. The doinges of subiectes are iudged of vs: but oures, of God onely.

20 And that ſuch decrees might haue the more weight, they haue falſly thruſt in the names of the olde biſhops, as though things had bene ſo ordeined from the beginning: whereas it is moſt certaine, that it is newe & lately forged whatſoeuer the biſhop of Rome geueth to himſelfe more than we haue rehearſed to be geuen him by the auncient Councells. Yea they are come to ſo great ſhameleſneſſe, that they haue ſet forth a writing vnder the name of Anaſtaſius Patriarche of Conſtantinople, wherin he teſtifieth that it was decreed by the olde rules, that nothing ſhould be done euen in the furtheſt prouinces, that were not firſt moued to the ſee of Rome. Beſide this that it is certaine that this is moſt vaine, what man ſhall thinke it likely, that ſuch a commendation of the ſee of Rome proceded from the aduerſary and enuier of the honor & dignitie therof? But verily it behoued that theſe Antichriſtes ſhould be carried on to ſo great madneſſe and blindeneſſe, that their lewdeneſſe might be plaine for all men to ſee, at leaſt ſo many as will open their eyes. But the decretall epiſtles heaped together by Gregorie the ix. againe the Clementines, and Extrauagantes of Martine, do yet more openly and with fuller mouth eche where breath forth their outragious fierceneſſe and as it were the tyrannie of barbarous kinges. But theſe be the oracles, by which the Romaniſtes will haue their papacie to be weyed. Hereupon aroſe thoſe notable principles, which at this day haue euery where in the papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope cannot erre: that the Pope is aboue the councells: that the Pope is the vniuerſall biſhop of all biſhops, and the Supreme head of the Church in earth: I paſſe ouer the much abſurder follies, which the fooliſh Canoniſtes babble in their ſcholes: to which yet the Romiſh diuines do not onely aſſente, but do alſo clap their handes at them, to flatter their idole.

21 I will not deale with them by extremity of right. Some other man would againſt this their ſo great inſolence ſet the ſaying of Cypriane, which he vſed among the biſhops, at whoes councell he ſate as chiefe. None of vs calleth himſelfe biſhop of biſhops, or with tyrannous feare compelleth his fellowe biſhops to neceſſitie to obey. He would obiect that, which a litle afterwarde was decreed at Carthage. That none ſhould be called Prince of Prieſts, or chiefe biſhop. He would gather many teſtimonies out of Hiſtories, Canons out of Synodes, and many ſentences out of the bokes of olde writers, by which the biſhop of Rome ſhould be brought downe into the fellowſhip of the reſt. But I paſſe ouer all theſe, leaſt I ſhould ſeeme too preciſely to preſſe them. But let the beſt patrones of the ſee of Rome aunſwere me, with what face they dare defende the title of vniuerſal biſhop, which they ſe ſo oft to be condemned with curſe by Gregorie. If Gregories teſtimonie ought to be of force, they do thereby declare that Antichriſt is their biſhop, becauſe they make him vniuerſall. The name alſo of hed was no more vſuall. For thus he ſayeth in Libr. 4. Ep. 92. one place. Peter is the chiefe member in the body, Iohn, Andrewe and Iames the hedes of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Church vnder one hed: yea the holy ones before the lawe, the holy ones vnder the lawe, the holy ones vnder grace, are ſet among members, altogether making vp the body of the Lorde: and no man euer willed to haue himſelfe called vniuerſall. But whereas the biſhop of Rome taketh vpon himſelfe the power of commaun-

Libr. 7. Epiſto. 28. ding, that thing ſmally agreeth with that which Gregory ſaith in an other place, For whereas Eulolius biſhop of Alexandria, had ſaid that he was commaunded by him, he aunſwered in this wiſe. I pray ye, take away this word of commanding from my hearing. For I knowe what I am and what ye be. In place, ye be to me brethren: in maners ye be to me fathers. Therefore I commanded not, but I cared to tell you thoſe things that I thought profitable. Whereas he ſo extendeth his iuriſdiction without end, he doth therin great & hainous wrong, not onely to the other biſhops, but alſo to all particular Churches, which he ſo teareth and plucketh in peeces, that he may bilde his ſeate of their ruines. But whereas he exempteth himſelfe from all iudgements, and will ſo reigne after the maner of tirantes, that he accompteth his owne onely luſt for lawe, that verily is ſo hainous, and ſo farre from eccleſiaſticall order, that it may in no wiſe be borne for it vtterly abhorreth not onely from all feling of godlineſſe, but alſo from all humanitie.

22 But that I be not cõpelled to go through & examine al things particularly, I do againe appelle to them, that will at this day be accompted the beſt and moſt faithfull patrones of the ſee of Rome, whether they be not aſhamed to defende the preſent ſtate of the papacie: which it is certaine to be a hundred times more corrupt, than Libr. 1. Epiſt 5. 7 & 25. & alibi. it was in the times of Gregory and Bernard: which ſtate yet did then ſo much diſpleaſe thoſe holy men. Gregory eche where cõplaineth, that he is to much diuerſly drawen away with forain buſines: that he is vnder the colour of biſhoprike brought back to the world: wherin he ſerueth ſo many cares of the world as he neuer remembreth that he ſerued when he was a lay man: that he is preſſed downe with multe of worldly affaires, that his minde is nothing raiſed vp to things aboue: that he is ſhaken with many waues of cauſes, and toſſed with

tempeſtes of troubleſome life: ſo that he may worthily ſay, I am come into the depth of the ſea. Truely among thoſe earthly buſineſſes, he might yet teache the people with Sermons, priuately admoniſhe and correct ſuch as it behoued, order the Church, geue counſell to his fellowe biſhops and exhort them to their dutie: beſide theſe things there remained ſome time to write: and yet he lamenteth his calamitie, that he is drowned in the depeſt ſea. If the gouernement of that time was a ſea: what is to be ſayed of the papacie at this time? For what likeneſſe haue they together? Here be no preachings, no care of diſcipline, no zele to the Churches, no ſpirituall doing, finally nothing but the world. Yet this maze is praiſed, as though there could nothing be founde more orderly and better framed. But what complaintes doth Bernarde poure out, what grones doth he vtter, when he loketh vpon the faultes of his age? What then would he do, if he behelde this our age of iron, and worſe if any be worſe than iron? What obſtinate wickednesſe is this, not onely ſtiffly to defende as holy and diuine, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but alſo to abuſe their teſtimonie to the defenſe of the papacie, which it is certaine that they neuer knewe of? Howbeit of Bernardes time I confeſſe, that then the corruption of all things was ſo great, that it was not much vnlike our time. But they are without all ſhame, that fetche any pretenſe for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregory, & ſuch other. For they do like as if one, to ſtabliſhe the Monarchie of Emperours, would praiſe the olde ſtate of the Empire of Rome: that is, would borrowe the praiſes of libertie, to ſet forth the honor of tyranny.

23 Finally, although all theſe things were graunted them: yet there ariſeth of freſh a newe ſtrife for them, when we deny that there is a Church at Rome, in which ſuch benefites may be reſident: when we denie that there is a biſhop, which may beare theſe priuileges of dignitie. Admit therefore all thoſe things to be true, (which yet we haue already wroong from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Chriſt appointed hed of the vniuerſall Church: and that he left the honor that was geuen him, in the ſee of Rome: that the ſame was ſtabliſhed by the authoritie of the auncient Church, and confirmed with long continuaunce: that the Supreme power hath bene alway by one conſent geuen of all men to the biſhop of Rome: that he hath bene the iudge of all both cauſes and men, and himſelfe ſubiect to the iudgement of none: let them haue alſo more, if they will: yet I anſwere in one word, that none of theſe things auaile, vnleſſe there be at Rome a Church & a biſhop. This they muſt needes graunt me, that it can not be the morher of Churches, which is not it ſelfe a Church: that he can not be chiefe of biſhops, which is not himſelfe a biſhop. Will they therfore haue the ſee Apoſtolike at Rome? Then let them ſhewe me a true and lawefull Apoſtleſhip. Will they haue the chief biſhop? Then let them ſhewe me a biſhop. But what? where will they ſhewe vs any face of a Church? They name one in deede, and haue it oft in their mouth. Truely the Church is knowen by her certaine markes: and biſhoprike is a name of office. I ſpeake not here of the people: but of the gouernment it ſelfe, which ought continually to ſhine in the Church. Where is the miniſterie in their Church, ſuch as Chriſtes inſtitution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before bene ſpoken of the office of Prieſts and of a biſhop. If we ſhall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, we ſhall confeſſe that they are nothing leſſe than Prieſts. As for the chiefe biſhop himſelfe, I would faine knowe what one thing at all he hath biſhoplike. Firſt it is the principall point in the office of a biſhop, to teach the people with the word of God: an other and the next point to that is, to miniſter the ſacraments: the third is to admoniſh and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to hold the people together in holy diſcipline. What of theſe things doth he? yea, what doth he faine himſelfe to do: Let them tell therefore, by what meane they would haue him to be compted biſhop, that doth not with his little finget, no not ones ſo much as in outwarde ſhewe, touche any part of a biſhops office.

24 It is not ſo of a biſhop as it is of a king. For a king, although he do not execute that which belongeth to a king, doth neuertheleſſe reteine the honor and title. But in iudging of a biſhop reſpect is had to Chriſtes commaundement, which alway ought to be of force in the Church. Therefore let the Romaniſtes looſe me this knot. I denie that their hy biſhop, is the chiefe of biſhops, foraſmuch as he is no biſhop. They muſt needes proue this laſt point to be falſe, if they will haue the victorie in the firſt. But howe ſay they to this, that he not onely hath no propertie of a biſhop, but rather all things contrarie? But here O God, where at ſhall I beginne? at his learning, or at his maners? What ſhall I ſay, or what ſhall I leaue vnſaide? where ſhall I make an ende? This I ſay: that whereas the world is at this day, ſtuffed with ſo many peruerſe and wicked doctrines, full of ſo many kindes of ſuperſtitions, blinded with ſo many errors, drowned in ſo great idolatry: there is none of theſe any where, that hathe not either flowed from thenſe, or at leaſt bene there confirmed. Neither is there any other cauſe, why the biſhops are caried with ſo greate rage againſt the doctrine of the Goſpell newly ſpringing vp againe, why they bend all their ſtrengthes to oppreſſe it, why they kindle vp kings and princes to crueltie, but becauſe they ſee that their whole kingdom decayeth & falleth down, ſo ſone as the Goſpell of Chriſt cometh in place. Leo was cruell: Clement was bloudie: Paule is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not ſo much moued them to fight againſt the truth, as for that this was their onely meane to maintain their power. Therfore ſith they can not be ſafe, till they haue driuen away Chriſt, they trauaile in this cauſe, as if they did fight for their religion and contries, and for their owne liues. What then? Shall that be to vs the ſee Apoſtolike, where we ſee nothing but horrible Apoſtaſie? Shal he be Chriſtes vicar, which by perſecuting the Goſpel with furious enterpriſes, doth openly profeſſe himſelfe to be Antichriſt? Shall he be Peters ſucceſſour, that rangeth with ſwerd and fire, to deſtroy all that euer Peter hath builded? Shall he be hed of the Church that cutting of & diſmembring the Church from Chriſt the onely true head thereof, doth in it ſelfe plucke and teare it in pieces? Admitte verily that in the olde time Rome was the mother of all Churches: yet ſins it hath begon to be the ſeate of Antichriſt, it hath ceſſed to be that which it was.

25 We ſeeme to be to much euill ſpeakers and railers, when we call the biſhop of Rome Antichriſt. But they that ſo thinke, do not vnderſtande that they accuſe Paule of immodeſtie, after whom we ſo ſpeake, yea out of whoes mouth we ſo ſpeake. And leaſt any man obiecte, that we do wrongfully wreſt againſt the biſhop of Rome, theſe wordes of Paul that are ſpoken to an other intent, I will brefely ſhewe, that they can not be otherwiſe vnderſtanded, but of the Papacie. Paul writeth, that Antichriſt ſhall ſitt in the temple of God. 2. Theſ. 2.4. In an other place alſo the Holy Ghoſt deſcribing his image in the perſon of Antiochus, ſheweth that his kingdome ſhal conſiſt in hautineſſe of ſpeche, and blaſphemings of God. Hereupon we gather, that it is rather a tyrannie ouer ſoules, than ouer bodies, that is raiſed vp againſt the ſpirituall kingdom of Chriſt. Then, that it is ſuch, as doth not aboliſh the name of Chriſt and the Church: but rather ſhould abuſe the pretẽce of Chriſt, and lurke vnder the title of the Church, as vnder a diſguiſed viſour. But although all the hereſies and ſectes that haue bene from the beginning, belong to the kingdome of Antichriſt: yet where as Paule prophecieth, that there ſhall come a departing, by this deſcription he ſignifieth, that that ſeate of abhomination ſhall then be raiſed vp, when a certaine vniuerſall departing ſhall poſſeſſe the Church: howſoeuer many membres of the Church Dan. 7. 25.

here and there continue in the true vnitie of faith. But where he addeth, that in his time he began in a myſterie to ſette vp the worke of iniquitie, which he would afterward ſhewe openly: thereby we vnderſtand, that this calamitie was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Nowe whereas he doth ſet out Antichriſt by this marke, that he ſhould plucke away from God his due honor, to take it to himſelf: this is the chiefe token that we ought to followe in ſeeking out of Antichriſt, ſpecially where ſuch pride procedeth euen to the publike diſſipation of the Church. Sith therfore it is certaine, that the biſhop of Rome hath ſhameleſſely conueyed away to himſelfe that which was the chiefe propre thing to God alone & Chriſt, it is not to be douted but that he is the capitaine and ſtanderdbearer of the wicked and abhominable kingdome.

26 Nowe let the Romaniſts go, and obiect an iquitie againſt vs: As if in ſo great alteration of all things, the honor of the See might ſtand where there is no ſee. Euſebius telleth, howe God, that there might be place for his vengeance, remoued the Church that was at Hieruſalem to Pella. That which we heare to haue bene ones doone, might be ofter donne. Therefore ſo to binde the honor of ſupremacy to a place, that he which is in deede the moſt hatefull enemy of Chriſt, the hieſt aduerſarie of the Goſpell, the greateſt waſter and deſtroyer of the Church, the moſt cruell ſlaughterma & butcher of the ſaints, ſhould neuertheleſſe be accompted the vicar of Chriſt, the ſucceſſor of Peter, the chief biſhop of the Church, only becauſe he occupieth the ſee that was ones the chiefeſt of all: that verily is to much to be ſcorned and fooliſhe. I ſpeake not, howe great difference there is betwene the popes chauncerie, and a well framed order of the Church, Howbeit this one thing may well take away all dout of this queſtion. For no man that hath his right wit, will thinke the biſhoprike encloſed in leade and bulles: much leſſe, in that ſchoole of fraudes and deceites, in which thinges the Popes ſpirituall gouernment conſiſteth. Therefore it was very well ſaid by a certain man, that that Church of Rome which is boſted of, is long ago tourned into a court which onely is nowe ſeene at Rome. Neither do I here accuſe the faultes of men: but I ſhewe that the Papacie it ſelfe is directly contrary to the true order of a Church.

Euſeb. libr. 3. cap. 5.

27 But if we come to the perſones of men, it is well enough knowē what maner of vicars of Chriſt we ſhall finde. Iulius forſooth, and Leo, and Clement, and Paul, ſhalbe pillers of the chriſtian faith, and the chiefe expoſitours of religion, which neuer knewe any other thing of Chriſt, than that which he had learned in Lucians ſchole.

But

But why do I recken vp thre or fower Popes? as though it were doutful, what maner of forme of religion the Popes with their whole college of Cardinals haue sins long ago professed, & at this day do professe. For first this is the principall article of that secret Diuinity that reigneth among them, That there is no God: the seconde, That all things that are written and taught concerning Christ, are lies and deceits: the third, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the last resurrection, are mere fables. They do not all thinke so: and fewe of them speake so. I graunt. But this hath long ago begon to be the ordinarie religion of Popes. Whereas this is very well knowen to all that knowe Rome, yet the Romishe Diuines ceasse not to bost, that by Christes priuilege it is prouided, that the Pope can not erre, because it was said to Peter: I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith should not faint. What, I pray you, winne they by mocking so shamelessely, but that the whole world may vnderstand, that they are come to that extremitie of wickednesse, that they neither feare God, nor stande in awe of men? Luc. 22. 32.

28 But let vs imagine, that the vngodlines of those Popes whom I haue spoken of, is hidden, because they haue neither published it by prechings, nor by writings: but onely haue bewrayed it at their table, and in their chamber, or at least within walles of houses. But if they will haue this priuilege to be of force, which they pretēde, they must needes wipe Iohn the. xxij. out of the number of Popes, who openly affirmed that soules are mortall, and that they die together with the bodies vntil the day of resurrection. And, that you may perceiue that the whole See with her principall stayes was then wholly fallen: none of all the Cardinals withstode so great a madnesse, but the schoole of Parise moued the king of Fraunce to compell him to recant it. The kinge forbad his subiectes to communicate with him, vnlesse he did out of hande repent: and the same, as the maner is, he proclaimed by a heralde. The Pope compelled by this necessitie, abiured his error. This example maketh that I neede not to dispute any more with my aduersaries about this that they say, that ỹ see of Rome and the bishops therof, can not erre in the faith, because it was saide to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may not fainte. Truly he fell with so fowle a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which succede after Peter in the bishoprike. Howbeit this is also of it selfe so childish, that it needeth no aunswere. For if they will drawe to Peters successours whatsoeuer was spoken to Peter, it shall followe that they are all Satans, forasmuch as the Lorde said this also to Gerson vvhich liued then. Luc. 22. 32. Mat. 16. 23.

Peter. Go behinde, thou Satan, becauſe thou art an offence to me. For it ſhalbe as eaſy for vs to turne backe this latter ſaying againſt them, as it ſhalbe for them to obiect the other againſt vs.

29 But I liſt not to ſtriue with them in playing the foole. Therfore I returne thether from whenſe I made digreſſion. So to bind the place, and Chriſt, and the Holy Ghoſt, and the Church together, that whoſoeuer ſit in that place, although he be the deuil, yet he muſt be iudged the vicar of Chriſt, and the hed of the Church, becauſe it was ones the ſeate of Peter: I ſay this is not onely wicked & ſclaunderous to Chriſt, but alſo to great an abſurdity and againſt common reaſon. It is already long ago ſins the biſhops of Rome are either without al religion, or the greateſt enemies of religion. Therefore they are no more made the vicars of Chriſt, by reaſon of the ſeate which they occupie, than an idoll, when it is ſet in the tẽple of God, is to be taken for God. Nowe if their maners be to be iudged vppon, let the Popes themſelues aunſwere for themſelues: what one thinge at all there is in them, wherin they may be knowen for biſhops. Firſt whereas there is ſuch life at Rome, they not onely winking at it, but alſo as it were with ſecret countenãce allowing it, this is vtterly vnmete for biſhops, whoes duetie is with ſeueritie of diſcipline to reſtraine the licẽtiouſneſſe of the people. But I will not be ſo rigorous againſt them, to charge them with other mens faultes. But whereas they themſelues, with their owne houſehold, with almoſt ỹ whole college of Cardinals, with ỹ whole flocke of their clergie, are ſo geuen forth to all wickedneſſe, filthineſſe, vncleanneſſe, to all kindes of lewde and miſcheuous doings, that they reſemble rather monſters than men: therin truely they bewray thẽſelues to be nothing leſſe thã biſhops. And yet they neede not to feare leaſt I ſhould further diſcloſe their filthineſſe. For both I am wery to haue to do in ſo ſtinking mire, and I muſt fauour chaſt eares, and I thinke that I haue already enough and more proued that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in old time bene the head of Churches, yet at this day ſhe is not worthy to be iudged one of the ſmalleſt toes of the Churches feete.

2. Theſ 2. 4.

30 As concerning the Cardinals (as they call them) I can not tell howe it is come to paſſe, that they be ſo ſodeinly riſen vp to ſo great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to biſhops only. For ſo oft as he maketh mention of Cardinals, he meaneth it not of them of the Church of Rome, but of any other: ſo that brefely, a Cardinall Prieſt is nothing els but a biſhop. In the writers before that age I finde not this name at all. But I ſee that they were then leſſe than biſhops, whom they be nowe farre aboue. This ſaying of Auguſtine is well knowen: Although according to the names of honor, which the vse of the Church hath already obtained, bishoprike is greater than priesthoode, yet in many things Augustine is lesse than Hierom. Here in deede he maketh difference betwene a priest of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently setteth them all behinde the bishops. And ẏ was so long obserued, that in ẏ Councel at Carthage, when there were present two legates of the see of Rome, the one a bishop, the other a priest, the priest was thrust back into ẏ last place. But not to folow two old examples, there remaineth a Councel holden vnder Gregorie at Rome, at which the prieſtes sate in the lowest place, & subscribed seuerally by themselues, as for the Deacons, they had no place at al in subscribing. And truely they had then no office, but to be present and vnder the bishop at ministring of doctrine and of the sacraments. Now the case is so changed, that they are become the cousins of kings and Emperours. And it is no dout but that they grew vp by litle and litle together with their heade, till they were aduaunced to this hie toppe of dignity. But this also I thought good to touch shortly by the way, that the readers might the better vnderstande, that the See of Rome, such as it is at this day, doth much differ from that auncient one, vnder pretense wherof, it doth nowe maintaine and defende it selfe. But of what sort soeuer they were in old time, forasmuch as they haue now nothinge of the true and lawfull office in the Church, they retaine only a deceitful colour & vaine visour: yea forasmuch as they haue all thinges vtterly contrary, it was necessary that that should happen to them, which Gregorie wryteth so oft. I say it (sayth he) wepinge: I giue warninge of it, groning: ẏ sith the order of priesthoode is fallen within, it shall also not be able to stand long without. But rather it behoued that this should be fulfilled in thē which Malachie sayth of such: Ye haue gone backe out of the way, and haue made many to stumble in the law. Therefore ye haue made voide the couenant of Leui, sayth the Lord. Therfore beholde I haue giuen you out of estimation, and vile to all the people. Now I leaue it to all the godly to thinke of what sort is that supreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papistes with abhominable shamelesnesse sticke not to make subiect the very worde of God, which ought to haue bin honorable & holy both to heauen & earth, men and Angels.

Lib 4. epist. 25 & 55. Lib 5. epist. 7. Mala. 2. 8.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of Faith: & with how vnbridled licentiousnes it hath in the Papacy bin vvrested to corrupt all pureneſſe of Doctrine.

NOw foloweth the third place, of the power of the Church, which partely conſiſteth in all the biſhoppes, and partely in the Councelles, and thoſe either prouinciall or generall. I ſpeake onely of the ſpirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That conſiſteth either in doctrine, or in iuriſdiction, or in makinge of lawes. Doctrine hath two partes, the authoritie to teache articles of Doctrine, and the expoundinge of them. Before that we beginne to diſcourſe of euery one of theſe in ſpecialty, we will that the godly readers be warned, that whatſoeuer is taught concerning the power of the Church, they muſt remember to applie it to that ende, whereunto (as Paule teſtifieth) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to deſtruction: which who ſo lawefully vſe, they thinke themſelues no more than the miniſters of Chriſt, and therewithall the miniſters of the people in Chriſt. Nowe of the edifyinge of the Church, this is the onely way, if the miniſters themſelues endeuour to preſerue to Chriſt his authoritie, which can not otherwiſe be ſafe vnleſſe that be left vnto him, which he receiued of his Father: that is, that he be the onely ſchoolemaiſter of the Church. For it is wrytten, not of any other, but of him alone, Heare him. The power of the Church therfore is not to be ſparingly ſet forth, but yet to be encloſed within certaine boundes, that it be not drawen hither and thither after the luſt of men. Hereunto it ſhalbe much profitable to note, how it is deſcribed of the Prophetes and Apoſtles. For if we ſimply graunt vnto mē ſuch power as they liſt to take vppon them, it is plaine to all men, what a ſlippery readineſſe there is to fal into tyranny, which ought to be farre from the Church of Chriſt.

2. Cor. 10. 8. & 13. 10.

2 Therfore here it muſt be remembred, that whatſoeuer authority or dignity ỹ holy Ghoſt in the ſcripture giueth either to the prieſts or to the Prophets, or to the Apoſtles, or to the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, al that ſame is giuen, not proprely to the men themſelues, but to the miniſtery ouer which they are appointed, or (to ſpeake it more plainly in one word) whereof the miniſtery is commited to them. For if we go through them all in order, we ſhall not finde that they had any authority to teach or to anſwere, but in the name and word of the Lord. For when they are called to the office, it is alſo enioyned them, that that they ſhould bring nothinge of themſelues, but ſpeake out of the mouth of the Lord. And he himſelfe doth not bring them foorth to be heard of the people, before that he haue giuen them inſtructions what they ought to ſpeake, to the entent that they ſhould ſpeake nothing beſide his word. Moſes himſelfe, the prince of all the Prophets, was to be heard aboue the reſt: but he was firſt inſtructed with his cõmaundemẽtes, that he might not declare any thing at all, but frõ the Lord. Therefore it is ſayd, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, beleued in God and in his ſeruant Moſes. Alſo that the authority of the prieſtes ſhould not grow in contempt, it was ſtabliſhed with moſt grieuous penalties. But therwithall the Lord ſheweth vpon what condition they were to be heard, when he ſaith ẏ he hath made his couenãt with Leui, that the law of trueth ſhould be in his mouth. And a litle after he addeth: The lips of the prieſt ſhal kepe knowledge, & they ſhal require the law at his mouth: becauſe he is the angell of the God of hoſtes. Therefore if the prieſt will be heard, let him ſhew himſelfe the meſſinger of God: that is, let him faithfully reporte the cõmaundements that he receiued of his author. And where it is ſpecially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expreſly ſet, That they may anſwere according to the law of God.

Deu. 17 10.

3 What maner of power the Prophets generally had, is very well deſcribed in Ezechiel: Thou ſonne of man (ſayth the Lord) I haue giuen thee to be a watcheman to the houſe of Iſraell. Therefore thou ſhalt heare the worde out of my mouth, and thou ſhalt declare it to them from me. He that is commaunded to heare out of the mouth of the Lorde, is he not forbidden to inuent any thinge of himſelfe? But what is to declare from the Lord, but ſo to ſpeake as he may boldely boaſt, that it is not his owne, but the Lords word ẏ he hath brought? The ſelfe ſame thing is in Hieremy, in other words. Let the Prophet (ſayth he) with whom is a dreame, tell a dreame: & let him that hath my word ſpeake my word true. Certainly he appointeth a law to thẽ all. And that is ſuch, that he permitteth not any to teach more than he is commaunded. And after he calleth it chaffe, all that is not come from himſelfe only. Therfore none of the Prophets themſelues opened his mouth, but as the Lord told him the wordes before. Wherupon theſe ſayings are ſo oft found among them: the word of the lord, the burden of the Lord, ſo ſayth the Lord, the mouth of ẏ Lord hath ſpoken. And worthily. For Eſay cried out that he had defiled lips. Ieremy cõfeſſed that he could not ſpeake, becauſe he was a child: What coulde proceede from the defiled mouth of the one, and the fooliſh mouth of the other, but vncleane and vnwiſe, if they had ſpokẽ their owne ſpech? But his lips were holy and pure, when they began to be the inſtruments of the holy Ghoſt. When the Prophets are bounde with this religion, that they deliuer nothinge, but that which they haue receiued, then they be garniſhed with notable power and excellent titles. For when the lorde teſtifieth, that he hath ſet them ouer nations and kingdomes, to plucke vp and to roote out, to deſtroy Ier.1.10 and plucke downe, to build and to plant, he byandby adioyneth the cauſe: becauſe he hath put his words in their mouth.

4 Now if you looke to the Apoſtles: they are in deede commended with many & notable titles, that they are the light of the world, and the ſalt of the earth, that they are to be hearde in ſtede of Chriſt, that whatſoeuer they binde or looſe in earth ſhalbe bound or looſed in heauen. But in their very name they ſhew how much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be Apoſtles, that they ſhould not prate whatſoeuer they liſt: but ſhould faithfully report his commaundements frō whom they are ſent. And the words of Chriſt are plaine
Mat.28.9. enough, in ẅ he hath determined their embaſſage: whē he commaũded thē to go & teach all nations, all thoſe things ẏ he had cōmaunded. Yea & he himſelfe alſo receiued this law, & laid it vpō himſelfe, Iohn.7.16. that it ſhould be lawfull for no mā to refuſe it. My doctrine (ſayth he) is not mine, but his that ſent me, my fathers. He that was alway the only & eternall counſeller of the Father, & he that was appointed by the Father the Lorde and ſchoolemaiſter of all men, yet becauſe he executed the miniſtery of techinge, preſcribed by his owne example to all miniſters what rule they ought to folow in teaching. Therfore the power of the Church is not infinit, but ſubiect to the word of the lord, & as it were encloſed in it.

5 But ſith this hath from the beginning bin of force in the church, & at this day ought to be in force, that the ſeruantes of God ſhould teach nothing, which they haue not learned of him: yet according to the diuerſity of times they had diuers orders of learning. But that or-Mat.11.27. der which is now, much differeth from thoſe that were before. Firſt if it be true which Chriſt ſayeth, that none hath ſeene the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom it hath pleaſed the Sonne to ſhew him: it behoued verily that they ſhould be alway directed by that eternal wiſdom of the Father, which would come to the knowledge of God. For how ſhould they either haue comprehended in minde, or vttered the miſteries of God, but by his teaching, to whom alone the ſecretes of the Father are opē? Therfore the holy fathers in old time knew God no other wiſe but beholding him in the Sonne as in a glaſſe. When I ſay this, I meane that God did neuer by any other meane diſcloſe him

ſelfe to men but by the Sonne, that is, his only wiſdom, light, & truth. Out of this fountaine did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob & the other drawe all the knowledge that they had of heauenly doctrine. Out of the ſame fountaine haue alſo all the Prophets thēſelues drawen all the heauenly Oracles that they vttered For verily this Wiſedom hath alway diſcloſed it ſelfe by moe waies than one. To the Patriarches he vſed ſecret reuelations: but therwithall to confirme their mindes, he adioyned ſuch ſignes, that it could not be doutful to them, that it was God that ſpake. The Patriarches conueied ouer frō hand to hand to poſterity, that which they had receiued. For the Lord left it with them to this entent, that they ſhould ſo ſpread it abroade. But the children and childrens children, by God ſecretly informing thē, did know that that which they heard was from heauen, & not from the earth.

6 But when it pleaſed God, to raiſe a more apparant forme of a Church, he willed to haue his word put in wryting & noted, that the prieſtes ſhould fetch from thēſe what they might deliuer to the people, and that all the doctrine that ſhould be taught ſhould be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publiſhing of the law, when the prieſts are commaunded to teache out of the mouth of the Lord, the meaninge is, that they ſhould teach nothinge ſtraunge or differinge from that kinde of learning which the Lord comprehended in the lawe: & to adde and diminiſh was vnlawful for them. Then followed the Prophetes, by whom in dede the Lord publiſhed new oracles to be added to the law: but yet not ſo new, but that they came out of the law, & had reſpect vnto it. For, as touching doctrine, they were only expoſitors of the law, & added nothing vnto it, but prophecies of things to come. Thoſe excepted, they vttered nothing elſe but a pure expoſitiō of the law. But becauſe it pleaſed the Lord that there ſhould be a plainer & larger doctrine, that weake conſciēces might be the better ſatisfied: he commaūded that the Prophecies alſo ſhould be put in writing, and accompted parte of his word. And hereunto were added the hiſtories, which are alſo the works of the Prophets, but made by the enditinge of the holy Ghoſt. I recken the Pſalmes amonge the Prophecies, becauſe that which we attribute to the prophecies is alſo cōmon to the pſalmes. Therefore that whole body compacted of the law, prophecies, pſalmes & hiſtories, was the word of ỹ Lord to ỹ old people, by the rule whereof the prieſts & teachers euē vnto Chriſtes time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawful for them to ſwarue either to the right hand or to the left: becauſe all their office was encloſed within theſe boundes, that they ſhould aunſwere the people out of the mouth of God. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindefull of the law, & to giue hede to it, euen to the preachinge of the Gospell. For therby he forbiddeth them all new found doctrines, & graunteth thē no leaue to swarue neuer so litle out of the way which Moses hadde faithfully shewed thē. And this is the reason why Dauid so honorably setteth out the excellēcy of the law, & rehearseth so many praises of it: that is, that the Iewes should couet no forein thing without it, sith within it was all perfection enclosed.

7 But when at last the Wisdom of God was openly shewed in the flesshe, that same Wisdom with full mouth declared vnto vs all that euer can with mans wirte be comprehended, or ought to be thought concerninge the heauenly Father. Nowe therefore, since Christ the sonne of righteousnesse hath shined, we haue a perfect brightnesse of the trueth of God, such as the cleareneſſe is wont to be at midde day, when the light was before but dimme. For verily the Prophete meant not to speake of any meane thinge, when he wrote that God in olde time spake diuersly & many wayes to the fathers by the Prophetes: but ỳ in these last daies he began to speak to vs by his beloued Sonne. For he signifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not hereafter, as he did before, speake sometime by some and sometime by other, nor will adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or reuelations to reuelations: but that he hath so fulfilled all the partes of teachinge in the Sonne, that they must haue this of him for the last and eternall testimony. After which sort al this time of the new Testament wherin Christ hath appeared to vs with the preaching of his Gospell euen to the day of iudgement, is expressed by the last houre, the last times, the last daies: to the end verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Christ, we should learne neither to fayne vs any newe beside it, or receiue it fained of other. Therfore not without cause the Father hath by singular prerogatiue ordayned the Sonne to be our Teacher: commaunding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did in deede in few wordes set out his schoolemaistership vnto vs, when he sayd, heare him: but in which there is more weight and force than men commonly thinke. For it is as much in effect, as if leading vs away from all doctrines of men, he should bring vs to him only, and commaūd vs to looke for al the doctrine of saluation at him alone, to hang vpon him alone, to cleaue to him alone, finally (as the very wordes do sound) to harkē to the voice of him alone. And truely what ought there now to be either looked for or desired at the hand of man, when the very worde of life hath familiarly and openly disclosed himselfe

vnto vs? Yea but it is mete that the mouthes of all men be ſhut, after that he, in whom the heauenly Father willed to haue al the treaſures of knowledge and wiſedome to be hidden, hath once ſpoken, and ſo ſpoken as became both the wiſdom of God (which is in no parte vnperfect) and Meſſias at whoſe hande the reuelation of all thinges is hoped for: that is to ſay, that he left nothinge afterward for other to be ſpoken. Iohn. 4. 25.

8 Let this therfore be a ſtedfaſt principle: ỹ there is to be had no other word of God, wherunto place ſhould be giuen in the Church, than that which is contained firſt in the lawe & the Prophets, & then in the writinges of the Apoſtles: and that there is no other maner of teaching rightly, but accordinge to the preſcription and rule of that word. Hereupon alſo we gather, that there was no other thing graunted to the Apoſtles, but that which ỹ Prophets had had in olde time: that is, that they ſhoulde expounde the olde Scripture, and ſhew that thoſe thinges that are therein taught are fulfilled in Chriſt: and yet that they ſhoulde not do the ſame but of the Lord, that is to ſay, the Spirit of Chriſt going before them, and after a certaine maner enditinge wordes vnto them. For Chriſt limited their embaſſage with this condition when he commaunded them to go and teache, not ſuch thinges as they themſelues had raſhely forged, but all thoſe thinges that he had commaunded them. And nothing could be more plainly ſpoken, than that which he ſayth in an other place: but be not ye called maiſters, for onely one is your maiſter, Chriſt. Then, to emprint this more deepely in their minde, he repeateth it twiſe in the ſame place. And becauſe their rudenes was ſuch, that they could not conceiue thoſe thinges that they had hearde & learned of the mouth of their maiſter, therfore the Spirit of trueth is promiſed them, by whom they ſhould be directed to the true vnderſtāding of all things. For that ſame reſtraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is aſſigned to the holy Ghoſt, to put thē in mind of all thoſe things ỹ he before taught them by mouth. Mat. 28 20. Mat. 23 8. Ioh. 14. 26. & 16 13.

9 Therefore Peter who was very wel taught how much he might lawfully do, leaueth nothing either to himſelf or other, but to diſtribute the doctrine deliuered of God. Let him that ſpeaketh (ſayth he) ſpeake as the words of God, ỹ is to ſay, not doutingly, as they are wōt to tremble whoſe own conſcience miſgiueth them, but with ſure confidence, w̃ becōmeth the ſeruāt of God furniſhed with aſſured inſtructions. What other thinge is this, but to forbid al inuentions of mans minde, from what head ſoeuer they haue proceded, ỹ the pure word of God may be heard & learned in the church of ỹ faithful? to take away 1. Pet. 4. 11.

the ordinances or rather the fayned deuises of all men, of what degree soeuer they be, that the decrees of God onely may remaine in force? These be those spirituall armures, mighty through God to cast downe holdes: by which the faithfull seruantes of God may throwe downe counselles, and all height that aduaunceth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and may leade all knowledge captiue to obey Christ. Lo this is the soueraigne power, wherewith it behoueth the Pastors of the Church to be endued, by what name soeuer they be called, that is, that by the word of God they may with confidence be bold to do all thinges: may compell all the strength, glory, wisdom & height of the world to yeelde and obey to his maiesty: being vpholden by his power, may commaunde all euen from the hiest to the lowest: may build vp the house of Christ and pull downe the house of Satan: may feede the sheepe and driue away the wolues: may instruct and exhort the willing to learne: may reproue, rebuke & subdue the rebellious and stubborne: may binde, and loose: finally may thunder and lighten, if nede be: but all thinges in the word of God. Howbeit there is, as I haue said, this difference betwene the Apostles and their successors, that the Apostles were the certaine and authentike secretaries of the holy Ghost, & therefore their wrytings are to be estemed for the Oracles of God: but the other haue none other office, but to teach that which is set forth and written in the holy Scriptures. We determine therefore, that this is not nowe left to faithfull ministers, that they may coyne any new doctrine, but that they ought simply to cleaue to ỹ doctrine, wherunto the lord hath made al mẽ without exception subiect. When I say this, my meaninge is not onely to shew what is lawfull for all particular men, but also what is lawfull for the whole vniuersall Church. Now as touchinge all particular men: Paule verily was ordained by the Lorde Apostle to the Corinthians: but he denieth that he hath dominion ouer their faith. Who nowe dare take a dominion vpon himselfe, which Paule testifieth that it belonged not to him? If he had acknowledged himselfe to haue this liberty of teaching, that whatsoeuer ỹ Pastor teacheth he may therein of right require to be beleued: he would neuer haue taught the Corinthians this discipline, that while two or three Prophets speake, the rest should iudge, & if it were reuealed to any that sate, the first should holde his peace. For so he spared none, whose authority he made not subiect to the iudgement of the word of God. But, wil some man say, of the whole vniuersall Church the case is otherwise. I answere that in an other place Paule meeteth with this dout also, where he sayth, that Faith is by hearinge, and hearinge by the word of God. Truely if faith hang of the word of God only, hath reſpect vnto & reſteth vpō it alone, what place is there now left to ỹ word of the whole world? For herin no mā may dout, ỹ hath wel knowē what Faith is. For Faith ought to be ſtaid vpon ſuch aſſuredneſs, wherby it may ſtand inuincible againſt Satan, & all the engines of the hels, & againſt the whole world. This aſſuredneſs we ſhal no where find but in the only word of God. Again, it is a generall rule which we here ought to haue reſpect vnto: that God doth therefore take from men the power to ſet forth a new doctrine, ỹ he only may be our ſchoolemaiſter in heauēly learninge, as he only is true which can neither lie nor deceiue. This rule belōgeth no leſſe to ỹ whole Church than to euery one of ỹ faithfull.

10 But if this power of the Church, which we haue ſpoken of, be compared with that power, whereof the ſpiritual tyrantes, that haue falſly called thēſelues Biſhops & Prelates of religion, haue in certaine ages paſt boaſted thēſelues among the people of God, the agrement ſhalbe no better than Chriſt hath w̄ Beliall. Yet it is not in this place my purpoſe to declare in what ſort & with how wicked meanes they haue exerciſed their tyranny: I will but rehearſe the doctrine, which at this day they defende, firſt with writings, & then with ſwerd & fire. Becauſe they take it for a thing confeſſed, that a generall Councell is the true image of the Church, when they haue taken this principle, they do without dout determine, that ſuch councels are immediatly gouerned of the holy Ghoſt, & that therefore they can not erre. But wheras they themſelues do rule, the councels, yea & make them, they do in dede chalēge to themſelues whatſoeuer they affirme to be due to the Councels. Therfore they will haue our Faith to ſtand & fall at their wil, that whatſoeuer they ſhal determine on the one ſide or the other, may be ſtabliſhed & certaine to our mindes: ſo ỹ if they allow any thing we muſt allow the ſame without douting: if they condemne any thing we muſt alſo hold it for cōdemned. In the meane time after their owne luſt, & deſpiſing the word of God, they coyne doctrines, to which afterward they require by this rule to haue Faith giuen. For they alſo ſay that he is no Chriſtian, that doth not certainly conſent to all their doctrines as well affirmatiue as negatiue: if not with expreſſed yet with vnexpreſſed Faith: becauſe it is in the power of the Church, to make new articles of the Faith.

11 Firſt let vs heare by what argumentes they proue that this authority is giuen to the Church: and then we ſhall ſee how much that maketh for thē which they alleage of the Church. The Church (ſay they) hath notable promiſes, that it ſhall neuer be forſaken of Chriſt her ſpouſe, but that it ſhalbe guided by his Spirit into all truth. But of the promiſes which they are wont to alleage, many are giuē no leſſe to euery one of the faithfull particularly, than to the whole Church vniuerſally. For though the Lord ſpake to the twelue Apoſtles, when he ſaid: Beholde I am with you euen to the end of the world: Again I will aske my Father, & he ſhall giue you an other comforter, namely the Spirit of truth: yet he made the promiſe not only to the whole number of the twelue, but alſo to euery one of thē: yea to the other diſciples likewiſe, either thoſe that he had already receiued, or thoſe that ſhould afterward be added to thē. But when they expounde ſuch promiſes ful of ſingular comfort, as though they were giuen to none of the Chriſtians, but to the whole Church together: what do they elſe, but take away from all Chriſtians that confidence which they all ought to receiue thereby to encorage them? Yet I do not here deny, but that the whole felowſhip of the faithfull furniſhed with manifold diuerſity of giftes, is endued with much larger & more plentiful treaſure of the heauenly wiſedom, than eche one ſeuerally: neither is it my meaning, that this is ſpoken in common to the faithful, as though they were all alike endued with the Spirite of vnderſtanding and doctrine: but becauſe it is not to be graunted, to ỹ aduerſaries of Chriſt, that they ſhould for the defenſe of an euill cauſe wreſt the Scripture to a wronge ſenſe. But, omittinge this, I ſimply confeſſe that which is true, that the lord is perpetually preſent with his, & ruleth them with his Spirite. And that this Spirite is not the Spirit of errour, ignorance, lying or darkeneſſe: but of ſure reuelation, wiſdom, trueth, & light, of whome they not deceitfully may learne thoſe thinges that are giuen them, that is to ſay, what is the hope of their calling, & what be the richeſſe of the glory of the inheritance of God in the ſaintes. But whereas the faithfull, euen they that are endued with more excellent giftes aboue the reſt, do in this fleſh receiue only the firſt frutes & a certaine taſt of that Spirit: there remaineth nothing leeuer to them than knowing their owne weakenes, to holde themſelues carefully within the boundes of the word of God: leaſt, if they wander far after their owne ſenſe, they byandby ſtray out of the right way, inſomuch as they be yet voide of that Spirite, by whoſe only teachinge trueth is diſcerned from falſhode. For all men do confeſſe with Paule, that they haue not yet attained to the marke. Therefore they more endeuour to daily profiting, than glory of perfection.

Mat. 28. 20. Ioh. 14. 16. 1. Cor. 1. 12. Ephe. 1. 18. Phili. 3. 11.

12 But they wil take exceptiō, & ſay that whatſoeuer is particularly attributed to euery one of the holy ones, the ſame doth throughly & fully belong to the Church it ſelfe. Although this hath ſome ſeeming of trueth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth in dede ſo diſtribute to euery uery one of the members the gifts of his Spirit by measure, that the whole body wanteth nothing necessary, when the giftes are giuen in common. But the richesse of the Church are alway such, that there euer wanteth much of that hiest perfectiō, which our aduersaries do boast of. Yet the Church is not therefore so left destitute in any behalfe, but that she alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lorde knoweth what her necessity requireth. But, to holde her vnder humility & godly modesty, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be expedient. I know what here also they are wont to obiect, that is, that the Church is cleansed with the washing of water in the word of life, that it might be without wrincle & spot, & that therefore in an other place it is called the piller & stay of truth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ daily worketh in it, than what he hath already done. For if he daily sanctifieth, purgeth, polisheth, wipeth from spots all them that be his: truely it is certaine that they are yet besprinkeled with some spots and wrincles, and that there wanteth somwhat of their sanctification. But how vaine and fabulous is it, to iudge the Church already in euery part holy & spotlesse, wherof al the members are spotty and very vncleane? It is true therefore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But onely the beginninge of that sanctifying is here seene: but the end and ful accomplishment shalbe, when Christ the holyest of holy ones shall truely and fully fill it with his holinesse. It is true also that the spottes and wrincles of it are wiped away: but so that they be daily in wipinge away, vntill Christ with his comminge do vtterly take away all that remayneth. For vnlesse we graunt this, we must of necessity affirme with the Pelagians, that the righteousnesse of the faythfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathari and Donatistes we must suffer no infirmitie in the Church. The other place, as we haue else where seene, hath a sense vtterly differinge from that which they pretende. For when Paule hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishoppe, he sayth that he did it to this purpose, that he shoulde knowe how he ought to behaue himselfe in the Church. And that he should with the greater religiousnesse and endeuour bende himselfe thereunto, he addeth that the Church is the very piller & stay of trueth. For what else do these words meane, but that the trueth of God is preserued in the Church, namely by the ministery of preaching? As in an other place he teacheth, that Christ gaue Apostles, Pastors & Teachers, that we shoulde no more be caried about with euery winde of doctrine, or be mocked of mē: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Sonne of God, we shoulde altogether meete in vnity of Fayth.

Ephe. 4. 11.

Whereas therefore the trueth is not extinguished in the world, but remaineth safe, that same cõmeth to passe because it hath ỹ Church a faithfull keper of it, by whose help & ministery it is sustained. But if this keping standeth in the ministery of the Prophets & Apostles, it foloweth that it hangeth wholly hereupon, if the word of the Lord be faithfully preserued and do kepe his purity.

13 But that the readers may better vnderstande, vpon what point this question chiefly standeth, I will in few wordes declare what our aduersaries require, and wherein we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth hereunto, and thus they expounde it, that forasmuch as it is gouerned by the Spirit of God, it may go salfely without the word: that whethersoeuer it goeth, it can not thinke nor speake any thing but trueth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside Gods word, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine Oracle of God. If we graunt that first point, that the Church can not erre in thinges necessary to saluation, this is our meaninge, that this is therfore because forsaking all her owne wisedom, she suffereth her selfe to be taught of the holy Ghost by the word of God. This therefore is the difference. They set the authority of the Church without the worde of God, but we will that it be annexed to the worde, & suffer it not to be seuered from it. And what maruel is it, if the spouse & scholar of Christ be subiect to her husband & schoolemaister, that she continually & earnestly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a well gouerned house, ỹ the wife should obey the authority of the husband: & this is the rule of a wel ordered schoole, that the teaching of the scholemaister alone should there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wise of her selfe, not thinke any thing of her selfe: but determine the ende of her wisdom where he hath made an end of speaking. After this maner she shall also distrust all the inuentions of her owne reason: but in those things wherin it standeth vpon ỹ word of God, she shal wauer with no distrustfulnes or douting, but shal rest with great assurednes & stedfast constancy. So also trusting vpon the largenes of those promises that she hath, she shal haue whereupon aboundantly to sustaine her faith: that she may nothinge dout that the best guide of the right way the holy Spirit is alway present with her: but therewithall she shall kepe in memory what vse the Lord woulde haue vs to receiue of his holy Ioh. 16. 7. & 13. Spirit. The Spirit (sayth he) which I wil send frõ my Father, shal leade you into al truth. But how? because (saith he) he shal put you in minde of all those things that I haue tolde you. Therfore he giueth warning that there is nothing more to be looked for of his Spirit, but that he

ſhould enlighten our mindes to perceiue the trueth of his doctrine. Therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith excellently well. Many (ſaith he) do boaſt of the holy Spirite: but they which ſpeake their owne do falſly pretende that they haue him. As Chriſt teſtified that he ſpake not of himſelfe: becauſe he ſpake out of the law and the Prophets: ſo if any thing beſide the Goſpel be thruſt in vnder the title of the Spirit, let vs not beleue it becauſe as Chriſt is the fulfillinge of the law & the Prophets: ſo is the Spirit, of the Goſpel. Theſe be his words. Now it is eaſie to gather how wrongefully our aduerſaries do, which boaſt of the holy Ghoſt to no other ende, but to ſet forth vnder his name ſtrange & foraine doctrines from the word of God: wheras he will with vnſpeakeable knot be cõioined with the word of God, & the ſame doth Chriſt profeſſe of him when he promiſeth him to his Church. So is it truly. What ſobriety ẏ lord hath once preſcribed to his church, ẏ ſame he will haue to be perpetually kept. But he hath forbidden her, ẏ ſhe ſhold not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing frõ it. This is the inuiolable decree of God & of ẏ holy Ghoſt, which our aduerſaries go about to abrogate, when they faine that the Church is ruled of the Spirit without the word.

Sermo. de ſanct. & adorand. Spiri. Ioh. 12. 50. & 14 10.

14 Here againe they murmure againſt vs, and ſay that it behoued that the Church ſhould adde ſome things to the writinges of the Apoſtles, or that they thẽſelues ſhould afterward with liuely voice ſupply many thinges which they had not clearly enough taught, namely ſith Chriſt ſaid vnto thẽ. I haue many things to be ſaid to you, which you can not now beare: & that theſe be the ordinances, which without the Scripture haue bin receiued onely in vſe & maners. But what ſhameleſneſſe is this? I graunt the diſciples were yet rude, & in a maner vnapt to learne, whẽ the Lord ſayd this vnto them. But were they then alſo holden with ſuch dulnes, whẽ they did put their doctrine in wrytinge, that they afterward needed to ſupply with liuely voice that which they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their wrytings? But if they were already led by the Spirite of trueth into all trueth when they did ſet foorth their wrytinges: what hindred that they haue not therein contained & left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the Goſpel? But go to: let vs graunt them that which they require. Only let them point out what be thoſe thinges that it behoued to be reuealed without writing. If they dare enterpriſe that, I wil aſſaile thẽ with Auguſtines wordes: that is. When the Lord hath ſayd nothinge of them, which of vs dare ſay, theſe they be or thoſe they be? or if any dare ſay ſo, whereby doth he proue it? But why do I ſtriue about a ſuperfluous matter? For a very childe doth know, that in the wrytinges of the Apoſtles, which theſe men do make in a maner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the frute of that reuelatiõ which the Lord did then promiſe them.

15 What? ſay they, did not Chriſt put out of controuerſie whatſoeuer the Church teacheth & decreeth, when he commaundeth him to be takẽ for a heathen man & a Publicane that dare ſay againſt her? Mat. 18. 17. First in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but onely the authority of the cenſures is eſtabliſhed for correctingof vices, that they which haue bin admoniſhed or rebuked ſhould not reſiſt her iudgement. But omitting this, it is much maruell, that theſe loſels haue ſo litle ſhame, that they dare be proude of that place. For what ſhal they get therby, but that the cõſent of the Church is neuer to be deſpiſed, which neuer cõſenteth but vnto the trueth of the word of God? The Church is to be heard, ſay they. Who denieth it? forasmuch as it pronounceth nothing but out of the word of ỹ Lord. If they require any more let them know that theſe words of Chriſt do nothing take their part therin. Neither ought I to be thought too much cõtentious becauſe I ſtande ſo earneſtly vpon this point, That it is not lawefull for the Church to make any new doctrine, that is, to teach & deliuer for an Oracle any more than ỹ which the lord hath reueled by his word. For men of ſounde wit do ſee howe great daunger there is, if ſo great authority be once graunted to men. They ſee alſo howe wide a window is opened to the mockings & cauillations of the wicked, if we ſay that that which mẽ haue iudged is to be taken for an Oracle among Chriſtians. Beſide that, Chriſt ſpeaking according to the conſideratiõ of his owne time, giueth this name to the Sinagoge, that his diſciples ſhould afterward learne to reuerence holy aſſemblies of the Church. So ſhould it come to paſſe that euery city & village ſhould haue egall authority in coyning of doctrines

16 The examples which they vſe, do nothing helpe them. They ſay that the Baptiſinge of infantes, proceeded not ſo much from the expreſſe commaundemẽt of the Scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a very miſerable ſuccour, if we were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defenſe of the Baptiſme of infantes: but it ſhal in an other place ſufficiently appeare that it is farre otherwiſe. Likewiſe whereas they obiect that ỹ is no where founde in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Nicene Synode, that the Sonne is conſubſtantiall with the father: therein they do great wrong to the fathers, as though they had raſhly condemned Arrius, becauſe he would not ſweare to their wordes, when he profeſſed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophets & Apoſtles. This word, I graunt, is not in the Scripture: but when therein is ſo oft affirmed, that there is but one God, againe Chriſt is ſo oft called the true and eternall God, one with the Father: what other thing do the fathers of the Nicene councel whē they declare that he is of one ſubſtāce, but ſimply ſet out the natural ſenſe of the Scripture? But Theodorite reporteth that Conſtantine vſed this preface in their aſſembly. In diſputations (ſaith he) of diuine matters, there is a preſcribed doctrine of the holy Ghoſt: the bookes of the Goſpels & of the Apoſtles, with the Oracles of the Prophets, do fully ſhew vs ỹ meaning of God. Therfore laying away diſcorde, let vs take the diſcuſſinges of queſtions out of the wordes of the Spirite. There was at that time no man that ſpake againſt theſe holy monitions. No man tooke exception, that the Church might adde ſomewhat of her owne: that the Spirit reueled not all things to the Apoſtles, or at leaſt vttered them, not to thoſe that came after: or any ſuch thing. If it be true which our aduerſaries woulde haue: firſt, Conſtantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authority: then, wheras none of the Biſhops at that time roſe vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their faith: for ſo they were betraiers of the right of the Church. But ſith Theodorite rehearſeth that they willingely embraced that which the Emperour ſayd, it is certaine that this newe doctrine was then vtterly vnknowen. Hiſto. eccl. li. 1 cap. 5.

Prophets

Of Councels and of their authority.

NOwe, although I graunt them all thinges concerninge the Church: yet they ſhall thereby not much preuaile for their intent. For whatſoeuer is ſayd of the Church, the ſame they byandby giue to ỹ Councels, foraſmuch as in their opinion thoſe repreſent the Church. Yea where they ſo ſtiffely contende for the power of the Church, they do it of no other purpoſe, but to giue all that they can get to the biſhop of Rome & his gard. But ere I begin to diſcuſſe this queſtion, I muſt nedes here make proteſtation of two things aforehand. Firſt, that where I ſhall in this point be ſomewhat rough, it is not becauſe I leſſe eſteme the olde Councels than I ought to do. For I reuerence them from my hart, & wiſh them to be had in their due honor with all men. But here in is ſome meane, that is, that there be nothinge withdrawen from Chriſt. Nowe this is the right of Chriſt, to be the head in all Councels, & to haue no man fellow with him in this dignity. But I ſay that then only he is the head, when he gouerneth the whole assembly with his worde & Spirit. Secondly, wheras I giue lesse to Councels than the aduersaries require, I do it not for this cause that I am afraid of the Councels, as though they did make for their side, & were against ours. For as we are aboũdantly furnished with the word of the Lord to the full proofe of our owne doctrine fully, & to the ouerthrowe of the whole Papistry that we nede not much to desire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the old Councels do for a great part minister vnto vs so much as may suffice for both.

2 Nowe lette vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it be sought of the Scriptures, what is the authority of Councelles: there is no plainer promise than in this saying of Christ: Where two or three shalbe gathered together in my name, there I am in the middest of them. But that doth no lesse belong to euery particular assembly thã to a general Councel. But the dout of the question standeth not therin: but because there is a condition added, that God wil so only be in the middest of the Councel, if it be gathered together in his name. Therfore although our aduersaries do a thousand times name Councels of bishops, they shal litle preuail: neither shal they make vs to beleue that which they affirme, that is, that they be gouerned of the holy Ghost, vntil they haue proued that they are gathered together in the name of Christ. For it is as possible that wicked & euil Bishops may cõspire against Christ, as good & honest Bishops may come together in his name. For a very cleare proofe hereof are many decrees that haue proceded from such Councels. But this shalbe seen hereafter. Now I do but answere in one word, that Christ promiseth nothing, but to thẽ that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I deny that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the cõmaundement of God, wherein he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken from it, do decree euery thing after their owne wil: which beinge not contented with the Oracles of ỹ Scripture, that is to say the only rule of perfect wisdom, do imagine some new thing of their own hed. Surely sith Christ hath not promised that he wil be present at all Councels, but hath adioyned a peculiar marke, wherby to make true & lawful Councels different from other: it is mete that we should not neglect this difference. This is the couenant, which in old time God made with the Liuitical Priests, ỹ they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the Prophets: this law also we see to haue bin laid vpon ỹ Apostles. Who so breake this couenãt, God doth not vouchsaue, to let thẽ haue the honor of Priesthoode, nor any authority. Let the aduersaries vndo me this knotte, if they will make my faith bonde to the decrees of men beside the word of God.

3 For wheras they thinke not that truth remaineth in the Church, vnlesse it be among the Pastours: & that the Church it selfe stãdeth not, vnlesse it appeare in general Councels: that is farre from hauing bene alway true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esaie a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the pastors he saith thus: The watchmen are all blinde, neither knowe they any thing. They are all dumme dogges, neither are they able to barke. They lie along & slepe, and loue slepinge: and the Pastors themselues knowe nothing, nor do vnderstãde: and they do altogether loke backe vnto their owne wayes. After the same maner Osee sayeth: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the snare of the fouler, hatred in the house of God. Where ioining them with God by way of mockage, he teacheth ỳ their pretense of the priesthod is vaine. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremie. Let vs heare what he sayeth of the Pastors. From the Prophet euen to the priest, euery one followeth lying. Againe. The Prophets do prophecie a ly in my name, when I haue not sent them, nor commaunded them. And least we should be to long in reciting his wordes, let those things be red that he hath written in the whole .xxiij. and .xl. chapiters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuey against the same men. The conspiracie (sayeth he) of the Prophets in the middes of her as a roaring lyon, and that violently taketh his pray. Her priests haue broken my lawe, and haue defiled my holy things, and haue made no difference betweene holy and prophane: and the rest that he adioineth to the same effect. Like complaintes are euery where in the Prophets, so that nothing is ofter found in them.

4 But perhappes it might be that that was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euill. I would to God in deede it were so: but the Holy Ghost hath geuen warning that it shalbe farre otherwise. The wordes of Peter are plaine. As (sayeth he) there were in the olde people false Prophets, so shall there also be among you false teachers, shly bringing in sectes of perdition. See you not howe he sayth, that there is daunger to come, not by men of the common people, but by them that shal bost themselues with the title of teachers & Pastors? Moroeuer howe oft hath it bene forespoken by Christ and his Apostles, that there should very great daungers hang ouer the Church by the Pastors? Yea Paule plainely sheweth, that Antichrist shall sitt in no other place than in the temple of God.

Whereby he ſignifieth, that the horrible calamitie of which he there ſpeaketh, ſhall come from no where els but from them that ſhall ſitt in ſteede of Paſtors in ỹ Church. And in an other place he ſheweth, thar ỹ beginnings of ſo great a miſchief are euen alredy nere at hād.

Act.20. 29. For when he ſpeaketh to the biſhops of Epheſus. I know (ſayeth he) that after my departure there ſhall enter into you rauening wolues not ſparing the flocke. And they ſhalbe of your owne ſelues, that ſhall ſpeake peruerſe things, to leade away diſciples after them. Howe much corruption might a long courſe of yeares bring among Paſtors, when they could ſo farre go out of kinde in ſo ſmall a ſpace of time? And, not to fill much paper with reherſing thē by name: we are admoniſhed by the examples in a maner of all ages, that neither the truth is alway nouriſhed in the boſome of the paſtors, nor the ſafetie of the Church doth hang vpon their ſtate. They ought in deede to haue bene the gouernours and kepers of the peace and ſafetie of the Church, for preſeruation whereof, they are ordeined: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which he ought, and an other thinge to owe that which he performeth not.

5 Yet let no man take theſe our wordes in ſuch part, as though I would euery where and raſhely without any choiſe diminiſh the authoritie of Paſtors. I do but onely admoniſh that euen among Paſtors themſelues there is a choiſe to bee had, that we ſhould not immediatly thinke them to be paſtors that are ſo called. But the Pope with all his flocke of biſhops, vpon none other reaſon, but becauſe they are called paſtors, ſhaking away the obedience of the word of God, do tumble & toſſe al things after their own luſt: & in the meane time they trauaile to perſuade, that they can not be deſtitute of the light of truth, that the ſpirit of God perpetually abideth in them, that the Church conſiſteth in them and dieth with them. As though there be nowe no iudgements of the Lord, whereby he may puniſh the world at this day with the ſame kinde of puniſhment, wherewith ſomtime he toke vengeance of the vnthankefulneſſe of the olde peo-

6 Hereby it is eaſy to aunſwer to that other obiection cōcerning generall councells. It can not be denied but that the Iewes had a true Church in the time of the Prophets. But it there had then bene a generall councell gathered together of the priests, what maner face of the Church had there appered? We heare what God saith, not to one or two of them but to the whole order: The priestes shalbe astonied, and the prophets shalbe made afraide. Againe, the lawe shall perish from the priest, and councell from the Elders. Againe, Night shalbe to you in steede of a vision, and darkenesse in steede of prophecieng: and the sunne shall fall downe vpon the Prophets, and be darkened vpon these dayes. &c. Well: if all such had then bene gathered together in one, what Spirit should haue gouerned in that assemblie? of that thing we haue a notable example in that councell which Achab called together. There were present foure hundred Prophets. But, because they were come together of no other minde but to flatter the wicked king: therefore Satan was sent of the Lord to be a lying spirit in the mouth of thē all. There by all their voices the truth was condemned. Micha was condemned for an heretike, striken and cast in prison. So was done to Hieremie, so to the other Prophets. Hier. 4. 9. Ezec. 7. 26. Mich. 3. 6. 1 Kin. 22. 5. & 22.

7 But let one example suffice for all, which is more notable then the rest. In that councell which the bishops and Pharisees gathered at Hierusalem against Christ, what can a man say that there wanted, in so much as pertained to the outwarde shewe? For if there had not then bene a Church at Hierusalem, Christ would neuer haue communicate with their sacrifices and other ceremonies. There was made a solemne summoning of them together: the hy bishop sat as chief: the whole order of priests sat by him: yet Christ was there condēned, and his doctrine driuen away. This doing is a profe that the Church was not enclosed in that councell. But there is no perill that any such thing should happen to vs. Who hath geuen vs assurance thereof? For it is not without fault of sluggishnesse, to be to careless in so great a matter. But where the Holy Ghost doth with expresse wordes prophecie by the mouth of Paule, that there shall come a departing (which can not come but that the Pastors must be the first that shall forsake God) why are we hering wilfully blinde to our owne destruction? Wherefore it is in no wise to be graunted, that the Church consisteth in the companie of Pastors, for whom the Lorde hath no where vndertaken, that they shall perpetually be good, but he hath pronounced that they shall somtime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the daunger, he doth it to this entente to make vs the warer. Ioh. 11. 47. 2. Thes. 2. 3.

8 What then? wilt thou say: Shall the councells haue no authoritie in determining? Yes forsooth. For neither do I here argue that all councells are to be condemned, or all their actes to be repelled,or (as the ſaying is) to be defaced with one blotte. But (thou wilt ſay to me) thou bringeſt them all into ſubiection,that it may be free for euery man to receiue or refuſe that which the councells haue determined. Not ſo. But ſo oft as ỹ decree of any councell is brought foorth, I would haue it firſt to be diligently weyed, at what time it was holden, for what cauſe it was holden, what maner of men were preſent: and then the very thing that is intreated of,to be examined by the rule of the Scripture: and that in ſuch ſorte as the determination of the councell may haue his force, and be as a foreiudged ſentence, and yet not hinder the aforeſaid examination. I would to God all men did kepe that moderation which Auguſtine preſcribeth in the third boke againſt Maximinus. For when he minded brefely to put to ſilẽce this heretike cõtending about the Decrees of councels: Neither (ſayth he) ought I to obiect againſt thee the Synode of Nice,nor thou againſt me the Synode of Ariminum, as to the entẽt to conclude one an other by foreiudged ſentẽce,neither am I bound by the authoritie of the one,nor thou of the other. By authorities of Scriptures,not ſuch as are propre to either one,but ſuch as are common to both, let there ſtriue matter with matter, cauſe with cauſe, reaſon with reaſon. So ſhould it come to paſſe, that councells ſhould haue the maieſtie that they ought: but in the meane ſeaſon the Scripture ſhould be alone in the hier place,that there might be nothing that ſhould not be ſubiect to the rule thereof. So theſe olde Synodes, as of Nice, of Conſtantinople, the firſt of Epheſus, of Chalcedon, and ſuch other, which were holden for confuting of errors, we willingly embrace and reuerence as holy, ſo much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they conteine nothing but the pure and naturall expoſitiõ of Scripture,which the holy fathers with ſpirituall wiſdome applied to the ſubduing of the enemies of religion that then roſe vp. In ſome of the later councells alſo, we ſe to appere a true zele of godlineſſe,& plaine tokens of witt,learning,and wiſdom. But as things arre wonte commonly to growe to worſe,we may ſe by the later councells,howe much the Church hath nowe and then degenerate from the pureneſſe of thar golden age. And I doute not but that in theſe corrupter ages alſo, councells haue had ſome biſhoppes of the better ſorte. But in theſe the ſame happened which the Senators themſelues complained to be not well done in making of ordinances of the ſenate at Rome. For while the ſentẽces are numbred. not weyed, it is of neceſſitie that oftentimes the better part is ouercome of the greater. Truely they brought forth many wicked ſentences. Neither is it here needefull to gather the ſpeciall examples, either becauſe it ſhould be to long, or becauſe other haue done it ſo diligently that there can not much be added.

9 Nowe, what neede I to reherſe Councells diſagreing with councells? And it is no cauſe that any ſhould murmure againſt me, and ſay, that of thoſe councells that diſagree the one is not lawefull. For, howe ſhall we iudge that? By this, if I be not deceiued, that we ſhall iudge by the Scriptures, that ỹ decrees thereof are not agreable with true doctrine. For this is the onely certaine lawe to diſcerne them by. It is nowe about nine hundred yeares ago, ſins the Synode of Cõſtantinople gathered together vnder Leo the Emperour, iudged that images ſette vp in Churches ſhould be ouerthrowen, and broken in peeces. A littell afterward, the councel of Nice, which Irene the Empreſſe aſſembled in ſpite of him, decreed that they ſhould be reſtored. Whether of theſe two ſhall we acknowledge for a lawefull councell? The later which gaue images a place in Churches, hath preuailed among the people. But Auguſtine ſaith that that can not be done without moſt preſent perill of idolatrie. Epiphanius which was before in time, ſpeaketh much more ſharply: for he ſaith that it is wickedneſſe and abhomination to haue images ſeen in a Church of Chriſtians. Wolde they that ſo ſpeake, allowe that councell, if they were aliue at this day? But if both the hiſtorians tell truth, and the very actes be beleued, not onely images themſelues, but alſo the worſhipping of them was there receiued. But it is euident that ſuch a decree came from Satan. Howe ſay you to this, that in depraying and tearing the Scripture, they ſhewe that they made a mocking ſtocke of it? Which thing I haue before ſufficiently made open. Howeſoeuer it be, we ſhall no otherwiſe be able to diſcerne betwene contrarie and diſagreing Synodes, which were many, vnleſſe we trie them all by that balance of all men and angels, that is, by the word of the Lorde. So we embrace the Synode of Chalcedon, refuſing the ſecõde Synode of Epheſus, becauſe in this latter one the wickedneſſe of Eutiches was cõfirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue iudged none otherwiſe but by the Scripture: whom we ſo followe in iudging: that the worde of God which gaue light to them doth alſo nowe geue light to vs. Nowe let the Romaniſtes go and boaſt, as they are wont, that the Holy Ghoſt is faſtned and bound to their councells.

10 Howbeit there is alſo ſomwhat which a man may well thinke to be wanting in thoſe auncient and purer councells: either becauſe they that then were at them, being otherwiſe learned and wiſe men, wholly bent to the buſineſſe then in hande, did not foreſee many other things, or for that many things of lighter importance escaped them being busied with weightier and more earnest matters: or for that simply, as beying menne they might be deceiued with vnskilfulnesse: or for that they were sometime caried headlong with to much affection. Of this last point (which seemeth the hardest of all) there was a plaine example in the Nicene Synode, the dignitie whereof hath by consent of all men, as it was worthy, bine receiued with most hy reuerence. For when the principall article of our faith was there in daunger, Arrius the enemie was present in redinesse, with whom they must fight hande to hande, and the chiefe importance lay in the agremēt of them that came prepared to fight against the error of Arrius, this not withstanding, they careleſſe of so great daungers, yea as it were hauing forgotten grauitie, modestie and all humanitie, leauing the battell that they had in hand, as if they had come thether of purpose to do Arrius a pleasure, began to wound themselues with inward dissentions, and to tourne against themselues the stile that should haue bene bēt against Arrius. There were hearde fowle obiectings of crimes, there were scattered bokes of accusatiōs, and there would haue bene no ende made of cōtentions, vntill they had with mutuall woundes one destroyed an other, vnlesse the Emperor Constantin had preuēted it, which professing that the examining of their life was a matter aboue his knowledge, and chastised such intemperāce rather with praise than with rebuking. Howe many wayes is it credible that the other councells also failed, which followed afterward? Neither doth this matter neede long prose. For if a man reade ouer the actes of the councells, he shall note therin many infirmities: though I speake of nothing more greuous.

11 And Leo bishop of Rome sticketh not to charge with ambition and vnaduised rashnesse, the Synode of Chalcedon, which yet he confesseth to be sounde in doctrines. He doth in deede not denie that it was a lawfull Synode: but he openly affirmeth, that it might erre. Some man peraduenture will thinke me fonde, for that I busy my selfe in shewing such errors: forasmuch as our aduersaries do confesse, that councells may erre in those things that are not necessary to saluation. But this labor is not yet superfluous. For although because they are compelled, they do in deede confesse it in word: yet when they thrust vnto vs the determination of all councells in euery matter whatsoeuer it be, for an oracle of the Holy Ghost, they do therin require more than they toke at the beginning. In so doing what do they affirme, but that councells can not erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawefull for vs to see the truth, or not to sooth their errors? And

I intend nothing els, but that it may thereby be gathered that the Holy Ghoſt ſo gouerned the godly and holy Synodes, that in the meane time he ſuffred ſomewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, leſt we ſhould to much truſt to men. This is a much better ſentence, thā that of Gregory Nazianzene, that he neuer ſaw a good end of any councel. For he ỹ affirmeth ỹ all without exceptiō ended ill, doth not leaue them much authoritie. It is nowe nothing needefull to make mention ſeuerally of prouinciall councells: forasmuch as it is eaſy to iudge by the generall, how much authoritie they ought to haue to make newe articles of faith and to receiue what kinde of doctrine ſoeuer it pleaſeth them.

12 But our Romaniſts, when they ſee that in defence of their cauſe all helpe of reaſon doth faile them, do reſort to that extreme & miſerable ſhift: that although the men themſelues be blockiſh in wit and councell, and moſt wicked in minde & will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commaundeth to obey Rulers. Is it ſo? what if I denie that they be rulers that are ſuch? For they ought to take vpon themſelues, no more thā Ioſua had, which was both a Prophet of the Lorde, and an excellent paſtor. But let vs heare with what wordes he is ſet by the Lorde into his office. Let not (ſayth he) the volume of this lawe depart from thy mouth: but thou ſhalt ſtudie vpon it dayes and nights. Thou ſhalt neither bowe to the right hand nor to the left: then ſhalt thou direct thy way and vnderſtande it. They therefore ſhalbe to vs ſpirituall rulers which ſhall not bow from the lawe of the Lord, neither to ỹ one ſide nor to the other. But if the doctrine of all paſtors whatſoeuer they be, is to be receiued without any douting, to what purpoſe was it that we ſhould ſo oft & ſo earneſtly be admoniſhed not to harken to the ſpeche of falſe prophetes. Here not (ſaith he by Hieremie) the words of the prophets that prophecie to you. For they teach you vanitie, & not out of ỹ mouth of the Lord. Again, Beware you of falſe prophets, that come vnto you in ſhepes clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues. And Iohn ſhould in vaine exhort vs, that we ſhould proue the Spirits, whether they be of God. From which iudgement the very Angels are not exēpted, much leſſe Satan with all his lies. What is to be ſaid of this ſaying: if the blind lead the blind, they ſhall both fall into ỹ ditch? Doth it not ſufficiētly declare, that it is of great importance what maner of prophets be heard, and that not all are raſhely to be heard? Wherfore there is no reaſon that they ſhould make vs afraid with their titles, thereby to drawe vs into partaking of their blindneſſe: forasmuch as we ſee on the other ſide, that the Lorde hadde a ſingular care to fray vs away from ſuffring our ſelues to be led with other mens error, vnder what viſor of name ſoeuer it lurketh. For if the aunſwer of Chriſt be true, then all blinde guides, whether they be called fathers of the Church, or prelates, or biſhops, can do nothing but drawe their partners into the ſame headlong downefall. Wherefore let no names of councells, Paſtors, biſhops, (which may as well be falſely pretended as truely vſed,) hinder vs, but that being taught by leſſons both of words and examples, we may examine all ſpirits of all men by the rule of the word of God, that we may proue whether they be of God or no.

13 Foraſmuch as we haue proued that there is not geuen to the Church a power to ſet vp a newe doctrine, nowe let vs ſpeake of the power which they attribute vnto it in expoũding of Scripture. Truly we do willingly graũt, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better nor ſurer remedy than if a Synode of true biſhops aſſemble together, where ỹ doctrine in cõtrouerſie may be diſcuſſed. For ſuch a determination, whereunto the Paſtors of Churches ſhall agree in common together, calling vpon the Spirit of Chriſt, ſhall haue much greater force, than if euery one ſeuerally ſhould conceiue it at home, and ſo teach it to the people, or if a fewe priuate men ſhould make it. Againe, when biſhops are gathered in one, they do the more commodiouſly take aduiſe in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, leaſt diuerſitie ſhould brede offence. Thirdely Paule preſcribeth this order in diſcerning of doctrines: For whereas he geueth to euery ſeuerall Church a power to diſcerne, he ſheweth what is the order of doing in weightier cauſes: that is, that the Churches ſhould take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And ſo doth the very feeling of godlineſſe inſtructe vs, that if any man trouble the Church with an vnwonted doctrine, and the matter procede ſo farre that there be perill of greater diſſention, the Churches ſhould firſt mete together, and examine the queſtion propounded, at laſt, after iuſt diſcuſſing had, bring forth a determination
1 Cor. 14.29. taken out of the Scripture, ſuch as may both take away douting out of the people, and ſtoppe the mouthes of wicked & gredy men, that they may not be ſo hardy to procede any further. So when Arius was riſen, the Nicene Synode was gathered together, which with the authoritie thereof both did breake the wicked endeuors of the vngodly man, and reſtored peace to the Churches, which he had vexed, and defended the eternall godhead of Chriſt, againſt his blaſphemous doctrine. When afterwarde Eunomius and Macedonius ſtirred vp newe troubles, their madneſſe was reſiſted with like remedie by the Synode of Cõſtantinople. In the councel at Epheſus the wickedneſſe of Neſtorius was baniſhed. Finally this hath bene frō the beginning the ordinarie meane in the Church to preſerue vnitie, ſo ofte as Satan began to worke any thing. But let vs remembre, that not in all ages or in all places are founde Athanaſies, Baſiles, Cyrilles, and ſuch defenders of true doctrine whom the Lorde then raiſed vp. But let vs thinke what happened at Epheſus in the ſecond Synode, where the hereſie of Eutiches preuailed, the man of holy memory Flauianus was baniſhed with certaine other godly men, and many ſuch miſcheues committed: euen becauſe Dioſcorus a ſeditious man and of a very naughty nature, was there the chief, and not the Spirit of the Lorde. But there was not the Church. I graunt. For this I determine vtterly that the truth doth not therefore die in the Church, although it be oppreſſed of one councell: but that the Lorde meruailouſly preſerueth it, that it may againe in due time riſe vp, and get the ouerhande. But I denie that this is perpetuall, that that is a true and certaine expoſition of ſcripture which hath bene receiued by conſentes of a councell.

14 But the Romaniſts ſhoote at an other marke, when they teach that the power to expound the Scripture belōgeth to the councells, yea and that without appellation from them. For they abuſe this colour, to call it an expoſition of the Scripture whatſoeuer is decreed in the councels. Of purgatorie, of the interceſſion of Saintes, of auricular confeſſion, & ſuch other, there can not be founde one ſillable in the Scriptures. But becauſe all theſe things haue bene ſtabliſhed by the authoritie of the Church, that is to ſay (to ſpeake truely) receiued in opinion and vſe, therfore euery one of them muſt be taken for an expoſition of Scripture. And not that onely: But if a councell decree any thing, though Scripture crie out againſt it, yet it ſhall beare the name of an expoſition thereof. Chriſt commaundeth all to drinke of the Cuppe, which he reacheth in the Supper. The councell of Conſtance forbade, that it ſhould not be geuen to the lay people, but willed that the prieſt onely ſhould drinke of it. That which ſo directly fighteth againſt the inſtitution of Chriſt, they will haue to be taken for an expoſition of it. Paule calleth the forbidding of mariage, the hypocriſie of deuels: and the Holy Ghoſt in an other place pronounceth, that mariage is in all men holy and honorable. Where as they haue afterwarde forbidden prieſts to marry, they require to haue that taken for the true and naturall expoſition of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more againſt it: If any dare ones open his mouth to the contrary, he ſhalbe iudged an heretike: becauſe the determination of the Church is without appellation: and to doute of her exposition, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why should I inueye against so great shamelessnes? For the very shewing of it is an ouercoming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allowe the Scripture, I wittingly passe it ouer. For in such sort to make the Oracles of God subiect to the iudgement of men, that they should therefore be of force because they haue pleased men, is a blasphemie vnworthy to be rehersed: and I haue before touched the same matter already. Yet I will aske them one thing: If the authoritie of the Scripture be founded vpon the allowance of the Church, what councells decree will they alledge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius suffer himselfe to be ouercome at Nice with testimonies brought out of the Gospell of Iohn? For after these mens saying, it was free for him to haue refused them, forasmuch as there had no allowance of a generall councell gone before. They alledge the olde rolle, which is called the Canon, which they say to haue proceded from the iudgemẽt of the Church. But I aske them againe, in what councell that Canon was set forth. Here they must needes be dumme. Howbeit I desire further to know, what maner of canon they thinke that was. For I se that the same was not very certainly agreed among the olde writers, And if that which Hierome sayeth ought to be of force, the bokes of Machabees, Tobie, Ecclesiasticus and such other shalbe thrust among the Apocrypha: which those canons do in no wise suffer to be done.

The x. Chapter.

Of the power in making of lawes: vvherin the Pope and his haue vsed a most cruell tyranny and butcherie vpon soules.

NOwe followeth the second part, which they will haue to consist in making of lawes, out of which spring haue flowed innumerable traditions of men, euen so many snares to strãgle poore soules. For they haue had no more cõscience, than had the Scribes and Pharisees, to lay burdens vpon other mens shoulders, which they themselues would not touch with one finger. I haue in an other place taught howe cruell a butcherie is that which they commaunde concerning auricular confession. In other lawes there appeareth not so great violence: but those which seeme the most tolerable of all, do tyrannously oppresse consciences. I leaue vnspoken howe they corrupt the worship of God, and do spoile God himselfe of his right, which is the onely lawmaker. This power is nowe to be entreated of, whether the Church may binde cõsciences with her lawes. In which discourse ỹ order of policy is not touched, but

but this only is intended, that God be rightly worshipped according to the rule which himselfe hath prescribed, and that the spirituall liberty, which hath regarde vnto God, may remaine safe vnto vs. Vse hath made that all those decrees be called traditions of men, whatsoeuer they be that haue concerning the worship of God proceded from men beside his word. Against these do we striue, not against the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preseruation either of discipline or honestie or peace. But the ende of our striuing is, that the immeasurable and barbarous Empire may be restrained, which they vsurpe vppon soules, that would be compted pastors of the Church, but in very dede are most cruel butchers. For they say that the lawes which they make are spirituall, and perteining to the soule, and they affirme them to be necessarie to eternall life. But so (as I euen nowe touched) the kingdome of Christ is inuaded, so the libertie by him geuen to the consciences of the faithfull is vtterly oppressed and throwen abrode. I speake not nowe with howe great vngodlinesse they stablish the obseruing of their lawes, while out of it they teache men to seke both forgeuenesse of sinnes, and righteousnesse, and saluatiō, while they set in it the whole summe of religion and godlynesse. This one thing I earnestly holde, that there ought no necessitie to be layed vpon consciences in those things wherin they are made free by Christ, & vnlesse they be made free, as we haue before taught, they can not rest with God. They must acknowledge one onely king Christ their deliuerer, and be gouerned by one lawe of libertie, euen the holy word of the Gospell, if they will kepe still ỹ grace which they haue ones obteined in Christ: they must be holden with no bondage, and bounde with no bondes.

a These Solons do in deede faine that their constitutions are lawes of libertie, a swete yoke, a light burden: but who can not se that they be mere lies? They themselues in deede do fele no heauinesse of their owne lawes, which casting away the feare of God, do carelesly and stoutly neglect both their owne and Gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their saluation, are farre from thinking themselues free so long as they be entangled with these snares. We se with how great wareneſſe Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he durste not so much as in any one thing lay vpon men any snare at all, and that not without cause. Truly he foresawe with howe great a wounde consciences should be striken, if they should be charged with a necessitie of those things whereof the Lorde had left them liberty. On the other side the cōstitutions are almost innumerable, which these men haue most greuously stablished with threate- 1. Cor. 7. 25.

ninge of eternall death, which they moſt ſeuerely require as neceſſarie to ſaluation. And among thoſe there are many moſt hard to be kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be layed together) are impoſſible: ſo great is the heape. Howe then ſhall it be poſſible, that they vpō whom ſo great a weight of difficultie lieth, ſhould not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguiſh & terror? Therfore my purpoſe is here to impugne ſuch cōſtitutions, as tend to this ende, inwardly to binde ſoules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things neceſſary to ſaluation.

3 This queſtion doth therfore encomber the moſt part of men, becauſe they do not ſuttelly enough put difference betweene the outward court (as they call it) and the court of cōſcience. Moreouer this encreaſeth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the Magiſtrat ought to be obeyed, not onely for feare of puniſhment, but for conſciences ſake. Wherupon followeth, that conſciences are alſo bounde with the politike lawes. But if it were ſo, then all ſhould fall that we haue ſpoken in the laſt chap. and entende nowe to ſpeake cōcerning the ſpirituall gouernment. For the looſing of this knot, firſt it is good to learne what is conſcience. The definition is to be gathered of the proper deriuation of the word. For, as when men do with minde and vnderſtāding cōceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby ſaid ſcire, to knowe, wherupon is deriued the name of ſcience knowledge: ſo when they haue a feling of Gods iudgemēt as a witneſſe adioined with them, which doth not ſuffer them to hide their ſinnes, but that they be brought accuſed to the iudgement ſeate of God, that ſame feling is called cōſcience. For it is a certaine meane betwene God & man: becauſe it ſuffreth not man to ſupreſſe that which he knoweth, but purſueth him ſo farre till it bring him to giltineſſe. This is it that Paule meaneth when he teacheth that conſcience doth together witneſſe with men, when their thoughtes do accuſe or acquite them in the iudgemēt of God. A ſimple knowledge might remaine in man as encloſed. Therfore this feling which preſenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keper ioined to man, to marke and watch all his ſecretes, that nothing ſhould remaine buried in darkeneſſe. Wherupon alſo cōmeth that olde prouerbe, conſcience is a thouſand witneſſes. For the ſame reaſon alſo Peter hath ſet the examination of a good conſcience, for quietneſſe of minde, when we being perſuaded of the grace of Chriſt, do without feare preſent our ſelues to God. And the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, vſeth theſe wordes, to haue no more conſcience of ſinne, in ſteede of, to be deliuered or acquited, that ſinne may no more accuſe vs.

4 Therefore as workes haue reſpect to men, ſo the conſcience is referred to God: ſo that conſcience is nothing els but the inwarde pureneſſe of the hart. In which ſenſe Paul writeth that Charitie is the fulfilling of the lawe, out of a pure conſcience, and faith not fained. 1. Tim. 1. 5. Afterwarde alſo in the ſame chap. he ſheweth, howe much it differeth from vnderſtanding, ſaying that ſome had ſuffered ſhipwracke from the faith, becauſe they had forſaken good conſcience. For in theſe words he ſignifieth, that it is a liuely affection to worſhip God, and a ſincere deſire to liue Godlily and holily. Sometime in deede it is referred alſo to men, as in Luke, when the ſame Paule teſtifieth, that he endeuored himſelf that he might walke with a good cõſciẽce toward God and men. Act. 24. 16. But this was therfore ſayed, becauſe the frutes of good conſciẽce do flowe, and come euen to men. But in ſpeaking properly, it hath reſpect to God only, as I haue already ſaid. Herupon cõmeth that a lawe is ſaid to binde conſcience, which ſimply bindeth a man, without regarde of men, or not hauing any cõſideration of them. As for example. God cõmaundeth not only to kepe the minde chaſt and pure frõ all luſt, but alſo forbiddeth all maner of filthineſſe of words and outward wantonneſſe whatſoeuer it be. To ỹ keping of this lawe my conſciẽce is ſubiect, although there liued not one man in ỹ world. So he that behaueth himſelfe intemperantly, doth not onely ſinne in this that he geueth euill example to his brethren, but he hath his cõſcience bounde with giltineſſe before God. In things ỹ are of themſelues meane, there is an other cõſideratiõ. For we ought to abſteine from thẽ, if they brede any offenſe, but the conſcience ſtill being free. So Paul ſpeaketh of fleſhe cõſecrate to idoles. If any (ſaith he) make dout, touch it not, for cõſciences ſake. I ſay for conſcience, not thine own, but ỹ others. A faithful mã ſhould ſinne, which being firſt warned ſhould neuertheles eate of ſuch fleſh. But howſoeuer in reſpect of his brother, it be neceſſary for him to abſteine, as it is preſcribed of God, yet he ceſſeth not to kepe ſtill ỹ liberty of cõſcience. We ſee how this lawe binding the outward worke, leaueth the conſcience vnbounde. 1 Cor. 10. 28.

5 Nowe let vs returne to the lawes of men. If they be made to this ende, to charge vs with a religion, as though the obſeruing of them were of it ſelfe neceſſarie, then we ſay that that is layed vpon conſcience which was not lawefull to be layed vpon it. For our conſciences haue not to do with men, but with God onely: whereunto perteineth that common difference betwene the earthly court and the court of cõſcience. When the whole world was wrapped in a moſt thicke miſt of ignorance, yet this ſmal ſparcle of light remained, that they acknowledged a mans cõſcience to be aboue all iudgements of men. Howbeit the ſame thing that they did with one word confeſſe, they did afterwarde in deede ouerthrowe: yet it was Gods will that there ſhould thē alſo remaine ſome teſtimonie of Chriſtian libertie, which might deliuer conſciences from the tyranny of men. But that difficulty is not yet diſſolued, which ariſeth out of the words of Paul. For if we muſt obey Princes not onely for penalties ſake, but alſo for conſcience, it ſeemeth thereupon to followe that Princes lawes haue alſo dominion ouer conſcience. If this be true, then the ſame alſo ought to be ſaid of the lawes of the Church. I anſwere that firſt here we muſt put a difference betweene the generaltie and the ſpecialtie. For though all ſpeciall lawes do not touch the conſcience, yet we are bounde by the generall cōmaundement of God, which commēdeth vnto vs the authoritie of magiſtrats. And vpon this point ſtādeth the diſputation of Paule, that magiſtrats are to be honored becauſe they are ordeined of God. In the meane time he teacheth not that thoſe lawes that are preſcribed by them, do belong to the inward gouernement of the ſoule: whereas he eche where extolleth both the worſhipping of God & the ſpirituall rule of liuing righteouſly, aboue all the ordinances of men whatſoeuer they be. An other thing alſo is worthy to be noted, (which yet hāgeth vpon ỹ former) that the lawes of men, whether they be made by the magiſtrat or by the Church, although they be neceſſarie to be kepte, (I ſpeake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therfore do not by themſelues binde cōſcience, becauſe the whole neceſſity of keping them is referred to the generall ende, but conſiſteth not in the things cōmaunded. From this ſort do farre differ both thoſe that preſcribe a newe forme of ỹ worſhipping of God, & thoſe that appoint neceſſitie in things ỹ be at liberty.

6 But ſuch are thoſe that at this day be called Eccleſiaſticall conſtitutiōs in the Papacie, which are thruſt in, in ſteede of the true and neceſſarie worſhipping of God. And as they be innumerable: ſo are there infinite bondes to catch and ſnare ſoules. But although in the declaration of the lawe we haue ſomewhat touched them: yet becauſe this place was fitter to entreate fully of them, I will nowe trauaile to gather togethe the whole ſumme in the beſt order that I can. And becauſe we haue already diſcourſed ſo much as ſeemed to be ſufficient, cōcerning the tyranny which the falſe biſhops do take vpon themſelues, in liberty to teach whatſoeuer they liſt, I will nowe omitt all that parte: and I will here tarry onely vpon declaring the power, which they ſay they haue, to make lawes. Our falſe biſhops therfore do burden cōſciences with newe lawes, vnder this pretenſe, that they are ordeined of the Lorde ſpirituall lawmakers, ſins the gouernemēt

of the Church is committed vnto them. Therefore they affirme that whatsoeuer they commaunde and prescribe, ought necessarily to be obserued of the Christian people: & that he that breaketh it, is giltie of double disobediēce, for that he is rebellious both to God & to the Church. Certainly, if they were true bishops. I would in this behalfe graunt to them some authoritie, not so much as they require, but so much as is requisite to ỹ well ordering of the policy of the Church. Nowe sith they are nothing lesse than that which they would be accompted, they can not take any thing to them, be it neuer so little, but that they shall take to much. But becausе this hath ben els where cōsidered, let vs graunt them at this present, that whatsoeuer power true bishops haue, the same rightly belōgeth to them also: yet I deny that they be therefore appointed lawmakers ouer the faithfull, that may of themselues prescribe a rule to liue by, or compell to their ordināces the people cōmitted vnto them. When I say this, I meane, that it is not lawfull for thē, to deliuer to the Church to be obserued of necessity, that which they haue deuised of themselues without the worde of God. Forasmuch as that authoritie both was vnknowen to the Apostles, and so oft takē away from the ministers of the Church by the Lords owne mouth: I maruell who haue bene so bolde to take it vpon them, and at this day are so bolde to defende it, beside the example of the Apostles, & against the manifest prohibition of God.

7 As touching that ỹ perteined to the perfect rule of well liuing, the Lorde hath so cōteined all that in his lawe, that he hath left nothing for men that they might adde to that summe. And this he did first for this purpose, that becausе the whole vprightnesse of liuing standeth in this point, if all works be gouerned by his will as by a rule, he should be holden of vs ỹ only maister and directer of life: then, to declare that he requireth of vs nothing more than obediēce. For this reason Iames saith: he ỹ iudgeth his brother iudgeth the law: he that iudgeth the lawe, is not an obseruer of the law, but a iudge. But there is one only lawmaker, that can both saue & destroy. We heare ỹ God doth claime this one thing as proper to himselfe, to rule vs with the gouernment and lawes of his worde. And the same thing was spoken before of Esay. although somwhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, the Lord is our lawmaker, ỹ Lord is our iudge, he shall saue vs. Truly in both these places is shewed, ỹ he that hath power ouer the soule, hath ỹ iudgemēt of life & death. Yea Iames pronounceth this plainly. Nowe, no man can take that vpon him. Therefore God must be acknowledged to be the only king of soules, to whom alone belongeth the power to saue and destroy, as those words of Esaie expresse, & to

Iam. 4. 12.

1.Pet.5.2. be the king, and iudge, and lawmaker and Sauior. Therefore Peter, when he admoniſheth the Paſtors of their dutie, exhorteth them ſo to feede the flocke, not as vſing a Lordſhip ouer the Clergy, by which word Clergie he ſignifieth the inheritance of God, that is to ſay the faithfull people. This if we rightly wey, that it is not lawfull, that that ſhould be transferred to man, which God maketh his owne onely: we ſhall vnderſtande that ſo all the power is cut of whatſoeuer it be that they chalenge, which aduaunce themſelues to commaunde any thing in the Church without the word of God.

8 Nowe, foraſmuch as the whole cauſe hangeth thereupon, that if God be the onely lawemaker, it is not lawefull for men to take that honor to themſelues: it is mete alſo therewithall to kepe in minde thoſe two reaſons which we haue ſpoken, why the Lord claimeth that to himſelfe alone. The firſt is, that his will may be to vs a perfect rule of all righteouſneſſe and holineſſe: and that ſo in the knowing of him may be the perfect knowledge to liue well. The other is, that (when the maner is ſought howe to worſhip him rightly and well) he onely may haue authoritie ouer our ſoules, whom we ought to obey, and vpon whoes becke we ought to hang. Theſe two reaſons being well marked, it ſhalbe eaſy to iudge, what ordinances of men are cõtrary to the word of God. Of that ſort be all thoſe which are fained to belong to the true worſhipping of God, and to the obſeruing whereof cõſciẽces are bounde, as though they were neceſſary to be obſerued. Let vs therefore remember that all lawes of men ought to be weyed with this balance, if we will haue a ſure triall that may neuer ſuffer vs to erre. The firſt of theſe reaſons Paul in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſiãs vſeth in contending againſt the falſe Apoſtles that attempted to oppreſſe the Churches with newe burdens. The ſecond reaſon he more vſeth with the Galatians in the like caſe. This therefore he trauaileth to proue in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſiãs, that the doctrine cõcerning the true worſhipping of God is not to be ſought at mens handes: becauſe the Lord hath faithfully and fully inſtructed vs howe he ought to be worſhipped. To proue the ſame in ỹ firſt chap. he ſaith that in the Goſpell is conteined all wiſdome, whereby ỹ man of God may be made perfect in Chriſt. In ỹ beginning of the ij. chap. he ſaith, that all the treaſures of wiſdome & vnderſtãding are hiddẽ in Chriſt. Thereupon he afterward concludeth, let ỹ faithfull beware that they be not by vain Philoſophie led from the flocke of Chriſt, according to the conſtitutiõs of men. But in the ende of the chapter, he doth yet with greater boldneſſe condemne all Ethelothreſkias, ỹ is to ſay, all fained worſhippings, which men deuiſe to themſelues, or receiue of other, & what-whatsoeuer precepts they dare of themselues giue concerninge the worshippinge of God. We haue therefore, that all those ordinances are wicked, in obseruinge whereof the worshippinge of God is fained to be. As for the places in the Galatiās wherewith he earnestly affirmeth that consciences, which ought to be ruled of God only, ought not to be entangled with snares, they are open enough, specially in the fift Chapter. Therefore lette it be sufficient to haue but noted them.

9 But beeause the whole matter shall better be made open by examples, before that we go any further, it is good also to apply this doctrine to our own times. We say that ỹ cõstitutions which they call Ecclesiasticall, wherwith the Pope and his do burden the Churc, are pernicious and wicked: our aduersaries defende that they be holy & auailable to saluation. There be two kindes of thē: for some concerne Ceremonies & rites, other some pertaine more to discipline. Is there then a iust cause to moue vs to impugne them both? Truely a iuster than we woulde. First do not the authors themselues clearely define, that the very worshipping of God is cõtained in them? To what purpose do they apply their Ceremonies, but that God should be worshipped by them? And that commeth to passe not by the onely errour of the ignorant multitude, but by their allowance that haue the place of teachinge. I do not touch the grosse abhominations, wherewith they haue gone about to ouerthrow all godlines. But it shoulde not be imagined amonge them to be so hainous an offense, to haue failed in any of the least pety traditions, vnlesse they did make the worshipping of God subiect to their fained deuises. What do we thē offend, if at this day we can not beare that, which Paule taught to be intolerable, that the lawfull order of the worshipping of God should be reduced to the will of men: specially when they commaund men to worship according to the elementes of this world, which Paule testifieth to be against Christ? Againe it is not vnknowen, with how precise necessity they binde consciences to kepe whatsoeuer they commaund. Here when we cry out to the contrary, we haue all one cause with Paul, which in no wise suffreth faithful consciences to be brought into bondage of men. Coloss. 2 20. Gal. 5. 1

10 Moreouer this worst of all is added, that when religion hath once begon to be defined with such vaine inuentions, there euer followeth after that peruersenesse an other abhominable frowardnesse, whereof Christ reproched the Pharisees that the commaundement of God is made voide for the traditions of men. I will not vse mine owne wordes in fightinge against our lawemakers at these daies. Let them haue the victory, if they can by any meane purge themselues from this accusation of Christ. But how should they excuse thē, when amonge them it is thought infinitly more haynous, to haue omitted auricular cōfession when the time of yere cōmeth about, than to haue continued a most wicked life a whole yere together: to haue infected their tonge with a litle tasting of flesh on a Friday, than to haue defiled their body with whoredom al the daies of the weke? to haue put their hande to an honest worke vpon a day consecrate to I wote not what pety Saintes, than to haue continually exercised their members in most wicked offenses? for a Prieste to be coupled with one lawefull mariage, thā to be entangled with a thousand adulteries? not to haue performed a vowed pilgremage, than to breake faith in al promises? not to haue wasted somwhat vpō monstruous & no lesse superfluous & vnprofitable excessiue gorgiousnes of tēples, than to haue failed to help the extreme necessities of the poore? to haue passed by an idole without honor, than to haue despitefully entreated all kindes of men? not to haue mūbled vp at certaine houres a great number of wordes without vnderstanding, than neuer to haue conceiued a true praier in their hart? What is to make voide the cōmaundement of God for the traditiōs of men, if this be not: when cōmending the keping of Gods cōmaundemēts but coldly & as it were lightly by the way, they do no lesse earnestly & busily exact the obeying of their owne, than if they contained in thē the whole pith of godlines? when reuenging ỹ transgressing of Gods law, with light penalties of satisfactions, they punish ỹ very least offence of one of their owne decrees with no lesse paine than with prisonment, banishment, fier or swerd? Beinge not so sharp & hard to entreate against the despisers of God, they persecute the despisers of them selues with vnappeaseable hatred to the extremity: and do so instruct all those, whose simplicity they hold captiue, that they would with more contented minde see ỹ whole law of God ouerthrowen, than one smal title (as they cal it) in the commaundements of the Church to be broken. First in this point is grieuous offence committed, that for small matters, and such as (if it shoulde be tried by Gods iudgement) are at liberty, one man despiseth, iudgeth & casteth away an other. But now, as though that were not euil enough, those triflinge elementes of the world (as Paule calleth them in his wryting to the Galatians) are weyed of more value than the heauēly Oracles of God. And he that is in a manner acquited in adultery, is iudged in meate: he that hath leaue to vse a harlot, is forbidden to haue a wife. This profite verily is gotten by that transgressinge obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men.

11 There be also other two not sclẽder faultes, which we disalow in the same ordinãces. First, because they prescribe for the most part vnprofitable, & somtime also fond obseruations: then, because godly consciences are oppressed with the infinite multitude of them, & being rouled backe into a certain lewishnes, they so cleaue to shadowes, that they can not attaine to Christ. Wheras I cal them fond & vnprofitable, I know that that will not seeme credible to the wisdom of the flesh, which so wel liketh them, that it thinketh the Church to be vtterly deformed when they be taken away. But this is it that Paul writeth of, to haue a resemblance of wisdom in counterfait worshipping, Colo. 2. 23. in humility, & in this that they thinke that with their sharpenes they be able to tame their flesh. This is truely a most wholesome admonition, such as ought neuer to slip away from vs. Mens traditions (sayth he) do deceiue vnder the shewe of wisdom, whense haue they this colour? because they are fained of men, therefore the wit of man doth therin acknow his owne, & acknowinge it doth more gladly embrace it, thã any thing were it neuer so good, that lesse agreed with his vanity. Againe, they haue hereby an other cõmendation, because they seeme to be fit introductions to humility, for that with their yoke they hold the mindes of men pressed downe to the ground. Last of all, because they seeme to tend to this end to restraine the deintines of the flesh, & to subdue it with rigor of abstinẽce, therfore they are thought to be wisely deuised. But what saith Paul to these things? doth he not shake of those visors, least the simple shoulde be deceiued with false pretense? Because he iudged this enough for cõfutation of them, that he had sayd that they were the inuentions of men, he passeth ouer all these things without confutation, as though he estemed them for nothing. Yea, because he knew ẏ all fained worshippinges in the Church were condemned, and are so much more suspicious to the faithful as they more delite the wit of man: because he knew that that fained image of outward humility doth so much differ from true humility, as it might easily be discerned: finally because he knew that that childish introduction was no more estemed thã an exercise of the body: therfore he willed that the very same things should be to the faithfull in steede of a confutation of mens traditions, by fauour of which they were commended among the ignorant.

12 So at this day not only the vnlearned commõ people, but euery mã as he is most puffed vp with worldly wisdom, so is he most marueilously delited with beholding of Ceremonies. But hypocrites & foolish women thinke that there can be nothinge deuised more glorious nor better. But they which do more depely searche, and more truely weie according to the rule of godlineſſe, of what value ſo many and ſuch Ceremonies are, do vnderſtand, firſt that they are trifles, becauſe they haue no profite: then, that they are deceites, becauſe they do with vaine pompe beguile the eies of the beholders. I ſpeake of thoſe Ceremonies, vnder which ỹ Romiſh maiſters wil that there be great miſteries: but we find them by experience to be nothing els but mere mockeries. And it is no maruel that the authors of them haue fallen ſo far a· to mocke both themſelues & other with trifling follies: becauſe they partely tooke their examplar out of the dotages of the Gentils, & partly after the maner of apes did vndiſcretly counterfaite the olde vſages of the lawe of Moſes, which no more pertained to vs than the Sacrifices of beaſtes & ſuch other thinges. Truely although there were none other argument, yet no man that hath his ſound wit wil looke for any goodnes of a heape ſo il patched together. And the thinge it ſelfe plainly ſheweth, that many Ceremonies haue no other vſe but to amaſe the people rather thā to teach them. So in theſe new found Canons, that do rather peruert thā preſerue diſcipline, the hypocrites repoſe great importance: but if a man do better looke into them, he ſhal finde that they are nothinge elſe but a ſhadowiſh & vaniſhing ſhew of diſcipline.

13 But nowe (to come to the other point) who doth not ſee that traditions with heapinge one vpon an other, are ouergrowen into ſo great a number, that the Chriſtian Church may in no wiſe beare thē? Hereby it is come to paſſe, that in Ceremonies there appereth I wote not what Iewiſhneſſe, & the other obſeruatiōs bring a grieuous butchery to Chriſtian ſoules. Auguſtine complained that in his time, the commaundementes of God neglected, all things were ful of ſo many preſumptions, that he was more grieuouſly rebuked ỹ in his vtas had touched the ground with bare foote, than he that had buried his wit with dronkennes. He complained that the Church, which the mercy of God willed to be free, was ſo burdened, that the ſtate of the Iewes was much more tolerable. If that holy man had happened to liue in our age, with what complaintes would he haue bewailed the bondage that nowe is? For both the number is ten times greater, and euery ſmal title is a hundred times more rigorouſly looked vnto, thā at that time. So is wont to be done: when theſe peruerſe lawemakers haue gotten the dominion, they make no end of bidding and forbiddinge, till they come to extreme peuiſhneſſe. Which thing Paule hath alſo very wel declared in theſe wordes: If ye be deade to the world, why are ye holden as though ye were liuinge, with traditions, as eate not, taſt not, handle not? For where as the Greeke word aptesthai, ſignifieth both to eate and to touche, doutleſſe in this place it is taken in the firſt of theſe two ſignifications, leaſt there ſhoulde be a ſuperfluous repetition. Therefore he doth here excellently well deſcribe the proceedinges of the falſe Apoſtles. They beginne at ſuperſtition, ſo that they do not onely forbid to eate, but alſo euen ſclenderly to chawe: when they haue obteined this, they thē alſo forbid to taſt. When this is alſo graunted them, they recken it not lawfull ſo much as to touch with a finger.

14 This tyranny in the ordinances of men we do at this day worthily blame, by which it is come to paſſe that poore conſciences are maruelouſly tormented with innumerable decrees and immeaſurable exacting of keepinge of them. Of canons pertaining to diſcipline we haue ſpoken in an other place. Of the Ceremonies what ſhall I ſay, by which it is brought about that, Chriſt beinge halfe buried, we are returned to Iewiſhe figures? Our Lorde Chriſt (ſayth Auguſtine) hath bound together the felowſhip of the new people, with Sacramentes very fewe in number, moſt excellent in ſignification, moſt eaſie in obſeruing. How farre the multitude and diuerſity of vſages wherwith at this day we ſee the Church to be entangled, doth differ from this ſimplicity, it can not be ſufficiently declared. I know with what crafty ſhifte ſome ſuttle men do excuſe this peruerſeneſſe. They ſay that among vs there are many as rude as they were in the people of Iſrael: that ſuch introduction was ordained for their ſakes, which although the ſtronger may well want, yet they ought not to neglect it, foraſmuch as they ſee it to be profitable for the weake brethren. I aunſwere, that we are not ignorant, what we owe to the weakenes of our brethren: but on the other ſide we take exception and ſay, that this is not the way whereby the weake may be prouided for, ỳ they ſhould be ouerwhelmed with great heapes of Ceremonies. The Lorde did not in vaine put this difference betwene vs and the old people, that his will was to inſtruct them like children with ſignes and figures, but vs more ſimply without ſuch outwarde furniture. As (ſayeth Paule) a childe is ruled of his ſchoolemaiſter, and kept vnder cuſtody, according to the capacity of his age: ſo the Iewes are kept vnder the lawe. But we are like vnto full growen men, which being ſet at liberty from tutorſhip and gouernment, haue no more neede of childiſh introductions. Truely the Lorde did foreſee what maner of common people there ſhoulde be in his Church, and howe they ſhoulde be ruled. Yet he did in this maner as we haue ſaid, make difference betwene vs & the Iewes. Therefore it is a fooliſh way, if we will prouide for the ignorant, in raiſinge vp Iewiſhnes which is abrogate by Chriſt: Chriſt also touched in his owne words this difference of the olde and new people, when he sayd to the woman of Samaria, that the time was come wherein the true worshippers shoulde worship God in Spirite and trueth. This verily had alway bin done: but the new worshippers differed from the olde in this point, that vnder Moses the spirituall worshipping of God was shadowed & in a maner entangled with many Ceremonies, which being abolished, he is now more simply worshipped. Therfore they that confound this difference, do ouerthrow the order institute & stablished by Christ. Shall there then (wilt thou say) no Ceremonies be giuen to the ruder sort to helpe their vnskilfulnes? I say not so: for I verily thinke that this kinde of help is profitable for them. I do here trauaile onely that such a meane may be vsed, as may brightly set out Christ, & not darken him. Therfore there are giuen vs of God few Ceremonies, & those not labourſome, that they should shewe Christ beinge present. The Iewes had moe giuen them, that they should be images of him beinge absent. Absent I say he was, not in power, but in maner of signifying. Therefore, ỳ meane may be kept, it is necessary to kepe that fewnesse in number, easines in obseruing, & dignity in signifying, which also consisteth in clearenes. What nede I to say that this hath not bin done? For the thing it selfe is in all mens eies.

15 Here I omit with howe pernicious opinions mens mindes are filled, in thinking that they be sacrifices wherewith oblation is rightly made to God, whereby sinnes are cleansed, whereby righteousnes & saluation is obtained. They wil deny that good things are corrupted with such forein errours: forasmuch as in this behalfe a man may no lesse offend in the very workes also cõmaunded of God. But this hath more hainousnes, that so much honor is giuen to works rashly fained by the wil of mã, that they are thought to be things deseruing eternal life. For the works cõmaunded of God haue reward therfore, because the lawmaker himselfe in respect of obedience accepteth them. Therfore they receiue not their value of their owne worthines, or of their own deseruinge, but because God so much esteemeth our obedience toward him. I speake here of that perfection of workes which is cõmaunded of God, & is not performed of men. For therefore the very workes of ỳ law which we do, haue no thanke but of the free goodnes of God, because in them our obedience is weake & lame. But because we do not here dispute, of what value works are without Christ, therfore let vs passe ouer that question. I come backe againe to that which

ence, which onely the Lord doth looke vpon, as he teſtifieth by the Prophet: I gaue not commaundement of ſacrifices & burnt offrings, but only that ye ſhould with hearing, heare my voyce. But of fayned workes he ſpeaketh in an other place, ſaying: Ye weie your ſiluer and not in bread, Againe, they worſhip me in vaine with ỹ precepts of mẽ. This therfore they can by no wayes, excuſe, that they ſuffer the ſilly people to ſeke in thoſe outward trifles the righteouſnes wherby they may ſtand againſt God, & vphold thẽſelues before ỹ heauenly iudgement ſeate. Morouer, is not this a fault worthy to be inueied againſt, that they ſhew forth Ceremonies not vnderſtãded as it were a ſtage play, or a magical enchauntment? For it is certaine ỹ all Ceremonies are corrupt & hurtful, vnleſſe men be by them directed to Chriſt. But the Ceremonies that are vſed vnder the papacy, are ſeuered frõ doctrine, that they may the more hold men in ſignes without all ſignification. Finally (ſuch a cunning craftſman is the belly) it appeareth that many of thẽ haue bin inuented by couetous ſacrificing prieſtes, to be ſnares to catche money. But what beginninge ſoeuer they haue, they are all ſo giuen forth in common for filthy gaine, that we muſt needes cut of a great part of them, if we wil bring to paſſe that there be not a prophane market, and ful of ſacrilege vſed in the Church. Eſa. 55. 2 & 29. 13. Matt. 15 9.

16 Although I ſeeme not to teach a continual doctrine cõcerning the ordinances of men, becauſe this ſpeakinge is altogether applied to our own time: yet there is nothing ſpokẽ that ſhal not be profitable for all times. For ſo oft as this ſuperſtition crepeth in, that men will worſhippe God with their owne fained deuiſes, whatſoeuer the lawes be that are made to ỹ purpoſe, they do byandby degenerate to thoſe groſſe abuſes. For the Lord threatneth not this curſe to one or two ages, but to al ages of the world, that he will ſtrike them with blindnes and amaſed dulnes that worſhip him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that they flee frõ no kinde of abſurdity, which deſpiſing ſo many warnings of God, do wilfully wrap themſelues in thoſe deadely ſnares. But if, ſettinge aſide circumſtances, you wil haue ſimply ſhewed what be the mens traditions of all ages, which it is mete to be reiected of the Church, and to be diſalowed of all the godly, that ſame ſhalbe a ſure and plaine definition which we haue aboue ſet: that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this ende, either to preſcribe a maner of worſhipping God, or to binde conſciences with religion, as though they gaue commaundement of thinges neceſſary to ſaluation. If to the one or both of theſe there be adioyned other faultes: as, that with their multitude they darken the brightneſſe of the Goſpell: that they nothing edifie, but be rather Eſa 29. 13.

vnprofitable and triflinge occupations than true exercises of godlineſſe : that they be laid abroade to filthineſſe and vnhoneſt gaine: that they be too hard to be kept:that they be defiled with euil ſuperſtitions:theſe ſhall be helpes that we may the more eaſily finde how much euill is in them.

17 I heare what they anſwere for themſelues, that their traditiõs are not of themſelues, but of God. For, they ſay that the Church is gouerned of the holy Ghoſt,that it can not erre:and that the authority thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it therewithall foloweth,that their traditions are the reuelations of the holy Ghoſt, which can not be deſpiſed but wickedly and with the contempt of God. And that they ſhoulde not ſeeme to haue attempted any thinge without great authority, they will haue it beleued that a great parte of their obſeruations came from the Apoſtles: and they affirme that by one example is ſufficiently declared what the Apoſtles did in other thinges,when being aſſembled in one Councell,they did by the decre of the Councell commaunde the Gentiles to abſtaine from thinges offered to idols,from blood and ſtrangled. We haue already in an other place declared, how falſly for boaſtinge of themſelues they lyingely vſurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this preſent cauſe:if,plucking away all viſors,and deceitfull colours, we truely looke vpon that which we ought principally to care for,& which chiefly is for our behoofe,that is,what maner of Church Chriſt will haue,that we may faſhion and frame our ſelues to the rule therof:it ſhal eaſily be euidẽt vnto vs,that it is not the Church,which paſſinge the boundes of the word of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in makinge of newe lawes. For doth not that lawe which was once preſcribed to the Church,remaine eternall?What I commaund thee,that thou ſhalt kepe that thou maiſt do it. Thou ſhalt not adde any thing,nor take any thing frõ it. And in an other place: Adde not to the word of the Lord, nor miniſh any thing:leaſt he peraduenture reproue thee,and thou be founde a lyer. Sith they can not deny that this was ſpokẽ to the Church,which do they elſe but report the ſtubborneſſe of that Church,what they boaſt to haue bin ſo bold as after ſuch prohibitions neuertheleſſe to adde & mingle of her owne with the doctrine of God? But God forbid that we ſhoulde aſſent to their lies, whereby they burden the Church with ſo great a ſclaunder: but let vs vnderſtande,that the name of the Church is falſly pretended,ſo oft as this luſt of mens raſhenneſſe is ſpoken of,which can not holde it ſelfe within the preſcribed boũdes of God, but that it wildly rangeth & runneth out into her owne inuẽtions?There is nothing entangled, nothing darke, nothing doutfull in theſe wordes, in which the whole Church is forbiddé to adde to the word of God, or to take any thing from it, when the worſhippinge of God, and preceptes concerninge ſaluation, are entreated of. But this (ſay they) was ſpoken of the lawe only, after which folowed the prophecies & the whole miniſtration of the Goſpel. I graunt in dede: and I adde alſo, which are rather fulfillinges of the law, than additions or diminiſhinges. But if the Lorde ſuffred nothing to be added to or taken from the miniſtery of Moſes, which was (as I may ſo terme it) darke by reaſon of many doutfull enwrappinges, till by his ſeruantes the Prophetes, and at length by his beloued Sonne, he miniſtred a clearer doctrine: why ſhoulde we not thinke it much more ſeuerely forbidden vs, that we ſhould adde nothing to the law, the Prophetes, the Pſalmes, and the Goſpel? The Lorde is not gone out of kinde from himſelfe, which hath longe ago declared, that he is with nothing ſo hiely offended, as whē he is worſhipped with the inuentions of men? Whereof came thoſe notable ſayinges in the Prophets, which ought to haue continually ſounded in our eares: I ſpake no words to your fathers, in ỹ day that I brought them out of Ægipt, concerning ſacrifice and burnt offringe. But this word I commaunded them, ſaying: With hearinge heare my voyce: and I will be your God, and you ſhalbe my people, & you ſhall walke in all the way that I ſhall commaunde you. Againe, I haue with proteſting proteſted vnto your fathers, Heare my voyce. And other like ſayings: but this is notable aboue the reſt. Will God haue burnt offeringes and ſacrifices, and not rather that his voyce be obeied? For obedience is better than ſacrifice, and to harken is better than to offer the fatte of rammes. For, to reſiſt is as the ſinne of ſoothſayinge: and not to obey is as the wickedneſſe of Idolatry. Therefore whatſoeuer inuentions of men are in this behalfe defended with the authority of the Church, foraſmuch as the ſame can not be excuſed from the crime of vngodlineſſe, it is eaſie to proue that it is falſly imputed to the Church.

Iere. 11. 1. Sa. 15 22.

18 After this ſorte we freely inueie againſt this tyranny of mens traditions, which is proudly thruſt in among vs, vnder the title of the Church. For neither do we ſcorne the Church (as our aduerſaries, to bring vs in hatred, do vniuſtly lye vpon vs) but we giue vnto her the praiſe of obediēce, than which ſhe knoweth no greater praiſe. They rather are very ſore wrong doers to the Church, which make her obſtinate againſt her Lorde, while they faine that ſhe hath proceeded further than ſhe lawfully might do by ỹ word of God: though I ſpeake nothing how it is a notable ſhameleſneſſe ioyned with as great malice, continually to crie out of the authority of the Church, & in the meane time dissemblingly to hide both what is commaunded her by the Lord, and what obedience she oweth to the commaundement of the Lord. But if we haue a minde, as it is mete we shoulde haue, to agree with the Church, this pertaineth rather to the purpose, to haue an eie vnto and remember what is commaunded by the Lorde both to vs and the Church, that we should with one agrement obey him. For there is no dout but we shall very well agree with the Church, if we do in all things shew our selues obedient to the Lord. But now to father vppon the Apostles, the originall of the traditions wherewith the Church hath bin hitherto oppressed, was a point of mere deceit: forasmuch as the doctrine of the Apostles trauaileth wholly to this end, that consciéces should not be burdened with new obseruations, nor the worshipping of God be defiled with our inuentions. Moreouer if there be any faithfulnes in histories and auncient monuments, the Apostles not onely neuer knew, but also neuer heard of this that they attribute vnto them. Neither let them prate, that the most part of their decrees were receiued in vse and in mens behauiours, which neuer were put in writing: euen those thinges forsooth, which, while Christ was yet liuing, they could not vnderstande, after his ascending they learned by the reuelation of the holy Ghost. Of the exposition of that place we haue else where already seene. So much as is sufficient for this present cause: truely they make themselues worthy to be laughed at, while they faine that those great misteries, which so longe time were vnknowen to the Apostles, were partly obseruations either Iewish or Gentile (of which all ỹ one sort had bin long before published among the Iewes, and all the other sorte amonge the Gentiles) and partely foolishe gesturinges and vaine pety Ceremonies, which foolishe sacrificinge Priestes, that can neither skil of swimminge nor of letters, vse to do very trimly: yea such as children and fooles do so aptly counterfaite that it may seeme that there be no fitter ministers of such holy mysteries. If there were no histories at all: yet men that haue their sounde witte might consider by the thing it selfe, that so great a heape of Ceremonies and obseruations did not suddenly burst into the Church, but by litle and litle crept in. For when those holyer Bishoppes, which were next in time to the Apostles, had ordained some things that belonged to order and discipline, afterward there folowed men, some after other, not discrete enough, and too curious and greedy: of which the later that euery one was, so he more striued with his predecessours in foolishe enuious counterfaytinge, not to giue place in inuentinge of newe thinges. And because there was perill leaſt their deuiſes would ſhortly grow out of vſe, by which they coueted to gette praiſe among their poſterity, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpō the keping of them. This wrongfull zeale hath bredde vs a great parte of theſe Ceremonies which they ſet out vnto vs for Apoſtolike. And this alſo the hyſtories do teſtifie.

19 Leaſt in makinge a regiſter of thē we ſhould be too tedious, we will be content with one example. In the miniſtringe of the Lordes ſupper, there was in the Apoſtles time great ſimplicity. The next ſucceſſours, to garniſh the dignity of the myſtery, added ſomwhat that was not to be diſallowed. But afterward there came thoſe fooliſh coūterfaiters, which with now & then patching of peeces together, haue made vs this apparell of the prieſt which we ſee in the Maſſe, thoſe ornamentes of the altar, thoſe geſturings, and the whole furniture of vnprofitable thinges. But they obiect, that this in olde time was the perſwaſion, that thoſe thinges which were with one conſent done in the vniuerſall Church, came from the Apoſtles themſelues, whereof they cite Auguſtine for witneſſe. But I will bring a ſolution from no other where than out of the wordes of Auguſtine himſelfe. Thoſe thinges (ſayeth he) that are kept in the whole worlde, we may vnder- Epiſto. ſtande to haue bin ordayned either of the Apoſtles themſelues, or of 118. the generall Councelles, whoſe authoritie is moſt healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lordspaſſion, and reſurrection, and his aſcending into heauen, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt, are celebrate with yearely ſolemnitie: and whatſoeuer like thinge be founde, that is kept of the whole Church, which way ſoeuer it be ſpread abroade. When he reckeneth vppe ſo few examples, who doth not ſee that he meant to impute to authors worthy of credit and reuerence, the obſeruations that then were vſed, euen none but thoſe ſimple, rare, and ſober ones, with which it was profitable that the order of the Church ſhoulde be kept together? But howe farre doth this differ from that which the Romiſh maiſters would enforce men to graunt, that there is no pety Ceremony amonge them that ought not to be iudged Apoſtolike.

20 That I be not too long, I will bring forth only one example. If any man aske thē, whenſe they haue their Holy water: they byandby anſwere, from the Apoſtles. As though the hyſtories do not attribute this inuention to I wote not what Biſhop of Rome, which truely, if he had called the Apoſtles to counſell, woulde neuer haue defiled Baptiſme with a ſtraunge and vnfitte ſigne. Albeit I do not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that halowing is ſo olde as it is there

wrytten. For, that which Augustine sayth, that certayne Churches in his time did shunne that solemne folowinge of Christes example in washinge of feete, least that vsage shoulde seeme to pertaine to Baptisme, secretly sheweth that there was then no kinde of washing that had any likenesse with Baptisme. Whatsoeuer it be, I will not graunt that this proceeded from an Apostolike Spirite, that Baptisme, when it is with a daily signe brought into remembrance, should after a certaine manner be repeated. And I passe not vpon this, that the selfe same Augustine in an other place ascribeth other thinges also to the Apostles. For sith he hath nothing but coniectures, iudgement ought not vppon them to be giuen of so great a matter. Finally admitte that we graunt them also, that those thinges which he rehearseth came from the time of the Apostles: Yet there is great difference betwene instituting some exercise of Godlinesse, which the Faythfull with a free conscience may vse, or if the vse of it shall not be profitable for them, they may forbeare it: and making a law that may snare consciences with bondage. But now, from what author soeuer they proceeded, sith we see that they are sliddē into so great abuse, nothing withstandeth, but that we may without offence of him abolish them: forasmuch as they were neuer so commended, that they must be perpetually immouable.

21 Neither doth it much helpe them, that to excuse their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apostles. The Apostles (say they) & the elders of the first Church, made a decree beside the commaundement of Christ, wherin they commaunded all the Gentils to abstaine from things offred to idols, from strangled, & from blood. If that was lawful for thē, why is it not also lawful for their successours, to follow the same so oft as occasiō so requireth? I would to God, they did both in all other thinges and in this thing folow them. For I deny that the Apostles did there institute or decree any new thinge, which is easie to be proued by a strong reason. For whereas Peter in that Councell pronounceth, that God is tempted, if a yoke be layd vpon the neckes of the disciples: he doth himselfe ouerthrow his owne sentence, if he afterwarde consent to haue any yoke layd vppon them. But there is a yoke layd, if the Apostles do decree of their owne authority that the Gentils should be forbidden, that they should not touch things offred to idols, blood, and strangled. In dede there yet remaineth a dout, for that they do neuertheleſſe seeme to forbid. But this dout shall easily be dissolued, if a man do more nerely consider the meaning of the decree it selfe: in the order and effect wherof the chiefe point is, that to the Gentils their liberty is to be lefte, and that they ought not to be troubled, troubled,nor accombred about the obſeruations of the law. Hitherto it very well maketh of our ſide. But the exception that immediatly foloweth,neither is any new law made by the Apoſtles, but ỹ diuine and eternall commaundement of God, that charity ought not to be broken,nor doth diminiſh one title of that liberty:but only admoniſheth the Gentils,how they ſhould temper themſelues to their brethrē,that they abuſe not their liberty to the offence of them. Let this therfore be the ſecond point,that the Gentils ſhould vſe a harmleſſe liberty,and without offence of their brethren.But yet they preſcribe ſome certaine thinge:that is,they teach & appoint,ſo farre as was expedient for the time,by what things they might runne into ỹ offence of their brethren,that they might beware of thoſe thinges:but they adde no new thinge of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

22 Like as if the faithful Paſtors which gouerne the Churches not yet well reformed, ſhoulde commaunde all their people, that till the weake with whom they liue do grow ſtronger,they ſhould not openly eate fleſh on Friday,or openly labour vpon holy daies,or any ſuch thinge. For although theſe thinges,ſettinge ſuperſtition aſide,are by themſelues indifferent:yet when there is added offence of brethren, they cā not be done without a fault. But the times are ſuch,that the faythfull can not ſhewe ſuch a ſight to the weake brethren, but that they ſhall ſore wounde their conſciences. Who,but a cauiller,will ſay that ſo they make a new law,whereas, it is certaine that they do only preuent offences, which are expreſſely enough forbidden of the Lord? And no more cā it be ſayd of the Apoſtles, whoſe purpoſe was nothing elſe, but in takinge away the matter of offences, to call vpon the law of God concerninge the auoydinge of offence: as if they had ſayd: It is the Lords cōmaundement ỹ ye offend not a weake brother. Ye can not eate thinges offred to images, ſtrangeled and blood, but that the weake brethren ſhalbe offended. Therefore we commaunde you in the word of the Lord, that ye eate not with offence. And that the Apoſtles had reſpect to the ſame thinge, Paule himſelfe is a very good witneſſe,which writeth thus,verily none otherwiſe than according to the meaning of the Councel:Concerning meates that are offered to Idols,we know that the Idole is nothing.But ſome with conſcience of the Idole,do eate it as offred to Idols,and their conſcience, foraſmuch as it is weake,is defiled.See that your liberty be not made an offence to the weake.He ỹ ſhall haue well weied theſe things,ſhall not afterwarde be deceiued with ſuch a falſe colour as they make, that pretend the Apoſtles for defence of their tyranny,as though the 1. Cor. 8 1, Apoſtles had begonne with their decree to breake the liberty of the Church. But, that they may not be able to eſcape, but be driuen euen with their owne confeſſion to allowe this ſolution, lette them aunſwere me, by what right they were ſo bolde to abrogate the ſame decree. Becauſe there was no more peril of thoſe offences & diſſentions, which the Apoſtles meant to prouide for, & they know that the lawe was to be weyed by the end therof. Foraſmuch as therefore this law was made in reſpect of charity, there is nothinge preſcribed in it, but ſo much as pertaineth to charity. When they confeſſe that the tranſgreſſing of this law is nothing but a breaking of charity, do they not therwithall acknowledge, that it is not a forged addition to the lawe of God, but a naturall and ſimple appliance to the times and maners whereunto it was directed?

23 But although ſuch lawes be a hundred times vniuſt & iniurious vnto vs, yet they affirme that they muſt be heard without exception: for they ſay that this is not here intended, that we ſhoulde conſent to errours, but only that being ſubiects we ſhould beare the hard commaundements of our gouernours, which it is not our partes to refuſe. But here alſo the Lorde very well reſiſteth them with the trueth of his word, & deliuereth vs out of ſuch bondage into the liberty, which he hath purchaſed for vs with his holy blood, the benefit whereof he hath more than once confirmed with his word. For that is not here only intended (as they maliciouſly faine) that we ſhoulde ſuffer ſome grieuous oppreſſion in our body, but that our conſciences being ſpoiled of their liberty that is of the benefit of the blood of Chriſt, ſhold be ſeruilely tormented. Howbeit let vs paſſe ouer this alſo, as though it made litle to the matter. But of how great importance do we think it is, that the Lordes kingdom is taken away from him, which he claimeth to himſelfe with ſo great ſeuerity? But it is taken away ſo oft as he is worſhipped with the lawes of mens inuentions, whereas he will be holden for the only lawmaker of his owne worſhip. And leaſt any man ſhold thinke it to be a matter of nothing, let vs heare how much the Lord eſteemeth it. Becauſe (ſayth he) this people hath feared me with the commaundement & doctrine of men: beholde I wil aſtoniſh them with a great & wonderous miracle. For wiſdom ſhal periſh from the wiſe men therof, & vnderſtanding ſhal depart frō the elders. In an other place, They worſhip me in vaine teaching doctrines, the commaundements of mē. And truly wheras the children of Iſraell defiled thēſelues with many idolatries, the cauſe of al ẏ euil is aſcribed to this vnclean mixture, ẏ tranſgreſſing the commaundements of God, they haue forged new worſhippinges. And therefore the holy Hiſtory rehearſeth

hearseth that the new strãgers that had bin transplanted by the king of Babilon to inhabite Samaria, were torne in peeces & consumed of wilde beastes, because they knew not the iudgementes or statutes of the God of that lande. Although they had nothinge offended in the Ceremonies, yet God would not haue allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meane time he ceased not to take vengeance of the defilinge of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Wherupon it is afterward said, that they being made afraid with that punishment, receiued the Ceremonies prescribed in the law: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twise repeated that they did feare him and did not feare him. Wherupon we gather, that the parte of reuerence which is giuen to him, consisteth in this, while in worshipping him we simply follow what he commaundeth with mingling none of our inuentions. And therefore the godly kings are oftentimes praised, because they did according to al the cõmaundements, & declined not to the right hande nor to the left. I go yet further: although in some fayned worshipping there do not opẽly appeare vngodlines, yet it is seuerely condemned of the holy Ghost, so soone as men depart frõ the cõmaundemẽt of God. The Altar of Achaz, the paterne wherof was brought out of Samaria, might haue seemed to encrease the garnishment of the temple, whereas his deuise was to offer Sacrifices thereupon to God onely, which he shoulde do more honorably than vpon the first & old Altar: yet we see how the Spirit detesteth that boldnesse, for none other cause but for that the inuentions of mẽ in ỹ worshipping of God are vncleane corruptions. And howe much more clearely the will of God is opened vnto vs, so much the lesse excusable is our frowardnes to attẽpt any thinge. And therfore worthily with this circumstance the crime of Manasses is enforced, for that he builded a new altar in Ierusalẽ, of which God had pronounced I will there set my name, because the authority of God is now as it were of set purpose refused.

24 Many do maruell why God so sharply threatneth ỹ he will do thinges to be wondred at to the people of whom he was worshipped with the commaundements of men, & pronounceth that he is worshipped in vaine with ỹ precepts of men. But if they considered, what it is in the cause of religion, that is to say of heauenly wisdom, to hang vpõ the only mouth of God, they would therwithal see, ỹ it is no sclẽder reason why God so abhorreth such peruerse seruices, that are done to him accordinge to the lust of mans wit. For although they that obey such lawes for the worshipping of God, haue a certaine shew of humility in this their obedience, yet they are not hũble before God, to whom they prescribe the same lawes which they themselues do kepe. This is the reason why Paul willeth vs so diligently to beware, that we be not deceiued by the traditiõs of men & that which he calleth ethelothreskian that is, Wilworshipinuented of men beside the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wisdom, & al mẽs wisdom must be fooliſhe vnto vs, that we may suffer him alone to be wise. Which way they keepe not which do study with pety obseruations fained by the wil of men to commend themselues vnto him, & do thrust vnto him as it were against his wil a transgressinge obedience toward him, which is in dede giuen to men. As it hath bin done both in many ages heretofore, & in the time within our owne remẽbrance, & is also at this day done in those places where the authority of the creature is more estemed than of the creator: where religiõ (if yet the same be worthy to be called religion) is defiled with more & more vnsauory superstitions, than euer was any Paynime wickednes. For what could the wit of men brede but all things carnall & fooliſh and such as truely resemble their authors?

25 Wheras also the Patrones of superstitions alleage, that Samuel Sacrificed in Ramatha, and although the same was done beside the law, yet it pleased God: the solution is easie, that it was not a certaine secõd altar to set against the one only altar: but because the place was not yet appointed for the arke of couenant, he appointed the towne where he dwelled for Sacrifices, as the most conuenient place. Truely the minde of the holy Prophet was not to make any innouation in holy things, wheras God had so streightly forbidden any thing to be added or miniſhed. As for the example of Menoha, I say ẏ it was an extraordinary and singular case. He being a priuate man offred sacrifice to God & not without the allowance of God: verily because he enterprised it nõt of a rash motiõ of his own minde, but by a heauenly instinction. But how much the Lord abhorreth those things that mẽ deuise of themselues to worship him withall, an other not inferior to Gedeon is a notable example, whose Ephod turned to destruction not only to him and his family, but to the whole people. Finally euery new found inuention, wherwith men couet to worship God, is nothing else but a defiling of true holineſſe.

26 Why then (say they) did Christ will that those intolerable burdens should be borne, which the Scribes and Phariſees bound vpon men? But why in an other place did the same Christ will that men should beware of the leuẽ of the Phariſees: calling leuen (as Mathew the Euangeliſt expoundeth it) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the purenes of the word of God? What would we haue

more plaine, than that we be commaunded to flee and beware of all their doctrine? Whereby it is made moſt certaine vnto vs, that in the other place alſo the Lorde willed not, that the conſciences of his ſhould be vexed with the Phariſees owne traditions. And the very wordes, if they be not wreſted, ſounde of no ſuch thing. For the Lord purpoſing there to enuey ſharply againſt the maners of the Phariſees, did firſt ſimply inſtruct them that heard him, that although they ſawe nothing in their life mete for them to followe, yet they ſhould not ceſſe to do thoſe things which they taught in wordes, while they ſate in the chaire of Moſes, that is, to declare the lawe. Therefore he meant nothing els but to prouide that the common people ſhould not with the euill exāples of the teachers be brought to deſpiſe the doctrine. But foraſmuch as many are nothing at all moued with reaſons, but alway require authoritie, I will allege Auguſtines wordes, in which the very ſame thing is ſpoken. The Lordes ſhepefolde hath gouernours, ſome faithfull, and ſome hirelinges. The gouernours that are faithfull, are true Paſtors: but heare ye, that the hirelinges alſo are neceſſarie: for many in the Church following earthly profits, do preach Chriſt, and by them the voice of Chriſt is heard: and the ſhepe do followe, not a hireling, but the Paſtor by the meanes of a hireling. Heare ye that hirelinges are ſhewed by the Lorde himſelfe. The Scribes (ſaith he) and the Phariſees ſitt in the chaire of Moſes. Do ye thoſe things that they ſay, but do not thoſe things that they do. What other thing ſaid he, but heare the voice of the Paſtor by the hirelinges? For in ſitting in the chaire they teach the lawe of God: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, heare it not, do it not. This ſaith Auguſtine. In Ioh. Tract. 46.

27 But whereas many vnſkilfull men, when they here that conſciences are wickedly bounde and God worſhipped in vaine with the traditiōs of men, do at ones blott out altogether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is ſet in frame: therefore it is conuenient alſo to mete with their error: Verily in this point it is eaſy to be deceiued, becauſe at the firſt ſight it doth not by and by appeare what difference is betweene the one ſort and the other. But I will ſo plainly in fewe wordes ſett out the whole matter, that the likeneſſe may deceiue no man. Firſt let vs holde this, that if we ſee in euery fellowſhip of men ſome policie to be neceſſarie, that may ſerue to nouriſh common peace and to reteine concorde: if we ſe that in the doing of things there is alway ſome orderly forme, which is behouefull for publike honeſtie and for very humanitie not to be refuſed: the ſame ought chiefely to be obſerued in Churches, which are both beſt mainteined by a well framed diſpoſition of all things,& without agreement are no Churches at all. Therfore if we will haue the ſafetie of the Church well prouided for, we muſt altogether diligently procure that which Paule commaundeth, that all things be done comelily and according to order. But foraſmuch as there is ſo great diuerſitie in the maners of men, ſo great varietie in mindes, ſo great diſagreement in iudgements and wittes: neither is there any policie ſtedfaſt enough, vnleſſe it be ſtabliſhed by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vſage can be obſerued without a certaine appointed forme: Therefore we are ſo farre of from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpoſe, that we affirme that when thoſe be taken away, Churches are diſſolued from their ſinewes, and vtterly deformed and ſcattered abrode. For this which Paule requireth, that all things be done decently and in order, can not be had, vnleſſe the order it ſelfe and comelineſſe be ſtabliſhed, with obſeruatiõs adioined as with certaine bondes. But this onely thing is alway to be excepted in thoſe obſeruatiõs, that they be not either beleued to be neceſſary to ſaluation, and ſo binde conſciences with religion, or, be applied to the worſhipping of God, and ſo godlineſſe be repoſed in them.

1. Cor. 14.40.

28 We haue therefore a very good and moſt faithfull marke, which putteth difference betwene thoſe wicked ordinances, by which we haue ſayed that true religion is darkened and conſciences ſubuerted, and the lawfull obſeruations of the Church: if we remember that the lawfull obſeruations tende alway to one of theſe two things or to both together, that in the holy aſſembly of the faithfull all things be done comely and with ſuch dignitie as beſeemeth: and that the very common fellowſhip of men ſhould be kept in order as it were by certaine bondes of humanitie and moderation. For when it is ones vnderſtode that the lawe is made for publike honeſties ſake, the ſuperſtition is nowe taken away, into which they fall that meaſure the worſhipping of God by the inuentiõs of men. Again when it is knowen that it perteineth to cõmon vſe, then that falſe opinion of bond and neceſſitie is ouerthrowen, which did ſtrike a great terror into conſciences, when traditions were thought neceſſarie to ſaluation. For herein is nothing required but that charitie ſhould with common dutiefull doing be nouriſhed among vs. But it is good yet to define more plainely, what is comprehended vnder that comelineſſe which Paule commendeth, and alſo what vnder order. The ende of comelineſſe is, partly that when ſuch Ceremonies are vſed as may procure a reuerence to holy things, we may by ſuch helpes be ſtirred vp to godlineſſe: partly alſo that the modeſtie and grauitie which ought to be ſeen in all honeſt doings may therin principally appeare. In order, this is the firſt point, that they which gouerne may knowe the rule and lawe to rule well: and the people which are gouerned may be accuſtomed to obeying of God, and to right diſcipline: Then, that the ſtate of the Church being well framed, peace & quietneſſe may be prouided for.

29 Therefore we ſhall not ſay that comlineſſe is, wherein ſhalbe nothing but vaine delectation: ſuch as we ſe in that playerlike apparell which the Papiſtes vſe in their ceremonies, where appeareth nothing els but an vnprofitable viſor of gaineſſe, and exceſſe without frute. But we ſhall accompt that to be comelineſſe which ſhall ſo be mete for the reuerence of holy miſteries, that it be a fitt exerciſe to godlineſſe, or at leaſt ſuch as ſhall ſerue to conuenient garniſhing for the celebrating thereof: and the ſame not without frute, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with howe great modeſtie, religiouſneſſe and reuerence, they ought to handle holy things. Nowe, that ceremonies may be exerciſes of godlineſſe, it is neceſſarie that they leade vs the ſtreight way to Chriſt. Likewiſe we may not ſay that order conſiſteth in thoſe trifling pompes that haue nothing els than a vaniſhing gaineſſe: but that it ſtandeth in ſuch an orderly framing as may take away all confuſion, barbarouſneſſe, obſtinacie, and all ſtriues & diſſentions. Of the firſt ſort are theſe examples in Paul: that prophane bankettinges ſhould not be mingled with the holy Supper of the Lorde: that women ſhould not come abrode, but couered: and many other which we haue in common vſe: as this, that we pray kneling and bare hedded: that we miniſter the Lordes Sacraments not vnclenly, but with ſome dignitie: that in the burying of the dead we vſe ſome honeſt ſhewe: and other things that are of the ſame ſort. Of the other kinde are the houres appointed for publike prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of miſteries: at Sermons, quietneſſe and ſilence, places appointed, ſinging together of Hymnes, dayes prefixed for celebrating of the Lordes Supper, that Paule forbiddeth that women ſhould teach in the Church, and ſuch like. But ſpecially thoſe things that coneerne diſcipline, as the teaching of the Catechiſme, the cenſures of the Church, excommunication, faſtings, and ſuch as may be reckened in the ſame number. So all the conſtitutions of the Church, which we receiue for holy and holſome, we may referre to two chiefe titles: for ſome perteine to rites and ceremonies, and the other to diſcipline and peace.

1. Cor. 14. 34.

30 But becauſe here is perill, leaſt on the one ſide the falſe biſhops ſhould thereby catch a pretenſe to excuſe their wicked and tyrānous

lawes, & leaſt on the other ſide there be ſome men to fearfull, which admoniſhed with the aforeſaid euels do leaue no place to lawes be they neuer ſo holy: here it is good to proteſt, that I allowe onely thoſe ordinances of men, which be both grounded vpon the authoritie of God, and taken out of the ſcripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Let vs take for an example the kneling which is vſed in time of common prayer. It is demanded, whether it be a tradition of man, which euery man may lawfully refuſe or neglect. I ſay that it is ſo of men, that it is alſo of God. It is of God, in reſpect that it is a part of that comelineſſe, the care and keping whereof is commended vnto vs by the Apoſtle: it is of men, in reſpect that it ſpecially betokeneth that which had in generaltie rather bene pointed to, than declared. By this one example we may iudge, what is to be thought of that whole kinde: verily becauſe the Lord hath in his holy Oracles both faithfully conteined and clerely ſet foorth both the whole ſumme of true righteouſneſſe, and all the partes of the worſhipping of his diuine maieſtie, and whatſoeuer was neceſſarie to ſaluation: therefore in theſe things he is only to be heard as our ſcholemaſter. But becauſe in outward diſcipline and Ceremonies his will was not to preſcribe ech thing particularly what we ought to followe (becauſe he foreſaw this to hang vpon the ſtate of times, and did not thinke one forme to be fitt for all ages) herein we muſt flee to thoſe generall rules which he hath geuen, that thereby all thoſe things ſhould be tried which the neceſſitie of the Church ſhall require to be commaunded for order and comelineſſe. Finally, Foraſmuch as he hath therefore taught nothing expreſly, becauſe theſe things both are not neceſſary to ſaluation, and according to the maners of euery nation and age ought diuerſly to be applied to the edifying of the Church: therefore as the profit of the Church ſhall require, it ſhalbe conuenient as well to change and abrogate thoſe that be vſed, as to inſtitute newe. I graunt in deede, that we ought not raſhly, nor oft, nor for light cauſes to runne to innouation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie ſhall beſt iudge: which if we will ſuffer to be the gouerneſſe, all ſhall be ſafe.

1.Cor. 14.40.

31 Nowe it is the dutie of Chriſtian people, to kepe ſuch things as haue bene ordeined according to this rule, with a free conſcience and without any ſuperſtition, but yet with a godly and eaſy redineſſe to obey, not to deſpiſe them, not to paſſe them ouer with careleſſe negligence: ſo farre is it of, that they ought by pride and obſtinacie openly to breake them. What maner of libertie of conſcience (wilt thou ſay) may there be in ſo great obſeruation and wareneſſe? Yea, it ſhall ſtande excellently well when we ſhall conſider, that they are not ſtedfaſt and perpetuall ſtayed lawes, whereunto we be bounde, but outwarde rudements for the weakeneſſe of men: which although we do not all neede, yet we do all vſe them, becauſe we are mutually one bounde to an other, to nouriſh charitie among vs. This we may reknowledge in the examples aboue reherſed. What? Doth religion ſtande in a womans veile, that it is not lawefull to go out of dores with her hed vncouered? Is that holy decree of his cõcerning ſilence, ſuch as can not be broken without moſt hainous offence? Is there any miſterie in kneling, or in burying of a dead carcaſe, that may not be omitted without ſinne? No. For if a woman neede, for the helping of her neighbor, to make ſuch haſt as may not ſuffer her to couer her hed, ſhe offendeth not if ſhe runne thether with her hed vncouered. And it may ſometime befal that it may be no leſſe conuenient for her to ſpeake, than at an other time to holde her peace. And there is no cauſe to the contrary, but that he which by reaſon of diſeaſe can not bowe his knees may pray ſtanding. Finally, it is better to burie a dead man ſpedely in time, than when they lacke a winding ſhete, or when there be not men preſent to conuey him, to tarry till he rott vnburied. But neuertheleſſe in theſe things there is ſomewhat which the maner and ordinances of the contree, and finally very naturall honeſtie and the rule of modeſtie apointeth to be done or auoided: wherein if a man ſwarue any thing from them, by vnwareneſſe, or forgetfulneſſe, there is no crime committed: but if vpon contempt, ſuch ſtubbornneſſe is to be diſallowed. Likewiſe the dayes themſelues, which they be, and the houres, and howe the places be bilded, and what Pſalmes be ſong vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is mete that there be both certaine dayes, and appointed houres, and a place fitt to receiue all, if there be regarde had of the preſeruation of peace. For howe greate an occaſion of brawlings ſhould the confuſion of theſe things be, if it were lawfull for euery man, as he liſt, to change thoſe things that belong to common ſtate: foraſmuch as it will neuer come to paſſe that one ſame thing ſhall pleaſe all men, if things be lefte as it were in the middeſt to the choiſe of euery man? If any man do carpe againſt vs, and will herein be more wiſe than he ought, let him ſe himſelfe by what reaſon he can defende his owne preciſeneſſe to the Lorde. As for vs, this ſaying of Paule ought to ſatisfie vs, that we haue not an vſe to contende, nor the Churches of God." 1. Cor. 11. 16.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to be endeuored, that no error crepé in, that may corrupt or obſcure this pure vſe. Which ſhalbe obteined, if all obſeruations, whatſoeuer they ſhalbe, ſhall haue a shewe of manifeste profit, and it very fewe be receiued, but principally if there be adioined a faithfull doctrine of the Pastor, that may stoppe vp the way to peruerse opinios. This knowledge maketh, that in all these things euery man may haue his owne libertie preserued, and neuertheless shall willingly charge his owne libertie with a certaine necessitie, so farre as either this comelinesse that we haue spoken of, or the order of Charitie shall require. Secondly, that both we our selues should without any superstition be busied in the obseruing of those things, and should not to precisely require them of other, so as we should think the worshipping of God to be the better for the multitude of Ceremonies: that one Church should not despise an other for the diuersitie of discipline: last of all that setting herein no perpetuall lawe to our selues, we should referre the whole vse and ende of obseruatios to the edification of the Church, that, when it requireth we may without any offense suffer not onely somwhat to be changed, but all the obseruations that were before in vse among vs, to be altered. For this age is a present experience, that certaine rites, which otherwise are not vngodly nor vncomely, may according to the fit occasion of ỹ matter, be conueniently abrogate. For (such hath bene the blindenesse and ignorance of the former times) Churches haue heretofore, with so corrupt opinion and with so stiffe affection, sticked in Ceremonies, that they can scarcely be sufficiently purged from monstruous superstitions, but that many Ceremonies must be taken away, which in olde time were paraduenture ordeined not without cause, and of themselues haue no notable vngodlinesse in them.

The xj. Chapter.

Of the iurisdiction of the Church, and the abuse thereof, such as is seen in the Papacie.

NOw remaineth the third part of the power of the Church, yea and the chiefe parte in a well ordered state, which we haue sayed to cõsiste in iurisdiction. The whole iurisdiction of the Church perteineth to the discipline of maners, of which we shall entrate by and by. Forasmuch as no citie, or no towne can stande without Magistrat and policy: so the Church of God (as I haue already taught, but nowe I am compelled to repete it againe) needeth her certaine spirituall policy: but such as is vtterly seuered from the ciuile policie, and doth so nothing hinder or minish it, that it rather doth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of iurisdiction shall in a summe be nothing els but an order framed for the

the preseruation of spirituall policie. To this ende from the beginning were ordeined iudiciall orders in Churches, which might vse examinatiõ of maners, correct vices, & exercise the office of the keies. This order Paul speaketh of in the Epistle to the Corinthians, when he nameth gouernements. Againe to the Romaines, when he saith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefulnesse. For he speaketh not to the magistrats, (for at that time there were no Christiã magistrats) but to them that were ioined with the Pastors for the spirituall gouernement of the Church. Also in the Epistle to Timothee, he maketh two sortes of Elders: some, that labor in the word: other some, that do not vse the preaching of the word, and yet do rule well. By this later sort it is no dout that he meaneth them that were appointed to loke vnto maners, and to the whole vse of the keyes. For this power, of which we nowe speake, hangeth wholly vpon the keyes which Christ gaue to the Church, in the xviij. Chap. of Mathewe: where he commaundeth, that they shoulde be sharply admonished in the name of the whole Church, that haue despised priuate monitions: but if they go forward in their obstinacie, he teacheth that they should be put out of the fellowship of the faithfull. But these monitions and corrections can not be without knowledge of the cause: therefore there needeth both some iudgement and order. Wherefore vnlesse we will make void the promise of the keyes, and take vtterly away excõmunication, solemne monitions, and all such things whatsoeuer they be: we must nedes geue to the Church some iurisdiction. Let the readers marke that that place entreateth not of the generall authoritie of doctrine, as in the. xvj. Chapt. of Mathewe, and the. xxj. of Iohn: but that the power of the Sinagoge is for the time to come transferred to the flocke of Christ. Vntill that day the Iewes had their order of gouerning, which Christ stablisheth in his Church, and that with great penaltie, so much as concerneth the pure institution of it. For so it behoued, forasmuch as otherwise the iudgement of an vnnoble and vnregarded congregation might be despised of rash and proude men. And that it should not encomber the reders, that Christ doth in the same words expresse things somewhat differinge one from the other, it shalbe profitable to dissolue this dout. There be therefore two places, that speake of binding and loosing. The one is in the. xvj. Chapter of Mathewe, where Christ, after that he had promised that he would geue to Peter the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, immediatly addeth, that whatsoeuer he shall binde or loose in earth, shalbe confirmed in heauen. In which wordes he meaneth none other thing, than he doth by other wordes in Iohn, when sending

Mat. 16. 19. his disciples to preache, after that he had breathed vpon them he said: whose sinnes ye forgeue, they shalbe forgeuen: and whoes ye reteine, they shalbe reteined in heauen. I will bring an exposition not suttle, not enforced, not wrested: but naturall, flowing, and offring it selfe. This commaundement of forgeuing and reteining sinnes, and that promise of binding and loosing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the ministery of the word: which whē the Lorde committed to the Apostles, he did therewith also arme them with this office of binding and loosing. For what is the summe of the Gospell, but that we all being the bondseruantes of sinne and of death, are loosed & made free by the redemption that is in Christ Iesus: and that they which do not receiue nor acknowledge Christ their deliuerer and redemer, are damned & adiudged to euerlasting bondes? When the Lorde deliuered this massage to his Apostles, to be carried into all nations: to approue that it was his owne and proceeding from himselfe, he honored it with this noble testimonie: and that to the singular strengthening both of the Apostles themselues, and of all those to whom it should come. It behoued that the Apostles shoulde haue a stedfast and sounde certaintie of their preaching, which they should not only execute with infinite labors, cares, troubles and dangers, but also at the last seale it with their blood. That they might (I say) knowe the same to be not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behoued that in so great carefulnesse, in so great hardnesse of things, and in so great dangers, they should be persuaded that they did the businesse of God: that when all the world withstode them and fought against them, they should knowe that God stode on their side: that hauing not Christ the author of their doctrine present by sight in earth, they should vnderstande him to be in heauen, to confirme the trueth of the doctrine which he had deliuered them. It behoued againe that it should also be most certainely proued by testimony to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Gospell was not the word of the Apostles, but of God himselfe: not a voice bred in earth, but come downe from heauen. For these thngs, the forgeuenesse of sinnes, the promise of euerlasting life, the message of saluation, can not be in the power of man. Therefore Christ hath testified, that in the preaching of the Gospell there is nothing of the Apostles, but the onely ministery: that it was he himselfe that spake and promised all things by their mouths as by instruments: and therefore that the forgeuenesse of sinnes which they preached, was the true promise of God: and the damnatiō which they pronounced, was the certaine iudgement of God. But this testifying is geuen to all ages, and remaineth in force, to certifie and assure all men, that the word of the Gospell, by what man soeuer it be preached, is the very sentence of God, published at the soueraigne iudgemēt seate, written in the boke of life, ratified, firme & fixed in heauen. Thus we see that in those places the power of the keyes is nothing but the preaching of the Gospell: and that it is not so much a power as a ministery, if we haue respect to men. For Christ hath not geuen this power proprely to men, but to his owne word, whereof he hath made men ministers.

3 The other place which we haue said to be, concerning the power of binding and loosing, is in the. xviij. chapter of Mathewe, where Christ saith: If any brother heare not the Church, let him be to thee as a heathē man or a publicane. Verily I say vnto you: whatsoeuer ye bind vppon earth, shalbe bound also in heauen: whatsoeuer ye loose shalbe loosed. This place is not altogether like the first, but is a litle otherwise to be vnderstanded. But I do not so make them diuerse, that they haue not great affinitie together. This first point is like in both, that either of them is a generall sentence: that in both there is alway all one power of binding and loosing, namely by the word of God, all one commaundement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that ý first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the Ministers of the worde do execute: this later place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the Church. The Church bindeth, whome she excōmunicateth: not that she throweth him into perpetuall ruine and desperation, but because she condemneth his life and maners, and vnlesse he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She looseth whom she receiueth into communion: because she doth make him as it were partaker of the vnitie which she hath in Christ Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinately despise the iudgement of the Church, or little regarde that he is condemned by the consenting voices of the faithfull: the Lord testifieth that such iudgement of the faithfull is nothing els but a publishing of his owne sentence: and that whatsoeuer they do in earth, is cōfirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of God, whereby they may condemne the peruerse: they haue the word, whereby they may receiue the repentant into grace. And they can not erre, nor dissent from the iudgement of God: because they iudge not but after the lawe of God, which is not an vncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy will of God, and a heauenly Oracle. Out of these two places, which I thinke I haue both brefely and familiarly and truely expounded, those furious men without difference as they be caried with their owne giddinesse, go about to stablish sometime cōfession, ſometime excommunication, ſometime iuriſdiction, ſometime the power to make lawes, ſomtime pardons. But the firſt place they allege to ſtabliſh the ſupremicie of the See of Rome: they can ſo well skill to fitt their keyes to all lockes and dores, that a man may ſay they haue practiſed ſmithes craft all their life.

3 For whereas many thinke that thoſe things endured but for a time, when the Magiſtrats were yet ſtrangers from the profeſſion of our religion: they are deceiued in this, that they conſider not, howe great difference and what maner of vnlikeneſſe there is of the Eccleſiaſticall and ciuile power. For the Church hath not the power of the ſwerd to puniſh or reſtrain, no empire to commaunde, no priſon, no other pains which the Magiſtrat is wont to lay vpon men. Againe, it tendeth not to this end, that he that hath ſinned ſhould be puniſhed againſt his will, but ſhould with willing chaſtiſement profeſſe his repentãce. Therfore there is a farre diuers order: becauſe neither doth the Church take to it ſelfe any thing which proprely belongeth to the Magiſtrat, nor the magiſtrat can execute that which the Church doth. This ſhalbe made plainer by an example. Is any man dronke? In a well ordered citie priſon ſhalbe his puniſhmẽt. Hath he committed fornication? He ſhall haue like, or rather greater puniſhment. So ſhall both the lawes, and the magiſtrat, and outward iudgemẽt be ſatisfied. But it may be that he ſhall geue no ſignification of repentance, but rather murmure & grudge againſt it. Shall the Church in this caſe do nothing? But ſuch can not be receiued to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Chriſt and his holy inſtitution. And reaſon requireth this, that he which offendeth the Church with an euill example, ſhould with ſolemne declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raiſed. The reaſon which they bring that are of cõtrary opinion, is to colde. Chriſt ſay they committed theſe doings to the Church, when there was no magiſtrat to execute them. But it happeneth oftentimes that the magiſtrat is more negligent, yea ſomtime peraduenture that himſelfe is to be chaſtiſed, which happened to the Emperor Theodoſius. There may beſide this aſmuch be ſaid of the miniſterie of the word. Nowe therefore after their ſentence, let Paſtors ceſſe to blame manifeſt wicked doings, let them ceſſe to chide, to reproue, to rebuke: for there be Chriſtian magiſtrates, which ought to correct theſe things with the lawes and with the ſwerd. But as the Magiſtrat ought by puniſhing, and by reſtraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: ſo likewiſe the miniſter of the word for his part ought to helpe the magiſtrat that there may not ſo many offende. So ought their workings to be conioined, that the one may be a helpe, not a hindrance to the other.

4 And truely if a man more nerely wey the wordes of Christ, he shall easily perceiue that in these places, is described a stayed state, and a perpetuall order of the Church, not such as endureth but for a time. For is not mete that we should accuse them to the magistrat, that will not obey our monitions: which yet should be necessary if the magistrat succeded into the office of the Church. What is this promise? Shall we say that it is a promise of one or a fewe yeres? Verily verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer ye bind in earth? Moreouer Christ did here institute no newe thing, but followed the custome alway obserued in the auncient Church of his owne nation: whereby he signified that the Church can not want the spirituall iurisdiction, which hadde bene from the beginning. And this hath bene confirmed by the consent of all times. For when Emperors and magistrats began to professe Christ, the spirituall iurisdiction was not by and by abolished: but onely so ordred, that it should diminish nothing of the ciuile iurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrat, if he be godly, will not exempt himselfe frō the common subiection of the children of God, whereof it is not the last part to submit himselfe to the Church, iudging by the word of God: so farre it is of, that he ought to take away that order of iudgement. For what is more honorable (saith Ambrose) for the Emperor, than to be called the sonne of the Church? For a good Emperor is within the Church, not aboue the Church, Therefore they, which to honor the Magistrat do spoile the Church of this power, do not onely with false exposition corrupt the sentence of Christ, but also do not slenderly condemne so many holy Bishops which haue bene from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vsurped the honor and office of the Magistrat. Epist. 32. ad Valent.

5 But on the other side it is good to see this, what was in olde time the true vse of the iurisdiction of the Church, and howe great abuse is crepte in, that we may knowe what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquitie, if we will ouerthrowe the kingdome of Antichrist, and set vp the true kingdome of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shotte at, that offences be preuented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may be abolished. In the vse two things are to be considered: first, that this spirituall power be altogether seuered from the power of the swerd: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull assembly. Both these things were obserued in the purer Church. For the holy Bishops did not exercise their power with fines, or emprisonments, or other ciuile punishments: but they vſed the onely word of the Lorde, as they ought to do. For the ſeuereſt reuenge, and as it were the vttermoſt thunderbolt of the Church is excommunication, which is not vſed but in neceſſitie. But this requireth neither force nor ſtrong hande, but is cõtent with the power of the word of God. Finally the iuriſdictiõ of the olde Church was nothing els but a declaration in practiſe (as I may ſo call it) of

2. Cor. 10. 4. that which Paul teacheth concerning the ſpirituall power of Paſtors. There is (ſaith he) power geuen to vs, whereby we may throwe down ſtrong holdes, wherby we may make low all height that lifteth vp it ſelfe againſt the knowledge of God, whereby we may ſubdue all thought, and may leade it captiue into the obedience of Chriſt, and we haue in readineſſe a reuenge againſt all diſobedience. As this is done by the preaching of the doctrine of Chriſt: ſo, leaſt the doctrine ſhould be ſcorned, according to that which is taught ought they to be iudged which profeſſe themſelues of the houſhould of faith. But that can not be done, vnleſſe there be ioined with the miniſterie a power to call them that are to be priuately admoniſhed, or to be more ſharply corrected, and alſo a power to exclude them from
1. Cor. 5. 12. the communion of the Supper, which can not be receiued without prophaning of ſo great a miſterie. Therefore when in an other place he ſaith, that it belongeth not to vs to iudge ſtrãgers, he maketh the children ſubiect to the cenſures of the Church, which may chaſtiſe their faultes: and he ſecretely ſignifieth that there were then iudicial orders in force from which none of the faithfull was free.

6 But ſuch authority (as we haue declared) was not in the power of one man, to do euery thing according to his owne will: but in the power of the aſſemblie of the Elders, which was the ſame thing in Epiſto 14. & 9. lib. 2. the Church that a Senate is in a City. Cyprian, when he maketh mention by whom it was exerciſed in his time, vſeth to ioine the whole Clergie with the biſhop. But in an other place alſo he ſheweth, that the very clergy ſo gouerned, that in the meane time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus he writeth: Sins the beginning of my biſhoprike I haue determined to do nothing without the counſell of the clergie and conſent of the people. But this was the common and vſuall maner, that the iuriſdiction of the Church ſhould be exerciſed by a Senate of Elders: of whom (as I haue ſayed) there were two ſortes: For ſome were ordeined to teaching, & other ſome were onely iudges of maners. By little and little
In. 5. capi. 1. ad Tim. this inſtitution grewe out of kinde from the firſt beginning of it: ſo that euen in the time of Ambroſe onely clerkes were iudges in eccleſiaſticall iudgements. Which thing he himſelfe complaineth of in theſe wordes: The olde Sinagoge (ſaith he) and ſins that time the Church hath had Elders, without whoes counſell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is growen out of vſe, I knowe not, vnleſſe peraduenture by the ſlouthfulneſſe or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone would be thought to be ſomewhat. We ſee howe much the holy man is diſpleaſed, that any thing of the better ſtate is decayed, when notwithſtanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the leaſt tolerable. What then would he do if he ſawe theſe deformed ruines that ſhewe almoſt no ſigne of the olde bilding? What bewayling would he vſe? Firſt againſt lawe and right, the Biſhop hath claimed to himſelfe alone, that which was geuen to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Conſul, driuing out the Senate, ſhould take the empire vpon himſelfe alone. But as he is aboue the reſt in honor, ſo in the whole aſſemblie is more authoritie than in one man. Therefore it was to wicked a deede, that one man, remouing the cõmon power to himſelfe, hath both opened an entrie to tyrannous luſt, and hath taken from the Church that which belonged vnto her, and hath ſuppreſſed and put away the aſſemblie ordeined by the Spirit of Chriſt.

7 But (as of one euill alway groweth an other) Biſhops diſdaining it as a thing vnworthie of their care, haue committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officials to ſerue that roome: I do not yet ſpeake what kind of men they be, but onely this I ſay, that they nothing differ from prophane Iudges. And yet they ſtill call it a ſpirituall iuriſdiction, where men contende about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more euell, with what face dare they call a brawling court the iudgement of the Church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doth a poore man owe a little money? he is cited: if he appeare, he is condemned. When he is condemned, if he do not ſatiſfie it, he is moniſhed: after the ſeconde monition they procede one ſteppe toward excommunicatiõ: if he appeare not, he is moniſhed to come & yeld himſelfe to iudgement: if he then make delay, he is moniſhed, and byandby excommunicate. I beſech you, what is there any thing like either to the inſtitution of Chriſt, or to the auncient maner, or to an Eccleſiaſticall order? But there is alſo correction of vices. But howe? verily they not onely ſuffer but with ſecret allowance do after a certaine maner cheriſh and confirme adulteries, wantonneſſe, dronkenneſſe and ſuch kinde of miſchieuous doinges: and that not onely in the cõmon people, but alſo in the clergie themſelues. Of many they call a fewe before them, either that they ſhould not ſeeme ſlouthfull in winking at them, or that they may milke our some money. I speake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, & sacrileges that are gathered thereby, I speake not what maner of men are for the most parte chosen to this office. This is enough and too much, that when the Romanistes do boast that their iurisdiction is spirituall, it is easie to shewe that there is nothinge more contrary to the order institute of Christ, and that it hath no more likenesse to the auncient custome than darkenesse hath to light.

8 Although we haue not spoken all things that might be alleaged for this purpose, and those thinges that we haue spoken of are knit vp in fewe wordes: yet I trust that we haue so fought it out, that there is nowe no more cause why any man should dout, that the spirituall power whereof the Pope with all his kingdome proudely glorieth, is wicked against God, and an vniust tyranny ouer his people. Vnder the name of spirituall power I comprehende both boldenesse in framing new doctrines, wherewith they haue turned away ỹ sily people from the naturall pureneſſe of the word of God, and the wicked traditions wherewith they haue snared them, and also the false ecclesiasticall iurisdictiō which they execute by Suffraganes and Officials. For if we graunt vnto Christ a kingdome among vs, it is not possible but that all this kind of dominion must immediatly be ouerthrowen and fall downe. As for the power of the swerd which they also geue to them selues, because it is not exercised vppon consciences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to entreate of it In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alway like thēselues, verily nothing lesse than that which they would be taken for, that is to say, Pastours of the Church, Neither do I blame ỹ peculiar faults of men, but the common wickednesse of the whole order, yea the very pestilence of the order: forasmuch as it is thought that the same should be maimed, vnlesse it be gloriously set forth with wealth and proude titles. If we require the authoritie of Christ concerning this matter, it is no dout but that his minde was to debarre the ministers of his worde from ciuile dominion and earthly gouernement, when he sayd, The kings of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them: but you shall not so. For he signifieth not onely that the office of Pastor is distinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be things so seuered, that they can not mete together in one man. For wheras Moses did beare both the offices together: First, that was done by a rare miracle: againe, it was but for a time till things were better sett in order. But when a certaine forme was ones prescribed of God, the ciuile gouernement was left vnto him, and he was commaunded to resigne the priesthode to his brother.

brother. And worthily. For it is aboue nature, that one man ſhould ſuffiſe to beare both burdens. And this hath in all ages bene diligently obſerued in the Church. And there was neuer any of the Biſhops, ſo long as the true forme of the Church endured, that ones thought of vſurping the power of the ſwerd: ſo that this was a common prouerbe in the time of Ambroſe, that Emperors rather coueted the prieſthode, than prieſts the empire. For this which he afterward ſaith, was emprinted in the mindes of all men: that palaces perteined to the Emperor, and Churches to the prieſt. Ex 18. 16. Homil. de Baſil. traden.

9 But ſins that a way hath bene deuiſed, whereby biſhops might holde the title, honor and richeſſe of their office without burden or careleaſt they ſhould be lefte altogether idle, ỹ power of the ſwerde was geuen them, or rather they did by vſurpation take it vpon themſelues. By what color will they defend this ſhameleſneſſe? Was this the dutie of biſhops to wrappe themſelues with iudiciall hearing of cauſes, with the gouernements of cities and prouinces, and through large circuites to meddle in buſineſſes ſo vnperteining to them: which haue ſo much worke and buſineſſe in their owne office, that if they were wholy and cõtinually occupied in it, and were withdrawen with no callings away from it, yet they were ſcarcely able to ſatisfie it? But (ſuch is their waiwardneſſe) they ſticke not to boſt, that by this meane the Church doth floriſh according to her worthineſſe, and that they themſelues in the meane time are not to much drawen away from the dueties of their vocation. As touching the firſt point: if this be a comely ornament of the holy office, that they be aduaunced to ſuch heighth, that the hieſt monarches may ſtand in feare of them: then they haue cauſe to quarell with Chriſt, which hath in ſuch ſort greuouſly pinched their honor. For, at leſt in their opinion, what cou'd haue bene ſpoken more diſhonorably than theſe words: The kings of the Gentiles and princes beare rule ouer them, but you ſhall not ſo? And yet he laid no harder lawe vppon his ſeruantes than he firſt laid and receiued vpon himſelfe. Who (ſaith he) hath made me a iudge or diuider among you? We ſee that he plainely putteth away from himſelf the office of iudging, which he would not do if it were a thing agreing with his office: will not the ſeruantes ſuffer themſelues to be brought into that order, whereunto the Lorde hath yelded himſelfe ſubiect? As for the other pointe, I would to God they could ſo proue it in experience as it is eaſy to ſpeake it. But foraſmuch as the Apoſtles thought it not good, to leaue the worde of God and miniſter at tables: thereby, becauſe they will not be taught, they are conuinced, that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good Mat. 20 25. Luc. 22. 25. Luc. 12. 14. Act. 6. 2

Biſhoppe and a good Prince. For if they (which according to the largeneſſe of the giftes wherewith they were endued, were able to ſatisfie mo & greater cares than any men that haue bene borne ſince them) haue yet confeſſed that they can not at ones applie the miniſterie both of the word & of tables, but that they ſhould faint vnder the burden: howe could theſe that be men of no valor in compariſon of the Apoſtles a hundred folde excell the induſtrie of the Apoſtles? Truly, to attempt it was a point of moſt ſhameles & to preſumptuous boldneſſe: yet we ſe that it hath bene attempted: but with what ſucceſſe, it is euident. For it could not otherwiſe come to paſſe, but that forſaking their own office they ſhould remoue into other mēs charge.

10 And it is no dout but that of ſmal beginning they haue by litle & litle growen to ſo great encreaſes For it was not poſſible that they ſhould at the firſt ſtep clime vp ſo hie. But ſomtime with ſuttletie and crooked crafty meanes they priuily auaunced themſelues, ſo as no man could foreſee that it would come to paſſe till it was done: ſometime when occaſion ſerued they did by terror and thretenings wring from princes ſome augmentation of their power: ſometime when they ſawe Princes not hard laced to geue, they abuſed their fonde and vnaduiſed gentleneſſe. In olde time if any controuerſie happened, the godly, to eſcape the neceſſitie of going to lawe, committed the arbitrement to the Biſhop, becauſe they douted not his vprightneſſe. With ſuch arbitrementes the olde Biſhops were oftentimes encōbred, which in dede greatly diſpleaſed them (as Auguſtine in one place teſtifieth) but leaſt the parties ſhould runne to contentious lawing, they did though againſt their willes take that encumbrance vpon them. Theſe men haue of voluntarie arbitrementes, which were altogether differing from the noiſe of iudiciall courtes, made an ordinarie iuriſdiction. In a litle while after when cities and contrees were troubled with diuerſe harde diſtreſſes, they reſorted to the protection of Biſhops, to be ſauegarded by their faithfull ſuccour: the biſhoppes by marueilous ſuttelty, of protectors made themſelues Lordes. Yea and it can not be denied that they haue gotten the poſſeſſion of a great parte by violente ſeditious partakinges. As for the Princes, that willingly gaue iuriſdiction to Biſhops, they were by diuerſe affections moued therunto. But, admitting that their gētleneſſe had ſome ſhewe of godlineſſe: yet with this their wrongefull liberality they did not very well prouide for the profit of the Church, whoes auncient & true diſcipline they haue ſo corrupted, yea (to ſay truth) haue vtterly aboliſhed. But, thoſe biſhops that haue abuſed ſuch goodneſſe of princes to their own cōmodity, haue by ſhewing of this one example enough & too much teſtified that they are not biſhops. For if they had had any ſparcle of an Apoſtolike ſpirite, they would without dout haue anſwered out of ỹ mouth of Paul: The weapõs of our warfare are not carnal, but ſpiritual. But they being rauiſhed with blind gredines, haue deſtroied both themſelues, their ſucceſſours, & the Church.

11 At length the Biſhop of Rome not cõtented with meane lordſhips, firſt laid hand vpon kingdomes, & afterward vpon the very empire. And that he may with ſome colour whatſoeuer it be retaine the poſſeſſion gottẽ by mere robbery, he ſomtime boaſteth that he hath it by the law of God, he ſomtime pretendeth the gift of Conſtantine, ſometime ſome other title. Firſt I anſwere with Bernard: Admit ỹ he do by any other reſon whatſoeuer, claime this vnto him, yet he hath it not by Apoſtolike right. For Peter coulde not giue ỹ which he had not: but he gaue to his ſucceſſors ỹ which he had, ỹ care of churches. But when the Lord and maiſter ſayth, that he is not appointed iudge betwene two, a ſeruant and ſcholar ought not to thinke ſcorne if he be not iudge of all men. But Bernard ſpeaketh of ciuile iudgementes: For he addeth: Therefore your power is in crimes, not in poſſeſſions: becauſe for thoſe and not for theſe ye haue receiued the keies of the kingdom of heauen. For which ſeemeth to thee the greater dignity to forgiue ſinnes, or to diuide landes? There is no compariſon. Theſe baſe and earthly thinges haue Kinges and Princes of the earth their iudges. Why do ye inuade the boundes of other? &c. Again. Thou art made a ſuperior: (he ſpeaketh to Pope Eugenius) but wherunto? Not to beare lordſhip, I thinke. Therefore how much ſoeuer we thinke of our ſelues, let vs remember that there is a miniſtery laid vpon vs, not a lordſhip giuen vs. Learne that thou haſt nede of a wedehoke, not of a ſcepter, that thou maiſt do the worke of a Prophet. Againe, it is plaine: Lordſhip is forbidden to the Apoſtles. Go thou therefore, and preſume to vſurpe to thy ſelfe either beinge a Lord, an Apoſtleſhip: or beinge an Apoſtle, a Lordſhip. And byandby after: the forme of an Apoſtleſhip is this, Lordſhip is forbidden them, miniſtery is bidden them. Whereas theſe things are ſo ſpoken of a man, that it is euident to all men, that the very trueth ſpeaketh them, yea where as the very thinge it ſelfe is manifeſt without all wordes: yet the Biſhoppe of Rome was not aſhamed in the Councell at Orleance to decree, that the ſupreme power of both the ſwerdes belong to him by the law of God.

Concilium Aurelatẽſe.

12 As for the gift of Conſtantine, they that be but meanly practiſed in the hiſtories of thoſe times neede not to be taught how much this is not only fabulous, but also to be laughed at. But to passe ouer

Epi. 34. lib. 4. with the priestes: but with excellent consideration, for his sake whose seruantes they be, let him so rule ouer them, that he also giue them due reuerence. We see how in common subiection he would be ac-compted as one of the people. For he there pleadeth not any other mans cause, but his owne. In an other place, I trust in the almighty God, that he will giue a longe life to our godly Lordes, and will dispose vs vnder your hande accordinge to his mercy. Neither haue I therefore alleaged these thinges, for that it is my purpose throughly to discusse this question concerning the gift of Constantine: but only that the Readers should se by the way how childishly the Romanistes do lye, when they go about to chalenge an earthly Empire to their Bishop. And so much the more fowle is the shameles nesse of Augustine Steuchus, ẅ in such a despeired cause hath bin so bolde to sell his trauaile and tongue to the bishoppe of Rome. Valla (as it was not hard for a man learned and of a sharp wit) had strongly confuted that fable. And yet (as a mā litle exercised in ecclesiastical matters) he had not sayd all that might haue made for that purpose. Steuchus burst in, and scattered stinking trifles to oppresse the cleare light. And true-ly he doth no lesse coldly hādle the cause of his maister, than if some mery conceited felow faining himselfe to do the same, would in dede take Vallas parte. But verily it is a worthy cause, for which the Pope should hyre such patrones for money: and no lesse worthy are those hyred losells to be deceiued of their hope of gayne, as it happened to Eugubinus.

13 But if any man require to know the time, since this fained Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed fiue hūdred yeres, since the bishoppes yet remained in subiection of the Princes, neither was the Pope created without the authority of the Emperour. The Em-perour Henry the fourth of that name, a light & rash man, and of no forcast, of great boldnes & dissolute life, gaue first occasiō to Gregory the seuenth to alter this order. For when he had in his court the bishoprikes of al Germany partly to be sold, & partly laid opē for spoile:
Hildebrand, which had receiued displeasure at his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to reuenge himselfe. But because he seemed to pursue an honest and a godly cause, he was furthered with the fauour of many. And Henry was otherwise, by reason of his insolent maner

of gouerning, hated of the moſt part of Princes. At the length Hildebrand, which called himſelf Gregory the ſeuenth, as he was a filthy & naughty man, bewrayed the malice of his hart: which was the cauſe that he was forſaken of many that hadde conſpired with him. But he thus much preuailed, that his ſucceſſours might freely without puniſhment not onely ſhake of the yoke, but alſo bringe Emperours in ſubiection to them. Hereunto was added that from thēſe forth there were many Emperours liker to Henry than to Iulius Ceſar: whome it was no hard thing to ſubdue, while they ſate at home careleſſe of all things and ſlouthfull, when they had moſt nede with vertue and lawfull meanes to repreſſe, the gredineſſe of the biſhoppes. Thus we ſee with what colour that ſame goodly gift of Conſtantine is ſhadowed, whereby the Pope faineth that the Empire of the Weſt was deliuered vnto him.

14 In the meane time the Popes ceſſed not, ſomtime with fraude, ſomtime with treaſon, and ſomtime with force to inuade other mens dominions: and the very city it ſelfe, which before was free, within a hundred and thirty yeares, or there about they brought into their ſubiection: till they grew to the ſame power which they haue at this day: and for the obtaining or encreating whereof, they haue ſo troubled Chriſtendome by the ſpace of two hundred yeares (for they beganne before that they tooke to them the dominion of the city) that they haue almoſt deſtroied it. In the olde time when vnder Gregorie the keepers of the goodes of the Church, did take poſſeſſion of the landes which they reckned to belōg to the Church, & after the maner of ſeaſing to the vſe of the Prince did ſet titles vpon them for token of claime, Gregory aſſembling a Councell of biſhops, inueyinge ſore againſt that prophane maner, asked whether they did not iudge that Clerke accurſed which did of his owne wil by writing of any title attēpt to enter vpon any poſſeſſion They all pronounced, accurſed. If to claime a peece of ground by writing of a title be in a Clerke an offenſe worthy of accurſing: when whole two hundred yeares together Popes do practiſe nothing elſe but battells, ſheding of blood, deſtructions of armies, ſackings of ſome cities, racing of other, ouerthrowes of nations, waſtinges of kingdomes, onely that they might catch hold of other mens poſſeſſions: what curſinges can be enough to puniſh ſuch examples. Truely it is very plaine that they ſeeke nothinge leſſe than the glory of Chriſt. For if they of their owne will do wholly reſigne all the ſecular power that they haue, therin is no daunger to the glory of God, no daunger to ſounde doctrine, no daunger to the ſafety of the Church: but they are caried blinde and headlong with only gredineſſe of dominion: becauſe they thinke nothinge ſafe, vnleſſe

Exe. 34. 4. they may beare rule with rigorouſneſſe (as the Prophet ſaith) & with power.

15 To iuriſdictiō is annexed immunity, which the Romiſh Clergy tooke to themſelues. For they thinke it againſt their dignity, if they aunſwere in perſonall cauſes before a temporall iudge: and therein they thinke both the liberty and dignity of the Church to conſiſt, if they be exempt from common iudgementes and lawes. But the olde biſhops, which otherwiſe were moſt rigorous in defending the right of the Church, iudged themſelues & their order to be nothing hurt, if they were ſubiect to thē. And the godly Emperours, without gainesayinge of any man, did alway call Clerkes to their iudgement ſeates ſo oft as neede required. For thus ſayth Conſtantine in his Epiſtle to the Nicomedians: If any of the biſhops ſhall vndiſcretly diſorder himſelfe, his boldneſſe ſhalbe reſtrained by the execution of the miniſter of God, that is by my execution. And Valentiniā ſayth: good biſhops do not ſpeake againſt the power of the Emperour, but do ſincerely both kepe the commaundementes of God the great kinge, and alſo obey our lawes. At that time all men were perſwaded of this without controuerſie. But Eccleſiaſtical cauſes were referred to the iudgement of the Biſhop. As if any Clerke had offended nothinge againſt the lawes: but onely was accuſed by the Canons: he was not cited to the cōmon iudgemēt ſeate, but in ẏ cauſe had ẏ biſhop for his iudge. Likewiſe if there were a queſtion of Faith in controuerſie, or ſuch a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the iudgement thereof was committed to the Church. So is that to be vnderſtanded, which Epiſt. 31 Ambroſe wryteth to Valentinian: Your father of honorable memory, not onely aunſwered in word, but alſo decreed by lawes, that in a cauſe of Faith he ought to be iudge that is neither vnfit in office nor vnlike in right. Againe: If we haue regard to the Scriptures or olde exāples, who is there that can deny that in a cauſe of Faith, in a cauſe (I ſay) of Faith, biſhops are wont to iudge of Chriſtian Emperours, and not Emperours of biſhops? Againe: I would haue come, O Emperour, to your conſiſtory, if either the biſhops or the people would haue ſuffred me to go: ſaying, that the cauſe of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a ſpirituall cauſe, that is to ſay the cauſe of religiō, ought not to be drawen into the temporall courte where prophane cauſes are pleaded. Worthily do all men praiſe his cōſtance in this behalfe. And yet in a Homel. de baſi lic. trad. good cauſe he proceedeth but thus farre, that if it come to violence and ſtrong hand, he ſayth that he will giue place. Willingly (ſayth he)

I will not forſake the place committed vnto me: but when I am enforced, I know not how to reſiſt: for our armour are prayers & tears. Let vs note the ſingular modeſty and wiſdom of the holy man, ioyned with ſtoutneſſe of courage and boldneſſe. Iuſtina the Emperours mother, becauſe ſhe coulde not draw him to the Arrians ſide, practiſed to driue him frō the gouernment of the Church. And ſo ſhould it haue come to paſſe, if he had come when he was called to the palace to pleade his cauſe. Therefore he denieth the Emperour to bea competent iudge of ſo great a controuerſie. Which maner of doinge both the neceſſity of that time, and the continuall nature of the matter required. For he iudged that he ought rather to die, than that ſuch an example ſhould by his conſent be giuen to poſterity: & yet if violence be offered, he thinketh not of reſiſtance. For he denieth it to be biſhoplike, to defend the Faith & right of the Church with armes. But in other cauſes he ſheweth himſelfe ready to do whatſoeuer the Emperour ſhall commaunde him. If he demaunde tribute, (ſayth he) we denie it not: the landes of the Church do pay tribute. If he aske landes, he hath power to claime them, none of vs reſiſteth. After the ſame manner alſo ſpeaketh Gregory. I am not ignorant (ſayth he) of the minde of our moſt noble ſoueraigne Lorde, that he vſeth not to entermeddle in cauſes pertaininge to Prieſtes, leaſt he ſhoulde in any thinge be burdened with our ſinnes. He doth not generally exclude the Emperour from iudging of Prieſtes: but he ſayth that there be certaine cauſes, which he ought to leaue to the iudgement of the Church. Lib. 3. Epi. 20.

16 And by this very exception the holy men ſought nothing elſe, but that Princes leſſe zealous of religion ſhoulde not with tyrannous violence and wilfulnes interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they diſallow, if Princes ſometime did vſe their authority in Eccleſiaſticall matters, ſo that it were done to preſerue the order of the Church, not to trouble it, to ſtabliſhe diſcipline, not to diſſolue it. For ſith the Church hath not the power of compellinge, nor ought to require it (I ſpeake of ciuile conſtraininge:) it is the office of Godly kinges & Princes to maintaine religion with lawes, proclamations, and iudicial proceedings. After this maner, when the Emperour Maurice had commaunded certaine biſhops that they ſhould receiue their felow Biſhops that were their neighbours and driuen out by the barbarous nations: Gregory confirmeth that commaundement, and exhorteth them to obeye it. And when he himſelfe is admoniſhed by the ſame Emperour to come to atonement with Iohn the biſhop of Conſtantinople, he doth in deede render a reaſon why he ought not Lib. 1. Epi. 43. Lib. 4. Epi 32. & 34.

Lib. 7. Epi. 39. to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunity frō the secular court, but rather promiseth that he will be obedient, so farre as his conscience will giue him leaue: and therewithall he sayth this, that Maurice did as became a godly Prince, when he gaue such commaundements to the Priestes.

The xij. Chapter.

Of the discipline of the Church, vvhereof the chiefe vse is in the censures and excommunication.

THe discipline of the Church, the entreating wherof we haue differred vnto this place, is briefely to be declared, that we may at length passe ouer to the rest. But that same for the most parte hangeth vpon the power of the keyes and spirituall iurisdiction. That this may be the more easily vnderstode, let vs diuide the Church into two principall degrees, that is to say the Clergy, and the people. Clerkes I call by the vsuall name those that execute publike ministery in the Church. First we will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to be subiect: then we will come to the Clergie, which beside that common discipline, haue a seuerall discipline by themselues. But because many for hatred of discipline do abhorre the very name thereof, let them heare this? If no felowship, yea no house though it haue but a small household, can be kept in right state without discipline, the same is much more necessary in ỹ church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth saluation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in steede of sinewes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the body hang together euery one in his fit place. Wherfore whosoeuer do either desire to haue discipline taken away, or hinder the restoringe thereof, whither they do it of set purpose or by vnaduisednesse, verily they seeke the extreme dissipatiō of the Church. For what shall betide, if what is lustfull be lawefull to euery man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preachinge of doctrine adioyned priuate admonishments, corrections, & such other helpes which sustaine doctrine & suffer it not to be idle. Discipline therefore is as it were a bridle wherewith they may be holden backe and tamed which coltishly resist against Christ: or as it were a pricke, wherewith they that are not willing enough may be stirred vp: and sometime, as a fatherly rod, wherewith they which haue more greuously fallē may be chastised mercifully & according to the mildenesse of the Spirite of Christ. Sith therefore we do nowe see at hande certaine beginninges of a horrible wastnesse in the Church, because there there is no care nor order to keepe the people in awe, very neceſſity crieth out that there is nede of remedy. But this is the only remedy, which both Chriſt hath commaunded, & hath alway bin vſed amóg the godly.

2 The firſt fundation of diſcipline is, that priuate monitions ſhould haue place: that is to ſay, that if any man of his owne accorde do not his duety, if he behaue himſelfe licentiouſly, or liue not honeſtly, or haue committed any thing worthy of blame, he ſhould ſuffer himſelfe to be admoniſhed: and that euery man ſhoulde ſtudy to admoniſh his brother when occaſiõ ſhal require. But ſpecially let the Paſtors and Prieſtes be watchfull to do this, whoſe office is not only to preach to the people, but in euery houſe to admoniſh and exhort if at any time they do not ſufficiently preuaile by generall doctrine: as Paule teacheth, when he rehearſeth that he taught priuately and in houſes, and proteſteth that he is cleane from the blood of all men, becauſe he hath not ceaſſed with teares day & night to admoniſhe euery one. For doctrine doth then obtaine force and authority when the miniſter not only doth declare to al together what their duety is to Chriſt, but alſo hath power and order to require the keping therof of them whom he marketh to be either not obedient to doctrine, or ſlothfull. If any man do either ſtubbornly refuſe, or in going forward in his faultes, do deſpiſe ſuch admoniſhments: when he hath bin the ſecond time admoniſhed with witneſſes called to it, Chriſt commaũdeth them to be called to the iudgement of the Church, which is the aſſembly of Elders: and that there they ſhoulde be more greuouſly admoniſhed as it were by publike authority, that if he reuerence the Church he may ſubmit himſelfe & obey. But if he be not hereby ſubdued, but do continue in his wickednes, then he commaundeth him, as a deſpiſer of the Church, to be put away from the felowſhip of the faithfull.

3 But becauſe he ſpeaketh here onely of ſecrete faultes, we muſt make this diuiſion: that ſome ſinnes be priuate, and ſome publike or openly manifeſt. Of the firſt ſorte Chriſt ſayth to euery priuate man, Reproue him betwene thee and him alone. Of manifeſt ſinnes Paule ſayeth to Timothee, Reproue him before all men, that the reſt may haue feare. For Chriſt had ſaid before, If thy brother haue offẽded againſt thee. Which words, (againſt thee) vnleſſe thou wilt be contentious, thou canſt not otherwiſe vnderſtande than vnder thine owne ſecrete knowledge, ſo that there be no moe priuie to it. But the ſame thing which the Apoſtle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that ſinne openly, he himſelfe folowed in Peter.

Mat.18. 15. 1.Tim.5 22.

Gala.2. 14. For when Peter ſinned euen to publike offence, he did not admoniſh him apart by himſelfe, but brought him foorth into the ſight of the Church. Therefore this ſhalbe the right order of doing, if in ſecrete faultes we go forward accordinge to thoſe degrees that Chriſt hath ſet: but in manifeſt faultes, we immediatly proceede to the Churches ſolemne rebuking, if the offenſe be publike.

4 Let this alſo be an other diſtinction: that of ſinnes ſome be defaultes, other ſome be wicked doinges, or hainous offences. To the correcting of this later ſort, not only admoniſhment or rebuking is to be vſed, but alſo a ſeuere remedy: as Paule ſheweth which not onely 1. Cor. 5. 4. chaſtiſed with wordes the Corinthian that had committed incett, but alſo puniſhed him with excommunication, ſo ſoone as he was certified of his wicked deede. Now therefore we beginne better to ſee how the ſpirituall iuriſdiction of the Church, which puniſheth ſinnes accordinge to the word of the Lord, is the beſt maintenance of health, & fundation of order, & bonde of vnity. Therfore whē the Church doth baniſhe out of her cōpany manifeſt adulterers, whoremongers, theeues, robbers, ſeditious perſons, periured men, falſe witneſſes, and ſuch other, againe, obſtinate men, which beinge orderly admoniſhed euen of ſmall faultes do ſcorne God & his iudgement: ſhe taketh nothinge vpon her ſelfe without reaſon, but executeth the iuriſdiction giuen her of the Lorde. Moreouer, that none ſhoulde deſpiſe ſuch iudgemēt of the Church, or lightly regard that he is condemned by Mat. 16. 19. & 18. 18. the conſenting voices of the faithful: the Lord hath teſtified, that the ſame is nothing elſe but a pronouncing of his owne ſentence, & that whatſoeuer they do in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue Ioh. 20. 23. the word of the Lord, wherby they may condemne the froward: they haue the word, whereby they may receiue the repentant into fauour. They I ſay that truſt that without this bonde of diſcipline Churches may long ſtande, are deceiued in opinion: vnleſſe perhappes we may want that helpe which the Lord foreſaw that it ſhoulde be neceſſary for vs. And truely how great is the neceſſity therof, ſhalbe better perceiued by the manifold vſe of it.

5 There be three endes which the Church hath reſpect vnto in ſuch corrections and excommunication. The firſt is, that they ſhoulde Ephe. 5. 25. not, to the diſhonor of God, be named amonge Chriſtians, that leade a filthy & ſinful life, as though his holy Church were a conſpiracy of Colo. 1. 24. naughty and wicked men. For ſith the Church is the body of Chriſt, it can not be defiled with ſuch filthy & rotten members, but that ſome ſhame muſt come to ỹ head. Therefore that there ſhould not be any ſuch thing in the Church, wherby his holy name may be ſpotted with any reproch, they are to be driuē out of her houſhold, by whoſe diſhoneſty any ſclaunder might redounde to the name of Chriſtians. And herein alſo is conſideratiō to be had of the Supper of the Lord, that it be not profaned with giuinge it to all without choiſe. For it is moſt true, that he to whom the diſtribution of it is commited, if he wittingly & willingly admit an vnworthy man whom he might lawfully put backe, is as gilty of Sacrilege, as if he did giue abroade the Lords body to dogges. Wherefore Chryſoſtome greuouſly inueyeth againſt the Prieſtes, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debarre no man. The blood (ſayth he) ſhalbe required at your handes. If ye feare man, he ſhall laugh you to ſcorne: but if ye feare God, ye ſhalbe reuerenced alſo among men. Let vs not feare maces, nor purple, nor crownes: we haue here a greater power. I verily will rather deliuer mine owne body to death, and ſuffer my blood to be ſhed, than I will be made partaker of this defilinge. Therefore leaſt this moſt holy myſtery be ſpotted with ſclaunder, in the diſtributinge therof choiſe is greatly requiſite: which yet cā not be had but by the iuriſdiction of the Church. The ſecond ende is, leaſt (as it is wont to come to paſſe) with the continuall company of the euill, the good ſhould be corrupted. For (ſuch is our redy inclination to go out of the way) there is nothing eaſier than for vs to be ledde by euill examples from the right courſe of life. This vſe the Apoſtle touched, when he cōmaunded the Corinthians to put the inceſtuous man out of their company. A litle leuen (ſaith he) corrupteth the whole lumpe of doae. And he foreſawe herein ſo great daunger, that he forbade him euen from all felowſhip. If any brother (ſayth he) among you be named either a whoremonger, or a couetous man, or a worſhipper of Idoles, or a dronkarde, or an euill ſpeaker, with ſuch a one I graunt you not leaue ſo much as to eate. The thirde ende is, that they themſelues confounded with ſhame may beginne to repent of their filthineſſe. So it is profitable for them alſo, to haue their owne wickednes chaſtiſed, that with feeling of the rod they may be awaked, which otherwiſe by tender bearing with thē would haue become more obſtinate. The ſame thing doth the Apoſtle meane whē he ſaith thus: If any do not obey our doctrine, marke him, and kepe no company with him, that he may be aſhamed. Againe in an other place, when he writeth that he hath deliuered the Corinthian to Sathan, that his Spirite might be ſaued in the day of the Lord: that is (as I expound it) that he went into a damnation for a time, that he might be ſaued for euer. But he therefore ſayth that he deliuereth him to Sathan, becauſe the deuill is out of the Church, as Chriſt is in the Church. For whereas some do referre it to a certaine vexinge of the flesh, I thinke that to be very vncertaine.

6 When these endes be set foorth, now it remaineth to see how the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in iurisdiction. First let vs kepe the diuision aboue set, that of sinnes some be publike, and other some be priuate or more secrete. Publike are those that haue not only one or two witnesses, but are committed openly & with the offense of the whole Church. Secret I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of Hypocrites, for those come not into the iudgemēt of the Church, but those of the meane kinde which are not without witnesses, and yet are not publike. The first kinde requireth not those degrees which Christ rehearseth: but when any such thing appeareth, the Church ought to do her duty in calling the sinner & correcting him according to the proportion of the offense. In the seconde kinde according to the rule of Christ, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacy added. When it is once come to knowledge, then is that other diuisiō to be noted betwene wicked doinges and defaultes. For in lighter sinnes there is not to be vsed so great seuerity, but chastisement of words sufficeth, & the same gentle & fatherly, which may not harden nor confound the sinner, but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more reioyce thā be sory that he was corrected. But it is mete that hainous offenses be chastised with sharper remedy. For it is not enough, if he that by doing wicked dede of euill example hath greuously offended the Church, should be chastised only with words, but he ought for a time to be depriued of the communion of the Supper, til he haue giuen assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthian Paule v. 1. Cor. 5 seth not only rebuking of words, but driueth him out of the Church, and blameth the Corinthians that it had so long borne him. The old and better Church kept this order, when rightfull gouernment florished. For if any man had done any wicked dede whereupon was growen offense, first he was commaunded to abstaine from partaking of the holy Supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, & to testifie his repentance before the Church. There were also certaine solemne vsages, which were enioyned to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had so done, that the Church Epist. 2. Lib. 1. Lib. 3. was satisfied, thē by laying on of hands he was receiued into fauour. Which receiuing is oftētimes called of Ciprian peace, who also briefly describeth this vsage. They do penance (sayth he) in a certaine full Epi 14 & 26. time: then they come to confession, & by the laying on of handes of the bishop & the Clergy they receiue power to come to the communion.

nion. Howbeit the biſhop & his clergy had ſo the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therewithall require the conſent of the people: as he ſheweth in an other place.

7 From this diſcipline there was no man exempted, that euen the Princes together with the common people did ſubmit themſelues to beare it. And rightfully, ſith it was euidēt that it was the diſcipline of Chriſt, to whom it is mete that all ſcepters and crownes of kinges be ſubmitted. So when Theodoſius was depriued by Ambroſe of power to come to the communion becauſe of the ſlaughter committed at Theſſalonica, he threw downe all the royall ornament wherewith he was clothed: he openly in the Church bewailed his ſinne, which had crept vpon him by fraude of other men: he craued pardon with groning & teares. For great kings ought not to thinke this to be any diſhonor to them, if they humbly throw downe thēſelues before Chriſt the king of kings, neither ought it to diſpleaſe thē that they be iudged by the Church. For ſith in their court they heare nothinge elſe but mere flatteries, it is more than neceſſary for thē to be rebuked of the Lorde by the mouth of the Prieſtes. But rather they ought to wiſh, that the Prieſtes ſhould not ſpare them, that the Lord may ſpare thē. In this place I omit to ſpeake, by whom this iuriſdictiō is to be exerciſed, becauſe it is ſpoken of in an other place. This onely I adde that that is the lawful maner of proceeding in excommunicatinge a man, which Paul ſheweth: if the Elders do it not alone by themſelues, but with the Church knowing and allowing it: that is, in ſuch ſort that the multitude of the people may not gouerne the doinge, but may marke it as a witnes & a keper that nothing ſhould be done of a few by wilfull affection But the whole maner of doing, beſide the calling vppon the name of God, ought to haue ſuch grauity, as may reſemble the preſence of Chriſt: that it may be vndouted that he there ſitteth for ruler of his owne iudgement.

Ambro. in lib. 1. Epiſt 3. in orat. habita in fune. Theodoſij.

8 But this ought not to be paſſed ouer, that ſuch ſeuerity becommeth the Church as is ioined with ỹ Spirit of mildenes. For we muſt alway diligently beware (as Paul teacheth) that he which is puniſhed be not ſwallowed vp of ſorrowe: for ſo ſhoulde of a remedy be made a deſtruction But out of the end may better be gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the ſinner ſhould be brought to repentance, & euill examples takē away, leaſt either the name of Chriſt ſhould be euill ſpokē of, or other men be prouoked to folow them: if we ſhall haue an eie to theſe things, we ſhalbe able eaſily to iudge how far ſeuerity ought to procede & where it ought to end. Therefore when the ſinner giueth a teſtimony of his

2. Cor. 2. 7.

repentãce,& doth by his teſtimony,as much as in him lieth,blot out the offenſe: he is not to be enforced any further:but if he be enforced,rigorouſneſſe doth then exceede meaſure.In which behalfe the immeaſurable ſeuerity of the olde fathers can not be excuſed, which both diſagreed from the preſcribed order of the Lord, and alſo was marueloſly dangerous. For whē they charged a ſinner with ſolemne penance,& depriuation frō the holy communion ſomtime for ſeuen yeres,ſometime foure yeres,ſometime three yeres,ſomtime for their whole life:what other thing could folow thereof but either great hipocriſie or moſt great deſperation? Likewiſe wheras no man that had fallen the ſeconde time was admitted to ſeconde penance but was caſt out of the Church euen to the end of his life:that was neither profitable nor agreeing to reaſon.Therfore whoſoeuer ſhal wey the matter with ſound iudgement,ſhall herein perceiue want of their diſcretion.Howbeit I do here rather diſallow the publike maner,thā accuſe all them that vſed it, whereas it is certaine that many of thē miſliked it:but they did therefore ſuffer it,becauſe they coulde not amend it. Truely Ciprian declareth,how much beſide his owne will he was ſo rigorous.Our pacience(ſayth he) and eaſines and gentlenes is redy to thē that come. I wiſh all to returne into the Church:I wiſh all our felowſoldiars to be encloſed within the tentes of Chriſt and in the houſes of God ỹ father.I forgiue al things,I diſſemble many thinges: for zeale and deſire to gather brotherhoode together,I examine not with full iudgement thoſe things that are committed againſt God in pardoninge defaultes more than I ought, I am my ſelfe almoſt in default: I do with ready and full loue embrace them that returne with repentance,cōfeſſing their ſinnes with humble & plaine ſatisfaction. Chryſoſtome is ſomwhat harder, and yet he ſayth thus:If God be ſo kinde,why wil his Prieſt ſeme ſo rigorous? Moreouer we know what gentleneſſe Auguſtine vſed toward the Donatiſtes,inſomuch that he ſticked not to receiue into biſhoprike thoſe that had returned from ſchiſme,euen immediatly after their repentance. But becauſe a contrary order had growen in force, they were compelled to leaue their owne iudgement to folow it.

Ad cor. Epiſt. 31 Lib.1.

9 But as this mildnes is required in the whole body of the church, that it ſhoulde puniſhe them that are fallen, mercifully & not to the extremity of rigor,but rather according to the precept of Paul,ſhould confirme charity toward thē: ſo euery priuate man for himſelf ought to temper himſelfe to this mercifulneſſe & gentlenes. Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the elect ſuch as are driuen out of the Church,or to deſpeire of them as though they were already loſt. We may in dede iudge them ſtraungers from the Church, & therefore ſtrangers from Chriſt: but that is only during the time that they abide in diuorce. But if then alſo they ſhewe a greater reſemblance of ſtubbornnes than of gentlenes, yet let vs commit them to the iudgement of the Lord, hopinge better of them in time to come than we ſee in time preſent, and let vs not therefore ceaſſe to pray to God for them, & (to comprehende all in one worde) let vs not condemne to death the perſon it ſelfe, which is in the hand & iudgemēt of God alone, but let vs rather weie by the law of the Lord of what ſort euery mans workes be. Which rule while we folowe, we rather ſtand to the iudgemēt of God than pronounce our owne. Let vs not take to our ſelues more liberty in iudginge, vnleſſe we will binde the power of God within boundes, & appoint a law to his mercy, at whoſe pleaſure when he thinketh it good, very euill mē are turned into very good, ſtraungers are graffed & foreins are choſen into the church. And this the Lord doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, & rebate their raſhneſſe: which if it be not reſtrained, preſumeth to take to it ſelfe power of iudging more than it ought.

10 For where as Chriſt promiſeth that that ſhalbe bound in heauen, which they that be his ſhall binde in earth, he limiteth the power of bindinge, to the Cenſure of the Church: by which they that are excommunicate are not throwen into euerlaſtinge ruine & damnation: but hearing their liues & maners to be condemned, they are alſo certified of their owne euerlaſtinge condemnation, vnleſſe they repent. For excommunication herein differeth from accurſinge, that accurſing taking away al pardon doth condemne a man and adiudge him to eternall deſtruction: excommunication rather reuengeth and puniſheth maners. And though the ſame do alſo puniſh the man, yet it doth ſo puniſh him, that in forewarning him of his damnation to come, it doth call him backe to ſaluation. If that be obtayned, reconciliation and reſtoringe to the communion is ready. But accurſinge is either very ſeldome or neuer in vſe. Therefore although eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, permitteth not to liue familiarly, or to haue frēdly conuerſation with them that be excommunicate: yet we ought to endeuour by ſuch meanes as we may, that returninge to amendement, they may returne to the feloſhip & vnity of the Church: as the Apoſtle alſo teacheth. Do not (ſaith he) thinke them as enemies, but correct them as brethren. Vnleſſe this gentlenes be kept as well priuately as in common, there is daunger leaſt from diſcipline we forthwith fall to butchery. Mat. 18. 18. 2. The. 3 15.

which Auguſtine entreateth of in diſputinge againſt the Donatiſtes: that neither priuate mē, if they ſee faults not diligently enough corrected by the Councell of Elders, ſhould therefore byandby departe from the Church: nor the Paſtors themſelues, if they can not according to their hartes deſire purge all thinges that nede amendment, ſhoulde therefore throw away the miniſtery, or with vnwonted rigorouſnes trouble the whole Church. For it is moſt true which he wryteth: that he is free & diſcharged from curſe, whoſoeuer he be that either by rebuking amendeth what he can: or what he can not amend, excludeth, ſauing the bond of peace: or what he can not exclude, ſauing the bond of peace, he doth diſalow with equity, and beare with ſtedfaſtneſſe. He rendreth a reaſon thereof in an other place: becauſe all godly order and manner of eccleſiaſticall diſcipline ought alway to haue reſpect vnto the vnity of the Spirit in the bond of peace: which the Apoſtle commaundeth to be kept by our bearing one with an other: and when it is not kept, the medicine of puniſhment beginneth to be not only ſuperfluous, but alſo hurtfull, & therefore ceaſſeth to be a medicine. He that (ſaith he) doth diligently thinke vpon theſe things doth neither in preſeruinge of vnity neglect the ſeuerity of diſcipline, nor doth with immeaſurableneſſe of correction breake the bonde of felowſhip. He graunteth in dede that not only the Paſtours ought to trauaill to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church, but alſo ẏ euery man ought to his power to endeuour thereunto: & he plainely declareth that he which neglecteth to moniſh, rebuke, & correct the euill, although he do not fauour them, nor ſinne with thē, yet is gilty before the Lord. But if he be in ſuch degree, that he may alſo ſeuere them from the partaking of ſacramentes, and doth it not, now he ſinneth not by an others euill, but by his own. Only he willeth it to be done, with vſing of diſcretion, which the Lord alſo requireth, leaſt while the tares be in rootinge out, the corne be hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Ciprian, Let a man therefore mercifully correct what he can: & what he can not, let him patienly ſuffer, and with loue grone and lament it.

Mat. 13. 29.

12 This he ſaith becauſe of the preciſenes of the Donatiſtes, who when they ſaw faultes in the Churches which the biſhops did in dede rebuke with wordes, but not puniſhe with excommunication, (becauſe they thought that they coulde this way nothinge preuaile) did ſharply inuey againſt the biſhops as betraiers of diſcipline, & did with an vngodly ſchiſme deuide themſelues from the flocke of Chriſt. As the Anabaptiſtes do at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to be of Chriſt, vnleſſe it do in euery point ſhine with angelike angelike perfection, do vnder pretenſe of their zeale ouerthrowe all edification. Such (ſaith Auguſtine) not for hatred of others mēs wickednes, but for deſire to maintaine their own contentions, do couet either wholly to drawe away, or at leaſt to diuide the weake people ſnared with the boaſting of their name: they ſwelling with pride, mad with ſtubbornes, traiterous with ſclaunders, troubleſome with ſeditions, leaſt it ſhould opēly appeare that they want the light of trueth, do pretend a ſhadow of rigorous ſeuerity: & thoſe thinges which in ſcripture are commaūded to be done with moderate healing for correcting of the faults of brethren, preſeruing the ſincerenes of loue, & keping the vnity of peace, they abuſe to ſacrilege of ſchiſme & occaſion of cutting of. So doth Satan transforme himſelfe into an angell of light, when by occaſiō as it were of iuſt ſeuerity he perſuadeth vnmerciſull cruelty, coueting nothinge elſe but to corrupt & breake the bond of peace & vnity: which bond remaining faſt, among Chriſtians all his foes are made weake to hurt, his trappes of treaſons are broken, and his councels of ouerthrowing do vaniſh away. 2. Cor. 11. 14.

13 This one thing he chiefly cōmendeth, that if the infection of ſinne haue entred into the whole multitude, then the ſeuere mercy of liuely diſcipline is neceſſary. For (ſaith he) the deuiſes of ſeparation are vaine, & hurtful & ful of ſacrilege, becauſe they are vngodly & proud, & do more trouble the weake good ones, than they amend the ſtout euill ones. And that which he there teacheth other, he him ſelfe alſo faithfully folowed. For writing to Aurelius biſhop of Carthage he cōplaineth that dronkennes which is ſo ſore condemned in ſcriptures, doth range vnpuniſhed in Affrica: & he aduiſeth him, that aſſembling a Councel of biſhops he ſhould prouide remedy for it. He addeth byandby after: Theſe thinges (as I thinke) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, not after an imperious maner, but more by teaching thā by cōmaunding, more by admoniſhing than by thretning. For ſo muſt we deale with a multitude of ſinners, but ſeuerity is to be exerciſed vpō the ſinnes of few. Yet he doth not meane that Biſhops ſhould therfore winke or hold their peace at publike faultes, becauſe they can not ſeuerely puniſh them: as he himſelfe afterward expoundeth it. But he willeth that the meaſure of correctiō be ſo tempered, that ſo farre as may be, it may rather bring health than deſtruction to the body. And therfore at length he cōcludeth thus? Wherfore both this cōmaundement of the Apoſtle is in no wiſe to be neglected, to ſeuer the euil, whē it may be done without peril of breaking of peace: & this is alſo to be kept, that bearing one with an other, we ſhoulde endeuour to preſerue vnity of the Spirit, in the bonde of peace. Lib. 3. contra parm. cap. 2. 1. Cor. 5 7. Ephe. 4. 2.

14 The parte that remaineth of diſcipline, which properly is not contained in the power of keies, ſtandeth in this, that accordinge to the neceſſity of times the Paſtors ſhoulde exhort the people either to faſting, or to common ſupplicatiõs, or to other exerciſes of humility, repentance, and faith, of which thinges there is neither time, nor meaſure, nor forme preſcribed by ỹ word of God, but is left in ỹ iudgemẽt of the Church. The obſeruing of this part alſo, as it is profitable, ſo hath alway bin vſed of the old church euen frõ the very Apoſtles. Howbeit the Apoſtles themſelues were not the firſt authors of them, but they tooke example out of the law & the Propheres. For we ſee that there ſo oft as any weighty buſineſſe happened, the people was called together, common praiers enioyned, & faſting commaunded. Therefore the Apoſtles folowed that which both was not new to the people of God, & they foreſaw that it ſhould be profitable. Likewiſe is to be thought of other exerciſes, wherewith the people may either be ſtirred vp to their duety, or be kept in awe and obedience. There are examples eche where in holy hiſtories, which we nede not to gather together. In ſumme this is to be holdẽ, that ſo oft as there happeneth any controuerſie of religion, which muſt be determined either by a Synode or by eccleſiaſtical iudgement, ſo oft as they be about chooſing of a miniſter, finally ſo oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doinge: againe when there appeare tokens of the wrath of God, as peſtilence, & warre, & famine: this is a holy ordinãce & profitable for all ages, that the Paſtors ſhoulde exhort the people to cõmon faſting, & to extraordinary praiers. If any man do not allow the teſtimonies which may be alleaged out of ỹ old teſtament, as though they were not mete for the Chriſtian Church, it is certaine that the Apoſtles alſo did the ſame. Howebeit of praiers I thinke there will ſcarcely any be found that will moue any queſtion. Therfore let vs ſay ſomwhat of faſting: becauſe many when they vnderſtande not what profit it hath, do iudge it not ſo neceſſary: ſome alſo do vtterly refuſe it as ſuperfluous: & when the vſe of it is not well knowen, it is eaſie to ſlide into ſuperſtition.

15 Holy & true faſtinge hath three endes. For we vſe it, either to make leane and ſubdue the fleſh, that it ſhould not waxe wanton, or that we may be better diſpoſed to praiers & holy meditatiõs, or that it ſhoulde be a teſtimony of our humblinge before God, when we be willing to confeſſe our giltines before him. The firſt end hath not ſo often place in cõmon faſting, becauſe all men haue not like eſtate of body, nor like health: therefore it rather agreeth ẅ priuate faſting. The ſecond end is cõmon to both, for as well the whole Church as euery

one of the faithfull hath neede of ſuch preparation to prayer. The thirde alſo is likewiſe common. For it ſhall ſometime befall that God ſhall ſtrike ſome nation with warre, or peſtilence, or with ſome calamitie. In ſuch a common ſcourge the whole people muſt accuſe themſelues, and openly confeſſe their owne giltineſſe. But if the hand of the Lorde do ſtrike any priuate man, he ought to do the ſame, either alone, or with his owne familie. That ſtandeth chiefly in the affection of the minde. But when the minde is affected as it ought to be, it is ſcarcely poſſible, but that it will breake out into outward teſtifying: and then chiefely if it turne to common edifying, that altogether in openly confeſſing their ſinne ſhoulde yelde praiſe of righteouſneſſe to God, and euery one mutually exhorte other with their example.

16 Wherefore faſting, as it is a ſigne of humbling, hath more often vſe publikely, than among priuate men, howſoeuer it be common, as is already ſaid. Therefore as touching the diſcipline whereof we nowe entreate: ſo oft as we muſt make ſupplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to commaunde faſting together with prayer. So when the Antiochians laide handes vpon Paule and Barnabas, that they might the better cõmẽde to God their miniſtery which was of ſo great importance, they ioined faſting with prayer. So both they afterward, when they made miniſters ouer Churches, were wont to pray with faſting. In this kinde of faſting they had regarde to none other thing, but that they might be made freſher and more vncombred to pray. Verily this we finde by experience, that when the belly is full, the minde is not ſo lifted vp to God, that it can both with harty & feruẽt affection be caried to prayer, and continue in it. So is that to be vnderſtood which Luke reherſeth of Anne, that ſhe ſerued the Lorde in faſtinges and prayers. For he doth not ſet the worſhipping of God in faſting: but ſignifieth that the holy womã did after that maner exerciſe her ſelfe to cõtinuance of prayer. Such was the faſting of Nehemias when he did with earneſtly bent zele pray to God for the deliuerance of his people. For this cauſe Paule ſaith that the faithfull do well, if they abſteine for a time from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply prayer and faſting. Where ioining faſting to prayer in ſteede of a helpe, he putteth vs in minde that it is of no value but ſo farre as it is referred to this ende. Againe when in the ſame place he geueth a rule to maryed folkes, that they ſhould mutually render good will one to an other, it is plaine that he doth not ſpeake of daily prayers, but of ſuch prayers as require a more earneſt intentiueneſſe.

17 Againe, if either peſtilence, or famine, or warre beginne to range abrode, or if any calamitie otherwiſe ſeeme to hang ouer any contree and people: then alſo it is the duetie of Paſtors to exhort the Church to faſting, that they may humbly beſeche the Lorde to turne away his wrath For he geueth warning that he is prepared and in a maner armed to reuenge, when he maketh any dãger to appere. Therfore as accuſed men in time paſt with long hanging beard, with vncombed heare, with blacke aray, were wont humbly to abace them ſelues, to procure the mercie of the iudge: ſo when we are accuſed before the iudgement ſeate of God, it behoueth both for his glorie, and for common edification, and alſo is profitable and healthfull for vs, that we ſhould in piteous array craue to eſcape his ſeueritie. And that this was vſed among the people of Iſraell, it is eaſy to gather by Ioel.2. 15. the wordes of Ioel. For when he commaundeth a trompet to be ſounded, the congregation to be gathered together, faſting to be appointed, and the reſt that followe: he ſpeaketh of things receiued in common cuſtome. He had a little before ſaid, that examination is appointed of the wicked deedes of the people, and had declared that the day of iudgement was nowe at hand, and had ſummoned them being accuſed to pleade their cauſe: then he crieth out that they ſhould haſt to ſacke cloth and aſhes, to weping and faſting: that is, that they ſhould alſo with outward teſtifyings throwe themſelues downe before the Lorde. Sacke cloth and aſhes paraduenture did more agree with thoſe times: but there is no dout that the calling together, and weping and faſting and ſuch like do likewiſe perteine alſo to our age, ſo oft as the ſtate of our things doth ſo require. For ſith is a holy exerciſe, both to humble men, and to confeſſe humility, why ſhould we leſſe vſe it than the olde people did in like neceſſitie?
1.Sam. 7.6. & 31.13. 2.Kin.1. 12. Ion.3.5 We reade that not onely the people of Iſraell, which were informed and inſtructed by the word of God, but alſo the Niniuites which had no doctrine but the preaching of Ionas, faſted in token of ſorowe. What cauſe is there therefore why we ſhould not do the ſame? But it is an outward ceremonie, which was with the reſt ended in Chriſt. Yea rather euen at this day it is, as it alway hath bene, a very good helpe to the faithfull, and a profitable admonition, to ſtirre vp them ſelues, that they ſhould not with to great careleſneſſe and ſluggiſhnes more & more prouoke God whē they are chaſtiſed with his ſcourges.
Matt.9. 15. Luke.5. 34. Therefore Chriſt when he excuſeth his Apoſtles for that they faſt not, doth not ſay that faſtinge is abrogate: but he appointeth it to times of calamitie, & ioineth it with mourning. The time ſhall come (ſaith he) when the bridegrome ſhall be taken away from them.

18 But that there ſhould be no error in the name, let vs define what faſting is. For we do not here vnderſtand by it onely abſtinence and ſparing in meate and drinke, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godly ought in deede to be tempered with honeſt ſparing and ſobrietie, that ſo nere as is poſſible it may in the whole courſe therof beare a certaine reſemblance of faſting. But beſide this there is an other faſting for a time, whē we withdrawe any thing of our wonted diet, either for one day or for a certaine time, and do charge our ſelues with a ſtreighter and ſeuerer abſtinence in diet than ordinarie. This conſiſteth in three things, in time, in qualitie of meates, and in ſmallnes of quātitie. I meane by time, that we ſhould vſe thoſe doings faſting, for which faſting is ordeined. As for example, if a man faſt for common prayer: that he come emptie vnto it. Qualitie ſtandeth in this, that all deintineſſe ſhould be abſent, and being content with common and baſer meates, we ſhould not ſtirre vp appetite with delicates. The rule of quantitie is in this, that we eate more ſparingly and leſſe than we be wont, onely for neceſſitie, and not alſo for pleaſure.

19 But we muſt alway principally beware, that no ſuperſtition crepe vpon vs, as it hath heretofore happened to the great hurt of the Church. For it were much better that there were no vſe at all of faſting, than that it ſhould be diligently kept, and in the meane time be corrupted with falſe and hurtfull opinions, whereunto the world ſometime falleth, vnleſſe the Paſtors do with great faithfulneſſe and wiſdome preuent it. The firſt point therfore is, that they ſhould alway enforce that which Ioel teacheth, that they ſhould cutt their hartes and not their garmentes: that is, that they ſhould admoniſh the people, that God doth not greatly eſteeme faſting of it ſelfe, vnleſſe there be an inwarde affection of the harte, a true miſliking of ſinne and of himſelfe, true humbling, and true ſorowe through the feare of God: yea that faſting is profitable for no other cauſe, but for that it is ioined to theſe as an inferior helpe. For God abhorreth nothing more than when men in ſetting ſignes and an outward ſhewe in ſteede of innocence of hart, do labor with falſe color to deceue themſelues. Therefore Eſaie moſt ſharply inueyeth againſt this hypocriſie, that the Iewes thought that they had ſatisfied God, when they had onely faſted, howſoeuer they did noriſh vngodlineſſe & vncleane thoughts in their hart. Is it (ſaith he) ſuch a faſting which the Lord requireth? and ſo forth as followeth. Therefore the hypocriticall faſting is not onely an vnprofitable and ſuperfluous werying, but alſo a great abhomination. An other euell neere vnto this is chiefly to be taken hede of, that it be not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worshipping God. For sith it is a thing of it selfe indifferent, and hath no value but by reason of those endes which it ought to haue respect vnto, it is a most hurtfull superstition, to cõfounde it with the workes commaunded of God and necessarie of themselues without other respect. Such was in olde time the dotage of the Manichees: whom Libr. 2. de mor. Manic. cap. 13. and lib. 20. contra Fau. when Augustine cõfuteth, he doth plainly enough teach, that fasting is to be iudged by no other endes than those which I haue spoken of, and is no otherwise allowed of God, vnlesse it be referred to the same. The thirde error is in deede not so vngodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keping of it more precisely and rigorously as it were one of the chiefe dueties, and so to aduance it with immeasurable praises, that men should thinke they haue done some excellent thing when they haue fasted. In which behalfe I dare not altogether excuse the olde fathers, but that they haue sowed some seedes of superstition, and geuen occasion to the tyranny which hath risen sins. There are founde in deede sometimes in them sounde and wise sẽtences, of fasting, but afterwarde we nowe and then mete with immeasurable praises of fasting which aduaunce it among the chiefe vertues.

20 And at that time the superstitious obseruing of lent was eche where growen in vse: because both the commõ people thought that they did therin some notable seruice to God, and the Pastors did commend it for a holy following of Christ: whereas it is plaine, that Mat. 4. 2. Christ did not fast to prescribe an example to other, but that in so beginning the preching of the Gospel, he might in very deede proue that it was not a doctrine of men, but descended from heauen. And it is meruailous, that so grosse an error, which is confuted with so many & so euident reasons, could crepe into men of so sharpe iudgement. For Christ did not fast oft (which he must needes haue done if he would haue set forth a lawe of yerely fasting) but onely ones when he prepared himselfe to the publishing of the Gospell. And he fasted not after the maner of menne, as it was mete that he should haue done if he would haue prouoked men to followe him: but rather he sheweth an example, whereby he may rather drawe men to wonder at him than stirre them vp to followe him. Finally there is none other cause of this fasting, than of that which Moses fasted when he receiued the law at the hand of the Lord. For sith that miracle was shewed in Moses to stablish the authoritie of the lawe, it ought not to haue bene omitted in Christ, least the Gospell should seeme to geue place to the lawe. But since that time it neuer came in any mans minde vnder color of following of Moses to require such a Exo. 24. 18 and 34. 28.

forme of fasting in the people of Israel. Neither did any of the holy Prophets and fathers follow it, when yet they had minde and zeale enough to godly exercises. For, that which is said of Helias, that he passed forty dayes without meate and drinke, tended to no other ende but that the people should knowe that he was stirred vp to be a restorer of the lawe from which almost all Israell had departed. Therefore it was a mere wrongfull zeale and full of superstition, that they did set forth fasting with the title and color of following of Christ. Howbeit in the maner of fasting there was then great diuersity, as Cassiodorus rehearseth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his historie. For the Romaines (saith he) had but three weekes, but in these there was a continuall fasting, except on the Sonday and Saturday. The Slauonians and Grecians had six weekes: other had seuen: but their fasting was by deuided times. And they disagreed no lesse in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: some added herbes: some did not forbeare fishe and fowles: summe had no difference in meates. Of this diuersitie Augustine also maketh mention in the latter Epistle to Ianuarie. 1 Kings 19.6.

21 Then followed worse times, and to the prepostерous zele of the people was added both ignorance and rudenesse of the Bishops, and a luste to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked lawes, which straine cõsciences with pernicious bondes. The eating of flesh was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of sacrilege one vppon an other, till they came to the bottome of all errors. And that no peruersenesse should be omitted, they began with a most fonde pretence of abstinence to mocke with God. For in the most exquisite deintinesse of fare is sought the praise of fasting: no delicates do then suffice, there is neuer greater plentie, or diuersitie, or sweetenesse of meates. In such and so gorgious preparatiõ they thinke that they serue God rightly. I speake not howe they neuer more fowly glutte themselues, than when they would be compted most holy men. Brefely, they compt it the greatest worshipping of God to abstеine from flesh, and (these excepted) to flowe full of all kinde of deinties. On the other side they thinke this the extremest vngodlinesse, and such as scarcely may be recompensed with death, if a man tast neuer so little a piece of bacon or vnsauery flesh with browne breade. Hierome telleth, that euen in his time were some that with such follies did mocke with God: which because they would not eate oyle, caused most deintie meates from euery place to be brought them: yea to oppresse nature with violence, they abstеined from drinking of water, but caused swete and Ad Nepotian.

costly suppinges to be made for them, which they did not drinke out of a cup, but out of a shell. Which faulte was then in a fewe, at this day it is a common faulte among all riche menne, that they fast to no other ende but that they may banket more sumptuously & deintily. But I wil not waste many wordes in a matter not doutefull. Only this I say, that both in fasting and in all other partes of discipline, the papistes so haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing well framed and orderly, whereby they may haue any occasiō to be proude, as though there were any thing remaining among them worthy of praise.

22 There followeth another parte of discipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the clergie. That is cōteined in the canons which the olde Bishops haue made ouer themselues and their order. As these be: that no clerke should geue himselfe to hunting, to dicing, nor to banketting: that none should occupie vsurie, or merchandise: that none should be present at wanton dauncings: and such other ordinances. There were also added penalties: whereby the authority of the canons was stablished, that none should breake them vnpunished. For this ende to euery Bishop was committed the gouernemēt of his owne clergie, that they should rule their clerkes according to the canons, and holde them in their dutie. For this ende were ordeined yerely ouerseinges and Synodes, that if any were negligēt in his duetie, he should be admonished: if any had offended, he should be punished according to the measure of his offence. The Bishops also themselues had yerely their prouinciall Synodes, and in the olde time yerely two Synodes, by which they were iudged if they had done any thing beside their duetie. For if any Bishop were to harde or violent against his clergie, they might appelle to those Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The seuerest punishment was that he which had offended should be remoued from his office, & for a time be depriued of the Cōmunion. And because that same was a continuall order, they neuer vsed to dismisse any Synode, but that they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Councell perteined to the Emperour onely, as all the olde summoninges of Councells do testifie. So long as this seueritie flourished, the clerkes did require in word no more of the people, than themselues did performe in example and deede. Yea they were much more rigorous to themselues than to the people. And verily so it is mete, that the people should be ruled with a gentler & looser discipline, as I may so terme it: but the clerkes should vse sharper iudgements among themselues, and should lesse beare with themselues, than with other men. Howe all this is growen out of vse,

it is no neede to rehearſe, when at this day nothing can be imagined more vnbridled and diſſolute than the Clergie, and they are broken forth to ſo great licentiouſneſſe, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie ſhould not ſeeme to be vtterly buried among them, I graunt in deede that they do with certaine ſhadows deceiue the eyes of the ſimple: but thoſe are ſuch as come no nerer to the auncient maners, than the counterfaiting of an ape approcheth to that which men do by reaſon and aduiſe. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth howe fowly the Perſians had ſwarued from the ordinances of their Elders, and were fallen from the rigorous kinde of life, to ſoftnes and deintineſſe, that yet they couered this ſhame, ſaying that they diligently kept the auncient vſages. For when in the time of Cyrus ſobrietie and temperãce ſo farre floriſhed that men needed not to weepe, yea and it was accompted a ſhame: with poſteritie this continued a religious obſeruation, that no man ſhould drawe ſnott out at his noſethrilles, but it was lawfull to ſucke it vp, & feede within euen till they were rotten the ſtinking humors which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the olde order it is vnlawfull to bring winepots to the borde: but to ſwill in wine that they neede to be caried away dronken, is tolerable. It was ordeined to eate but ones in a day: this theſe good ſucceſſors haue not abrogate, but they gaue leaue to continue their ſurfettings from mid day to mid night. The cuſtome was that mẽ ſhould make an end of their dayes iourney faſting. But it was at libertie & vſedly the cuſtome, for auoiding of werineſſe, to ſhorten their iourney to two houres. Whenſoeuer the Papiſtes ſhall pretende their baſtarde rules, to ſhewe themſelues to be like to the holy fathers: this example ſhall ſufficiently reproue their fonde counterfaiting, that no painter can more liuely expreſſe it.

23 In one thing they be to rigorous and vnentreatable, that they geue not leaue to Prieſts to mary. But howe great libertie there is among them to vſe whordome vnpuniſhed, is not needefull to be ſpoken: & bearing them bold vpon their ſtinking vnmaried life, they haue hardened themſelues to all wicked doings. But this forbidding doth plainly ſhewe, howe peſtilente all their traditiõs are, foraſmuch as it hath not onely ſpoiled the Church of good and fitt Paſtors, but alſo hath brought in a horrible ſinke of miſcheues, & throwen many ſoules into the gulfe of deſperation. Truely whereas mariage hath bene forbidden to Prieſts, that ſame hath bene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely againſt the word of God, but alſo againſt all equitie. Firſt to forbidde that which the Lorde had lefte at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againe, that God hath expreſſely prouided by his word that this libertie ſhould not be broken, is ſo euidente that it needeth no long demõſtration. I ſpeake not howe Paul in many places willeth a Biſhop to be the huſbande of one wife. But what could be more vehemẽtly ſpoken, than where he pronounceth by the Holy Ghoſt, that there ſhalbe in the laſt times wicked men that ſhall forbidde mariage: and he calleth them not onely deceiuers, but deuells? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holy Oracle of the Holy Ghoſt, wherewith he willed to arme the Church aforehãde againſt dangers, that the forbidding of mariage is the doctrine of deuells. But they thinke that they haue gaily eſcaped whẽ they wreſt this ſentence to Montanus, the Tatrans, Encratites and other olde heretikes. They onely (ſay they) condemned mariage: but we do not condemne it, but debarre the Clergie from it, for whom we thinke it not to be cõuenient. As though albeit this prophecy was firſt fulfilled in thoſe aforeſaid men, it might not alſo be applied to theſe: or as though this childiſh fond ſutteltie were worth the hearing, that they ſay that they forbidde it not, becauſe they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a tyrant would affirme that it is not an vniuſt lawe, with vniuſtice whereof one part alone of the citie is oppreſſed.

1. Tim. 3. 2 and 1. 6. 1. Tim. 4. 3.

24 They obiect, that the Prieſt doth by ſome marke differ from the people. As though the Lorde did not alſo foreſee this, with what ornaments Prieſts ought to excell. So they accuſe the Apoſtle of troubling the order and confounding the comlineſſe of the Church, which when he portrayed out the abſolute forme of a good Biſhop, durſt ſet mariage among the other giftes which he required in him. I knowe howe they expounde this, namely that none is to be choſen that hath had a ſeconde wife. And I graunt that this is not a newe expoſition: but that it is a falſe expoſition, appeareth by the text it ſelfe, becauſe he by and by after ſetteth out of what qualities the wiues of Biſhops and Deacons ought to be. Paule reckeneth mariage among the vertues of a Biſhop: theſe men teache that it is an intollerable faulte in the order of the Clergie. And, on Gods name, not cõtented with this generall diſpraiſe they call it in their canons vnclenneſſe and defiling of the fleſh. Let euery man thinke with himſelfe out of what workeſhop theſe things be come: Chriſt vouchſaueth ſo to honor mariage that he willeth it to be an image of his holy conioining with the Church. What could be ſpoken more honorably to ſet out the dignitie of mariage? With what face, therefore ſhall that be called vncleane or defiled wherein ſhineth a likeneſſe of the ſpirituall grace of Chriſt?

25 But nowe when their forbidding so euidently fighteth with the word of God, yet they finde in the Scriptures wherewith to defende it. The Leuiticall Priests were bounde to lie a sonder from their wiues, so oft as it came to their turnes to minister, that they might handle the holy things pure and vndefiled. Therefore it were very vncomely, that our holy things, sith they be both much more noble and daily, should be handled of maried men. As though there were all one person of the minister of the Gospell, as was of the Leuiticall Priesthode. For they, as figures, represented Christ, which being the mediator of God and men should with most absolute pureneſſe reconcile the Father vnto vs. But when sinners coulde not in euery behalfe expresse the figure of his holinesse, yet that they might with certaine grosse draughtes yeld a shadowe of him, they were commaunded to purifie themselues beyond the maner of men, when they came to the Sanctuarie: namely because they then properly figured Christ, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the tabernacle the image of the heauenly iudgement seate. Forasmuch as the Pastors of the Church do not beare this persone at this day, therefore they are vainly compared with them. Wherefore the Apostle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that mariage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers and adulterers abideth the iudgement of God. And the Apostles themselues did with their owne example approue that mariage is not vnmete for the holinesse of any office be it neuer so excellent. For Paule witnesseth that they did not onely kepe wiues, but also carried them about with them. Heb.13. 4. 1.Cor. 9.5.

26 Againe it was a maruelous shamelesneſſe that they durst set out this comelinesse of chastitie for a necessarie thing, to the great reproche of the olde Church: which when it abounded with singular learninge of God, yet excelled more in holinesse. For if they passe not vpon the Apostles, (as they are wont somtime stoutely to despise them) what I beseche you will they do to all the olde fathers, whom it is certaine to haue not onely suffered, but also allowed mariage in the order of Bishops? They forsooth did nourish a filthy profaning of holy things, forasmuch as so the misteries of the Lorde were not rightly reuerenced among them. It was moued in deede in the Nicene Synode to haue vnmaried life commaunded: as there alway want not some superstitious men, which do euer inuente some newe thing, to bring themselues in admiration. But what was decreed? The sentence of Paphnutius was assented to, which pronounced that a mans lying with his owne wife is chastitie. Therefore mariage re- Histor. tripart. Libr. 2. cap. 14.

27 Then followed times, in which to ſuperſtitious obſeruation of ſingle life grewe in force. Hereupon came thoſe often and vnmeaſurably aduaunced praiſes of virginitie, ſo that ſcarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to be compared with it. And although mariage was not condemned for vncleane, yet the dignitie thereof was ſo diminiſhed, and the holineſſe of it obſcured, that he ſeemed not to aſpire with a courage ſtrong enough to perfection, that did not refraine himſelfe from it. Hereupon came thoſe canons whereby it was firſt forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Prieſthode ſhould not contracte mariage: then, that none ſhould be taken into that order but vnmaried men, or ſuch as did forſake mariage together with their wiues. Theſe things, becauſe they ſeemed to procure reuerence to Prieſthode, were (I graunt) euen from antiquitie receiued with great well liking. But if the aduerſaries obiect antiquitie againſt me, firſt I aunſwer that this libertie remained both vnder the Apoſtles and in certaine ages after them, that Biſhops might be maried: that the Apoſtles themſelues, and other Paſtors of great authoritie which ſucceeded in their places, vſed the ſame without ſticking at it. The example of that auncienter Church ought worthily to be of greater weight with vs, than that we ſhould thinke that to be either vnlawfull or vncomely for vs which was then with praiſe receiued and vſed. Secondly I ſay that that age which for immeaſurable affection to virginitie began to be partiall againſt mariage, did not ſo lay vpon Prieſts the lawe of vnmaried life, as though it were a thing neceſſarie of it ſelfe, but becauſe they preferred vnmaried men aboue the maried. Finally I aunſwer that they did not ſo require it that they did with force and neceſſitie conſtraine them to continence which were not fit to kepe it. For when they puniſhed whoredomes with moſt ſeuere lawes, of them that contracted mariage they decreed no more but that they ſhould geue ouer the execution of their office.

28 Therefore whenſoeuer the defenders of this newe tyrannie ſhall ſeke the pretenſe of antiquitie to defende their vnmaried life: ſo oft we ſhall aunſwere them with requiring them, that they reſtore the olde chaſtneſſe in their Prieſts: that they remoue adulterers and whoremongers: that they ſuffer not thoſe in whom they ſuffer not honeſt and chaſt vſe of mariage bed, to run vnpuniſhed into all kinde of luſt: that they call againe the diſcontinued diſcipline, whereby all wantonneſſes may be reſtrained: that they deliuer the Church from this so wicked filthines wherwith it hath bene long deformed. When they haue graunted this, then they must againe be put in minde that they bost not that thing for necessarie, which being of it selfe at libertie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I say not this for that I thinke that in any condition place is to be geuen to those canons which lay the bonde of vnmaried life vpon the order of Priests: but that the wiser sort may vnderstande with what face our enemies do sclaunder holy mariage in Priests, by obiecting the name of antiquitie. As touching the fathers, whose writings remaine, euen they when they speake of their owne iudgement, except Hierome, did not with so great spitefulnesse deface the honesty of mariage. We shalbe content with one commendation of Chrisostome: because he sith he was a principal esteemer of virginitie, can not be thought to haue bene more lauish than other in commendation of mariage. Thus he saith: The first degree of chastitie is pure virginitie: the seconde is faithfull mariage. Therefore the seconde kinde of virginitie is the chast loue of matrimonie. The xiij. Chapter.

IT is verily a thing to be lamented, that the Church, for whom libertie was purchased with the inestimable price of the blood of Christ, hath bene so oppressed with cruell tyranny, and almost ouerwhelmed with a huge heape of traditions: but in the meane time euery mans priuate madnesse sheweth, that not without most iust cause there hath bene so much permitted of God to Satan & his ministers. For they thought it not enough, neglecting the commaundement of Christ, to beare any burdens whatsoeuer were layed vpon them by false teachers, vnlesse they did also eche man procure to himselfe seuerall burdens of his owne, and so with digging pittes for themselues should drowne themselues deper. This was done while they striued in deuising of vowes, by which there might be added to the common bondes a greater and streighter binding. Sith therefore we haue taught, that by their boldnesse which haue borne rule vnder the title of Pastors in the Church, the worshipping of God hath bene corrupted, when they snared silly cōsciences with their vniust lawes: here it shall not be out of season to adioine an other euell which is nere vnto it, that it may appeare that the world according to the peruersnesse of his owne disposition, hath alway, with such stoppes as it could, put away the helpes whereby it should haue bene brought to God. Nowe, that it may the better appeare that very greuous hurt hath bene brought in by vowes, let the reders kepe in minde the principles aboue ſet. For firſt we haue taught, that whatſoeuer may be required to the framing of life godlily & holily, is comprehended in the lawe. Againe we haue taught, that the Lorde, that he might thereby the better call vs away from deuiſing of newe workes, hath encloſed the whole praiſe of righteouſneſſe in the ſimple obedience of his will. If theſe things be true, it is eaſy to iudge that all fained worſhippings, which we inuent to our ſelues to deſerue the fauor of God, are not acceptable to him howe much ſoeuer they pleaſe vs. And truely the Lord himſelfe in many places doth not onely openly refuſe them, but alſo greuouſly abhorre them. Hereupon ariſeth a dout of thoſe vowes which are made beſide the expreſſe word of God, what accompt is to be made of them, whether they may rightly be vowed of Chriſtian men, and howe farre they binde them. For the ſame which among men is called a promiſe, in reſpect of God is called a vowe. But to men we promiſe thoſe things either which we thinke will be pleaſant vnto them, or which we owe of dutie. Therefore there ought to be a much greater hedefull obſeruatiō in vowes which are directed to God himſelfe, with whom we ought to deale moſt earneſtly. In this pointe ſuperſtition hath in all ages maruelouſly ranged, ſo that menne without iudgement, without choiſe, did by and by vowe vnto God whatſoeuer came in their minde, or into their mouth. Hereupon came thoſe follies, yea monſtruous abſurdities of vowes among the heathen, wherewith they did to inſolently mocke with their gods. And I would to God that Chriſtiās alſo had not followed this their boldneſſe. It ought not in deede to haue bene ſo: but we ſe that in certaine ages paſt nothing hath bene more vſuall than this wickedneſſe, that the people eche where deſpiſing the lawe of God did wholy burne with mad greedineſſe to vowe whatſoeuer had pleaſed thē in their dreame. I will not hatefully enforce, nor particularly rehearſe howe hainouſly and howe many wayes herein men haue offended: but I thought good to ſay this by the way, that it may the better appeare, that we do not moue queſtion of a needeleſſe matter, when we entreate of vowes.

2 Nowe if we will not erre in iudging which vowes be lawfull, and which be wrongfull, it behoueth to wey three things: that is to ſay, who it is to whom the vowe is made: who we be that make the vowe: laſt of all, with what minde we vowe. The firſt pointe hath reſpect to this, that we ſhould thinke that we haue to do with God, whome our obedience ſo much deliteth, that he pronounceth all

willworſhips to be accurſed, howe gay and glorious ſoeuer they be in the eyes of men. If all voluntarie worſhipps, which we our ſelues deuiſe without commaundement, be abhominable to God, it followeth that no worſhip can be acceptable to him but that which is allowed by his word. Therefore let vs not take ſo great libertie to our ſelues that we dare vowe to God that which hath no teſtimonie howe it is eſteemed of him. For whereas that which Paule teacheth, that it is ſinne whatſoeuer is done without Faith, extendeth to all doings, then verily it chiefely hath place when thou directeſt thy thought the ſtreight way to God. But if we fall and erre euen in the ſmalleſt things, (as Paul there diſputeth of the difference of meates) where certaintie of Faith ſhineth not before vs: howe much more modeſtie is to be vſed, when we attempte a thing of greateſt weight? For nothing ought to be more earneſt vnto vs than the duties of religion. Let this therefore be the firſt conſideration in vowes, that we neuer come to the vowing of any thing, but that conſcience haue firſt certainly determined that it attempteth nothing raſhly. But it ſhall then be free from danger of raſhneſſe, when it ſhall haue God going before it, and as it were enforming it by his word what is good or vnprofitable to be done. Rom 14 23

3 In the other thing which we haue ſaid to be here to be conſidered, this is conteined, that we meaſure our owne ſtrengthes, that we haue an eye to our vocation, that we neglect not the benefite of libertie which God hath geuen vs. For he that voweth that which either is not in his power, or diſagreeth with his vocation, is raſh: and he that deſpiſeth the bountifulneſſe of God, whereby he is appointed Lorde of all things, is vnthankefull. When I ſay thus, I do not meane that any thing is ſo ſett in our owne hande, that ſtanding vpon confidence of our owne ſtrength we may promiſe the ſame to God. For it was moſt truely decreed in the Councell at Arauſium, that nothing is rightly vowed to God but that which we haue receiued of his hande, foraſmuch as all things that are offred him are his mere giftes. But ſith ſome things are by Gods goodneſſe geuen vs, and other ſome things by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paule commaundeth) haue reſpect to the meaſure of grace geuen vnto him. Therefore I do here meane nothing els, but that vowes muſt be tempered to that meaſure which the Lorde preſcribeth there in his geuing: leſt if thou attempt further than he permitteth, thou throw thy ſelfe downe hedlong with taking to much vpon thee. As for example. When thoſe murtherers, of whom mention is made in Luke, vowed that they would taſt of no meate till Paule were ſlayen: although the Concil. Arauſi. cap. 11. Rom. 12 3. 1. Cor. 12. 11. For ſacrificing Prieſtes, monkes, and nonnes, forgetting their owne weakeneſſe, thinke themſelues able to kepe vnmaried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they ſhall haue chaſtitie throughout all their life, to the very

They vnderſtande, and I would to God that they did not fele, that ſinne remaining in vs is not without moſt ſharpe prickes. With what confidence dare they ſhake of that generall calling for all their life long: whereas the gift of continence is oftener graunted for a certaine time as opportunitie requireth? In ſuch ſtubbornneſſe let them not loke for God to be their helper: but let them rather remember that which is ſaid. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lorde thy God. And this is to tempt God, to endeuor againſt the nature put in vs by him, and to deſpiſe his preſent giftes as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely do: but alſo mariage it ſelfe, which God thought it not againſt his maieſtie to inſtitute, which he hath

Ioh. 2. 2 firſt miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduaunce with maruelous commendations a certaine vnmarried life of what ſorte ſoeuer it be. As though they themſelues did not ſhewe a clere example in their life, that vnmaried ſtate is one thing, and virginitie an other: which their life yet they moſt ſhameleſly call Angelike, doing herein verily to great iniurie to the Angels of God, to whom they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and ſomewhat els much worſe and filthier. And truely here neede no argumentes, when they are openly confuted by the thing it ſelfe. For we plainely ſe, with howe horrible paines the Lorde doth commonly take vengeance of ſuch arrogance, and contempt of his giftes by to much truſt in themſelues. I ſpare for ſhame to ſpeake of the more ſecrete faultes, of which euen this that is already perceiued is to much. It is out of cõtrouerſie that we ought to vowe nothing, that may hinder vs from ſeruing of our vocation. As if a houſeholder ſhould vowe, that he will leaue his wife and his children and take other charges in hande: or if he that is fit to beare office, when he is choſen do vowe that he will be a priuate man. But what is meant by this, that our libertie ſhould not be despised, hath some difficulty if it be not declared. Therefore thus in fewe wordes I expounde it. Sith God hath made vs Lordes of all things, and hath so made them subiect vnto vs that we should vse them all for our commoditie: there is no cause why we should hope that it shalbe an acceptable worke to God if we yelde our selues into bondage to the outwarde thinges which ought to be a helpe vnto vs. I say this for this purpose, because many do hereby seke praise of humilitie, if they snare themselues with many obseruations, from which God not without cause willed vs to be free and discharged. Therefore if we will escape this danger, let vs alway remember that we ought not to depart from that order which the Lorde hath ordeined in the Christian Church.

4 Nowe I come to that which I did set in the thirde place: that it is much materiall with what minde thou makest a vowe, if thou wilt haue it allowed of God. For sith the Lorde regardeth the hart, not the outward shewe, it cometh to passe that the selfe same thing, by changing the purpose of the minde, doth sometime please him and is acceptable vnto him, and sometume hiely displeaseth him. If thou so vowe the abstеining from wine, as though there were any holinesse in it, thou art superstitious: if thou haue respect to any other ende which is not euell, no man can disallowe it. But in my iudgement there be fower endes, to which our vowes shalbe rightly directed: of which for teachings sake I referre two to the time past, and the other two to the time to come. To the time past belong those vowes, whereby we do either testifie our thankfulnesse to God for benefites receiued: or to craue the turning away of his wrath, we our selues do punish our selues for the offenses that we haue committed. Let vs call the first sort, if you will, the exercises of thankesgeuing, the other of repentance. Of the first kinde we haue an example in the tithes which Iacob vowed, if the Lorde did bring him home safe out of banishement into his contree. Againe in the olde Sacrifices of the peaceoffrings, which godly kinges and capitaines, when they toke in hande righteous warre, did vowe that they would pay if they had obteined the victorie, or at least when they were oppressed with any great distresse, if the Lorde had deliuered them. So are all those places in the Psalmes to be vnderstode which speake of vowes. Such vowes may at this day also be in vse among vs, so oft as the Lorde hath deliuered vs either out of any calamitie, or from a hard sickenesse, or from any other danger. For it is then not against the dutie of a godly manne, to consecrate to God his vowed oblation, as a solemne token of his reknowledging, least he shoulde seeme vnthankfull toward his goodneſſe. Of what ſort the ſeconde kinde is, it ſhall ſuffice to ſhewe with one onely familiar example. If any by the vice of gluttonie be fallen into any offenſe, nothing withſtandeth but that to chaſtiſe his intemperance he may for a time forſake all deinty meates, and may do the ſame with a vowe adioined, that he may binde himſelfe with the ſtreighter bonde. Yet I do not ſo make a perpetuall lawe to them that haue likewiſe offended: but I ſhewe what is lawfull for them to do, which ſhall thinke ſuch a vowe profitable for themſelues. I do therefore ſo make ſuch a vowe lawfull, that in the meane time I leaue it at libertie.

5 The vowes that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we haue already ſaid) do tende to this ende that we may be made the warer: & partly that as it were by certaine ſpurres we may be pricked forwarde to our dutie. Some man ſeeth him ſelfe to be ſo inclined to ſome certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwiſe is not euill he can not temper himſelfe from fallinge foorthwith into an euill: he ſhall do nothing inconueniently if he do for a time by vowe cut of frō himſelfe the vſe of that thing. As if a man know that this or that apparell of body is perilous vnto him, and yet entiſed with deſire he earneſtly couet it, what can he do better, than if in putting a bridle vpon himſelf, that is in charging himſelf with neceſſitie of abſteining from it, he deliuer himſelfe from all douting? Likewiſe if a man be forgetfull or ſlowe to neceſſarie duties of godlineſſe, why may he not by taking a vowe vpon him both awake his memorie and ſhake of his ſlouthfulneſſe? In both I graunt that there is a forme of childiſhe ſchooling: but euen in this that they are helpes of weakeneſſe, they are not without profit vſed of the rawe and vnperfect. Therefore we ſhal ſay that thoſe vowes are lawful which haue reſpect to one of theſe endes, ſpecially in outward things, if they both be vpholden with the allowance of God, and do agree with our vocation, and be meaſured by the power of grace geuen vs of God.

6 Nowe alſo it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes. There is one common vowe of all the faithful, which being made in Baptiſme we do confirme and as it were ſtabliſh by Catechiſme and receiuing of the Supper. For the Sacramentes are as charters, by which the Lorde deliuereth to vs his mercy and thereby euerlaſting life, and we againe on our behalfes do promiſe him obedience. But this is the forme or verily the ſumme of the vow, that forſaking Satan we yelde our ſelues into ſeruice to God, to obey his holy commaundementes, and not to followe the peruerſe deſires of our fleſh. It ought not to be douted but that this vowe, ſith it hath teſtimony of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to ſaluation. And it maketh not to the cõtrary, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the lawe which God requireth of vs. For ſith this forme of couenanting is compriſed within the couenant of grace, vnder which is contained both forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and the Spirit of Sanctification: the promiſe which we there make is ioyned both with beſeching of pardon and with crauing of helpe. In iudging of particular vowes, it is neceſſary to kepe in minde the three former rules, whereby we may ſafely weie of what ſort euery vow is. Neither yet thinke that I ſo commende the very ſame vowes which I affirme to be holy, that I would haue them to be daily. For though I dare teach no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my coũſell, he ſhall take vpon him none but ſober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake foorth into making of many vowes, all religiouſneſſe will with very continuance growe out of eſtimation with thee, and thou ſhalt come to a bendinge readineſſe to fall into ſuperſtition. If thou binde thy ſelfe with a perpetuall vowe, either for great payne and tediouſneſſe thou ſhalt vndo it, or beinge weried with longe continuance thou ſhalt at one time or other be bolde to breake it.

7 Now alſo it is plaine with how great ſuperſtition in this behalfe the worlde hath in certaine ages paſt bin poſſeſſed. One man vowed that he woulde abſtaine from wine: as though abſtainınge from wine were of it ſelfe a worſhip acceptable to God. An other bounde himſelfe to faſting, an other to abſtaining from fleſh for certaine daies, in which he had with vaine opinion fained to be a ſingular holineſſe aboue the reſt. And ſome things alſo were vowed much more childiſh, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wiſdom, to take vpon them vowed pilgremages to holyer places, & ſomtime either to go all their iourney on foote, or with their body halfe naked, that by their werines the more merite might be gotten. Theſe & ſuch other, with incredible zeale wherof the world hath a while ſwelled, if they be examined by thoſe rules, which we haue aboue ſette, ſhalbe found not only vaine & trifling, but full of manifeſt vngodlineſſe. For howſoeuer the fleſh iudge, God abhorreth nothing more than fained worſhippings. There are beſide this thoſe pernicious & damned opiniõs, that hipocrites whẽ they haue ſuch trifles thinke that they haue gotten no ſmal righteouſnes: they repoſe the ſumme of godlineſſe in outwarde obſeruations: they deſpiſe all other that are leſſe carefull of ſuch thinges.

8 To recken vp all the particular formes, is nothinge to purpose. But forasmuch as the monkish vowes are had in greater reuerence, because they seeme allowed by the common iudgement of ỹ church: of those it is good to speake briefly. First least any should by prescription of long time defende monkery, such as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in monasteries a farre other order of liuing. Such as were disposed to exercise themselues to greatest seuerity and patience, went thither. For what maner of discipline they say that the Lacedemonians had vnder the lawes of Lycurgus, such was at that time amonge the monkes, yea and much more rigorous. They slept vpon the ground: their drinke was water: their meate was bread, herbes & rootes: their chiefe deinties were in oyle and ciches. They abstained from all delicate diet and trimming of body. These things might seeme aboue trueth, if they were not written by witnesses that saw & proued them, as Gregory Nazianzen, Basile, and Chrysostome. But with such introductions they prepared themselues to greate offices. For, that the colledges of monkes were then as it were the sede-plottes of the order of ministers of the Church, both these whom we haue now named are a prose plain enough, (for they were all brought vp in monasteries and from thense called to the office of bishops) & also many other singular and excellent men in their time. And Augustine sheweth that this was also vsed in his time, that monasteries
Epi. 81. yelded clerkes to the Church. For he speaketh thus to the monkes of the Isle of Caprarea: But you brethren we exhort in the Lord, that ye kepe your purpose and continue to the end: & if at any time our mother the Church shall require your trauaile, do ye neither with gredy pride take it vpon you, nor with flattering slouthfulnesse refuse it: but with a meke hart obey to God. Neither preferre ye your owne quiet leasure aboue the necessities of the Church: to whom if no good mẽ would haue ministred in her trauaile, you should not haue found how you shoulde haue bin borne. He speaketh there of the ministery, by Epi. 76. which ỹ faithfull are spiritually borne againe. Also to Aurelius: There is both occasion of fallinge giuen to themselues, and most haynous wronge done to the order of the Clergy, if forsakers of monasteries be chosen to the souldiorship of the Clergy: whẽ euen of those that remaine in the monastery, we vse to take into the Clergy none but the most approued and best. Vnlesse perhappes as the common people say, he is an euill pyper but a good fiddler: so it shall also be iestingely said of vs, he is an euill monke, but a good Clerke. It is too much to be lamented, if we list vp monkes into such a ruinous pride, and thinke Clerkes worthy of so great reproche, whereas sometime

euen a good monke maketh not a good Clerke, if he haue sufficient continence, & yet want necessary learninge. By these places it appeareth, that godly mē were wont with the discipline of monkes to prepare themselues to the gouernment of the Church, that they might the fitter and better instructed take so great an office vpon them. Not that they all attained to this end, or yet tended toward it, whē for the most part they were vnlearned mē: but such were chosen out as were mete for it.

9 But chiefly in two places he painteth out vnto vs the forme of the olde monkerie. In the booke Of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he setteth the holinesse of that profession against the slaunders of the Manichees: & in an other booke, which he entitled Of the worke of monkes, where he inueieth against certaine degendred monkes, which began to corrupt that order. I will here so gather a summe of those thinges which he sayth, that so nere as I may I will vse his owne wordes. Despising (sayth he) the enticementes of this worlde, gathered into one most chast and holy life, they spende their time together, liuinge in praiers, readinges, and disputations, not swelling with pride, not troublesome with stubbornnes, not wāne with enuiousnesse. None possesseth any thinge of his owne, none is burdenous to any man. They get by working with their handes those things wherewith both their body may be fed, and their minde may not be hindered frō God. Their worke they deliuer to them whom they call Deanes. Those Deanes despising all thinges with great carefulnesse make accompt thereof to one whom they call Father. These fathers not only most holy in maners, but also most excellent in godly doctrine, hye in all things, do with no pride prouide for thē whom they call children, with great authority of them in commaunding, & great willingnes of the other in obeying: They come togerher at the very last time of the day, euery one from his dwelling, while they be yet fasting, to heare that Father: & there mete tegether to euery one of these Fathers at the least three thousand men, (he speaketh chiefly of Ægypt, and of the east) then they refresh their body, so much as suffiseth for life and healthfulnesse, euery man restraining his desire, not to take largely euen of those thinges that they haue present very spare and vile. So they do not onely abstaine from flesh and wine, so much that they may be able to tame their lustes, but frō such things which do so much more greedily prouoke appetite of the belly and throte, howe much they seeme to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour whereof the filthy desire of exquisite meates, which is not in flesh, is wont to be fondly and fowly defended. Whatsoeuer remayneth aboue neceſſary ſoode(as there remaineth oftentimes much of the workes of their handes and pinching of their fare)is with greater care diſtributed to the poore,than it was gotten by them that diſtribute it. For they do in nó wiſe trauail that they may haue abundance of theſe things,but they by all meanes endeuor that that which they haue aboundinge may not remaine with them. Afterwarde when he hath rehearſed the hardneſſe, whereof he himſelfe had ſeene examples both at Millaine and elſe where: among theſe thinges (ſayth he) no man is enforced to hard thinges which he can not beare:no man is charged with that which he refuſeth: neither is he therefore condemned of the reſt,becauſe he cõfeſſeth himſelfe to want ſtrength in folowing of them: for they remember how much charity is commẽded:they remember that all thinges are cleane to the cleane. Therefore all their diligẽce watcheth,not to the refuſing of kindes of meate as vncleane,but to tame luſt, & to retaine the loue of brethren. They remember,meate for the belly,and the belly for meates.&c. Yet many ſtronge do abſtaine for the weakes ſakes. Many of them haue no nede to do thus: but becauſe it pleaſeth them to ſuſtaine themſelues with baſer diet and nothing ſumptuous. Therefore they themſelues, which being in health do forbeare,if conſideration of their helth cõpell, when they are ſicke do take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, & yet they thinke not themſelues defiled with it:for they moſt gently cauſe it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that can not get the health of their body without it:and ſome which fooliſhly refuſe it, they do brotherly admoniſhe that they be not with vaine ſuperſtition ſooner made weaker than holier. So they diligently exerciſe godlineſſe:but they know that the exerciſing of the body pertaineth but to a ſhort time. Charity is chiefly kept:to charity the diet,to charity the ſpeech,to charity the apparel,to charity the countenance is fitted. They mete and conſpire into one charity. To offend it is accompted as haynous as to offende God. If any reſiſt charity,he is caſt out and ſhunned. If any offende charity,he is not ſuffred to abide one day. Foraſmuch as in theſe words,as in a painted table,that holy man ſemeth to haue ſet out what maner of life monkery was in olde time, although they were ſomwhat long,yet I was content to enterlace thẽ here:becauſe I ſaw that I ſhold haue bin ſomwhat longer if I had gathered the ſame things out of diuers, how much ſoeuer I ſtudied for briefeneſſe.

10 But my purpoſe here is not to go through this whole matter, but only by the way to point out,not only what maner of monkes the Old Church had, but what maner of thing the profeſſion of monkes was at that time: so as the sounde witted readers may iudge by the comparison, what face they haue which alleage antiquity to maintaine the present monkery. Augustine when he depainteth vnto vs a holy & true monkery, would haue to be absent all rigorous exacting of those things which by the word of the Lord are left vs at liberty. But there is nothinge that is at this day more seuerely required. For they compt it a mischiefe that can neuer be purged, if any do neuer so litle swarue from the prescribed rule in colour or fashion of garment, in kinde of meate, or in other trifling & cold ceremonies. Augustine stoutly maintaineth, that it is not lawful for monks to liue idle vpō other mens. He denieth that there was euer in his time any such example of a well ordered monastery. Our men set the chiefe part of their holinesse in idlenesse. For if you take idlenes from them, where shalbe that contemplatiue life whereby they boast that they excell all other men, and approch nere vnto Angels? Finally Augustine requireth such a monkery, as should be nothing but an exercise & help to the dueties of godlinesse which are commended to all Christians. What? when he maketh charity the chiefe, yea and almost only rule therof, do we thinke that he praiseth a conspiring, wherby a few men being bound together, are seuered from ỹ whole body of the church? But rather he willeth them with their example to giue light to other to kepe the vnity of ỹ Church. In both these points, there is so much difference of the monkery at this present, that a manne can scarcely finde any thing more vnlike, I will not say contrary. For our monkes not contented with that godlines, to the study of which alone Christ commaundeth them that are his continually to apply, do imagine I wote not what newe godlinesse, by meditation whereof they may be perfecter than other.

De op. pere mo. nach.

11 If they deny this, I would know of them why they vouchsaue to giue to their owne order alone the title of perfection, and take away the same from all the callings of God. Neither am I ignorant of that sophisticall solution, that it is not therefore so called becausе it doth containe perfection in it, but becausе it is the best of all other to attaine perfection. When they are disposed to boast themselues before the people, when to snare vnskilfull and vnware yonge men, when to maintaine their priuileges, when to aduaunce their owne dignity to the reproch of other, then they boast that they are in ỹ state of perfection. When they are so nye driuen that they can not defend this vaine arrogance, then they flee to this starting hole, ỹ they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the same state wherin they aspire vnto it aboue other. In the meane time that admiration among the people remaineth, as though the only monkish life were angelike, perfect, & clensed from all fault. By this pretence they make most gaineful markets, but that same moderation lieth buried in a few bookes. Who doth not see that this is an intollerable mockery? But let vs so reason with thē, as though they gaue no more to their profession than to call it a state of attaining perfection. Verily in giuinge it this name, they do as by a speciall marke make it differinge from other kindes of life. And who can abide this, that so great honor shoulde be giuen away to an ordinance that is no where by any one syllable allowed: and that by the same all other callinges of God, which are by his owne holy mouth not onely commaunded, but also commended with notable titles of praise, are by the same accompted vnworthy? And how great wrong (I beseech you) is done to God, when I wote not what new founde thinge is preferred aboue all the kindes of life ordained by himselfe, and praised by his owne testimonie?

12 But go to, let them say that it is a slaunder which I haue before said, that they are not cōtented with the rule prescribed of God. Yet though I hold my peace, they themselues do more than enough accuse themselues. For they openly teache, that they take vpon them more burdē than Christ laid vpon his: because forsooth they promise to kepe the counsels of the Gospel concerning louing their enemies, not coueting of reuenge, not swearing, &c. To which things Christians are not generally bound. Herein what antiquity will they shewe foorth against vs? This neuer came in any of the old fathers mindes. They all crie out with one voice that there was no one litle word at all vttered of Christ, which ought not necessarily to be obeyed. And without any doutinge they do echewhere teache, that these very same thinges by name were commaundementes, which these good expositors triflingly say, that Christ did but counsell. But forasmuch as we haue before taught that this is a most pestilent errour, leue it suffise here to haue briefly noted that the monkery which is at this day, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthily to abhorre: which is, that there shoulde be imagined some perfecter rule of life, than this common rule which is giuen of God to the whole Church. Whatsoeuer is builded vppon this fundation, can not be but abhominable.

13 But they bring an other proofe of their perfection, which they thinke to be most strōg for them. For the Lord sayd to the yong man that asked him of the perfection of righteousnesse, If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast and giue it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I do not yet dispute: but graunt thē that for this presēt. Therefore they boast ỳ they be made perfect by forsaking all theirs. If the summe of perfection stand in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth, that he which hath distributed all his goodes to the poore, vnlesse he haue charity, is nothing? What maner of perfectiō is this, which if charity be absent, is brought with man to nothinge? Here they must nedes answere, that this is the chiefest in dede, but not the only worke of perfection. But here also Paul crieth againſt thē, which sticketh not to make charity the bonde of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it be certaine that betwene the maister & the disciple is no disagreement, and the one of them clearely denieth the perfection of man to consist in this ỳ he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see howe that sayinge of Christ is to be taken, If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast. Nowe, it shalbe no darke sense, if we wey (which we ought alway to marke in all the preachings of Christ) to whom these wordes be directed. A yong man asketh, by what workes he shall enter into euerlastinge life. Christ, because he was asked of workes, sendeth him to the law, & rightfully: for it is the way of eternall life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bringe saluation vnto vs but by our owne peruersenesse. By this answere Christ declared, that he teacheth no other rule to frame life by, than the same that had in olde time bin taught in the law of the Lord. So did he both giue witnesse to the lawe of God, that it was the doctrine of perfect righteousnesse: and therewithall did mete with sclaunders, that he shoulde not seeme by any new rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the law. The yonge man beinge in deede not of an euill minde, but swellinge with vaine confidēce, answered that he had from his childehoode kept all the commaundementes of the law. It is most certaine that he was an infinite space distant frō that to which he boasted that he had attained. And if his boastinge had bin true, he had wanted nothinge to the hiest perfection. For we haue before shewed, that the law containeth in it selfe perfect righteousnesse: and the same appeareth hereby, that the keping of it is called the way of eternall saluation. That he might be taught to knowe howe litle he had profited in that righteousnesse, which he had too boldly answered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake out a familiar fault of his. When he abounded in richesse, he had his hart fastened vppon them. Therefore because he felt not this secrete wound, Christ launced him. Go (sayth he) sell all that thou hast. If he had bin so good a keeper of the lawe as he thought he was, he woulde not haue gone away ſorowefull when he heard this word. For who ſo loueth God with all his hart, whatſoeuer diſagreeth with the loue of him, he not onely taketh it for donge, but abhorreth as bringinge deſtruction. Therfore wheras Chriſt commaundeth the couetous riche man to leaue all that he hath, it is all one, as if he ſhould commaund the ambitious man to forſake all honors, the voluptuous man all delites, and the vnchaſt man all the inſtrumentes of luſt. So conſciences that are touched with no feeling of generall admonition, muſt be called back to the particular feelinge of their owne euill. Therefore they do in vaine draw this ſpeciall caſe to generall expoſition, as though Chriſt did ſet the perfection of man in forſaking of goods: whereas he ment nothing elſe by this ſayinge, than to driue the yong man that ſtoode too much in his owne conceite, to feele his owne ſore, that he might vnderſtande that he was yet a great way diſtant from perfect obedience of the law, which otherwiſe he did falſly take vpō him. I graunt that this place hath bin euill vnderſtanded of ſome of the fathers, & that therupon grew this coueting of wilful pouerty, wherby they only were thought to be bleſſed, which forſaking all earthly things, did dedicate themſelues naked to Chriſt. But I truſt that all the good and not contentious men will be ſatisfied with this my expoſition, ſo that they ſhall no more dout of the meaning of Chriſt. Howbeit the Fathers thought nothing leſſe, than to ſtabliſh ſuch a perfection, as hath ſince bin framed by the cowled Sophiſters, thereby to raiſe vp a double Chriſtianity. For that doctrine ful of ſacrilege was not yet borne, which compareth the profeſſion of monkery to Baptiſme, yea and openly affirmeth, that it is a forme of ſecond Baptiſme. Who can dout that the Fathers with all their heart abhorred this blaſphemy? Now as touchinge that laſt thinge, which Auguſtine ſayth to haue bin among the olde Monkes, that is, that they applied themſelues wholly to Charity: what neede I to ſhew in wordes that it is moſt farre from this newe profeſſion? The thinge it ſelfe ſpeaketh, that all they that go into Monaſteries, depart from the Church. For why? Do not they ſeuere themſelues from the lawfull felowſhip of the faithful, in taking to themſelues a peculiar miniſtery and priuate miniſtration of Sacramentes? What is it to diſſolue the Communion of the Church, if this be not it? And (that I may follow the compariſon which I began to make, and may once conclude it) what haue they in this behalfe like to the olde monkes? They although they dwelt ſeuerally from other men, yet had not a ſeuerall Church: they did partake of the ſacramentes together with other: they appeared at ſolemne aſſemblies: there they were a part of the people. Theſe men, in erecting to themſelues themſelues a priuate altar, what haue they elſe done but broken the bond of vnity? For they haue both excommunicate themſelues from the whole body of the Church, & haue deſpiſed the ordinary miniſtery, whereby the Lord willed to haue peace & charity kept among his. Therefore howe many miniſteries there be at this day, I ſay that there be ſo many aſſemblies of ſchiſmatikes, which troubling the order of the Church, are cut of from the lawfull felowſhip of the faithfull. And that this departing ſhould not be ſecret, they haue giuen to thẽſelues diuers names of ſectes. Neither were they aſhamed to boaſt of that, which Paul doth ſo deteſt that he can not ſufficiently amplifie the hainouſnes of it. Vnleſſe perhap we thinke that Chriſt was diuided of the Corinthians, when one gloried of one teacher, & an other of an other: & that now it is done without any iniury to Chriſt, that in ſtede of Chriſtians we heare ſome called Benedictines, ſome Franciſcanes, ſome Dominicanes: & that they are ſo called, that they themſelues when they couet to be ſeuerally knowen from the common ſort of Chriſtiãs, do with great pride take theſe titles to thẽ for the profeſſion of their religion.

15 Theſe differences which I haue hitherto rehearſed betwene the old monkes & the monkes of our age, are not differences in maners, but in the profeſſion it ſelfe. Therefore let the readers remẽber that I haue rather ſpokẽ of monkery than of monks, & haue touched thoſe faultes, not which ſticke in the life of a few of them, but which can not be ſeuered from their very order of liuinge it ſelfe. But what differẽce is in their maners, what nede I particularly to declare? This is certaine, that there is no degree of men more defiled with all filthineſſe of vices: no where more are factions, hatredes, affections of parties, ambitions whoter than among them. In dede in a few monaſteries they liue chaſtly, if it be to be called chaſtity where luſt is ſo farre kept downe that it be not openly euill ſpoken of: yet a man ſhall ſcarcely finde euery tẽth monaſtery which is not rather a ſtewes thã a holy houſe of chaſtity. But what honeſt ſparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwiſe fatted in ſties. But leaſt they ſhould complaine that I handle them too vngently, I go no further. Howebeit in thoſe few things which I haue touched, whoſoeuer knoweth the thinge it ſelfe will confeſſe that there is nothinge ſpoken accuſerlike. Auguſtine, when according to his teſtimony monkes excelled in ſo great chaſtity, yet complaineth that there were many vagabundes, which with euil craftes and deceites wiped ſimple men from their money, which with carying about the reliques of martyrs did vſe filthy marchandiſinges, yea and in ſteede of the reliques of martyrs did ſhew forth the bones of any other dead men, and which with many ſuch wicked doinges ſclaundered the order. As he reporteth that he ſawe no better men than them which haue profited in monaſteries, ſo he lamenteth that he hath ſeene no worſe men than thoſe that diſprofited in monaſteries. What would he ſay if at this day he ſaw all monaſteries to ſwell, & in a maner to burſt with ſo many & ſo deſpeired vices? I ſpeake nothing but that which is well knowen to all men. Yet doth not this diſpraiſe pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule & diſcipline of liuinge holily ſo ſtabliſhed in monaſteries, but that there remained ſome dranes much vnlike the reſt: ſo I do not ſay that monkes are at this day ſo runne out of kinde from that holy antiquity, but that they haue yet ſome good men in their flock. But they lye hidden a few & ſcattered in ỳ huge multitude of naughty & wicked men: and they are not only deſpiſed, but alſo lewdly railed at, & ſomtime cruelly handled of other, which (as the Mileſians prouerbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any honeſt man among them.

16 By this compariſon of the olde and preſent monkery, I truſt I haue brought to paſſe that which I purpoſed, that it may appeare that our cowled menne do falſely pretende the example of the firſt Church for defence of their profeſſion: foraſmuch as they no leſſe differ from them than apes from menne. In the meane time I ſticke not to declare, that euen in that olde forme which Auguſtine commendeth, there is ſomewhat which litle pleaſeth me. I graunt that they were not ſuperſtitious in exactinge the outwarde exerciſes of rougher diſcipline, but I ſay that there wãted not too much affectatiõ and wrongefull zeale. It was a goodly thinge, forſakinge their goods, to be without all earthly carefulneſſe: but God more eſteemeth care to rule a houſeholde godlily, when a holy houſeholder beinge looſe and free from all couetouſneſſe, ambition, and other deſires of the fleſhe, trauaileth to this purpoſe to ſerue God in a certayne vocation. It is a goodly thing to play the Philoſopher in wilderneſſe farre from the companie of men: but it agreeth not with Chriſtian gentleneſſe as it were for hatrede of mankinde to flie into deſerte and ſolitarineſſe, and therewithall to forſake thoſe dueties which the Lorde hath chiefely commaunded. Although we graunt that there was no other euill in that profeſſion, yet this verily was no ſmall euill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perillous example into the Church

Firſt, becauſe their minde is to inſtitute a new and fained worſhippinge to deſerue Gods fauour: I conclude by the thinges afore ſpoken that whatſoeuer they vowe is abhominable before God. Secondly without any regarde of Gods callinge, without any his allowance, they inuent for them ſuch a kinde of liuing as pleaſeth them ſelues. I ſay that it is a raſhe and therefore an vnlaweſull enterpriſe: becauſe their conſcience hath nothinge whereupon it may vpholde it ſelfe before God, and whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne. Moreouer when they binde themſelues to many peruerſe and wicked worſhippinges, which the monkery at this day containeth in it. I affirme that they be not conſecrate to God, but to the Deuill. For why was it laweſull for the Prophete to ſay, that the Iſraelites offered their children to Deuils and not to God: onely for this that they had corrupted the true worſhippinge of God with prophane Ceremonies: and ſhall it not be laweſull for vs to ſay the ſame of monkes, which with their cowle do put vpon themſelues a ſnare of a thouſande wicked ſuperſtitions? Nowe what ſortes of vowes are there? They promiſe to God perpetuall virginity, as though they hadde bargained with God before, that he ſhoulde deliuer them from neede of mariage. There is no cauſe why they ſhoulde alleage, that they do not make this vowe but truſtinge vpon the grace of God. For ſith he pronounceth that he giueth it not to all men, it is not in vs to conceiue a confidence of a ſpeciall gift. Lette them that haue it, vſe it. If at any time they feele themſelues to be troubled of their fleſhe, let them flee to this helpe by whoſe onely power they may reſiſt. If they preuaile not, let them not deſpiſe the remedy that is offered them. For they by the certaine worde of God are called to mariage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not whereby the body is only kept cleane from whoredome, but whereby the minde kepeth chaſtity vndefiled. For Paule commaundeth not only outward wantonneſſe, but alſo the burninge of the minde, to be auoided. This (ſay they) hath from furtheſt time of memory bin obſerued, that they which woulde dedicate themſelues wholly to the Lord, ſhould binde themſelues to the vowe of continence. I graunt in deede that this maner hath alſo bin of auncient time receiued: but I do not graunt that that age was ſo free from all faulte, that whatſoeuer was then done muſt be taken for a rule. And by litle and litle this vnappeaſeable ſeuerity crept in, that after a vowe made there was no roome for repentance. Which is euident by Ciprian. If virgins haue of Faith dedicate themſelues to God, let them continue ſhamefaſtly, and chaſtly without any faining. So being ſtrong and ſtedfaſt let them looke for the rewarde of virginity. But if they will not or can not continue, it is better that they ſhoulde mary than with their delightes fall into the fier. What reproches would they now ſpare to teare him withall, that would with ſuch equity temper the vowe of continence? Therefore they are departed farre from that auncient manner, which will not only admit no moderation or pardon if any be founde vnable to performe his vowe: but they do without all ſhame pronounce that he ſinneth more greuouſly if he remedy the intemperance of the fleſhe with takinge a wife, than if he defile both his body and ſoule with whoredome.

18 But they ſtill enforce the matter, and go about to ſhewe that
1. Tim. 5 12. ſuch a vowe was vſed in the Apoſtles time: becauſe Paule ſayth that the widowes which hauing bin once receiued into the Publike miniſtery did mary, denied their firſt Faith. But I do not deny to them, that the widowes, which bounde themſelues and their ſeruices to the Church, did therewithal take vpon them the bonde of continuall vnmaried life: not becauſe they repoſed any religion therein, as it afterward began to be vſed: but becauſe they could not beare that office but beinge at their owne liberty and looſe from yoke of mariage. But if, when they had once giuen their Faith, they loked backe to new mariages, what was this elſe but to ſhake of the callinge of God? Therefore it is no maruell that with ſuch deſires he ſayth that they waxe wanton againſt Chriſt. Afterwarde to amplifie the matter he ſaith, that they do ſo not performe that which they haue promiſed to the Church, that they do alſo breake and make voide their firſt Faith giuen in Baptiſme: in which this is comprehended, that euery man ſhould anſwere his calling. Vnleſſe parhap you had rather vnderſtand it thus, that hauing as it were loſt al ſhame, they did from thenſe forth caſt away all care of honeſty, did giue foorth themſelues to all wantonneſſe and vnchaſtity, and did in licentious and diſſolute life reſemble nothinge leſſe than Chriſtian women: which ſenſe I like very well. Therefore we aunſwere, that thoſe widowes which were then receiued to Publike miniſtery, did lay vpon themſelues a bonde to continue vnmaried: if they afterward maried, we eaſily perceiue that that happened to them which Paule ſpeaketh of, that caſting away ſhame they became more wanton than beſemed Chriſtian women. That ſo they not only ſinned, in breakinge their Faith giuen to the Church, but ſwarued from the common law of godly women. But firſt I deny that they did profeſſe vnmaried life for any other reaſon, but becauſe mariage agreed not with that miniſtery which they tooke in hande: & I deny that they did binde themſelues at all to ſingle life, but ſo far as the neceſſity of their vocation did beare. Againe I do not graunt that they were ſo bound, but that it was then alſo better for them to mary, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the fleſh, or to fall into any vncleanneſſe. Thirdly I ſay that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commōly out of danger: ſpecially ſith he cōmaundeth them onely to be choſen, which contented with one mariage haue already ſhewed a token of their continence. And we do for no other reaſon diſallow the vow of vnmaried life, but becauſe it is both wrōgfully taken for a ſeruice of God, & it is raſhly vowed of thē to whom power of continence is not giuen.

19 But how was it lawful to draw this place of Paule to Nunnes? For there were created deconiſſes, not to delite God with ſinging & with mumbling not vnderſtanded, and liue the reſt of their time idle: but that they ſhould execute publike miniſtration toward the poore, that they ſhould with all ſtudy, earneſtneſſe, and diligence, endeuour thēſelues to the dueties of charity. They did not vowe vnmaried life, to yeelde thereby any worſhip to God becauſe they abſtained from mariage: but only becauſe they were therby the more vncombred to execute their office. Finally they did not vowe it, either in the beginninge of their youth, or yet in the middeſt of their flowinge age, that they might afterward learne too late by experience into how great a headlonge downe fall they had throwen themſelues: but when they ſeemed to haue paſſed all danger, thā they vowed a no leſſe ſafe than holy vowe. But (not to enforce the firſt two pointes) I ſay it was not lawefull to haue women receiued to vowe continence before the age of three ſcore yeares: foraſmuch as the Apoſtle admitteth onely women of 60. yeares olde, and commaundeth the yonger to mary and bring forth children. Therfore neither that releaſe made of 12. yeres, & then 20. & afterward of thirty yeares, can be any way excuſed: and much leſſe is it tolerable, that ſilly maides, before that they can by age know themſelues, or haue any experience of themſelues, are not only trained by fraude, but cōſtrained by force & threatnings to put on thoſe curſed ſnares. I will not tary vpon confutinge the other two vowes. Only this I ſay: beſide this that they be entangled with not a few ſuperſtitions, (as the matter is now a daies) they ſeme to be made to this purpoſe, that they which vow thē ſhould mocke both God & men. But leaſt we ſhould ſeme too maliciouſly to ſhake vp euery ſmall parcell, we will be content with that generall confutation which is aboue ſet.

20 What manner of vowes be lawefull and acceptable to God, I thinke is ſufficiently declared. Yet becauſe ſometime vnskilfull and fearefull conſciences, euen when they miſlike or diſalow any vowe, do neuertheleſſe dout of the binding, and are greuouſly tormented, when they both drede to breake their Faith giuen to God, & on the other ſide they feare leaſt they ſhould more ſinne in keeping it: here they are to be ſuccoured, that they may winde themſelues out of this diſtreſſe. But, to take away all dout at once: I ſay that all vowes being not lawful, nor rightly made, as they are nothing worth before God, ſo ought to be voide to vs. For if in contractes of men thoſe promiſes onely do binde, in which he with whom we contract would haue vs bounde: it is an abſurdity, that we ſhould be driuen to the keepinge of thoſe thinges which God doth not require of vs: ſpecially ſith our workes are no otherwiſe right, but when they pleaſe God, and when conſciences haue this teſtimonie that they pleaſe him. For this re-

Rom. 14 23. maineth certaine, whatſoeuer is not of Faith, is ſinne. Whereby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hande with doutinge, is therefore faulty, becauſe Fayth is the roote of all good workes, by which we are aſſured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it be lawfull for a Chriſtian man to go about nothinge without this aſſuredneſs: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hand, why ſhoulde they not afterward giue it ouer when they be deliuered from errours. Sith vowes vnaduiſedly made are ſuch, they do not only nothinge binde, but are neceſſarily to be vndone. Yea what if they are not onely nothing eſtemed, but alſo are abhominable in the ſight of God, as is aboue ſhewed? It is nedeleſſe to diſcourſe any longer of a matter not needefull. This one argument ſeemeth to me to be enough to pacifie godly conſciences and deliuer them from all dout: that whatſoeuer workes do not flowe out of the pure fountaine & be not directed to the lawfull end, are refuſed of God: and ſo refuſed that he no leſſe forbiddeth vs to go forwarde in them, than to beginne them. For hereupon followeth, that thoſe vowes which proceede of errour and ſuperſtition, are both of no value before God, and to be forſaken of vs.

21. Moreouer he that ſhall know this ſolution, ſhall haue wherewith he may defende againſt the ſclaunders of the wicked, them that departe from monkery. to ſome honeſt kinde of life. They are greuouſly accuſed of breache of Fayth and periury, becauſe they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the inſoluble bonde wherewith they were bounde to God and to the Church. But I ſay that there was no bonde, where God doth abrogate that which mā confirmeth. Moreouer, admittinge that they were bounde, when they were holden entangled with not knowinge of God and with errour: now ſince

are therwithall free by the grace of Christ. For if the crosse of Christ haue so great effectualnesse, that it looseth vs from the curse of the lawe of God, wherewith we were holden bonde, howe much more shall it deliuer vs from foreine bondes, which are nothinge but the snaringe nettes of Satan? To whomsoeuer therefore Christ shineth with the light of his Gospell, it is no dout that he looseth them from all snares which they hadde put vppon themselues by superstition. Howebeit they want not yet an other defense, if they were not fit to liue vnmaried. For if an impossible vowe be a sure destruction of the soule, whom the Lorde woulde haue saued and not destroyed: it followeth that we ought not to continue therein. But howe impossible is the vowe of continence to them that are not endued with a singular gift, we haue already taught, and experience speaketh it though I holde my peace. For neither is it vnknowen with howe great filthines almost all monasteries do swarme. And if any of them seme honester, and more shamefast than the rest: yet they are not therefore chast because they suppresse and keepe in the fault of vnchastity. So verily God doth with horrible examples take vengeance on the boldenesse of men, which forgettinge their owne weakenesse, do against nature couet that which is denied them, and despisinge the remedies which the Lord had giuen them at hande, do trust that they can with stubbornesse and obstinacy ouercome the disease of incontinence. For what else shall we call it but stubbornesse, when one beinge warned that he needeth mariage, and that the same is giuen him of the Lord for a remedy, doth not onely despise it, but also bindeth himselfe with an oth to the despising of it?

The xiiij. Chapter.

Of Sacramentes.

BEside the preaching of the Gospell, an other help of like sorte is in the Sacramentes: of which to haue some certaine doctrine taught, is much behouefull for vs, wherby we may learne both to what ende they were ordained, and what is now the vse of them. First it is meete to consider what is a Sacrament. It seemeth to me that this shalbe a plaine and proper definition, if we say that it is an outward signe, wherwith the Lord sealeth to our consciences the promises of his good wil toward vs, to sustaine the weakenesse of our Faith: & we againe on our behalues do testifie our godlinesse toward him as well before him and the Angels as before men. We may also with more briefeneſſe define it otherwiſe: as to call it a teſtimony of Gods fauour toward vs confirmed by an outward ſigne, with a mutual teſtifying of our godlines toward him. Whetherſoeuer you chooſe of theſe definitions, it differeth nothing in ſenſe from that definition of Auguſtine, which teacheth that a Sacrament is a viſible ſigne of a holy thing, or a viſible forme of inuiſible grace: but it doth better and more certainly expreſſe the thing it ſelfe. For whereas in that briefeneſſe there is ſome darkenes, wherin many of the vnskilfuller ſort are deceiued, I thought good in moe words to giue a fuller ſentence, that there ſhould remaine no dout.

2 For what reaſon the olde wryters vſed this word in that ſenſe, it is not hard to ſee. For ſo oft as the old tranſlater would render in Latine this Greeke word Myſterion myſterie, ſpecially whē diuine matters were entreated of, he tranſlated it Sacrament. So to the Epheſians, That he might make knowen vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Againe, if yet ye haue hearde the diſtribution of the grace of God, which is giuen to me in you, becauſe according to reuelation the Sacrament was made knowen to me. To the Coloſſians, The myſtery which hath bin hidden from ages and generations, but now is manifeſted to his Saintes, to whom the Lord would make knowen the richeſſe of this Sacramēt. &c. Againe to Timothee, A great Sacrament of godlineſſe: God is openly ſhewed in the fleſhe. He would not ſay a ſecret, leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to ſay ſomwhat vnder the greatnes of the things. Therefore he hath put Sacrament in ſtede of Secret, but of a holy thing. In that ſignification it is ſomtime founde among the eccleſiaſticall wryters. And it is well enough knowen, that thoſe which in Latine are called Sacraments, in Greeke are Myſteries: which expreſſing of one thing in two ſeuerall words endeth all the contentiō. And hereby it came to paſſe that it was drawē to thoſe ſignes which had a reuerende repreſentation of hie and ſpirituall thinges. Which Auguſtine alſo noteth in one place. It were long (ſaith he) to diſpute of the diuerſity of ſignes, which when they pertaine to diuine things, are called Sacramentes.

Epiſt. 5. ad Marcel.

3 Now of this definition which we haue ſet, we vnderſtande that a Sacrament is neuer without a promiſe going before it, but rather is adioyned as a certaine addition hanginge to it, to this ende that it ſhoulde confirme and ſeale the promiſe it ſelfe, and make it more approued vnto vs, yea after a certaine maner ratified. Which meane the Lorde foreſeeth to be needefull firſt for our ignorance and dullneſſe, and then for our weakeneſſe: and yet (to ſpeake properly) not ſo much to confirme his holy word, as to ſtabliſh vs in the Fayth therof.

For

For the truth of God is by it ſelfe ſounde and certaine enough, and can not from any other where receiue better cõfirmation than from it ſelfe. But our Faith, as it is ſmal and weake, vnleſſe it be ſtayed on euery ſide, and be by all meanes vpholden, is by and by ſhaken, waue-reth, ſtaggereth, yea and fainteth. And herein verily the merciſull Lorde according to his great tender kindneſſe tempereth himſelfe to our capacitie: that, whereas we be naturall men, which alway creping vpon the grounde and ſticking faſt in the fleſh, do not thinke nor ſo much as conceiue any ſpirituall thing, he voucheſaueth euen by theſe earthly elements to guide vs vnto himſelfe, and in the fleſh it ſelfe to ſet foorth a mirror of ſpirituall good things. For if we were vnbodily (as Chryſoſtome ſaith) he would haue geuen vs the very ſame things naked and vnbodily. Nowe becauſe we haue ſoules put within bodies, he geueth ſpirituall things vnder viſible things. Not becauſe there are ſuch giftes planted in the natures of the things which are ſet foorth to vs in the Sacraments: but becauſe they were ſigned by God to this ſignification. Homel. 60. and popul.

4 And this is it which they cõmonly ſay, that a Sacrament conſiſteth of the word and the outward ſigne. For we muſt vnderſtande the worde to be, not that which being whiſpered without meaning and Faith, with onely noiſe as it were with a magicall enchauntment hath power to conſecrate the element: but which being preached maketh vs to vnderſtande what the viſible ſigne meaneth. Therefore that which was vſually done vnder the tyrannie of the Pope, was not without a great profaning of the miſteries. For they thought it inough, if the Prieſt, while the people ſtode amaſedly gazing at it without vnderſtanding, did mumble vp the forme of cõſecration. Yea they of ſet purpoſe prouided this, that no whit of doctrine ſhould thereof come to the people: for they ſpake all things in Latine before vnlearned men. Afterwarde ſuperſtition brake out ſo farre, that they beleued that the conſecration was not formally made, vnleſſe it were with a hoarſe whiſpering ſounde which fewe might heare. But Auguſtine teacheth farre otherwiſe of the Sacramentall word. Let the word (ſaith he) be added to the element, and there ſhalbe made a Sacrament. For whenſe cometh this ſo great ſtrength to the water, to touch the body and waſhe the ſoule, but by the word making it? not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleued. For in the very word it ſelfe the ſounde which paſſeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is an other. This is the worde of Faith which we preach, ſaith the Apoſtle. Whereupon in the Actes of the Apoſtles it is ſaid, by Faith cleanſing their hartes. And Peter the Apoſtle ſaith. Hom. in Ioh. 13. Rom. 10 8. Act. 15. 9. 1. Pet. 3. 21.

So Baptiſme alſo ſaueth vs: not the putting away of ỹ filthines of the fleſh, but the examinatiō of a good cōſcience. This is ỹ word of Faith which we preach: by which without dout, ỹ it may be able to clenſe, Baptiſme alſo is halowed. You ſe howe it requireth preaching, wherupon Faith may grow. And we neede not to trauaile much in profe hereof, foraſmuch as it is clere what Chriſt did, what he commaunded vs to do, what the Apoſtles followed, what the purer Church obſerued. Yea euen from the beginning of the world it is knowen, that ſo oft as God offred any ſigne to the holy Fathers, there was added an vnſeparable knot of doctrine, without which our ſenſes ſhould be made amaſed with bare beholding. Therefore when we heare mention made of the Sacramentall word, let vs vnderſtand the promiſe, which being with a loude voice preached of the miniſter may leade the people thether as it were by the hande, whether the ſigne tendeth and directeth vs.

5 Neither are ſome to be heard which trauaill to fight againſt this, with a double horned argument rather ſuttle than ſounde. Either (ſay they) we knowe, or we knowe not, that the word of God which goeth before the Sacrament, is the true will of God. If we know it, then we learne no new thing of the Sacramēt which followeth after. If we knowe it not, then neither will the Sacrament teach it, whoes whole force ſtandeth in the word. Whereunto let this brefely be for an aunſwere: that the ſeales which are hanged at patentes and other publike inſtruments, taken by themſelues are nothing, foraſmuch as they ſhould be hanged in vaine if the parchement had nothing written in it: yet they do not therefore not confirme and ſeale that which is written, when they be added to writings. Neither can they ſay that this ſimilitude is lately fained by vs, which Paule himſelfe vſed, calling Circumciſion a ſeale, where he purpoſely trauaileth to proue, that Circumciſion was not righteouſneſſe to Abraham, but a ſealing of that couenaunte, by faith whereof he had already bene iuſtified before. And what, I beſech you, is there that may much offende any man, if we teach that the promiſe is ſealed with Sacramēts, when of the promiſes themſelues it is euident that one is confirmed with an other? For as euery one is manifeſter, ſo is it more fit to vpholde faith. But the Sacramēts do both bring moſt clere promiſes, and haue this peculiar more than the word, that they liuely repreſent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that diſtinction any thing to moue vs, which is wont to be obiected, betweene Sacraments and ſeales of patentes: that whereas both conſiſt of carnall elements of this world, thoſe can not ſuffice or be mete to

ſeale the promiſes of God, which are ſpirituall and euerlaſting, as theſe are wont to be hanged to, for ſealing of the graunts of Princes concerning fading and fraile things. For a faithfull man, when the Sacraments are preſente before his eyes, ſticketh not in that fleſhly ſight, but by thoſe degrees of proportion, which I haue ſpoken of, he riſeth vp with godly cõſideration to the hy miſteries which lie hidden in the Sacraments.

6 And ſith the Lorde calleth his promiſes, couenantes: and his Sacraments, ſeales, of couenantes: a ſimilitude may well be brought from the couenãtes of men. What can a ſowe killed worke, if wordes were not vſed, yea vnleſſe they wente before? For ſowes are many times killed without any more inwarde or hier miſterie. What can the geuing of a mans right hande do, ſith oftentimes handes are matched with enmitie? But when wordes haue gone before, by ſuch ſignes the lawes of leagues are ſtabliſhed, although they were firſt conceiued, made, and decreed in wordes. Therefore Sacraments are exerciſes which make the credit of the word of God certainer vnto vs: & becauſe we are carnall, they are deliuered vnder carnall things: that ſo they ſhould inſtruct vs according to the capacitie of our dullneſſe, and guide vs by the hande as ſchole maiſters guide children. For this reaſon Auguſtine calleth a Sacrament, a viſible word: becauſe it repreſenteth the promiſes of God as it were painted in a table, and ſetteth them before our ſight conningly expreſſed and as in an image. Other ſimilitudes alſo may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly ſet out, as if we call them pillers of our Faith. For as a bilding ſtandeth and reſteth vpon the fundatiõ: yet by ſetting vnder of pillers, it is more ſurely ſtabliſhed: ſo: Faith reſteth vpon the word of God, as vpon a fundation: but when Sacraments are added, it ſtaieth yet more ſoundly vpon them as vppon pillers. Or if we call them loking glaſſes, in which we may beholde the richeſſe of the grace of God, which he geueth vs. For (as we haue already ſaid) he doth in them manifeſtly ſhewe himſelfe to vs, ſo much as is geuen to our dullneſſe to knowe, and doth more expreſſely teſtifie his good will and loue toward vs than by his word.

Lib. 19. con. Fauſt.

7 Neither do they reaſon fittly enough to the purpoſe, when they labor to proue hereby that they are not teſtimonies of the grace of God, becauſe they are alſo geuen to the wicked, which yet do thereby fele God nothing more fauourable to them, but rather procure to themſelues more greuous damnation. For by the ſame argument neither ſhould the Goſpell, which is heard and deſpiſed of many, be the teſtimony of the grace of God: nor yet Chriſt himſelf, which was ſeen and knowen of many, of whom very fewe receiued him. The like we may alſo ſe in patentes. For a greate parte of the multitude laugheth at and ſcorneth that authentike ſeale, howſoeuer they knowe that it proceded from the Prince to ſeale his will withall: ſome regarde it not, as a thing not perteining to them: ſome alſo abhorre it: ſo that cõſidering this ſo egall relation of both, that ſame ſimilitude which I haue aboue vſed, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certaine that the Lord doth offer vnto vs mercy and a pledge of his grace both in his holy word and in the Sacraments: but the ſame is not receiued but of them which receiue the word and Sacraments with ſure Faith: like as Chriſt is offred of the Father vnto ſaluatiõ, to all, yet he is not acknowledged and receiued of all. Auguſtine in one place minding to declare the ſame, ſaid that the effectualneſſe of the word is ſhewed foorth in the Sacrament: not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleued. Therefore Paule, when he ſpeketh to the faithfull, ſo entreateth of Sacraments that he includeth the communion of Chriſt in them, as when he ſaith: all ye that are Baptiſed, haue put on Chriſt. Againe, we are all one body and one Spirit, which are Baptiſed in Chriſt. But when he ſpeaketh of the wrongfull vſe of Sacraments, he geueth no more to it than to colde and voide figures. Whereby he ſignifieth, that howſoeuer the wicked & hypocrites with their peruerſneſſe do either oppreſſe or darken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraméts, yet that withſtandeth not but that where and ſo ofte as it pleaſeth God, both they may bring a true teſtimonie of the communicating of Chriſt, and the Spirite of God himſelfe may deliuer and performe that which they promiſe. We determine therefore that Sacraments are truely called teſtimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine ſeales of the good will which he beareth toward vs: which by ſealing it vnto vs, do by this meane ſuſteine, nouriſh, confirme, & encreaſe our faith. As for the reaſons which ſome are wont to obiect againſt this ſentence, they are to trifling and weake. They ſay that if our Faith be good, it can not be made better: for they ſay that it is no Faith, but which without ſhaking, ſtedfaſtly, and without withdrawing, reſteth vppon the mercy of God. It had bene better for ſuch to pray with the Apoſtles that the Lorde would encreaſe their Faith, than careleſly to pretẽde ſuch a perfection of faith, which neuer any of the ſonnes of men hath obteined, nor any ſhall obteine in this life. Let them aunſwer, what maner of faith they thinke that he had which ſaid: I beleue Lorde, helpe my vnbeleuingneſſe. For euen that faith, howeſoeuer it was but a begon faith, was a good faith, and might be made better when vnbeleuingneſſe were taken away. But they are confuted by no certainer argument than by their owne conſcience. For if they confeſſe themſelues ſinners, (which whether they will or no they can not denie) they muſt needes impute the ſame to the imperfection of their faith.

8 But (ſay they) Philip aunſwered the Eunuch, that he might be Baptized, if he beleued with all his hart. What place here hath the confirmation of Baptiſme, where faith filleth the whole hart? Againe I aſke them whether they do not fele a good parte of their hart void of faith: whether they do not daily acknowledge newe encreaſes. The heathen manne gloried that he waxed olde with learning. Therfore we Chriſtians be thriſe miſerable, if we waxe olde with profiting nothing, whoes faith ought to go forwarde by all degrees of ages, till it growe into a perfect man. Therefore in this place to beleue with all the hart, is not perfectly to beleue Chriſt, but onely from the hart and with a ſincere minde to embrace him: not to be full with him, but with feruent affection to hunger, & thirſt, and ſigh towarde him. This is the maner of the Scripture, to ſay that that is done with the whole hart, which it meaneth to be done ſincerely and hartily. Of this ſort are theſe ſayings: I haue in all my hart ſought thee: I will confeſſe to thee in all my hart, and ſuch other. As on the other ſide, where he rebuketh guilefull and deceitfull men, he vſeth to reproch them with hart and hart. Then they ſay further, that if faith be encreaſed by Sacraments, the Holy Ghoſt is geuen in vaine whoes ſtrength and worke it is to begin, maintein, and make perfect faith. To whom in deede I graunt, that faith is the propre and whole work of the holy Ghoſt, by whom being enlightened we knowe God and the treaſure of his goodneſſe, and without whoes light our minde is ſo blinde, that it can ſee nothing, ſo ſenſleſſe, that it can ſmell nothing of ſpirituall things. But for one benefite of God which they ſet forth, we conſider three. For firſt the Lorde teacheth and inſtructeth vs with his word: then he ſtrengtheneth vs with Sacraments: laſt of all he ſhineth into our mindes with the light of his holy Spirit, & openeth an entrie for the word and Sacraments into our hartes, which otherwiſe ſhould but ſtrike our eares, and be preſent before our eyes, and nothing moue the inward partes.

9 Wherefore as touching the cõfirmation and encreaſe of faith, I would haue the reader warned (which I thinke I haue already in plaine wordes expreſſed) that I do ſo aſſigne that miniſterie to the Sacramentes, not as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wote not what ſecret force, by which they may of themſelues be able to further or confirme faith: but becauſe they are ordained of the Lorde to this ende, that they ſhould ſerue to the ſtabliſhing and encreaſing of faith. But then onely they do truly performe their office, when that inwarde ſchoolemaiſter the Spirit is come to them, with whoes onely power both the hartes are pearced, and affections are moued, and the entrie is ſet open for the Sacraments into our ſoules. If he be abſente, Sacraments can do no more to our mindes, than if either the brightneſſe of the ſunne ſhould ſhine vppon blinde eyes, or a voice ſounde to deafe eares. Therefore I ſo make diuiſion betweene the Spirit and ſacraments, that the power of workinge remaine with the ſpirit, and to the Sacraments be left onely the miniſtration, yea and the ſame voide and trifling without the working of the ſpirit: but of much effectualneſſe, when he inwardly worketh & putteth forth his force. Nowe it is plaine in what ſorte according to this ſentence, a godly minde is confirmed in the faith by Sacraments: that is to ſay, euen as the eyes ſee by the brightneſſe of the ſunne, and the eares heare by the ſounde of a voice: of which neither the eyes ſhould any whit perceiue any light, vnleſſe they had a ſight in themſelues that might naturally be enlightened: and the eares ſhould in vaine be knocked at with any crying whatſoeuer it were, vnleſſe they were naturally made and fit to heare. But if it be true, which ought at ones to be determined among vs, that what the ſight worketh in our eyes to ſeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiuing of a voice, the ſame is the worke of the holy Ghoſt in our hartes, both to the conceiuing, & ſuſteining, and cheriſhing and ſtabliſhing of faith: then both theſe things do likewiſe followe: that the Sacraments do nothing at all profite without the power of the holy Ghoſt: and that nothing withſtandeth but that in hartes already taught of that ſcholemaiſter, they may make faith both ſtronger and more encreaſed. Onely this difference there is, that the power of hearing and ſeing is naturally ſet in our eares and eyes: but Chriſt beſide the meaſure of nature doth by ſpeciall grace worke the ſame in our mindes.

10 Whereby thoſe obiections alſo, which comber ſome men, are diſſolued: That if we aſcribe to creatures either the encreaſe or confirmation of faith, there is wronge done to the Spirit of God, whom we ought to acknowledge the only author therof. For neither do we in the meane time take from him the praiſe either of confirming or encreaſing it: but rather we affirme, that euen this that he encreaſeth and confirmeth faith, is nothing els but with his inward enlightning to prepare our mindes to receiue that confirming which is ſet forth by the Sacraments. But if it be yet to darkly ſpoken, it ſhalbe made very clere by a ſimilitude which I will bring. If thou purpoſe with wordes to perſuade a man to do any thing, thou wilt ſearch out all the reaſons, whereby he may be drawen to thy opinion, and may be in a maner ſubdued to obey thy counſell. But thou haſt hetherto nothing preuailed, vnleſſe he likewiſe haue a pearcing and ſharpe iudgement, whereby he may weye what pith is in thy reaſons: vnleſſe alſo he haue a tractable wit and ready to harken to teaching: finally vnleſſe he haue conceiued ſuch an opinion of thy faithfulneſſe and wiſedome, as may be to him like a certaine foreiudgement to cauſe him to ſubſcribe. For both there are many ſtubborne heads, which a man can neuer bowe with any reaſons: and alſo where credite is ſuſpected, where authoritie is deſpiſed, little good is done euen with the willing to learne. On the other ſide let all thoſe things be preſent, they will truely bring to paſſe that the hearer, to whom thou geueſt counſell, will obey the ſelfe ſame counſels which otherwiſe he would haue laughed to ſcorne. The ſame worke alſo the Spirit worketh in vs. For leaſt the word ſhould beate our eares in vaine, leaſt the Sacramentes ſhould ſtrike our eyes in vaine, he ſheweth vs that it is God which ſpeaketh therein, he ſofteneth the ſtubborneſſe of our heart, and frameth it to the obedience which is due to the word of the Lorde. Finally he conueyeth thoſe outward wordes and Sacramentes from the eares into the ſoule. Therefore both the word & the Sacraments do confirme our faith, whē they ſet before our eyes the good will of the heauenly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole ſtedfaſtneſſe of our faith ſtandeth faſt, and the ſtrength of it encreaſeth: the Spirit confirmeth it, when in engrauing the ſame confirmation in our mindes he maketh it effectuall. In the meane time the father of lightes can not be forbidden, but as he enlightneth the bodily eyes with the beames of the ſunne, ſo he may enlightē our mindes with ſacraments, as with a brightneſſe ſet meane betweene.

11 Which propretie the Lorde taught that there was in his outwarde word, when in the parable he called it ſeede. For as ſeede, if it fall vpon a deſert and vntilled peece of grounde, will do nothing but die: but if it be throwen vpon arable lande well manured and tilled, it will bring forth her fruit with very good encreaſe: ſo the word of God, if it light vpon a ſtiffe necke, it will growe barrein as that which is ſowen vpon ſande: but if it light vpon a ſoule manured with the hande of the heauenly Spirit, it will be moſt fruitefull. But if there be like reaſon of ſeede and of the word: as we ſay that out of ſeede Mat 13. 4. Luc. 8. 15.

corne both ſpringeth and encreaſeth, and groweth vp to ripeneſſe: why may we not ſay that faith taketh out of the word of God both beginning, encreaſe, and perfection Paule very well expreſſeth both theſe things in ſundry places. For when he goeth about to put the Corinthians in remembrace howe effectually God vſed his trauaile, he glorieth that he hath the miniſterie of the Spirit, as though the power of ỹ holy Ghoſt were with an vnſeparable knot ioined with his preaching, to enlighten and thoroughly moue the minde. But in an other place when he mindeth to admoniſh them, of what force the word of God is of it ſelfe being preached by man, he compareth the miniſters themſelues to huſbandmen, which when they haue beſtowed their labor and trauaile in tilling the earth, haue no more to do. But what ſhould tilling, and ſowing, and watering profit, vnleſſe that which is ſowen ſhould receiue liuelineſſe by heauenly benefite? Therefore he concludeth, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing: but that all things are to be aſcribed to God, which alone geueth the encreaſe. Therefore the Apoſtles do in their preaching vtter the power of the Spirit, ſo farre as God vſeth the inſtruments ordeined by himſelf to the ſetting forth of his ſpirituall grace. Yet we muſt kepe ſtill that diſtinction, that we remembre, what man is able to do by himſelfe, and what is propre to God.

1. Cor. 3.6.
1. Cor. 3.6.

12 Sacraments are ſo cõfirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lorde meaneth to take away the confidence of the very things that are by him promiſed in the Sacraments, he taketh away the ſacraments themſelues. When he ſpoileth and thruſteth away Adam from the gifte of immortalitie, he ſaith: Let him not eate of the fruit of life, leaſt he liue for euer. What ſaith he? Could that fruit reſtore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he was nowe fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had ſaid: Leaſt he ſhould enioy a vaine confidence if he kepe ſtill the ſigne of my promiſe, let that be ſhaken away from him which might bring him ſome hope of immortalitie. After this maner when the Apoſtle exhorteth the Epheſians to remembre that they were forein geſtes of the teſtaments, ſtrangers from the fellowſhip of Iſraell, without God, without Chriſt, he ſaith, that they were not partakers of Circumciſion. Whereby he doth (by figure of tranſnomination) ſignifie that they were excluded from the promiſe it ſelfe, which had not receiued the ſigne of the promiſe. To their other obiection, that the glory of God is conueyed to creatures, to whom ſo much power is aſcribed, and that thereby it is ſo farre diminiſhed, we haue in redineſſe to aunſwere that we ſet no power in creatures. Onely this we ſay, that God vſeth meanes and inſtru-instruments, which he himselfe seeth to be expedient: that all things may serue his glorie, forasmuch as he is Lorde and iudge of all. Therfore as by bread and other nourishments he feedeth our body: as by the sunne he enlightneth the world: as by fire he warmeth: yet neither bread, nor the sunne, nor fire, are any thinge but so farre as by those instruments he doth distribute his blessings vnto vs: so spiritually he nourisheth faith by the Sacraments, whose onely office is to set his promises before our eyes to be loked vpō, yea to be pledges vnto vs of them. And as it is our duetie to fasten none of our affiance in other creatures, which by the liberality and bountifulnesse of God are ordeined to our vses, and by the ministery whereof he geueth vs his giftes, nor to haue them in admiration, and praise them as causes of our good: so neither ought our confidence to sticke fast in the Sacraments, nor the glorie of God to be remoued vnto them: but leauing all things, both our faith and confession ought to rise vp to him the author both of the sacraments and of all things.

13 Whereas some bring an argument out of the very name of a Sacrament, it is nothing strong. A sacrament (say they) whereas it hath among allowed authors many significations, yet it hath but one which agreeth with the signes: that is, whereby it signifieth that solemne othe which the soldior maketh to his capitaine when he entreth into professiō of a soldior. For as by that othe of warfare newe soldiors do binde their faith to the capitaine, and professe to be his soldiors: so by our signes we professe Christ our capitaine, and do testifie that we serue vnder his banner. They adde similitudes to make therby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romains seuerally knowen from the Grekes which did weare clokes: as the very degrees of men at Rome were discerned by their seueral signes: the degree of Senators from the degree of knightes, by purple cote and piked shooes: againe a knight from a commoner, by a ring: so we beare our signes that may make vs seuerally knowen from prophane men. But by the things aboue said it is euident enough that the olde writers, which gaue to the signes the name of Sacraments, hadde no regarde howe this word was vsed among Latine writers, but for their owne purpose fained this newe signification, whereby they signified onely holy Signes. But if we will searche the matter more depely, it may seeme that they haue with the same relation applied this word to such a significatiō, wherewith they haue remoued the name of faith to that sense wherein it is nowe vsed. For whereas faith is a truth in performing promises: yet they haue called faith an assurednesse, or sure persuasion which is had of the truth it selfe. Liker-wiſe whereas a ſacrament is the ſoldiors part whereby he voweth himſelfe to his capitaine: they haue made it the capitaines parte, whereby he receiueth ſoldiors into roomes of ſeruice. For by the ſacrament the Lorde doth promiſe that he will be our God, and that we ſhall be his people. But we paſſe ouer ſuch ſuttleties: foraſmuch as I thinke I haue proued with arguments plaine enough, that they hadde reſpect to nothing els but to ſignifie that theſe are Signes of holy and ſpirituall things. We receiue in deede the ſimilitudes which they bring of outward tokens: but we allowe not that that which is the laſt pointe in the ſacraments, is by them ſet for the chief yea and onely thing. But this is the firſt point, that they ſhould ſerue our faith before God: the later point that they ſhould teſtifie our confeſſion before men. According to this later conſideration thoſe ſimilitudes haue place. But in the meane time let that firſt point remaine: becauſe otherwiſe (as we haue already proued) the miſteries ſhould be but colde, vnleſſe they were helpes to our faith, and additions to doctrine ordeined to the ſame vſe and ende.

14 Againe we muſt be warned, that as theſe men do weaken the force, and vtterly ouerthrowe the vſe of ſacraments: ſo on the contrarie ſide there be ſome, which faine to ſacraments, I wote not what ſecret vertues, which are no where red to be put in them by God. By which error the ſimple and vnſkilfull are dangerouſly deceiued, while they are both taught to ſeke the giftes of God where they can not be founde, and are by little and little drawen away from God, to embrace mere vanitie in ſteede of his veritie. For the Sophiſticall ſchooles haue taught with great conſent, that the Sacraments of the newe lawe, that is to ſay thoſe which are nowe in vſe in the Chriſtian Church, do iuſtifie and geue grace, ſo that we do not lay a ſtoppe of deadly ſinne. It can not be expreſſed howe pernicious and peſtilent this opinion is, and ſo much the more, becauſe in many ages heretofore, to the great loſſe of the Church it hath preuailed in a great part of the world: Truely it is vtterly deueliſh. For when it promiſeth righteouſneſſe without faith, it driueth ſoules hedlong into deſtructiō: then becauſe it fetcheth the cauſe of righteouſneſſe from the ſacraments, it bindeth the miſerable mindes of men already of their owne accorde to much bending to the earth, with this ſuperſtitiō that they rather reſt in the ſight of a bodily thing than of God himſelfe. Which two things I would to God we had not ſo proued in experience, ſo little neede they any long profe. But what is a ſacramēt taken without faith, but the moſt certaine deſtruction of the Church? For whereas nothing is to be loked for thereof without the promiſe, and the promiſe miſe doth no leſſe threaten wrath to the vnfaithfull, than it offreth grace to the faithfull: he is deceiued that thinketh that there is any more geuen to him by the ſacraments, than that which being offred by the word of God, he receiueth by faith. Wherupon an other thing alſo is gathered, that the affiance of ſaluation hangeth not vpon the partaking of the ſacrament, as though Iuſtification conſiſted therein: which we knowe to be repoſed in Chriſt onely, and to be communicated vnto vs no leſſe by the preaching of the Goſpell, than by the ſealing of the ſacrament: and that without that it can not wholly ſtande. So true is that which Auguſtine alſo writeth, that inuiſible ſanctification may be without a viſible ſigne, and againe that a viſible ſigne may be without true ſanctification. For (as he alſo writeth in an other place,) men do put on Chriſt ſometime vntill the receiuing of a ſacrament, ſometime euen vntill the ſanctification of life. And that firſt point may be common both to good and to euill: but this other is propre to the good and godly. Libr. 4 de queſti. vet. teſtam. Libr. 5. de bap. contra Donat. cap. 24.

15. Hereupon cometh that diſtinction if it be well vnderſtanded, which the ſame Auguſtine hath often noted, betweene a ſacrament, and the thing of the ſacrament. For it not onely ſignifieth, that the figure and truth are there conteined, but that they do not ſo hang together but that they may be ſeuered: and that euen in the very conioining the thing muſt alway be diſcerned from the ſigne, that we geue not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He ſpeaketh of the ſeparation, when he writeth that the ſacraments do worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the ſacraments were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the ſacraments. So nowe alſo the waſhing of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it ſelfe, whereby the membres of Chriſt are regenerate with their hed, is not common to all. Againe in an other place of the Supper of the Lorde, We alſo at this day receiue viſible meate. But the ſacrament is one thing, and the power of the ſacrament an other thing. What is this, that many receiue of the altar and dy, and in receiuing do dy? For the Lordes morſell was poiſon to Iudas: not becauſe he receiued an euell thing, but becauſe he being euell receiued a good thing euelly. A little after, The ſacrament of this thing, that is of the vnitie of the body and blood of Chriſt, is ſomewhere prepared on the Lordes table daily, ſomewhere by certaine diſtances of dayes: and thereof is receiued vnto life to ſome, and vnto deſtruction to ſome. But the thing it ſelfe whereof it is a ſacrament, is receiued vnto life to all men, but vnto deſtruction to no man, whoſoeuer is partaker of De bap. paruu. In pſal. 77. In Ioh. Homel. 28.

it. And a little before he had ſaid, He ſhall not dy which eateth: but he which perteineth to the power of the ſacrament, not to the viſible ſacrament: which eateth within, not without: which eateth with hart, not he which preſſeth with tooth. Thus you heare euery where, that a ſacrament is ſo ſeuered from his owne truth by the vnworthineſſe of the receiuer, that there remaineth nothing but a vaine and vnprofitable figure. But that thou maiſt haue not a ſigne voide of truth: but the thing with the ſigne, thou muſt conceiue by faith the word which is there encloſed. So howe much thou ſhalt by the ſacraments profite in communicating of Chriſt, ſo much profite ſhalt thou take of them.

16 If this be ſomewhat darke becauſe of the ſhorteneſſe, I will ſet it out in mo wordes. I ſay that Chriſt is the matter, or (if thou wilte) the ſubſtance of all ſacraments: foraſmuch as in him they haue all their perfectneſſe, and do promiſe nothing without him. So much leſſe tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expreſly make them cauſes of righteouſneſſe and ſaluation, whereof they be partes. Therefore bidding all cauſes farewell which mans wit doth faine to it ſelfe, we ought to ſtay in this one cauſe. Therefore howe much we be by their miniſtery holpen to the nouriſhing, confirming, and encreaſing of the true knowledge of Chriſt in vs, and to the poſſeſſing of him more fully, and to the enioying of his richeſſe, ſo much effectualneſſe they haue with vs. But that is done when we do with true faith receiue that which is there offered. Do the wicked then (wilt thou ſay) bring to paſſe by their vnthankfulneſſe, that the ordinance of God be voide and turne to nothing? I aunſwer that that which I haue ſaid, is not ſo to be taken, as though the force and truth of the ſacrament did hang vppon the ſtate or will of him that receiueth it. For that which God hath ordeined remaineth ſteedfaſt and kepeth ſtill his nature, howeſoeuer men do varie. But ſith it is one thing to offre, an other to receiue: nothing withſtandeth but that the ſigne halowed by the word of God may be in deede that which it is called, and kepe his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profit to an euell doer and wicked man. But Auguſtine doth in fewe wordes well aſſoile this queſtion. If (ſaith he) thou receaueſt carnally, it ceaſeth not to be ſpirituall: but it is not to thee. But as Auguſtine hath in the aforeſaid places ſhewed that a ſacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be ſeuered from the truth thereof: ſo in an other place he geueth warning that euen in the very conioining needeth a diſtinction, leaſt we ſticke to much in the outward ſigne. As (ſaith he) to followe the letter, and to take the ſignes in ſteede of the things, is a point of a ſeruile weakeneſſe: ſo to expounde the ſignes vnprofitably is a point of euell wandring error. He nameth two faultes which are here to be auoided: The one when we ſo take the ſignes as though they were geuen in vaine, and when with abacing or diminiſhing their ſecrete ſignifications by our enuiouſneſſe, we bring to paſſe that they bring vs no profite at all. The other, when in not raiſing our mindes beyonde the viſible ſigne, we geue away to the ſacrament the praiſe of all thoſe good things which are not geuen vs but of Chriſt onely, and that by the Holy Ghoſt, which maketh vs partakers of Chriſt himſelfe: and in deede by the helpe of the outwarde ſignes: which if they allure vs to Chriſt, when they be wreſted an other way, the whole profite of them is vnworthily ouerthrowen.

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the ſacraments than of the word of God: which is to offer and ſet forth Chriſt vnto vs, and in him the treaſures of heauenly grace: but they auaile or profit nothing, but beinge receiued by faith: euen as wine, or oile, or any other liquor, though you poure it on largely, yet it will runne beſide & periſh, vnleſſe the veſſels mouth be open to receiue it, and the veſſell though it be wette rounde about on the outſide, ſhall neuertheleſſe remaine emptie and voide within. Beſide this we muſt beware, leaſt thoſe things which haue bene writté by the olde writers ſomewhat to glorioufly to amplifie the dignitie of ſacraments, ſhould leade vs away into an error nere to this: namely that we ſhoulde thinke that there is ſome ſecret power knit and faſtened to the ſacraments, that they may of themſelues geue vs the graces of the Holy Ghoſt, like as wine is geuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to teſtifie and ſtabliſh to vs the good will of God toward vs, and do profite no further vnleſſe the Holy Ghoſt ioine himſelfe to them, which may open our mindes and hartes, and make vs partakers of this teſtimonie, wherin alſo do clerely appere diuers and ſeuerall graces of God. For the ſacraments, as we haue aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are meſſangers of ioyfull things, or earneſtes in ſtabliſhing of bargaines: which do not of themſelues geue any grace, but do tell and ſhewe vs, and (as they be earneſtes and tokens,) do ratifie vnto vs thoſe things that are geuen vs by the liberalitie of God. The Holy Ghoſt (whom the ſacraments do not in comon without difference bring to all men, but whom the Lorde peculiarly geueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of God with him, which geueth to the ſacraments place in vs, which maketh them to bring forth fruit. But although we do not denie that God himſelfe with the moſt preſent power of his Spirit is preſent with his owne inſtitution, leaſt the miniſtration which he hath ordeined of the ſacraments ſhould be fruitleſſe & vaine: yet we affirme, that the inward grace of the Spirit, as it is ſeuered from the outward miniſterie, ſo ought to be ſeuerally weyed and conſidered. God therefore truely performeth in deede whatſoeuer he promiſeth and figureth in ſignes: neither do the ſignes want their effect, that the author of them may be proued true and faithfull. The queſtion here is onely whether God worketh by his owne and by inward power (as they call it) or do reſigne his office to outwarde ſignes. But we affirme, that whatſoeuer inſtruments he vſe, his originall working is nothing hindered thereby. When this is taught concerning the ſacraments, both their dignitie is honorably ſet out, and their vſe is plainely ſhewed, and their profitableneſſe is abundantly reported, and the beſt meane in all theſe things is reteined, that neither any thing be geuen to them which ought not, nor againe any thing be taken from them which is not cõuenient to be taken from them. In the meane time that fained deuiſe is taken away, whereby the cauſe of iuſtification and power of the Holy Ghoſt is encloſed in elements as in veſſels or waggons, and that principall force which hath bene omitted of other is expreſly ſet out. Here alſo it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh that which the miniſter figureth and teſtifieth by outward doing: leaſt that be drawen to a mortall man, which God claimeth to himſelfe alone. The ſame thing alſo doth Auguſtine wiſely touch. Howe (ſaith he) doth both Moſes ſanctifie, and God? Not Moſes for God: but Moſes with viſible ſacraments by his miniſterie, but God with inuiſible grace by his holy Spirit: where alſo is the whole fruit of viſible ſacraments. For without this ſanctification of inuiſible grace, what do thoſe viſible ſacraments profite?

18 The name of ſacramẽt, as we haue hetherto entreated of the nature of it, doth generally conteine all the ſignes that euer God gaue to men, to certifie and aſſure them of the truth of his promiſes. Thoſe he ſometime willed to remaine in naturall things, ſometime he deliuered them in miracles. Of the firſt kinde theſe be examples, as when he gaue to Adam and Eue, the tree of life for an earneſte of immortalitie, that they might aſſure themſelues of it, ſo long as they did eate of the frute thereof. And when he did ſet the heauenly boaw for a monument to Noe and his poſteritie, that he would no more from thenſe forth deſtroy the earth with ouerflowing of water. Theſe Adam and Noe had for ſacraments. Not that the tree did geue them immortalitie, which it could not geue to it selfe: nor that the Boawe (which is but a striking backe of a sunbeame vpon the cloudes against it) was of force to hold in the waters: but because they had a marke grauen in them by the word of God, that they should be examples and seales of his testaments. And the tree was a tree before, and the boawe a boawe. When they were written vppon with the word of God, then a newe forme was put into them, that they shoulde begin to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these things spoken without cause, the boawe it selfe is at this day also a witnesse of that couenant, which God made with Noe: which boawe so ofte as we beholde, we reade this promise of God wrytten in it, that the earth shall neuer be destroyed with ouerflowing of waters. Therfore if any fonde Philosopher, to scorne the simplicitie of our faith, do affirme that such varietie of colours doth naturally arise of reflected beames and a cloude set against them: let vs graunt it in deede, but let vs laugh to scorne his senslesse follie, which doth not acknowledge God the Lorde and gouernor of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elements to the seruice of his owne glory. If he had emprinted such tokens in the sunne, the starres, the earth, stones, and such like, they should all haue bene sacraments to vs. Why are not vncoined and coined siluer both of one value, sith they are both one metall? euen because the one hath nothing but nature: when it is striken with a common marke, it is made money, and receiueth a newe valuation. And shall not God be able to marke his creatures with his word, that they may be made sacraments, which before were naked elemẽts? Of the second kinde these were examples, when he shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when he watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining dry: againe he watered the earth, the fleece being vntouched, to promise victory to Gedeon: when he drewe the shadowe of the diall ix. lines backeward, to promise safety to Ezechias. These things, when they were done to relieue and stablishe the weakenesse of their faith, were then also sacraments.

19 But our presente purpose is, to discourse peculiarly of those sacraments, which the Lorde willed to be ordinarie in his Church, to nourishe his worshippers and seruantes into one faith and the confession of one faith. For (to vse the wordes of Augustine) men can be congeled together into no name of religion either true or false, vnlesse they be bounde together with some fellowship of visible signes and sacramentes. Sith therefore the most good Father foresawe this necessitie, he did from the beginning ordeine certaine ſary that there ſhoulde be ſome ſatisfaction which ſhould be payd to the iudgemẽt of God. That therfore there ſhould be ſome one chief Biſhop, a mediatour betwene God and men, which ſhoulde ſatisfie God by ſheding of blood, and by offring of a Sacrifice which ſhoulde ſuffice for the forgiuenes of ſinnes. This chiefe Prieſt was Chriſt: he himſelfe ſhed his owne blood: he himſelfe was the Sacrifice: for he offred himſelfe obedient to his Father vnto death: by which obedience he tooke away the diſobedience of man, which had prouoked the diſpleaſure of God.

Heb. 4. 14. & 5. 5. & 9. 11 Phi. 2. 8 Rom. 5. 19.

22 As for our Sacramentes, they do ſo much more clearely preſent Chriſt vnto vs, as he was more neerely ſhewed to men, ſince he hath bin truly deliuered of his Father ſuch as he had bin promiſed. For Baptiſme doth teſtifie vnto vs that we are cleanſed and waſhed, the Supper of thankeſgiuing teſtifieth that we be redeemed. In water, is figured waſhing: in blood, ſatisfaction. Theſe two things are found in Chriſt, which (as Iohn ſaith) came in water and blood, that is to ſay that he might cleanſe and redeeme. Of which thing the Spirit of God alſo is a witneſſe. Yea there are three witneſſes in one, Water, Blood, and Spirit. In water and blood we haue a teſtimonie of cleanſing and redeeminge: but the Spirite the principall witneſſe bringeth vnto vs aſſured credit of ſuch witneſſinge. This hie myſtery hath notably well bin ſhewed vs in the croſſe of Chriſt, when water & blood flowed out of his holy ſide: which ſide for that cauſe Auguſtin rightfully called the fountaine of our Sacramentes: of which yet we muſt entreate ſomewhat more at large. There is no dout but that more plentifull grace alſo of the Spirite doth here ſhewe foorth it ſelfe if you compare time with time. For that pertaineth to the glory of the kingdom of Chriſt, as we gather out of many places, but ſpecially out of the 7. Chapter of Iohn. In which ſenſe we muſt take that ſayinge of Paule, that vnder the law were ſhadowes, but in Chriſt is the body. Neither is it his meaning to ſpoyle of their effect the teſtimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the olde time to proue himſelfe to the Fathers a true ſpeaker, euen as at this day he doth to vs in Baptiſme and in the holy Supper. But onely his purpoſe was by way of compariſon to magnifie that which was giuen vs, leaſt any ſhoulde thinke it maruelous, that the Ceremonies of the law were aboliſhed by the comming of Chriſt.

1. Ioh. 5 6. Ioh. 19. 34. Homil. in Iohn. 20. Colo. 2. 17.

23 But that ſame ſchoole doctrine (as I may alſo briefly touch this by the way) is vtterly to be hiſſed out, whereby there is noted ſo great a difference betwene the Sacraments of the olde and new law, as though thoſe did nothinge but ſhadow out the grace of God, and

theſe do preſently giue it. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh no leſſe honorably of thoſe thā of theſe, when he teacheth that the Fathers did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate which we eate, and expoundeth that ſame meate to be Chriſt. Who dare make that an empty ſigne, which deliuered to the Iewes a true communion of Chriſt? And the grounde of the cauſe which the Apoſtle there handeleth, doth plainly fight on our ſide. For, that no man truſting vpon a colde knowledge of Chriſt, and empty title of Chriſtianity, and outward tokens, ſhould preſume to deſpiſe the iudgement of God: he ſheweth foorth examples of Gods ſeuerity to be ſeene in the Iewes: that we ſhoulde knowe that the ſame paines which they haue ſuffred, hang ouer vs, if we followe the ſame faultes. Now that the compariſon might be fit, it behoued that he ſhoulde ſhewe that there is no vnegallneſſe betwene vs and them in thoſe good thinges whereof he did forbid vs to boaſt falſely. Therefore firſt he maketh vs egall in the Sacramentes, and leaueth to vs not ſo much as any ſmall peece of prerogatiue, that might encourage vs to hope of eſcapinge vnpuniſhed. Neitheir verely is it lawfull to giue any more to our Baptiſme, than he in an other place giueth to circumciſion, when he calleth it the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of Faith. Whatſoeuer therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacraments, the ſame thing the Iewes in old time receiued in theirs. that is to ſay, Chriſt with his ſpirituall richeſſe. What power our Sacramentes haue, the ſame they alſo felt in theirs: that is to ſay, that they were to them ſeales of Gods good will towarde them, into the hope of eternall ſaluation. If they had bin apt expoſitors of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, they woulde not haue ſo bin blinded. But when they read there, that ſinnes were not cleanſed by the Ceremonies of the law, yea that the olde ſhadowes had no auailing force to righteouſneſſe: they neglectinge the compariſon which is there handeled, while they tooke holde of this one thing, that the law of it ſelfe nothing profited the folowers of it, thought ſimply that the figures were voide of trueth. But the Apoſtles meaning is to bring the ceremonial law to nothing, vntill it come to Chriſt, vpon whom alone hangeth al the effectualneſſe of it.

1. Cor. 10. 3.

He. 10. 1.

24 But they will obiect thoſe thinges which are red in Paul concerning the circumciſion of the letter, that it is in no eſtimation with God, that it giueth nothing, that it is vaine. For ſuch ſayings ſeeme to preſſe it downe farre beneth Baptiſme. Not ſo. For the very ſame might rightfully be ſayd of Baptiſme. Yea and alſo the ſame is ſayd, firſt of Paule himſelfe, where he ſheweth that God regardeth not the outward waſhinge whereby we enter into profeſſion of religion, vnleſſe the minde within be both cleanſed and continue in cleanneſſe to the ende: againe of Peter, when he teſtifieth that the trueth of 1.Pet.3.21. Baptiſme ſtandeth not in the outward waſhing, but in a good witneſſinge, of conſcience. But he ſeemeth alſo in an other place vtterly to Colo.2.18. deſpiſe the circumciſion made with hand, when he compareth it with the circumciſion of Chriſt. I anſwere that euen in this place nothing is abated of the dignitie of it. Paule there diſputeth againſt them, which required it as neceſſary when it was now abrogate. Therfore he warneth the faithfull, that leauing the olde ſhadowes they ſhould ſtande faſt in the trueth. Theſe maiſters (ſayth he) inſtantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circumciſed. But ye are ſpiritually circumciſed according to the ſoule and body. Ye haue therefore the deliuerance of the thinge in deede, which is much better than the ſhadowe. A man might take exception to the contrary and ſay that the figure is not therefore to be deſpiſed becauſe they hadde the thing in deede: foraſmuch as the putting of of the olde man of which he there ſpake, was alſo among the Fathers, to whom yet outwarde Circumciſion hadde not bin ſuperfluous. He preuenteth this obiection, whē he by & by addeth, that the Coloſſians were buried with Chriſt by Baptiſme. Whereby he ſignifieth that at this day Baptiſme is the ſame to Chriſtians, which circumciſion was to the olde people: and therfore that circumciſion can not be enioined to Chriſtians without wrong done to Chriſt.

25 But that which followeth and which I euen nowe alleaged, is harder to aſſoyle, that all the Iewiſhe Ceremonies were ſhadowes of things to come, and that in Chriſt is the body: but moſt hard of all is that which is entreated in many chapters of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, that the blood of beaſtes, attained not to conſciences: that the law had a ſhadow of good thinges to come, not an image of thinges: that the folowers of it obtained no perfectiō of ỹ Ceremonies of Moſes: and ſuch other. I go backe to that which I haue already touched, that Paule doth not therefore make the Ceremonies ſhadowiſh, becauſe they had no ſounde thing in them: but becauſe the fufillinge of them was after a certaine manner hanged in ſuſpenſe vntill the deliueringe of Chriſt. Againe I ſay that this is to be vnderſtanded not of the effectualneſſe, but rather of the maner of ſignifying. For til Chriſt was manifeſtly ſhewed in the fleſh, all the ſignes did ſhadow him out as abſent, howeſoeuer he did inwardly vtter to the faithfull the preſence of his power and of himſelfe. But this we ought chiefely to marke, that in all thoſe places Paule doth not ſpeake ſimply, but by way of contention. Becauſe he ſtriued with the falſe Apoſtles, which would haue godlineſſe to conſiſt in the Ceremonies onely without any reſpect of Chriſt: to confute them, it ſufficed onely to entreate, of what value Ceremonies are by themſelues. This marke alſo the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues followed. Let vs therefore remember that here is diſputed of Ceremonies, not as they be taken in their owne and naturall ſignification, but as they be wreſted to a falſe and wrongfull expoſition: not of the lawfull vſe of them, but of the abuſe of ſuperſtition. What maruell is it therefore if Ceremonies beinge ſeuered from Chriſt, are vnclothed of all force? For all ſignes whatſoeuer they be, are brought to nought, when the thing ſignified is taken away. So when Chriſt had to do with them which thought that Manna was nothinge elſe but meate for the belly, he applieth his ſpeeche to their groſſe opinion, and ſayth that he miniſtreth better meate, which may feede ſoules to hope of immortality. But if you require a plainer ſolution, the ſumme of all tendeth to this: Firſt, that al that furniture of Ceremonies, which was in the law of Moſes, is a vaniſhinge thinge and of no value, vnleſſe it be directed to Chriſt. Secondly, that they ſo had reſpect to Chriſt, that when he at length was manifeſtly ſhewed in the fleſhe, they had their fulfillinge. Finally that it behoued that they ſhoulde be taken away by his comminge, euen as a ſhadow vaniſheth away in the cleare light of ỹ ſunne. But becauſe I do yet differre lõger diſcourſe of that matter vnto that place where I haue purpoſed to compare Baptiſme with circumciſion, therefore I do now more ſparingly touch it. Iohn. 6. 27.

26 Perhaps alſo thoſe immeaſurable praiſes of the Sacramentes, which are read in the olde writers concerninge our ſignes, deceiued thoſe miſerable Sophiſters. As this of Auguſtine. That the Sacraméts of the olde law did only promiſe the Sauiour, but ours do giue ſaluation. When they marked not that theſe & ſuch other formes of ſpeaking were ſpoken: they alſo publiſhed their exceſſiue doctrines, but in a cleane contrary ſenſe from the wrytinge of the olde Fathers. For Auguſtine meant no other thinge in that place, than as the ſame Auguſtine wryteth in an other place, That the Sacramentes of the law of Moſes did foretell of Chriſt, but ours do tell of him preſent. And againſt Fauſtus. That thoſe were promiſes of thinges to be fulfilled, theſe were tokens of thinges fulfilled: as if he ſhoulde ſay, that thoſe figured him whẽ he was looked for, but ours do as it were ſhew him preſent which hath bin already deliuered. Moreouer he ſpeaketh of the maner of ſignifyinge, as alſo he ſheweth in an other place. The lawe (ſayth he) and the Prophetes had Sacramentes, foretellinge of a thing to come: but the Sacramentes of our time do teſtifie that that In pro. em enarr pſ. 73. queſt. ſuper numer. cap. 33. Libr. 9. cap. 14. Li. 2. c8. lit. petil cap. 37.

is already come,which thoſe did declare to be to come.But what he thought of the thinge and effectuallneſſe, he expoundeth in many places: as when he ſayth, that the Sacramentes of the Iewes were in ſignes,diuerſe:but in the thing ſignified,egal with ours:diuerſe in viſible forme,but egal in ſpiritual power. Againe:In diuerſe ſignes is all one Faith: ſo in diuerſe ſignes, as in diuerſe wordes:becauſe wordes change their ſoundes by times: and truely wordes are nothinge but ſignes. The Fathers did drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dronke not the ſame bodily drinke.See ye therfore,Faith remaining one, the ſignes varied. To them the rocke was Chriſt: to vs that is Chriſt which is ſet vppon the altar. And they dronke for a great Sacramẽt,the water flowing out of the rocke:what we drinke, the faithfull knowe. If thou conſider the viſible forme,they dronke an other thing:if an vnderſtãdable ſignification,they dronk the ſame ſpiritual drinke. In an other place, in the myſtery the ſame is their meate and drinke which is ours: but the ſame in ſignification,not in forme: becauſe the ſelfe ſame Chriſt was figured to them in the rocke, & ſhewed to vs in the fleſh. Howebeit in this behalfe alſo we graunt that there is ſome dtfference. For both Sacramentes do teſtifie that the fatherly good will of God and the graces of the holy Ghoſt are offered vs in Chriſt:but our Sacramentsteſtify it more clearely & brightly.In both is a deliuering of Chriſt:but in theſe more plenteous and fuller, namely as that difference of the olde and new Teſtament beareth,of which we haue entreated before. And this is it that the ſame Auguſtine meant(whom we more oftẽ allege as the beſt & faithfulleſt witneſſe of all the olde writers) where he teacheth, that when Chriſt was reuealed, Sacramentes were ordained both in number fewer,in ſignification hier,in force more excellent.Of this thing alſo it is expedient ỹ the readers briefely be warned,that whatſoeuer the Sophiſters haue triflingly taught concerning ỹ worke wrought, is not onely falſe, but diſagreeth with the nature of the Sacramentes, which God hath ordained, that the faithfull beinge voide and needy of all good thinges ſhould bringe nothing thither but beggery. Whereupon foloweth that in receiuing them,theſe men do nothinge whereby they may deſerue praiſe: or that in this doinge (which in their reſpect is merely paſſiue)no worke can be aſcribed vnto them.

Of Baptiſme.

BAptiſme is a ſigne of the entringe wherewith we are receiued into the felowſhip of ỹ Church, that beinge graffed into Chriſt we may be reckened amonge the children of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I haue taught to be common to all the myſteries) firſt, that it ſhoulde ſerue to our Faith with him, and to our confeſſion before menne. We will orderly declare the manner of both purpoſes. Baptiſme bringeth three thinges to our Faith, which alſo muſt be ſeuerally entreated of. This is the firſt which the Lord ſetteth out vnto vs, that it ſhoulde be a token and proofe of our cleanſinge: or (to expreſſe my minde better) it is like to a certaine ſealed charter, whereby he confirmeth vnto vs, that all our ſinnes are ſo defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that they may neuer come in his ſight, not be rehearſed, not be imputed. For he willeth ỹ all they that beleue, ſhould be baptiſed into forgiuenes of ſinnes. Therefore they which thought that baptiſme is nothinge elſe but a marke and token wherby we profeſſe our religion before men, as ſouldiars beare the conuſance of their capitaine for a marke of their profeſſion, wey not that which was the chiefe thing in baptiſme. That is this, that we ſhould receiue it with this promiſe, that whoſoeuer beleue & are baptiſed, ſhalbe ſaued. Mar. 16 16.

2 In this ſenſe is that to be vnderſtoode which Paule writeth, that the Church is ſanctified of Chriſt her ſpouſe, and cleanſed with waſhinge of water in the word of life. And in an other place, that we are ſaued according to his mercy by the waſhing of regeneration and of the renuinge of the holy Ghoſt. And that which Peter writeth, that baptiſme ſaueth vs. For Paules will was not to ſignifie, that our waſhinge and ſaluation is perfectly made by water, or that water containeth in it ſelfe the power to cleanſe, regenerate, & renue. Neither did Peter meane the cauſe of ſaluation, but onely the knowledge and certaynetie of ſuch giftes to be receiued in this Sacramente: which is euidently enough expreſſed in the wordes themſelues. For Paule knitteth together the worde of life, and baptiſme of water: as if he had ſaid, that by the Goſpell the meſſage of waſhing and ſanctifyinge is brought vs, that by baptiſme ſuch meſſage is ſealed. And Peter immediatly adioyneth, that that baptiſme is not the puttinge away of the filthineſſe of the fleſh, but a good conſcience before God, which is of Fayth. Yea baptiſme promiſeth vs no other cleanſing, but by the ſprinklinge of the blood of Chriſt: which is figured by water, Ephe. 5. 26. Tit. 3. 5. 1. Pet. 3 22.

for the likeneſſe of cleanſinge and waſhinge. Who therefore can ſay that we be cleanſed by this water, which certainly teſtifieth that the blood of Chriſt is our true and only waſhing? So that from no where elſe can be fetched a ſurer reaſon to cõfute their blinde errour which referre all thinges to the power of the water, than from the ſignification of Baptiſme it ſelfe: which doth withdraw vs as well from that viſible element which is ſet before our eies, as from all other meanes, that it may binde our mindes to Chriſt alone.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptiſme is applied only to the time paſt, that for new fallinges, into which we fall backe after Baptiſme, we muſt ſeeke new remedies of cleanſing in I wote not what other Sacramentes, as though the force of Baptiſme were worne out of vſe. By this errour it came to paſſe in old time, that ſome would not be Baptiſed but in the vttermoſt perill of life, & at their laſt gaſpings, that ſo they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Againſt which wayward ſuttle prouiſion the old Biſhops ſo oft inuey in their wrytinges. But thus we ought to thinke, that at what time ſoeuer we be Baptiſed, we are at once waſhed and cleanſed for all our life. Therfore ſo oft as we fall we muſt go backe to the remembrance of Baptiſme, & therwith we muſt arme our minde, that it may be alway certaine & aſſured of the forgiuenes of ſinnes. For though when it is once miniſtred, it ſeemeth to be paſt, yet by later ſinnes it is not aboliſhed. For the cleannes of Chriſt is therein offred vs: that alway floriſheth, is oppreſſed with no ſpottes, but ouerwhelmeth & wipeth away all our filthineſſe: yet ought we not to take thereof a liberty to ſinne in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to ſuch boldnes) but this doctrine is giuen only to them, which when they haue ſinned, do grone weried & oppreſſed vnder their ſinnes, that they may haue wherwith they may raiſe vp and comfort themſelues, leaſt they ſhould fall into confuſion and deſperation. So Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was made to vs a propitiator, vnto the forgiuenes of faults going before. Wherein he he denieth not that therein is obtained perpetuall & continuall forgiuenes of ſinnes euen vnto death: but he meaneth that it was giuẽ of the Father, onely to poore ſinners, which wounded with the ſearinge iron of conſcience, do ſigh to ỹ Phiſitian. To theſe the mercy of God is offred. They which by eſcaping of puniſhment do hunt for matter & liberty to ſinne, do nothinge but prouoke to themſelues the wrath and iudgement of God.

Rom. 3. 25.

4 I know in dede that it is commonly thought otherwiſe, that by the benefite of repentance and of the keies we do after Baptiſme obtaine forgiuenes, which at our firſt regeneration is giuen vs by onely

Baptiſme

Baptiſme. But they which deuiſe this do erre herein that they do not remember that the power of the keies, whereof they ſpeake, doth ſo hang vpon Baptiſme that it ought in no wiſe to be ſeuered. The ſinner receiueth forgiueneſſe by the miniſtery of the Church, namely not without the preachinge of the Goſpell. But what maner of preaching is that? That we be cleanſed frō ſinnes by the blood of Chriſt. But what ſigne and teſtimony is there of that waſhing, but Baptiſme? We ſee therefore howe that abſolution is referred to Baptiſme. And this errour hath bred vs the fained Sacrament of penance: of which I haue touched ſomewhat before, and the reſidue I will make an ende of in place fit for it. But it is no maruel if men, which according to the groſſeneſſe of their witte were immeaſurably faſt tied to outwardthinges, haue in this behalfe alſo bewrayed that fault, that not contented with the pure inſtitution of God, they did thruſt in newe helpes fained of themſelues. As though Baptiſme it ſelfe were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force alſo of Baptiſme ought to be extended to the ſame boundes. Wherefore it is alſo no dout but that all the godly throughout al their life long, ſo oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conſcience of their owne ſinnes, dare call backe themſelues to the remembrance of Baptiſme, that thereby they may confirme thēſelues in the affiance of that only and continuall waſhing which we haue in the blood of Chriſt.

5 It bringeth alſo an other frute, becauſe it ſheweth vs our mortification in Chriſt, & new life in him. For (as the Apoſtle ſaith) we are baptiſed into his death, being buried together with him into death, that we may walke in newneſſe of life. By which wordes he doth not only exhorte vs to the followinge of him (as though he did ſay, that we are by Baptiſme put in mind, that after a certaine example of the death of Chriſt, we ſhould die to our luſtes: and after the example of his reſurrection, we ſhould be raiſed vp to righteouſneſſe) but he fetcheth the matter much deeper: that is to ſay, that by Baptiſme Chriſt hath made vs partakers of his death, that we may be graffed into it. And as the graffe receiueth ſubſtance and nouriſhment of the roote into which it is graffed: ſo they that receiue Baptiſme with ſuch faith as they ought, do truely feele the effectuallnes of the death of Chriſt in the mortifyinge of their fleſh: and therewithall alſo they feele the effect of his reſurrection in the quickeninge of the Spirit. Hereupon he gathereth matter of exhortation: that if we be Chriſtians, we ought to be dead to ſinne, and to liue to righteouſneſſe. This ſelfe ſame argument he vſeth in an other place: that we be circumciſed, and haue Ro. 6. 3. Colo 2. 12.

Tit.3.5. put of the olde man, ſince that we be buried in Chriſt by Baptiſme. And in this ſenſe, in the ſame place which we haue before alleaged, he called it the waſhing of regeneration & of renuinge. Therefore firſt free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes & imputation of righteouſnes is promiſed vs, & then the grace of the holy Ghoſt, which may reforme vs into newneſſe of life.

6 Laſt of all our Faith receiueth alſo this profit of Baptiſme, that it certainly teſtifieth vnto vs, that we are not onely graffed into the death and life of Chriſt, but that we are ſo vnited to Chriſt himſelfe

Matt.3.13. that we are partakers of all his good thinges. For therefore he hath dedicated and hallowed Baptiſme in his owne body, that he might haue it common with vs, as a moſt ſtrong bonde of the vnity and fellowſhippe which he vouchſaued to enter into with vs: ſo that Paule

Gala.3.17. proueth therby that we be the children of God, becauſe we haue put on Chriſt in baptiſme. So we ſee that the fulfillinge of baptiſme is in

Act.8.16.&19.5. Chriſt, whom alſo for this reaſon we call the proper obiect of baptiſme. Therefore it is no maruell if it be reported that the Apoſtles baptiſed into his name, which yet were commaunded to baptiſe into the name of the Father alſo and of the holy Ghoſt. For whatſoeuer giftes of God are ſet foorth in baptiſme, are founde in Chriſt alone. And yet it can not be, but that he which baptiſeth into Chriſt,

Mat.28.19. do therewithall call vppon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghoſt For we are therfore cleanſed with his blood, becauſe the mercifull Father according to his incõparable kindnes, willing to receiue vs into fauour, hath ſet him a mediator in the middeſt, to procure to vs fauour with him. But regeneratiõ we ſo only obtaine by his death and reſurrection, if being ſanctified by the Spirite we be endued with

Matt 3.6. a newe and ſpirituall nature. Wherefore both of our cleanſing & re-

Luc.3.16. generation: we obtaine & after a certaine maner diſtinctly perceiue the cauſe in the Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the Iohn.3.23.&4.1. holy Ghoſt. So Iohn firſt baptiſed, ſo afterward the Apoſtles, with the baptiſme of repentance into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: meaninge by this word repentance, ſuch regeneration: and by forgiuenes of ſinnes, waſhing.

7 Wherby alſo it is made moſt certaine, that the miniſtery of Iohn

Act.2.28. was altogether the ſame which was afterward cõmitted to the Apoſtles. For the diuers handes wherewith it is miniſtred, make not the baptiſme diuers: but the ſame doctrine ſheweth it to be the ſame Baptiſme. Iohn & the Apoſtles agreed into one doctrine: both baptiſed into repentance, both into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, both into the name of Chriſt, from whom was both repentance and forgiueneſſe of sinnes. Iohn said that he was the lambe of God, by whom the sinnes of the world should be taken away: where he made him the Sacrifice acceptable to the Father, the propitiator of righteousnesse, the author of saluation. What coulde the Apostles adde to this confession? Wherfore let it trouble no man, that the olde writers labour to seuer the one frō the other, whose voice we ought not so much to esteeme that it may shake the certainety of the Scripture. For who will rather harken to Chrysostome denying that forgiuenes of sinnes was comprehended in the baptisme of Iohn, than to Luke contrariwise affirminge that Iohn preached the baptisme of repentance into the forgiuenes of sinne? Neither is that suttelty of Augustine to be receiued, that in the baptisme of Iohn, sinnes were forgiuen in hope, but in the baptisme of Christ they are forgiuen in dede. For whereas the Euangelist plainely testifieth, that Iohn in his baptisme promised the forgiuenes of sinnes: what nede we to abate this title of commendation, whē no necessity compelleth vs vnto it? But if any man seke for a differēce out of the word of God, he shall find none other but this, that Iohn baptised into him that was to come, the Apostles into him that had already presented himselfe.

Luc. 3 3 Li. 3. de Baptis. cont. Donat. cap. 10.
Luc. 3. 16.
Act. 19. 4.

8 As for this that more abundant graces of the Spirite were poured out since the resurrection of Christ, it maketh nothing to stablish a diuersity of baptismes. For the Baptisme which the Apostles ministred while he was yet conuersant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifullnesse of the Spirite, than the baptisme of Iohn. Yea euen after his ascension, the Spirite was not giuen to the Samaritans aboue the common measure of the Faithfull before the ascension, although they were baptised into the name of Iesus, till Peter and Iohn were sent vnto them to lay their handes vpon them. This onely thinge, as I thinke, deceiued the olde wryters, that they sayd that the baptisme of Iohn was but a preparation to the baptisme of Christ, because they reade, that they were baptised againe of Paule, which had once receiued the baptisme of Iohn. But howe much they were herein deceiued, shall elsewhere be plainely declared in place fit for it. What is it therefore that Iohn sayd, that he baptised in dede with water, but that Christ shoulde come which should baptise with the holy Ghost, and with fyer? This may in fewe wordes be assoyled. For he meant not to put difference betwene the one baptisme and the other, but he cōpared his own person with the person of Christ, sayinge that himselfe was a minister of water, but that Christ was the giuer of the holy Ghost, and shoulde declare this power by visible miracle the same day that he shoulde sende the holy Ghost, to the Apoſtles vnder fyry tonges. What could the Apoſtles boaſt of more than this? What more coulde they alſo that baptiſe at this day? For they be only miniſters of the outward ſigne, and Chriſt is the author of the inwarde grace: as the ſame olde writers themſelues do euery where teach,& ſpecially Auguſtine,whoſe prinicipall ſtay againſt the Donatiſtes is this, that what a one ſoeuer he be, that baptiſeth, yet only Chriſt is ruler of it.

9 Theſe thinges which we haue ſpoken both of mortification and of waſhinge, are ſhadowed out in the people of Iſraell,whom for the ſame cauſe the Apoſtle ſayth to haue bin baptiſed in the cloude and in the ſea.Mortifying was figured, when the Lord deliueringe them out of the hande of Pharao and from cruell bondage,made for them a way through the redde ſea, and drowned Pharao himſelfe, and the Ægyptians their enemies, that followed them hard at their backes, and were euen in their neckes to ouertake them. For after the ſame maner alſo he promiſeth to vs in baptiſme,and by a ſigne giuen ſheweth vs, that we are by his power brought forth and deliuered out of the thraldome of Ægypt, that is to ſay, out of the bondage of ſinne: that our Pharao is drowned, that is to ſay the Deuill, although euen ſo alſo he ceaſſeth not to exerciſe & weary vs. But as that Ægyptian was not throwen downe into the bottome of the ſea,but being ouerthrowen on the ſhore, did yet with terrible ſight make the Iſraelites afraid,but could not hurt them:ſo this our enemy yet in dede threatneth,ſheweth his weapons,is felt,but can not ouercome.In the cloud was a ſigne of cleanſinge. For as then the Lord couered them with a cloude caſt ouer them, and gaue them refreſhinge colde, leaſt they ſhould faint and pine away with to cruell burning of the ſunne:ſo in baptiſme we acknowledge our ſelues couered and defended with the blood of Chriſt,leaſt the ſeuerity of God,which is in deede an intollerable flame, ſhould lie vpon vs. But although this myſtery was then darke and knowen to few:yet becauſe there is none other way to obtaine ſaluation, but in thoſe two graces, God woulde not take away the ſigne of them both from the olde Fathers,whom he had adopted to be heires.

1.Cor. 10.2. Exo.14 21. Num.9. 14.

10 Nowe it is cleare, howe falſe that is which ſome haue lately taught,and wherein ſome yet continue, that by Baptiſme we be looſed and deliuered from original ſinne,and from the corruption which was from Adam ſpread abroade into his whole poſterity,and that we be reſtored into the ſame righteouſnes and purenes of nature,which Adam ſhoulde haue obtained,if he had ſtand faſt in the ſame vprightneſſe wherein he was firſt created. For ſuch kinde of teachers neuer vnderſtoode what was originall ſinne, nor what was originall righteouſneſſe, nor what was the grace of baptiſme. But we haue already proued, that originall ſinne is the peruerſeneſſe & corruption of our nature, which firſt maketh vs gilty of the wrath of God, & then alſo bringeth forth workes in vs, which the Scripture calleth the workes of the fleſh. Therefore theſe two pointes are ſeuerally to be marked, namely that we being in all partes of our nature defiled and corrupted are already for ſuch corruption only, holden worthily condemned and conuicted before God, to whom nothinge is acceptable but righteouſnes, innocence and cleannes. Yea & very infantes themſelues bringe their owne damnation with them from their mothers wombe. Who, although they haue not yet brought forth the frutes of their iniquity, yet haue the ſeede thereof encloſed within thē. Yea their whole nature is certaine ſeede of ſinne, therefore it can not but be hatefull & abhominable to God. The faithful are certified by baptiſme that this damnation is taken away, and driuen from them: foraſmuch (as we haue already ſaid) the Lord doth by this ſigne promiſe vs that full & perfect forgiueneſſe is graunted both of the fault which ſhould haue bin imputed to vs, & of the paine which we ſhould haue ſuffred for the fault: they take holde alſo of righteouſnes, but ſuch as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to ſay by imputatiō only: becauſe the Lord of his owne mercy taketh them for righteous and innocent. Gala. 5. 19.

11 The other point is, that this peruerſeneſſe neuer ceaſſeth in vs, but continually bringeth forth new frutes, namely thoſe works of the fleſh which we haue before deſcribed: none otherwiſe thā a burning fornace continually bloweth out flame & ſparcles, or as a ſpringe infinitely caſteth out water. For luſt neuer vtterly dieth & is quenched in men, vntill being by death deliuered out of the body of death, they haue vtterly put of thēſelues. Baptiſme in dede promiſeth vs that our Pharao is drowned, & the mortification of ſinne: yet not ſo that it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but onely that it may not ouercome vs. For ſo long as we liue encloſed within this priſon of our body, the remnantes of ſinne ſhall dwell in vs: but if we holde faſt by faith the promiſe giuen vs of God in baptiſme, they ſhall not beare rule nor reigne. But let no man deceiue himſelfe: Let no man flatter himſelfe in his owne euil, when he heareth that ſinne alway dwelleth in vs. Theſe things are not ſpoken to this ende, that they ſhould careleſly ſlepe vpon their ſinnes, which are otherwiſe too much enclined to ſinne: but only, that they ſhould not faint & be diſcouraged, which are tickled & pricked of their fleſh. Let them rather thinke that they are yet in the way, and let thē beleue that they haue much profited, when they feele that there is daily somewhat minished of their lust, till they haue attained thither whither they trauaile, namely to the last death of their flesh, which shalbe ended in ỹ dying of this mortal life. In the meane time let them not cesse both to striue valiantly, and to encourage them to go forward, and to stirre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeuours, that they see that after that they haue longe trauailed, they haue yet no small busines remaininge. This we ought to holde: we are baptised into the mortifyinge of our flesh, which is begon by baptisme in vs, which we daily folow: but it shalbe made perfect when we shall remoue out of this life to the Lord.

12 Here we say no other thing, than the Apostle Paule in the seuenth Chapter to the Romaines most clearely setteth out. For after that he had disputed of free righteousnes, because some wicked men did thereof gather, that we might liue after our owne lust, because we shoulde not be acceptable to God by the deseruinges of workes: he addeth, that all they that are clothed with the righteousnes of Christ, are therewith regenerate in Spirite, and that of this regeneration we haue an earnest in baptisme. Hereupon he exhorteth the faithfull, that they suffer not sinne to haue dominion in their members. Now because he knewe that there is alway some weakenesse in the faithfull: that they shoulde not therefore be discouraged, he adioyneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the lawe. Because againe it might seeme, that Christians might growe insolent, because they are not vnder the yoke of the law, he entreateth what maner of abrogating that is, and therwithall what is the vse of the law: which question he had now the second time differred: The summe is, that we be deliuered from the rigour of the lawe, that we shoulde cleaue to Christ: but that the office of the law is, that we being conuinced of our peruersenesse, shoulde confesse our owne weakenesse and misery. Now forasmuch as that peruersenes of nature doth not so easily appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his owne lustes without feare of God: he setteth an example in a man regenerate, namely in himselfe. He saith therefore that he hath a continuall wrastling with the remnantes of his flesh, and that he is holden bounde with miserable bondage, that he can not consecrate himselfe wholly to the obediēce of the law of God. Therefore he is cōpelled with groning to crie out: Vnhappie am I. Who shall deluer me out of this body subiect to death? If the children of God be holden captiue in prison so long as they liue, they must nedes be much carefully grieued with thinkinge

vpon their owne perill, vnleſſe this feare be met withall. Therefore he adioyneth to this vſe a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lord hath once receiued into fauour, engraffed into the communion of his Chriſt, hath by baptiſme admitted into the felowſhip of his Church, while they continue in the faith of Chriſt, although they be beſieged of ſinne, yea & cary ſinne about within them, yet are acquited from giltines & condemnation. If this be the ſimple & natural expoſition of Paul, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſeeme to teache any new vnwonted thing. Rom. 8.

13 But baptiſme ſo ſerueth our confeſſion before men. For it is a marke, whereby we openly profeſſe that we woulde be accompted amonge the people of God: whereby we teſtifie that we agree with all Chriſtians into the worſhipping of one God & into one religion: finally wherby we openly affirme our faith: that not only our heartes ſhoulde breath out the praiſe of God, but alſo our tongue, and all the members of our body ſhoulde ſounde it out with ſuch vtterances as they be able. For ſo, as we ought, all our thinges are employed to the ſeruice of the glory of God, whereof nothing ought to be voyd, and other may by our example be ſtirred vp to the ſame endeuours. Hereunto Paul had reſpect, when he asked the Corinthians, whether they had not bin baptiſed into the name of Chriſt: meaning verily, that euen in this that they were baptiſed into his name, they auowed themſelues vnto him, ſwore to his name, & bounde their faith to him before men, that they coulde no more confeſſe any other, but Chriſt alone, vnles they would forſake the confeſſion which they had made in baptiſme. 1. Cor. 1. 2.

14 Now ſith it is declared what our Lord had regard vnto in the inſtitution of baptiſme: it is plaine to iudge what is the way for vs to vſe and receiue it. For ſo farre as it is giuen to the raiſinge, nouriſhing and confirming of our faith, it is to be taken as ſtom the hande of the author himſelfe: we ought to holde it certaine and fully perſuaded, that it is he which ſpeaketh to vs by the ſigne, that it is he which clenſeth vs, waſheth vs, & putteth away the remẽbrance of our ſinnes, that it is he which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdome, which febleth the forces of our luſt, yea which groweth into one with vs, that being clothed with him we may be reckened the children of God: that theſe things, I ſay, he doth inwardly ſo truely & certainly performe to our ſoule, as we certainly ſee our body outwardly to be waſhed, dipped, and clothed. For this either relation, or ſimilitude, is the moſt ſure rule of Sacraments:

that in bodily thinges we ſhould beholde ſpirituall thinges, as if they were preſently ſet before our eies, foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed the Lorde to repreſent them by ſuch figures: not for that ſuch graces are bounde and encloſed in the Sacrament, that they ſhould be giuen vs by the force thereof: but only becauſe the Lorde doth by this token teſtifie his will vnto vs, that is, that he will giue vs all theſe thinges. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked ſight, but he bringeth vs to the thing preſent, and together fullfilleth that which it figureth.

Act. 10. 48. baptiſed, hauinge before receiued forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt: ſeeking not by baptiſme a larger forgiuenes but a more certaine exerciſing of Faith, yea an encreaſe of confidence by a pledge. Paraduenture ſome man will obiect: why therefore did Act. 9. 17. Ananias ſay to Paule, that he ſhoulde waſhe away his ſinnes by baptiſme, if ſinnes be not waſhed away by the power of baptiſme it ſelfe? I aunſwere: We are ſayd to receiue, to obtaine, to get that which ſo farre as concerneth the feeling of our faith, is giuen vs of the Lorde, whether he do then firſt teſtifie it, or beinge teſtified doth more and certainelier confirme it. This therefore onely was the meaninge of Ananias: that thou mayeſt be aſſured, Paule, that thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, be baptiſed. For the Lorde doth in baptiſme promiſe forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: receiue this, and be out of care. Howebeit I meane not to diminiſhe the force of baptiſme, but that the thinge and the trueth is preſent with the ſigne, ſo farre as God worketh by outwarde meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of all other, we obtaine nothinge but ſo much as we receiue by Faith. If we want fayth, it ſhalbe for a witneſſe of our vnthankefullnes, wherby we may be declared gilty before God, becauſe we haue not beleued the promiſe there giuen. But ſo farre as it is a ſigne of our confeſſion, we ought
1. Cor. 12. 13. by it to teſtifie that our affiance is in the mercie of God, and our cleanneſſe is in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, which is gotten vs by Ieſus Chriſt: and that by it we enter into the Church of Chriſt, that we may with one conſent of Faith and charitie liue of one minde with all the faithfull. This laſt point didde Paule meane, when he ſayeth that we are all baptiſed in one Spirite, that we may be one body.

16 Nowe if this be true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be weyed accordinge to his hande of whom it is miniſtred, but as of the very hande of God, from whom without dout it proceeded: hereupon we may gather, that nothinge is added to it nor taken from

it by the worthineſſe of him by whoes hande it is deliuered. And euen as among men, if a letter be ſent, ſo that the hand and the ſeale be well knowen, it maketh no matter who or what maner of man be the carrier: ſo it ought to ſuffice to acknowe the hande and ſeale of our Lorde in his Sacramẽts, by what carrier ſoeuer they be brought. Hereby the error of the Donatiſtes is very well confuted, which meaſured the force and value of the Sacrament by the worthineſſe of the miniſter. Such at this day are our Catabaptiſtes, which deny that we be rightly baptiſed, becauſe we were baptiſed by wicked men and idolatrers in the popiſh kingdome: therefore they furiouſly call vpon vs to be baptiſed again. Againſt whoes follies we ſhalbe armed with a reaſon ſtrong enough, if we thinke that we were profeſſed by baptiſme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, and that therefore it is not the baptiſme of man, but of God, of whomſoeuer it be miniſtred. Mat. 28 19. Although they were neuer ſo much ignorant or deſpiſers of God and all godlineſſe, which baptiſed vs: yet they did not baptiſe vs into the fellowſhippe of their owne ignorance or ſacrilege, but into the faith of Ieſus Chriſt: becauſe they called not vpon their owne name, but the name of God, nor baptiſed vs into any other name. Nowe if it were the baptiſme of God, it hath verily encloſed in it a promiſe of the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, the mortifying of the fleſh, the ſpirituall quickning, and the partaking of Chriſt. So it nothing hindered the Iewes, to haue bene circumciſed of vncleane prieſts and apoſtates: neither was the ſigne therefore voide, that in needed to be done of newe: but it was ſufficient to returne to the naturall beginning. Where they obiect that baptiſme ought to be celebrate in the aſſemblie of the godly, that proueth not, that that which is faultie in parte, ſhould deſtroy the whole force thereof. For when we teache what ought to be done that baptiſme may be pure, and voide of all defiling, we do not aboliſhe the ordinance of God, although idolatrers corrupt it. For when in olde time Circumciſion was corrupted with many ſuperſtitions, yet it ceaſſed not to be taken for a ſigne of grace: neither did Ioſias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of all Iſraell them that had departed from God, call them to a ſeconde Circumciſion.

17 Now where as they aſke vs, what faith of ours hath yet followed bptiſme in certaine yeares paſt, that they might thereby proue that the baptiſme is voide, which is not ſanctified vnto vs, but by the word of promiſe receiued by faith: to this queſtion we aunſwer, that we in deede being blinde & vnbeleuing, did in a long time not holde

faſt ỹ promiſe giuē vs in baptiſme: yet the promiſe it ſelfe, for as much as it was of God, continued alway ſtayed, ſtedfaſt, and true. Although all menne be liers and faithbreakers, yet God ceſſeth not to be true: Rom. 3. although all menne be loſt, yet Chriſt remaineth ſaluation. We con- 3. feſſe therefore that baptiſme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: foraſmuch as in it the promiſe offered vs, without which baptiſme is nothing, lay nothing regarded. Nowe ſith by the grace of God, we haue begonne to waxe wiſer, we accuſe our owne blindneſſe and hardneſſe of hart, which haue ſo long bene vnthankefull to his ſo great goodneſſe. But we beleue that the promiſe it ſelfe is not vaniſhed away: but rather thus we cōſider, God by baptiſme promiſeth the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and ſith he hath promiſed it, will vndoutedly performe it to all that beleue it. That promiſe was offred vs in baptiſme: by faith therefore let vs embrace it. It hath in deede long bene buried from vs becauſe of infidelitie: nowe therefore let vs receiue it by faith. Wherfore where the Lord calleth the Iewiſh people to repentance, he geueth them no commaundement of a ſeconde Circumciſion, which being (as we haue ſaid) circumciſed with a wicked and vngodly hande, liued a certaine time entangled with the ſame wickedneſſe. But he earneſtly calleth vppon the onely turning of the hart. Becauſe, howe ſoeuer the couenāt was broken of them, yet the ſigne of the couenant, by the ordinance of the Lorde, remained alway ſtedfaſt and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were reſtored into the couenant which the Lorde had ones made with them in Circumciſion: which yet being receiued by the hande of a leaguebreaker prieſt, ſo much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

18 But they thinke that they ſhake a fiery darte at vs, when they Act. 19. allege that Paule rebaptiſed them which were ones baptiſed with 3. the baptiſme of Iohn. For if by our owne confeſſion, the baptiſme of Iohn was altogether the ſame that oures is nowe: euen as they hauing bene before peruerſely inſtructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe baptiſed into it: ſo that baptiſme, which was without true Doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newely baptiſed againe into the true religion, wherewith we are nowe firſt inſtructed. Some thinke, that there was ſome wrongfully affectioned manne to Iohn, which hadde entred them with their firſt baptiſme rather to a vaine ſuperſtition. Of which thing they ſeeme to gather a coniecture hereupon, becauſe they cōfeſſed themſelues to be vtterly ignorant of the Holy Ghoſt: whereas Iohn verily would would neuer haue ſente away from himſelfe ſcholars ſo vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes, although they had not bene baptiſed at all, were deſtitute of all knowledge of the Holy Ghoſt, which is famouſly ſpoken of by ſo many teſtimonies of the ſcripture. Where as therefore they aunſwere that they knowe not whether there be a Holy Ghoſt, it is to be vnderſtanded as if they had ſaid that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirit, of which Paule aſked them, were geuen to the Diſciples of Chriſt. But I graunt that that was the true baptiſme of Iohn, and all one and the ſelfe ſame with the baptiſme of Chriſt: but I deny that they were baptiſed againe. What then meane theſe wordes, they were baptiſed in the name of Ieſus? Some do expound it, that they were but inſtructed of Paule with true Doctrine. But I hadde rather vnderſtande it more ſimply, to be the baptiſme of the Holy Ghoſt, that is to ſay, that the viſible graces of the Spirit were geuen them by the laying on of handes: which to be expreſſed by the name of baptiſme, is no newe thing. As on the day of Pẽtecoſte it is ſaid, that the Apoſtles remembred the wordes of the Lorde, concerning the baptiſme of fier and of the Spirit. And Peter ſaith that the ſame came to his remẽbrance, when he ſawe thoſe graces poured out vpon Cornelius, and his houſeholde and kinred. Neither is that contrarie which is after adioined, When he had layd his hands on them, the Holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. For Luke doth not tell of two diuerſe things: but followeth the maner of telling commonly vſed among the Hebrues, which do firſt propounde the ſumme of the matter, and then do ſet it out more at large. Which euery man may perceiue by the very framing together of the wordes. For he ſaith, When they had heard theſe things, they were baptiſed in the name of Ieſus. And when Paul had layed his handes vpon them, the Holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. In this latter ſentence is deſcribed, what maner of baptiſme that was. If ignorance do ſo corrupt a former Baptiſme, that it muſt be amended with a ſeconde baptiſme: the Apoſtles ſhould haue bene rebaptiſed firſt of all, which in whole three yeres after their baptiſme, had ſcarcely taſted any ſmall parcell of purer doctrine. And nowe among vs what riuers might ſuffice to renewe ſo many waſhings, as there be ignorances by the mercy of the Lorde daily amended in vs?

19 The force, dignitie, profit, and ende of the miſterie, if I be not deceiued, ought by this time to be plaine enough. So much as concerneth the outwarde ſigne, I would to God the naturall inſtitution of Chriſt had preuailed ſo much as was mete, to reſtraine the boldeneſſe of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to be baptiſed with water according to the precept of Chriſt, there is inuented bleſſing, or rather enchaunting, to defile the true hallowing of the water. Afterwarde was added a taper with chreſme: but the blowing ſeemed to opē the gate to baptiſme. But although I am not ignorant, howe auncient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawfull both for me and all the godly to refuſe whatſoeuer things men haue preſumed to adde to the ordinance of Chriſt. When Satan ſawe that by the fooliſh light credit of the world at the very beginnings of the Goſpel his deceites were eaſily receiued, he brake foorth into groſſer mockeries. Hereupon ſpittle, and like trifles, were openly brought in with vnbridled libertie to the reproche of baptiſme. By which experiēces let vs learne that nothing is either holier, or better, or ſafer, than to be cōtent with the authoritie of Chriſt alone. Howe much better therefore was it, leauing ſtagelike pompes, which daſell the eyes of the ſimple, and dull their mindes, ſo oft as any was to be baptiſed, that he ſhould be preſented to the aſſemblie of the faithfull, and be offred to God, the whole Church loking on as a witneſſe: and praying ouer him: that the confeſſion of faith ſhould be rehearſed, wherewith he that is to be catechiſed ſhould be inſtructed: that the promiſes ſhould be declared which are conteined in baptiſme: that the inſtructed ſhould be baptiſed in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt: at length that he be ſente away with prayers and thankeſgeuing. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely Ceremonie which proceded from God the author thereof, ſhould moſt clerely ſhine, being not ouerwhelmed with any forein filthineſſe. But whether he be wholy dipped which is baptiſed, and that thriſe or once, or whether he be but ſprinkled with water onely poured vpon him, it maketh very little matter: but that ought to be at libertie to Churches according to the diuerſitie of contrees. Howbeit the very word of baptizing ſignifieth to dippe, and it is certaine that the maner of dipping was vſed of the olde Church.

20 This alſo perteineth to the purpoſe, to knowe that it is done amiſſe if priuate men take vpon themſelues the adminiſtration of baptiſme. For as well the diſtribution of this as of the Supper is a part of the eccleſiaſticall miniſterie. For Chriſt did not cōmaunde women, nor yet euery ſort of men, ỹ they ſhould baptize: but whom he had ordeined his Apoſtles, to them he gaue this commaundement. And when he commaunded his diſciples to do that in the miniſtration of the Supper which they had ſene him do, when he executed the office of a right diſtributer: he would without dout, that they ſhould therein followe his example. As for this that in many ages paſt, yea and in a maner at the very beginning of the Church, it hath bene receiued in vſe, that lay men might baptiſe in perill of death, if the miniſter were not preſent in time, I ſe not with howe ſtrong a reaſon it may be defended. The very olde Fathers themſelues, which either helde or ſuffred this maner, were not ſure whether it were well done. For Auguſtine ſeemeth to haue this dout, when he ſaith: Although a lay man compelled by neceſſitie do geue baptiſme, I can not tell whether a man may godlily ſay that it ought to be iterate. For if it be done when no neceſſitie compelleth, it is the vſurping of an other mans office: but if neceſſitie enforceth, it is either none or a veniall ſinne. Moroeuer of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they ſhould not preſume to baptiſe at all. But there is danger, leaſt if he which is ſicke ſhould die without baptiſme, he ſhould be depriued of the grace of regeneration. Not ſo. God pronounceth that he adopteth our infantes to be his owne, before they be borne, when he promiſeth that he will be a God to vs and to our ſeede after vs. In this word is conteined their ſaluation. Neither ſhall any man dare to be ſo reprochefull againſt God, to deny that his promiſe is of it ſelfe ſufficient to worke the effect thereof. Howe much harme that doctrine being euill expounded, that baptiſme is of neceſſitie to ſaluation, hath brought in, fewe do marke: and therefore they take leſſe heede to themſelfe. For where this opinion is growen in force, that all are loſt to whom it hath not happened to be waſhed with water, our ſtate is worſe than the ſtate of the olde people, as though the grace of God were nowe more narrowly ſtreigthened than it was vnder the lawe. For Chriſt ſhalbe thought to be come, not to fulfill the promiſes, but to aboliſh them: foraſmuch as the promiſe which then was of it ſelfe effectual enough to geue health before the eighth day, nowe ſhould not be of force without helpe of the ſigne.

Libro. contra. epiſtol. parm. 2. cap. 13. Cap. c.

21 But howe the cuſtome was before that Auguſtine was borne, firſt is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to ſpeake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptiſe, nor to offer, that ſhe ſhoulde not claime to her ſelfe the execution of any mans office, much leſſe of the Prieſts. Of the ſame thing Epiphanius is a ſubſtantiall witneſſe, where he reprocheth Marcion, that he gaue women libertie to baptiſe. Neither am I ignorant of their aunſwere which thinke otherwiſe, that is, that common vſe much differeth from extraordinarie remedie, when extreme neceſſitie enforceth: but when he pronouncing that it is a mockerie to geue womē liberty to baptiſe, excepteth nothing, it ſufficiently appeareth that he cõdemneth this corruption, ſo that it is by no color excuſable. Alſo in the third boke, where teaching that it was not permitted euen to the holy mother of Chriſt, he addeth no reſtrainte.

Exo. 4. 25. 22 The example of Sephora is vnſeaſonably alleged. For wheras the Angell of God was appeaſed, after that ſhe taking a ſtone, circumciſed her ſonne, thereupon it is wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwiſe it ought to be ſaid, that the worſhipping which the nations that were brought out of Aſſyria raiſed vp, pleaſed God. But by other ſtrong reaſons it is proued, that that which a fooliſh woman did, is wrongfully drawen to an example of imitation. If I ſhould ſay that it was a certaine ſingular caſe, which ought not to be made an example, and ſpecially that ſith it is no where red that in olde time there was geuen to the Prieſts a ſpeciall cõmaundement to circumciſe, the order of Circumciſion & baptiſme

Mat. 28. 19. is vnlike: this ſhould be ſtrong enough to confute them. For the wordes of Chriſt are plaine: Go ye, teache all nations, and baptiſe. When he ordeined the ſelfe ſame men publiſhers of the Goſpel, &

Heb. 5. 4. miniſters of baptiſme: & none (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) doth take honor vpon himſelfe in the Church, but he that is called as Aaron:

Rom. 14 23. whoſouer without lawfull calling baptiſeth, he ruſheth into an other mans office. Euen in the ſmalleſt things, as in meate & drinke, whatſoeuer we enterpriſe with a doutefull cõſcence, Paule openly crieth out to be ſinne. Therefore in womens baptiſing is much more greuouſly ſinne, where it is euident that they breake the rule appointed by Chriſt: foraſmuch as we knowe that it is vnlawfull to plucke in ſonder thoſe things that God conioineth. But all this I paſſe ouer. Onely I would haue the reders to note, that Sephoraes purpoſe was nothing leſſe, than to do any ſeruice to God. Seing her ſonne to be in danger, ſhe grudged, and murmured, and not without ſtomaching threwe the foreſkinne vppon the grounde, ſhe ſo taunted her huſbande, that ſhe was alſo angrie with God. Finally it is plaine that all this came of a furiouſneſſe of minde, becauſe ſhe murmured againſt God and her huſbãde, for that ſhe was compelled to ſhed the blood of her ſonne. Moreouer if ſhe had in all other things behaued her ſelfe well, yet herein is an vnexcuſable raſhe preſumption that ſhe circumciſed her ſonne, her huſbande being preſente, not any priuate manne, but Moſes the principall Prophete of God, than whom there neuer roſe any greater in Iſraell: which was no more lawfull for her to do, than at this day it is for women in the ſight of the biſhoppe. But this controuerſie ſhall by and by be eaſily taken away by this prinprinciple, that infantes are not debarred from the kingdome of heauen, whom it happeneth to departe out of this preſent life before that it be graunted them to be dipped in water. But it is already proued, that no ſmall wrong is done to the couenant of God, if we do not reſt in it, as though it were weake of it ſelfe: whereas the effect thereof hangeth neither vpon baptiſme, nor vpon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a ſeale, not that it bringeth effectualneſſe to the promiſe of God as to a thing weake of it ſelfe, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Whereupon followeth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore baptiſed, that they may then firſt be made the children of God, which before were ſtraungers from the Church, but rather that they be therfore receiued by a ſolemne ſigne into the Church, becauſe by the benefite of the promiſe they did already belong to the body of Chriſt. Therefore if in omitting the ſigne there be neither ſlouthfulneſſe, nor contempte, nor negligence, we are free from all danger. It is therefore much more holy, to geue this reuerence to the ordinance of God, that we ſeke Sacraments from no where els, than where the Lorde hath lefte them. When we may not haue them of the Church, the grace of God is not ſo bounde to them, but that we may obteine them by faith out of the word of the Lorde.

The xvj. Chapter.

That the Baptiſme of infantes doth very vvell agree vvith the inſtitution of Chriſt and the nature of the ſigne.

BVt foraſmuch as in this age, certaine phrentike Spirits haue raiſed vp ſore troubles in the Church for the Baptiſme of infantes, and do not yet ceſſe to turmoile: I can not choſe but I muſt ioine here an addition to reſtrain their furiouſneſſe. If paraduenture it ſhall ſeeme to ſome man to be very much to long, let him (I beſech him) wey with himſelf, ẏ we ought ſo much to eſteeme the pureneſſe of doctrine in a moſt great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be lotheſomly receiued, which may auaile to procure them both. Beſide ẏ, I ſo ſtudy to frame this diſcourſe, that it ſhall be of no ſmall importance to the clerer declaration of the miſtery of baptiſme. They aſſaile the baptiſme of infantes with an argumẽt in deede fauourable in ſhewe, ſaying that it is grounded vpon no inſtitution of Chriſt, but that it was brought in onely by the boldneſſe of men, and peruerſe curiouſneſſe, and then afterward with fonde eaſineſſe raſhly receiued in vſe. For a ſacramẽt, vnleſſe it reſt vpon a certaine fundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a thred. But what if, when the matter is wel conſidered, it ſhall appeare that the Lordes holy ordinãce is falſely & vniuſtly charged with ſuch a ſclaunder? Let vs therefore ſearche out the firſt beginning of it. And if it ſhall appeare, that it was deuiſed by the onely raſhneſſe of men, then bidding it farewell, let vs meaſure the true obſeruation of baptiſme by the onely will of God. But if it ſhalbe proued that it is not deſtitute of his certaine authoritie, we muſt beware, leſt in pinching the holy ordinãces of God, we be alſo ſclaunderous againſt the author himſelfe.

2 Firſt it is a doctrine well enough knowen, and cõfeſſed among all the godly, that the right conſideration of the ſignes, conſiſteth not onely in the outward Ceremonies: but principally hangeth vpon the promiſe, and vppon the ſpirituall miſteries, for figuring whereof the Lorde ordeineth the Ceremonies themſelues. Therfore he that will perfectly learne of what value baptiſme is, to what ende it tendeth, finally what it is: let him not ſtay his thought vpon the elemente and bodily ſight: but rather let him raiſe it vp to the promiſes of God, which are therein offred vs, and to the inwarde ſecretes which are therein repreſented vnto vs. He that knoweth theſe things, hath atteined the ſound truth of baptiſme, and the whole ſubſtance thereof, as I may ſo call it: and thereby alſo he ſhalbe taught, what is the reaſon, and what is the vſe of the outward ſprinkling. Againe he that contemptuouſly paſſing ouer theſe, ſhall haue his minde wholly faſtened & bounde to the viſible Ceremonie, ſhall vnderſtande neither the force nor propertie of baptiſme: nor yet ſo much as this, what the water meaneth, or what vſe it hath. Which ſentence is proued with ſo many and ſo cleare teſtimonies of Scripture, that we neede not at this preſent to tarry long about it. Therfore it remaineth now, that we ſeke out of the promiſes geuen in baptiſme, what is the force and nature of it. The Scripture ſheweth, that the clenſing of ſinnes, which we obteine of the blood of Chriſt, is here firſt ſhewed: then the mortifying of the fleſh, which ſtandeth vpon the partaking of his death, by which the faithfull are regenerate into newneſſe of life, yea and into the fellowſhip of Chriſt. To this ſumme may be referred whatſoeuer is taught in the Scriptures concerning baptiſme: ſauing that beſide this it is a ſigne to teſtifie religion before men.

3 But foraſmuch as before the inſtitution of baptiſme, the people of God had circumciſion in ſteede thereof: let vs ſe what theſe two ſignes differ the one from the other, and with what likeneſſe they agree together. Whereupon may appeare what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lorde gaue circumcision to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his seede: adding, that with him is the flowing store and suffisance of all things, that Abraham should accompt that his hande should be to him a spring of all good things. In which wordes the promise of eternall life is conteined: as Christ expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hense to proue the immortalitie of the faithfull, and the resurrection. For God (saith he) is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. Wherefore Paule also shewing to the Ephesians from what destruction the Lorde had deliuered them, gathereth by this that they had not bine admitted into the couenãte of circumcision, that they were without Christ, without God, without hope, strangers from the testaments of the promise: all which things the couenante it selfe conteined. But the first accesse to God, the first entrie to immortall life, is the forgeueneſſe of sinnes. Whereupon is gathered, that this forgeueneſſe aunswereth to the promise of baptisme concerning our clensing: Afterwarde the Lorde taketh couenante of Abraham that he should walke before him in pureneſſe and innocence of hart: which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man should dout, that circumcision is a signe of mortifying, Moses in an other place doth more plainly declare it, when he exhorteth the people of Israel, to circumcise the vncircumcised skinne of the hart, because they were seuerally chosen to be the people of God out of all the nations of the earth. As God, where he adopteth the posteritie of Abraham to his people, commaundeth them to be circumcised: so Moses pronounceth that the hartes ought to be circumcised, declaring verily what is the trueth of this circumcision. Then that no man should endeuor toward it by his owne strength, he teacheth that they neede the grace of God. All these things are so often repeted of the Prophets, that I neede not to heape into this place many testimonies, which do eche where offer themselues. We haue proued therefore, that in circumcision a spirituall promise was vttered to the Fathers, such as in baptisme is geuen: forasmuch as it figured to them the forgeueneſſe of sinnes, and the mortifying of the flesh. Moreouer as we haue taught that Christ is the fundation of baptisme, in whom both these things remaine: so it is euident that he is also of circumcision. For he is promised to Abraham, and in him the blessing of all nations. To the sealing of which grace, the signe of circumcision is added.

Eph. 2. 12.
Deu. 10. 16.
Deu. 30 6.

4 Nowe we may easily se, what there is like in these two signes, or what there is differing. The promises, whereupon we haue declared that the power of the signes cõsisteth, is all one in both, namely of the fatherly fauor of God, of the forgeueneſſe of sinnes, of life euerlasting. Then, the thing figured also is all one and the same, namely regeneration. The fundation wherupon the fulfilling of these things standeth, is all one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inwarde misterie, whereby the whole force and propertie of the Sacraments is to be weyed. The vnlikeneſſe that remaineth, lieth in the outward Ceremonie, which is the smalleſt portion: whereas the chiefeſt part hangeth vpon the promiſe and the thing signified. Therefore we may determine, that whatſoeuer agreeth with circumcision doth also belong to baptiſme, except the difference of the visible Ceremonie. To this relation and compariſon, the Apoſtles rule leadeth vs by the hande, whereby we are commaunded to examine all expoſition of ſcripture by the proportiõ of faith. And truely the trueth doth in this behalfe almoſt offer it ſelfe to be felte. For as circumciſion, becauſe it was a certaine token to the Iewes, whereby they were certified that they were choſen to be the people and houſeholde of God, and they againe on their behalues profeſſed that they yelded themſelues to God, was their firſt entrie into the Church: ſo nowe alſo we by baptiſme enter into profeſſion of God, that we may be reckned among his people, and mutually ſweare to his name. Wherby it appeareth out of controuerſie, that baptiſme is come into the place of circumciſion, that it may haue the ſame office with vs.

Rom. 13.

¶ Nowe if we liſt to ſearch out, whether baptiſme be lawfully communicate to infantes: ſhall we not ſay that he doth to much play the foole, yea dote, which will reſt onely vpon the element of water, and the outward obſeruation, but can not abide to bende his minde to the ſpirituall miſteries? Whereof if there be any conſideration had, it ſhall without dout certainely appeare that baptiſme is rightfully geuen to infantes, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lorde in olde time did not vouchesaue to admit them to circumciſion, but that he made them partakers of all thoſe things which were then ſignified by circumciſion. Otherwiſe he ſhould with mere deceites haue mocked his people, if he had fed them with deceitfull ſignes, which is horrible euen to be heard of. For he pronounceth expreſly, that the circumciſion of a litle infante ſhould be in ſteede of a ſeale to ſeale the promiſe of the couenant. But if the couenant remaine vnbroken and ſteedfaſt, it doth at this day no leſſe belong to the children of Chriſtians, than vnder the olde teſtament it perteined to the infantes of the Iewes. But if they be partakers of the thing ſignified, why ſhall they be debarred from the ſigne? if they haue the trueth, why ſhall they be put backe from the figure? Although the outward ſigne cleaue faſt together with the word in the Sacrament, ſo that they can not be plucked in ſonder: yet if they be ſeuerally cõſidered, whether of them, I pray you, ſhall we eſteeme of more value? Truely ſith we ſe that the ſigne ſerueth the word, we muſt ſay that it is vnder it, and muſt ſet it in the inferior place. Sith therefore the word of Baptiſme is extended to infantes: why ſhall the ſigne, that is to ſay, the addition hanging to the word, be debarred from them? This one reaſon, if there were no mo, were aboundantly enough to confute all them that will ſpeake to the contrary. That which is obiected, that there was a day certainely ſet for circumciſion, is altogether but a ſhift. We graunte that we be not nowe bounde to certaine dayes, like the Iewes: but when the Lorde, howſoeuer he certainely appointeth no day, yet declareth that he is pleaſed that infantes ſhould with a ſolemne formal vſage be receiued into his couenant: what ſeke we more?

6 Howbeit the Scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certainer knowledge of the truth? For it is moſt euident, that the couenant which the Lorde ones made with Abraham, is at this day no leſſe in force to Chriſtians, than it was in olde time to the Iewiſh people: yea and that this word hath no leſſe reſpect to Chriſtians, than it then had reſpect to the Iewes. Vnleſſe parhappes we thinke, that Chriſt hath by his comming diminiſhed, or cut ſhort the grace of his Father. Which ſaying is not without abhominable blaſphemie. Wherefore as euen the children of the Iewes were called a holy ſeede, becauſe being made heires of the ſame couenant they were made differing from the children of the vngodly: for the ſame reaſon euen yet alſo the children of Chriſtians are accompted holy, yea although they be the iſſue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) they differ from the vncleane ſeede of idolatrers. Nowe when the Lord immediatly after the couenant made with Abraham, commaunded the ſame to be ſealed in infantes with an outward Sacrament: what cauſe will Chriſtians allege, why they ſhould not at this day teſtifie and ſeale the ſame in their children? Nether let any man obiect againſt me, that the Lorde commaunded his couenant to be confirmed with no other ſigne than of circumciſion, which is long agoe taken away. For we haue in redineſſe to aunſwere, that for the time of the olde teſtament he ordeined circumciſion to confirme his couenant: but circumciſion being taken away, yet alway remaineth the ſame maner of confirming which we haue common with the

1. Cor. 7. 14. Gen. 17. 12.

Iewes. Wherefore we muſt alway diligently conſider what is cõmon to both, and what they haue ſeuerall from vs. The couenant is common, the cauſe of confirming it is common. Onely the maner of confirming is diuerſe, becauſe circumciſion was that to them, in place whereof baptiſme hath ſucceded among vs. Otherwiſe if the teſtimonie, whereby the Iewes were aſſured of the ſaluation of their ſeede, be taken away from vs, it ſhould be brought to paſſe by the comming of Chriſt, that the grace of God ſhould be darker and leſſe approued by teſtimonies to vs, than it was before to the Iewes. If that can not be ſaid without extreme ſclaunder of Chriſt, by whom the infinite goodneſſe of the Father hath more clerely and liberally than euer heretofore bine poured fourth vpon the earth, & declared to men: we muſt needes graunt, that it is at the leſt not more pinchingly to be ſuppreſſed, nor to be ſet foorth with leſſe teſtimonie, than it was vnder the darke ſhadowes of the lawe.

7 Wherefore the Lorde Ieſus, minding to ſhewe a token whereby the world might vnderſtande that he was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercy of God, gently embraced children offred vnto him, rebuking the diſciples which went about to forbid them to come to him: foraſmuch as they did leade thoſe, to whom the kingdome of heauen belongeth, away from him by whome alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will ſome man ſay) what like thing hath baptiſme with this embracing of Chriſt. For neither is it reported that he Baptiſed thẽ, but that he receiued them, embraced them, and wiſhed them well. Therfore if we liſt to followe his example, lette vs helpe infantes with prayer, but not baptiſe them. But let vs wey the doinges of Chriſt ſomwhat more hedefully, than ſuch kinde of men do. For neither is this to be lightly paſſed ouer, that Chriſt commaundeth infantes to be brought vnto him, adding a reaſon why, becauſe of ſuch is the kingdome of heauen. And afterwarde he witneſſeth his will with deede, when embracing them he commendeth them to his Father with his prayer and bleſſing. If it be mete that infantes be brought to Chriſt, why is it not alſo mete that they be receiued to baptiſme, the ſigne of our communion and fellowſhip with Chriſt? If the kingdome of heauen be theirs, why ſhall the ſigne be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entrie opened into the Church, that being admitted into it they may be admombred among the heires of the heauenly kingdome? Howe vniuſt ſhall we be, if we driue away them whom Chriſt calleth vnto him? if we ſpoile them, whom he garniſheth with his gyftes? if we ſhutte out them whom he willingely receiueth? But if we will examine howe much much that which Christ there did, differeth from baptisme, yet of howe much greater price shall we haue baptisme, (whereby we testifie that infantes are conteined in the couenant of God) than receiuing, embracing, layeng on of handes, and prayer, whereby Christ himself being present declareth that they both are his, and are sanctified of him? By the other cauillatiõs, whereby they labor to mocke out this place, they do nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Christ saith. Let litle ones come to me, that they were in age good bigge ones which were already able to go. But they are called of the Euangelistes, brephe, and paidia, by which wordes the Grekes do signifie babes yet hanging on the brests. Therefore this word (to come) is simply set for (to haue accesse.) Lo what snares they are compelled to make, which are growen hard against the truth. Nowe where they say, that the kingdome of heauen is not geuen to them, but to such as be like them, because it is sayed to be of such, not of them: that is no sounder than the rest. For if that be graunted, what maner of reason shall the reason of Christ be, whereby he meaneth to shewe, that infantes in age are not strangers from him? When he commaundeth that infantes be suffered to haue accesse vnto him, nothing is plainer than that very infancy in deede is there spokẽ of. And that this should not seeme an absurditie, he by and by addeth: of such is the kingdome of heauen. But if it must needes be that infantes be comprehended herein, it must be plaine that by this word (Such) are meant very infantes themselues, and such as be like them.

8 Nowe there is no man that seeth not, that Baptisme of infantes was not framed by man, which is vpholden by so great approuing of Scripture. Neither do they colorably enough play the fooles, which obiect that it is no where founde, that any one infant was baptised by the handes of the Apostles. For although it be not expressly by name rehearsed of the Euangelistes: yet because againe they are not excluded, so ofte as mention happeneth to be made of the baptising of any household: who, vnlesse he be madde, can reason thereupon that they were not baptised? If such arguments were of any force, women should be forbidden to partake of the Lordes supper, whom we reade not to haue bene receiued vnto it in the time of the Apostles. But here we be contente with the rule of faith. For when we consider, what the institution of the Supper requireth, thereby also we may easily iudge to whom the vse thereof ought to be communicated. Which we obserue also in baptisme. For when we marke, to what ende it was ordeined, we euidently espy, Act. 16. 15. and 33.

that it belongeth no leſſe to infantes, than to elder folkes. Therefore they can not be depriued of it, but that the will of the author muſt be manifeſtly defrauded. But whereas they ſpred abrode among the ſimple people, that there paſſed a long roawe of yeares after the reſurrection of Chriſt, in which the baptiſme of infantes was vnknowen: therein they moſt fowly do lie. For there is no writer ſo olde, that doth not certainly referre the beginning thereof to the time of the Apoſtles.

9 Nowe remaineth that we breefely ſhewe, what fruit commeth of this obſeruation, both to the faithfull which preſent their children to the Church to be baptiſed, and alſo to the infantes themſelues that be baptiſed with the holy water: that no man ſhoulde deſpiſe it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, vpon this pretence to mocke at the baptiſme of infantes, he ſcorneth the commaundement of Circumciſion geuen by the Lorde. For what will they bring forth to impugne the baptiſme of infantes, which may not alſo be throwen backe againſt Circumciſion? So the Lorde taketh vengeance of their arrogance, which do by and by condemne that which they comprehend not with the ſenſe of their owne fleſhe. But God furniſheth vs with other armures, whereby their fooliſhneſſe may be beaten flatt. For neither this his holy inſtitution, by which we feele our faith to be holpen with ſingular comfort, deſerueth to be called ſuperfluous. For Gods ſigne communicated to a childe doth as it were by an emprinted ſeale cõfirme the promiſe geuen to the godly parente, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lorde will be God not onely to him but alſo to his ſeede, and will continually ſhewe his good will and grace, not to him onely, but alſo to his poſteritie euen to the thouſandth generation. Where when the great kindneſſe of God vttereth it ſelfe, firſt it yeldeth moſt large matter to aduaunce his glorie, and ouerſpreadeth godly hartes with ſingular gladneſſe, becauſe they are therewithall more earneſtly moued to loue againe ſo godly a Father, whom they ſee to haue care of their poſteritie for their ſakes. Neither do I regarde, if any man take exception, and ſay that the promiſe ought to ſuffiſe to confirme the ſaluation of our children: foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed God otherwiſe, whoe as he knoweth our weakneſſe, willed in this behalfe ſo much to beare tenderly with it. Therefore let them that embrace the promiſe of Gods mercy to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their duetie to offer them to the Church to be ſigned with the ſigne of mercy, and therby to encourage themſelues to a more aſſured confidence, becauſe

they do with preſent eye beholde the couenant of the Lorde grauen in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receiue ſome commoditie of their baptiſme, that being engraffed into the body of the Church, they be ſomwhat the more commended to the other membres. Then when they are growen to riper age, they be thereby not ſclenderly ſtirred vp to earneſt endeuor to worſhip God, of whom they haue bene receiued into his children by a ſolemne ſigne of adoption, before that they coulde by age acknowe him for their Father. Finally that ſame condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraide, that God will take vengeance of it, if any man deſpiſe to marke his ſonne with the ſigne of the couenant, becauſe by ſuch contempt the grace offred is refuſed and as it were forſworne. Gen.17. 14.

10 Nowe let vs examine the arguments, whereby certaine furious beaſtes do not ceſſe to aſſaile this holy inſtitution of God. Firſt becauſe they ſee that they be excedingly nere driuen and hard ſtrained with the likeneſſe of baptiſme and Circumciſion, they labor to plucke in ſonder theſe two ſignes with great difference, that the one ſhould not ſeeme to haue any thing common with the other. For they ſay that both diuers things are ſignified, and that the couenant is altogether diuers, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they go about to proue that firſt point, they allege that Circumciſion was a figure of mortification and not of baptiſme. Which verily we do moſt willingly graunt them. For it maketh very well for our ſide. Neither do we vſe any other profe of our ſentence, than that Baptiſme and Circumciſion are ſignes of mortification. Hereupon we determine that Baptiſme is ſet in the place of Circumciſion, that in ſhould repreſente vnto vs the ſame thing which in olde time it ſignified to the Iewes. In affirming the difference of the couenant, with howe barbarous boldneſſe do they turmoile and corrupt the Scripture: and that not in one place alone, but ſo as they leaue nothing ſafe or whole? For they depainte vnto vs the Iewes ſo to be carnall that they be liker beaſts than men: with whom forſooth the couenant made procedeth not beyonde the temporall life, to whom the promiſes geuen do reſt in preſent and bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the nation of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefits of God, none otherwiſe than as they fatte a hearde of ſwine in a ſtie, that at length they ſhould periſh with eternall damnation. For ſo ſone as we allege Circumciſion and the promiſes annexed vnto it, they aunſwere that Circumciſion was a litterall ſigne, and the promiſes thereof were carnall.

11 Truely if Circumcision was a literall signe, there is no otherwise to be thought of baptisme. For the Apostle in the seconde Chapter to the Colossians maketh the one no more spirituall than the other. For he saith that we are circumcised in Christ, with a circumcision not made with hande, putting away the body of sinne that dwelled in our flesh: which he calleth the circumcision of Christ. Afterward for declaration of that saying, he adioineth, that we be buried with Christ by baptisme. What meaneth he by these wordes, but that the fulfilling and truth of baptisme, is also the truth and fulfilling of circumcision, because they figure both one thing? For he trauaileth to shewe, that baptisme is the same to Christians, which Circumcision had bene before to the Iewes. But forasmuch as we haue nowe euidently declared, that the promises of both the signes, and the misteries that are represented in them, do agree together, we will for this present tary no longer vpon them. Onely I will put the faithfull in minde, that though I holde my peace, they should wey with themselues whether it be taken for an earthly and literall signe, vnder which nothing is conteined but spirituall and heauenly. But, that they should not sell their smokes to the simple, we will by the way confute one obiection wherewith they colour this most shameless lie. It is most certaine that the principall promises, wherein was conteined the couenãt which in the Olde testament God stablished with the Israelites, were spirituall, and tended to eternall life: and then againe, that they were receiued of the fathers spiritually, as it was mete, that they might thereof receiue affiance of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their hart. But in the meane time we denie not, but that he witnessed his good will towarde them with earthly and carnall benefites: by which also we say that the same promise of spirituall things was confirmed. As when he promised euerlastinge blessednesse to his seruant Abraham, that he might set before his eyes a manifest token of his fauor, he addeth an other promise concerning the possession of the lande of Chanaan. After this maner we ought to vnderstande all the earthly promises that are geuen to the Iewish nation, that the spirituall promise, as the hed, whereunto they are directed, should alway haue the chiefe place. But sith I haue more largely entreated of these things in the difference of the newe and olde testament, therefore nowe I do the more slightly knitte it vp.

12 In the naming of the children they finde this diuersity, that in the olde testament they were called the children of Abraham, which issued of his seede: but that nowe they are called by that name, which follow his faith: And that therefore that carnall infancy, which was by circumcision graffed into the felowship of the couenant, figured the infantes of the Newe testament, which are regenerate by the word of God to immortall life. In which wordes we beholde in dede a small sparcle of trueth: but herein these light spirites grenously offende, that when they catche holde of that which first commeth to their hande, when they should go further and compare many things together, they stande stifly vppon one word. Whereby it can not otherwise be but that they must sometime be deceiued which rest vpon the sound knowledge of nothinge. We graunt in deede that the carnall seede of Abraham did for a time holde the place of the spirituall sede which is by faith graffed into him. For we be called his children howesoeuer there is no naturall kinred betwene him and vs. But if they meane, as they plainely shewe that they do, that there was neuer spirituall blessinge promised to the carnall seede of Abraham, herein they are much deceiued. Wherefore we must leuell to a better marke, wherunto we are directed by the most certaine guiding of the Scripture. The Lord therefore promised to Abraham, that he should haue a seede, wherein all nations of the earth shalbe blessed: and therewithall assureth him, that he woulde be a God to him and his seede. Whosoeuer do by Faith receiue Christ the author of blessinge, are heires of this promise, and therfore are called the children of Abraham. Gala. 4. 28. Rom. 4. 12.

13 But although since the resurrectiō of Christ the boūdes of the kingdome of God haue begon to be farre and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that accordinge to the sayinge of Christ, faithful ones should be gathered from euery part to sit downe in the heauenly glory with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: yet he had many ages before extended that same so great mercy to the Iewes. And because passinge ouer all other, he had chosen out that only nation, in which he would restraine his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying of such liberality, Circumcision was giuen by the signe whereof the Iewes might be taught that God is to them the author of saluation: by which knowledge their mindes were raised into hope of eternall life. For what shall he want, whom God hath once receiued into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaninge to proue that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this maner: Abraham (saith he) was iustified by faith in vncircumcision. Afterward he receiued the signe of circumcisiō, the seale of the righteousnesse of faith, that he should be the father of all the faithful, both Matt. 8. 11. Exo. 19 5. Rom. 4. 10.

of vncircumciſiõ and of circumciſion, not of them that glory of only circumciſion, but of them that folowe the faith which our father Abraham had in vncircumciſion. Do not we ſee that both ſortes are made egall in dignity? For during the time appointed by the decree of God, he was the father of circumciſiõ. When, the wall being plucked downe (as the Apoſtle writeth in an other place) by which the Iewes were ſeuered from the Gentiles, the entrie was made open to them alſo into the kingdom of God, he was made their father, & that without the ſigne of circũciſion, becauſe they haue baptiſme in ſtede of circumciſion. But where he expreſly by name denieth, that Abraham is father to them which are of circumciſion only, that ſame was ſpokẽ to abate the pride of certaine, which omitting the care of godlines, did boaſt themſelues of only Ceremonies. After which manner at this day alſo their vanity may be confuted which ſeke in baptiſme nothing but water.

Ephe. 2. 14.

14 But an other place of the Apoſtle out of the 9. Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romaines ſhalbe alleaged to the contrary, where he teacheth that they which are of the fleſhe, are not the children of Abraham: but they onely are compted his ſeede, which are the children of promiſe. For he ſeemeth to ſignifie, that the carnall kinred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we do ſet in ſome degree. But it is more diligẽtly to be marked, what matter the Apoſtle there entreateth of. For, meaning to ſhew to the Iewes how much the goodneſſe of God was not bound to the ſeede of Abraham, yea how it nothing auaileth of it ſelfe, he bringeth foorth Iſmaell and Eſau for example to proue it: whom being refuſed, as if they were ſtraungers, although they were according to the fleſh the naturall offspring of Abraham, the bleſſing reſted in Iſaac and Iacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that ſaluation hangeth of the mercy of God, which he extendeth to whom it pleaſeth him; and that there is no cauſe why the Iewes ſhould ſtand in their owne conceite, or boaſt vpon the name of the couenant, vnleſſe they kepe the law of the couenant, that is to ſay, do obey the word. Againe when he hath throwen them downe from vaine confidence of their kinred, yet becauſe on the other ſide he ſawe, that the couenant which was once made of God with the poſterity of Abraham, could in no wiſe be made void, in the 11. chapter, he argueth that the carnall kinred is not to be ſpoiled of his due dignity; by the beneficiall meane whereof he teacheth that the Iewes are the firſt and naturall heires of the Goſpell, but in reſpect that by their vnthankefulneſſe, they were forſaken as vnworthy: yet ſo that the heauenly bleſſing is not vtterly remoued from their nation. For which reason, howe much soeuer they were stubborne & couenant breakers, neuertheleſſe he calleth them holy (so much honor he giueth to the holy generation, with whom God had vouchsaued to make his holy couenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after borne, yea or the vntimely borne children of Abraham, & that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken of frō his natural tree, should be graffed into a strange stocke. Therefore that they should not be defrauded of their prerogatiue, it behoued that the Gospell should be first preached to them: for they be in the householde of God as it were the first begotten children. Wherefore this honor was to be geuen them, vntill they refused it beinge offered them, & by their owne vnthankefullnesse brought to passe that it was caried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with howe great obstinacie soeuer they continue to make warre against the Gospell, ought they to be despised of vs: if we consider that for the promises sake, the blessing of God doth yet still remaine among them: as verily the Apostle testifieth that it shal neuer vtterly depart from thence: because the giftes and callinge of God are without repentance. Rom.11 29.

15 Beholde of what force is the promise giuen to the posterity of Abraham, & with what balance it is to be weyed. Wherfore although in discerninge the heires of the kingdom from bastardes and strangers, we nothing dout that the only election of God ruleth with free right of gouernment: yet we also therewithall perceiue, that it pleased him peculiarly to embrace the seede of Abraham with his mercy, and that the same mercy might be the more surely witnessed, to seale it with circumcision. Now altogether like state is there of the Christian Church. For as Paule there reasoneth that the Iewes are sanctified of their parentes: so in an other place he teacheth, that the children of Christians receiue the same sanctification of their parentes. Whereupon is gathered, that they are worthily seuered from the rest, which on the other side are condemned of vncleanneſſe. Nowe who can dout, but that it is most false which they do thereupon conclude, that say that the infantes which in olde time were circumcised, did onely figure spiritual infancy, which ariseth of the regeneration of the word of God. For Paule doth not so suttelly play the Philosopher, where he wryteth that Christ is the minister of Circumcision, to fulfill the promises which had bin made to the Fathers, as if he said thus: Forasmuch as the couenant made with Abraham hath respect to his seede, Christ, to performe and discharge the promise once made by his Father, came to saluation to the nation of the Iewes. See you not howe 1. Cor.7 14. Rom.15 8.

From which alſo not much diſaccordeth the other place of the Apoſtle aboue alleaged, where he accompteth & ſetteth Circumciſion emprinted in infantes, for a teſtimony of that cõmunion which they haue with Chriſt. But if we harken to their trifles, what ſhalbe wrought by that promiſe, whereby the Lorde in the ſecond article of his law vndertaketh to his ſeruants, that he will be fauorable to their ſeede euen to the thouſandth generation? Shall we here flee to allegories? But that were too trifling aſhift. Or ſhal we ſay that this is aboliſhed? But ſo the law ſhould be deſtroied, which Chriſt came rather to ſtabliſh, ſo farre as it turneth vs to good vnto life. Let it therfore be out of cõtrouerſie, that God is ſo good & liberall to his, that for their ſakes, he will haue alſo their children, whom they ſhal beget, to be adnumbred among his people.

16 Moreouer the differẽces which they go about to put betwene baptiſme and circumciſion, are not only worthy to be laughed at, and void of all colour of reaſon, but alſo diſagreeing with themſelues. For when they haue affirmed that baptiſme hath relation to the firſt day of the ſpirituall battell, but circumciſiõ to the eighth when mortification is already ended, byandby forgetting the ſame, they turne their ſonge, and call circumciſion a figure of the fleſh to be mortified, but baptiſme they call buriall, into which none are to be put till they be already dead. What dotages of phrentike men, can with ſo great lightneſſe leape into ſundry diuerſities? For in the firſt ſentence, baptiſme muſt go before circumciſion: by the other, it is thruſt backe into the later place. Yet is it no new example, that the wits of men be ſo toſſed vp and downe, when in ſteede of the moſt certaine word of God they worſhip whatſoeuer they haue dreamed. We therefore ſay that that former difference is a meere dreame. If they liſted to expounde by way of allegory vpõ ỹ eighth day, yet it agreed not in that maner. It were much fitter, accordinge to the opinion of the olde writers, to referre the number of eight to the reſurrection which was done on the eighth day, whereupon we know that the newneſſe of life hangeth: or to the whole courſe of this preſent life, wherein mortification ought alway to go forwarde, till when life is ended, mortification it

ſelfe may alſo be ended. Howebeit God may ſeeme to haue minded to prouide for the tenderneſſe of age, in differring circumciſion the eighth day, becauſe the wound ſhould haue bin more dangerous to the children new borne and yet red from their mother. How much ſtronger is that, that we being deade before, are buried by baptiſme: when the Scripture expreſſely crieth to the contrary that we are buried into death to this entent, that we ſhould dye, and from thenſeforth ſhoulde endeuour to this mortification? Now, a likewiſe handlinge it is, that they cauill that women ought not to be baptiſed, if baptiſme muſt be framed like to circumciſion. For if it be moſt certaine that the ſanctifyinge of the ſeede of Iſraell was teſtified by the ſigne of circumciſion: thereby alſo it is vndouted, that it was giuen to ſanctifie both males & females. But the only bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet ſo that the womē were by them after a certaine maner companions & partners of circumciſiō. Therfore ſending far away ſuch follies of theirs, let vs ſticke faſt in the likenes of baptiſme & circumciſion, which we moſt largely ſee to agree in the inward myſtery, in the promiſes, in vſe, in effectualneſſe.

17 They thinke alſo that they bring foorth a moſt ſtrong reaſon, why children are to be debarred from baptiſme, when they alleage that they are not yet for age able to vnderſtande the myſteries there ſignified. That is ſpirituall regeneration, which can not be in the firſt infancy. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be growen to age mete for a ſecond birth. But the trueth of God echwhere ſpeaketh againſt all theſe things. For if they be to be left among the childrē of Adam, then they are left in death: foraſmuch as in Adā we can do nothing but die. But contrariwiſe Chriſt commaundeth them to be brought vnto him. Why ſo? becauſe he is life: Therefore that he may giue life to them, he maketh them partakers of himſelfe: when in the meane time theſe fellowes driuinge them farre away do adiudge them to death. For if they ſay for a ſhift, that infantes do not therefore periſh if they be accompted the childrē of Adam, their errour is abundantly confuted by witneſſe of the Scripture. For where as it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it foloweth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Chriſt. Therefore that we may be made heires of life, we muſt communicate with him. Againe when it is wrytten in an other place, that by nature we are all ſubiect to the wrath of God, & conceiued in ſinne, whereunto damnation perpetually cleaueth: we muſt depart out of our owne nature, before that the entry be open to vs into the kingdom of God. And what can be more plainely ſpo-

1.Cor. 15.50. ken, than that fleſh and blood can not poſſeſſe the kingdom of God? Therefore let all be done away whatſoeuer is ours (which ſhall not be done without regeneration) then we ſhall ſee this poſſeſſion of Ioh.11. 25.&14 5. the kingdom. Finally if Chriſt ſay truely, when he reporteth that he is life, it is neceſſary that we be graffed into him, that we may be deliuered out of the bondage of death. But (ſay they) how are infantes regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of euill? But we anſwere, that the work of God is not yet no work at all, although it be not ſubiect to our capacity. Moreouer it is nothing doutfull, that the infants which are to be ſaued (as verily of that age ſome are ſaued) are before regenerate of the Lorde. For if they Reu.21. 27. Eph.2.3 Pſ.51.7 bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they muſt be purged thereof, before that they be admitted into the kingdom of God, wherinto nothing entreth that is defiled or ſpotted. If they be borne ſinners, as both Dauid and Paul affirme: either they remaine out of fauour and hatefull to God, or they muſt nedes be iuſtified. And what ſeeke we more, when the iudge
Ioh.3.3 himſelfe openly affirmeth that the entrie into heauenly life is open to none but to them that be borne againe? And to put ſuch carpers to ſilence, he ſhewed an example in Iohn the baptiſt, whom he ſanctified in his mothers wombe, what he was able to do in the reſt. Neither do they any thinge preuaile by the ſhift wherewith they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not byandby folowe that the Lorde is wont commonly to do ſo with infantes. For neither do we reaſon after that maner: onely our purpoſe is to ſhew, that the power of God is by them vniuſtly and enuiouſly limited within thoſe narrowe boundes within which it ſuffreth not it ſelfe to be bounde. Their other byſhift is euen of as great weight. They alleage that by the vſuall maner of the Scripture, this word (from the wombe,) is as much in effect, as if it were ſayd, from childhoode. But we may clearely ſee, that the Angel when he declared the ſame to Za-
Luc.1. 85. chary, meant an other thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, ſhould be filled with the holy Ghoſt. Let vs not therefore attempt to appoint a lawe to God, but that he may ſanctifie whom it pleaſed him, as he ſanctified this child, foraſmuch as his power is nothing miniſhed.

18 And truely Chriſt was therefore ſanctified from his firſt infancy, that he might ſanctifie in himſelfe his elect out of euery age without difference. For as, to do away the fault of diſobedience which had bin committed in our fleſh, he hath put on the ſame fleſh vpon himſelfe ſelfe, that he might in it for vs and in our ſtede performe perfect obedience: ſo he was conceiued of the holy Ghoſt, that hauinge the holineſſe thereof fully poured into him in the fleſhe which he had taken vppon him, he might poure foorth the ſame into vs. If we haue in Chriſt a moſt perfect paterne of all the graces which God continually ſheweth to his childrē, verily in this behalfe alſo he ſhalbe a profe vnto vs, that the age of infancy is not ſo farre vnfit for ſanctification. But howeſoeuer it be, yet this we hold out of controuerſie, that none of the elect is called out of this preſent life, which is not firſt made holy and regenerate by the Spirite of God. Whereas they obiect to the contrary, that in the Scriptures the Spirite acknowledgeth no other regeneration but of incorruptible ſeede, that is, of the word of God: they do wrongefully expounde that ſayinge of Peter, wherein he comprehendeth onely the faithfull which hadde bin taught by preaching of the Goſpell. To ſuch in deede we graunt that the word of the Lorde is the onely ſeede of ſpirituall regeneration: but we deny that it ought therupon to be gathered, that infantes can not be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as eaſie & ready as to vs it is incomprehenſible and wonderfull. Moreouer it ſhoulde not be ſafe enough for vs to take this away from the Lorde, that he may not be able to ſhewe himſelfe to be knowen to them by whatſoeuer way he wil. 1.Pet.1. 23.

19 But Faith, ſay they, is by hearinge, whereof they haue not yet gotten the vſe, neither can they be able to knowe God, whom Moſes teacheth to be deſtitute of the knowledge both of good and euill. But they conſider not that the Apoſtle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of faith, deſcribeth onely the ordinary diſtribution of the Lorde and diſpoſition which he vſeth to keepe in callinge them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vſe any other way. Which way verily he hath vſed in the callinge of many, to whom he hath giuen the true knowledge of himſelfe by an inward maner, by the enlightening of the Spirite, without any preachinge vſed for meane thereof. But whereas they thinke it ſhalbe a great abſurditie, if any knowledge of God be giuen to infantes, from whom Moſes taketh away the vnderſtanding of good and euill: I beſech them to aunſwere me, what danger is there if they be ſaid to receiue ſome part of that grace, whereof a little after they ſhal enioy the full plentifulnes. For if the fulnes of life ſtandeth in the perfect knowledge of God, when many of them, whom in their very firſt infancy death byandby taketh away, do paſſe into eternall life, truely they are receiued to beholde the moſt preſent face of God. Whom therefore Deut.30. 39.

the Lorde will enlighten with the full brightneſſe of his light, why may he not preſently alſo, if it ſo pleaſe him, ſende out to ſhine vpon them ſome ſmall ſparcle thereof: ſpecially if he do not firſt vncloth them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the priſon of the fleſhe? Not that I meane raſhly to affirme that they be endued with the ſame Faith which we feele in our ſelues, or that they haue altogether like knowledge of faith: (which I had rather leaue in ſuſpenſe) but ſomwhat to reſtraine their fooliſh arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulnes, do boldely deny or affirme they care not what.

20 But that they may yet ſtande more ſtrongly in this point, they adde, that baptiſme is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith: wherfore ſith neither of theſe can befall in tender infancy, we ought to beware leaſt if they be admitted to the communion of baptiſme, the ſignification of it be made voyde and vaine. But theſe dartes are throwen rather againſt God than againſt vs. For it is moſt euident by many teſtimonies of Scripture, that circumciſion alſo was a ſigne of repentance. Moreouer it is called of Paule the ſeale of the righteouſnes of Faith. Let therefore a reaſon be required of God himſelfe why he commaunded it to be marked in the bodies of infantes. For ſith baptiſme and circumciſion are both in one caſe, they can giue nothing to the one but that they muſt alſo therewithall graunt the ſame to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted ſtarringe hole, that then by the age of infancy were figured ſpirituall infantes, the way is already ſtopped vp againſt them. We ſay therefore, ſith God hath communicated to infantes circumciſion a Sacrament of repentance and Faith, it ſeemeth no abſurdity if they be made partakers of baptiſme: vnleſſe they liſt openly to rage againſt the ordinance of God. But both in all the doings of God, & in this ſelfe ſame doing alſo ſhineth wiſdom and righteouſneſſe enough, to beate downe the backebitings of the wicked. For though infantes, at the ſame inſtant that they were circumciſed, did not comprehende in vnderſtandinge what that ſigne meant: yet they were truely circumciſed into the mortificatiō of their corrupt and defiled nature, in which mortification they ſhould afterward exerciſe themſelues when they were growen to riper age. Finally it is very eaſie to aſſoyle this obiection, with ſayinge that they be baptiſed into repentance and Fayth to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by ſecrete workinge of the Spirite the ſeede of both lyeth hidden in them. With this anſwere at once is ouerthrowen whatſoeuer they wreſt againſt vs which they haue fetched out of the ſignification of baptiſme. Of which ſort is that title wherewith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the washing of regeneration and of renuinge. Whereupon they gather that it is to be giuen to none but to such a one as is able to conceiue those things. But we on the contrary side may answere, that neither was circumcision which betokened regeneration, to be giuen to any other than to them that were regenerate. And so shall we condemne the ordinance of God. Wherfore (as we haue already touched in diuerse places) whatsoeuer argumentes do tende to the shakinge of circumcision, they haue no force in the aslailinge of baptisme. Neither do they so escape away, if they say that we ought to take that for determined & certaine, which standeth vpon the authority of God, although there appeare no reason of it: which reuerence is not due to the baptisme of infantes, nor to such other things which be not commẽded vnto vs by the expresse word of God: sith they are still fast holden with this double argumẽt. For the commaundement of God concerning infantes to be circumcised, was either lawfull & subiect to no cauillations, or worthy to be found fault withall. If there were no inconuenience nor absurdity in the commaundement of circumcision, neither can there any absurdity be noted in obseruing the baptisme of infantes. Tit. 3. 5.

21 As for the spot of absurdity which in this place they go about to lay vpon it, we thus wipe it away. Whom the Lord hath vouchsaued to elect, if hauinge receiued the signe of regeneration, they departe out of this present life before that they be come to riper age, he renueth them with the power of his Spirite incomprehensible to vs, in such manner as he alone foreseeth to be expedient. If they chaunce to grow vp to age, whereby they may be taught the trueth of baptisme, they shal hereby be the more enkindled to the endeuor of renuinge, the token whereof they shall learne to haue bin giuen them from their first infancy, that they should exercise themselues in it throughout ỹ whole course of their life. To the same entent ought that to be applied which Paule teacheth in two places, that by baptisme we are buried together with Christ. For he doth not meane thereby, that he which is to be baptised, must be already first buried together with Christ: but simply declareth what doctrine is cõtained vnder baptisme, yea & that to them that be already baptised: so that very mad men woulde not affirme by this place that it goeth before baptisme. After this maner Moses & the Prophets did put the people in mind what circũcision meant, wherwith yet they had bin marked while they were infantes. Of the same effect also is that which he writeth to the Galatians, that they when they were baptised, did put on Christ. To what ende? verily that they should from thense foorth Ro. 6. 4. Colo. 2. 12. Gala. 3. 27.

liue to Christ, because they had not liued before. And although in the older sort the receiuing of the signe ought to follow the vnderstanding of ỹ mystery: yet it shalbe byandby declared that infants ought to be otherwise esteemed & accompted of. And no otherwise ought we to iudge of ỹ place of Peter, in which they thinke that they haue a strong hold: when he saith that it is not a washing to wipe away the filthinesses of the body, but the witnesse of a good conscience before God, by the resurrection of Christ. They in deede do gather thereby, that nothing is left to the baptisme of infantes, but that it should be a vaine smoke, namely from which this trueth is farre distant. But they often offend in this errour, that they will haue the thing in order of time to go alway before the signe. For the trueth of circumcision also consisted of the same witnesse of good cõscience. If it ought of necessity to haue gone before, infantes should neuer haue bin circumcised by the commaundement of God. But he shewinge that the witnesse of a good conscience was contained vnder the trueth of circumcision, & yet therewithall also commaunding infantes to be circumcised, doth in ỹ point sufficiently declare that circumcision is applied to the time to come. Wherfore there is no more present effectualnes to be required in baptisme of infants, thã ỹ it should cõfirme & stablish the couenãt made by the Lord with them. The rest of the signification of that Sacrament shall afterward folow at such time as God himselfe foreseeth.

1. Pet. 3. 21.

22 Now I thinke there is no man, that doth not clearely see that all such reasons of theirs are mere misconstrings of Scripture. As for the rest that be of a nere kinde to these, we will lightly runne through them by the way. They obiect that baptisme is giuen vnto the forgiuenes of sinnes: which whẽ it is graunted, will largely make for defense of our sentence. For sith we be borne sinners, we do euen from our mothers wombe nede forgiuenes and pardon. Now seeinge the Lord doth not cut of, but rather assure to that age the hope of mercy: why shoulde we take from them the signe which is much inferiour than the thing it selfe? Wherfore that which they go about to throw against vs, we thus throw backe against themselues: infantes haue remission of sinnes giuen them, therefore they ought not to haue the signe takẽ from them. They alleage also this out of the Epistle to the Ephesians: that the Church is cleansed of the Lord, with the washing of water in the word of life. Than which there could nothinge be alleaged more fit to ouerthrowe their errour: for thereupon groweth an easie profe of our side. If the Lord wil haue the washing wherwith he cleanseth his Church, to be testified by baptisme: it seemeth not rightful that it ſhould want the teſtimony of it in infantes, which are rightfully accõpted part of the Church, forasmuch as they be called heires of the heauenly kingdome. For Paule ſpeaketh of the whole Church, where he ſaith that it was cleanſed with the baptiſme of water. Likewiſe of this that in an other place he ſayth that we be by baptiſme graffed into ỹ body of Chriſt, we gather that infants, whom he reckeneth amonge his members, ought to be baptiſed, leaſt they be plucked away from his body Beholde with what violence with ſo many engines they aſſault the fortreſſes of our faith. 1. Cor. 12. 17.

23 Then they come downe to the practiſe & cuſtome of ỹ time of ỹ Apoſtles, wherin none is found to haue bin admitted to baptiſme, but he which hath before profeſſed Faith & repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repẽt, what was nedeful to be done, he counſelled them firſt to repent, & then to be baptiſed, into the forgiuenes of ſinnes. Likewiſe Philip, whẽ the Eunuch required to be baptiſed, anſwered that he might be baptiſed if he beleued with all his hart. Hereby they thinke that they may winne, that it is not lawfull that baptiſme be graunted to any, but where Faith & repentance go before. Truely if we yeelde to this reaſon, the firſt of theſe two places where is no mention made of Faith, will proue that repentance alone ſufficeth: and the other place, wherein repentance is not required, will proue that Faith only is enough. I thinke they wil aunſwere that the one place is holpen with the other, and therefore muſt be ioyned together. I ſay alſo likewiſe, that other places muſt be laid together which make ſomwhat to the vndoing of this knot: forasmuch as there be many ſentences in Scripture, the vnderſtanding whereof hangeth vpon the circumſtance of the place. As this preſently is an example. For they to whom Peter and Philip ſpake theſe thinges were of age ſufficient to haue practiſe of repentance and to conceiue Faith. We earneſtly deny that ſuch ought to be baptiſed, vntill after perceiuing of their conuerſion and Faith, at leaſt ſo farre as it may be ſearched out by the iudgemẽt of men. But, that infantes ought to be accompted in an other number, it is more than euident enough. For in old time if any man did ioyne himſelfe into communion of religion with Iſraell, it behoued that he ſhould firſt be taught the couenant of the Lord, & inſtructed in the law, before that he were marked with circumciſion, becauſe in birth he was a ſtraunger from the people of Iſraell, with whom the couenant had bin made which circumciſion ſtabliſhed. neth by that signe: but first he declareth what couenãt he entẽdeth to make with him, & then after Faith giuen to the promise, he maketh him partaker of the Sacramẽt. Why doth in Abraham the Sacrament follow Faith, & in Isaac his sonne it goeth before all vnderstanding? Becausse it is mete that he, which being in full growen age is receiued into felowship of the couenant, from which he had bin hitherto a stranger, should first learne the conditions thereof: but an infant begotten of him neded not so, which by right of inheritance according to ỹ forme of the promise is euen frõ his mothers wombe cõtained in the couenant. Or (that the matter be may more clearely & briefly shewed) if the children of the faithful, without the help of vnderstandinge, are partakers of the couenant, there is no cause why they shoulde be debarred from the signe for this that they can not sweare to the forme of the couenant. This verily is the reason, why in some places God affirmeth that the infantes which are issued of the Israelites, are begottẽ & borne to him. For without dout he estemeth as his children the children of them to whose seede he promiseth ỹ he will be a Father. But he which is vnfaithfull, issued of vngodly parents, till he be by Faith vnited to God, is iudged a straunger from the communion of the couenant. Therfore it is no maruel if he be not partaker of the signe, the signification whereof should be deceitfull and voyde in him. To this effect Paule also writeth, that the Gentiles so long as they were drowned in their idolatry, were out of the Testament. With this short summe, (as I thinke) the whole matter may be clearely opened: that they which in growen age, embrace the Fayth of Christ, forasmuch as they were hitherto straungers from the couenant, are not to be marked with baptisme, but whereas Faith and repentance come betwene, which onely can open them the entrie into felowshippe of the couenant: but the infantes that are issued of Christians, as they are receiued of God into the inheritance of the couenant so soone as they be borne, so ought to be receiued to baptisme. Hereunto must that be applied which the Euangelist speaketh of, that they were baptised of Iohn which confessed their sinnes. Which exãple at this day also we thinke mete to be kept. For if a Turke offer himselfe to baptisme, he shoulde not be rashely baptised of vs, namely not till after cõfession whereby he may satisfie the Church.

25 Moreouer they bring forth the wordes of Christ, which are rehearsed in the third Chapter of Iohn, wherby they thinke that a present regeneration is required in baptisme. Vnlesse a man be borne againe of water and the Spirite, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.

Ioh. 3. 5

God. Lo (ſay they) howe baptiſme is by the Lordes owne mouth called regeneration. Them therefore whom it is more than enough knowen to be vnable to receiue regeneratiō, by what colour do we admit to baptiſme which can not be without regeneratiō? Firſt they are deceiued in this that they thinke that in this place mention is made of baptiſme, becauſe they heare the name of water. For after that Chriſt had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, & taught him that mē muſt be borne of new, becauſe Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily newe birth, he there ſhewed the maner howe God doth regenerate vs, namely by water and the Spirite: as though he ſhould ſay, by the Spirite which in cleanſinge and wateringe faithfull ſoules, doth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the Spirite ſimply for the Spirit, which is water. Neither is this a new forme of ſpech, for it altogether agreeth with the ſame which is in the third Chapter of Mathewe: He that foloweth me, it is he that baptiſeth in the holy Ghoſt and fier. Therefore as to baptiſe in the holy Ghoſt and fier, is to giue the holy Ghoſt, which hath the office and nature of fier: ſo to be borne againe of water and the Spirite, is nothing elſe but to receiue that power of the holy Spirite which doth the ſame thinge in the ſoule that water doth in the body. I knowe that other do otherwiſe expounde it: but I am out of dout that this is the naturall meaninge: becauſe the purpoſe of Chriſt is none other, but to teach that all they muſt put of their owne nature which aſpire to the heauenly kingdom. Howbeit if we liſt to cauil vnſauorily as they do, it were eaſie for vs (when we haue graunted as they woulde haue it) to inferre vpon them that baptiſme is before Fayth and repentance: foraſmuch as in the wordes of Chriſt it goeth before the Spirite. It is certayne that this is vnderſtanded of ſpirituall giftes: which if they come after baptiſme, I haue obtayned what I require. But leauinge cauillations, we muſt holde faſt the plaine expoſition, which I haue brought, that no manne till he haue beene renewed with liuinge water, that is, with the Spirite, can enter into the kingdome of God. Matt. 3. 11.

26 Now hereby alſo it is euident that their fained inuention is to be hiſſed out, which adiudge all the vnbaptiſed to eternall death. Therefore let vs accordinge to their requeſt imagine baptiſme to be miniſtred to none but to them that be growen in age: what will they ſay, ſhall become of a childe, which is rightly and well inſtructed with the introductions of godlineſſe, if when the day of baptiſinge is at hand, he happen to be taken away with ſudden death beſide all mens hope? The Lordes promiſe is cleare, that whoſoeuer hath beleued Iohn. 5. 24.

in the Sonne, shall not see death, nor shall come into iudgement, but is already passed from death into life: and it is no where founde that he euer damned him that was not yet baptised. Which I woulde not haue so taken of me as though I meant that baptisme might freely be despised (by which despisinge I affirme that the Lordes couenant is defiled: so much lesse can I abide to excuse it) only it is enough for me to proue, that it is not so necessary, that he should be immediatly thought to be lost, from whome power is taken away to obtaine it. But if we agree to their fained deuise, we shall damne all them without exception, whom any chaunce withholdeth from baptisme, with howe great Faith soeuer (by which Christ himselfe is possessed) otherwise they are endued. Moreouer they make all infantes giltie of eternall death, to whom they deny baptisme, which by their owne confession is necessary to saluation. Nowe lette them looke howe trimly they agree with the wordes of Christ, by which the kingdom
Mat.19. 14. of heauen is adiudged to that age. But, to graunt them euery thinge so much as pertaineth to the vnderstandinge of this place, yet they shall gather nothinge thereof, vnlesse they ouerthrowe the former doctrine which we haue stablished concerninge the regeneration of infantes.

27 But they glory that they haue the strongest holde of all in the very institution of baptisme, which they fetch out of the last Chapter
Mat.28 19. of Matthew: where Christ sending foorth his Apostles to all nations, giueth them the first commaundement to teache them, and the seconde to baptise them. Then also out of the last of Marke they adMar.16. 16. ioyne this, He that beleueth and is baptised, shalbe saued. What seke we further (say they) when the Lordes owne words do openly sound, that we must first teache ere we baptise, and do assigne to baptisme the second state after Faith? Of which order the Lord also shewed Matt.3. 13. Luc.3. 23. an example in himselfe, which would be baptised not till the thirtith yeare. But here, O good God, how many waies do they both entangle themselues, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childishly erre, ý they fetch the first institutiō of baptisme from thense, which Christ had from the beginning of his preachinge giuen in charge to his Apostles to minister. Therefore there is no cause why they shoulde affirme that the lawe and rule of baptisme is to be fetched out of these places, as though they contained the first institution thereof. But, to beare with them for this fault, yet how strong is this maner of reasoning? Truely if I listed to dally with them, there is not a litle lurking hole, but a most wide fielde offereth it selfe open for vs to escape them. For when they sticke so fast to the order of wordes, that they gather that becauſe it is ſayd, Go, preache and baptiſe, Againe, he that beleueth and is baptiſed, therefore they muſt preache before that they baptiſe, & beleue before that they require baptiſme: why may not we againe anſwere them with ſayinge that we muſt baptiſe before that we muſt teache the keping of thoſe thinges that Chriſt hath commaunded: namely ſith it is ſayd, baptiſe ye, teaching them to kepe whatſoeuer thinges I haue commaunded you? which ſame things we haue noted in that ſayinge of Chriſt which haue bin euen now alleaged concerninge the regeneration of water and the Spirit. For if it be ſo vnderſtode as they would haue it, verily in that place baptiſme muſt be before ſpirituall regeneration, becauſe it is named in the firſt place. For Chriſt doth teache that we muſt be regenerate, not of the Spirit and water, but of water and the Spirit. Mar. 16 15.

28 Now this inuincible reaſon whereupon they beare themſelues ſo bolde, ſeemeth to be ſomwhat ſhaken: but becauſe trueth hath defenſe enough in ſimplicity, I will not eſcape away with ſuch light argumentes. Therefore let them take with them a full anſwere. Chriſt in this place giueth the chiefe commaundement concerninge preaching of the Goſpell, whereunto he adioyneth the miniſtery of baptiſme as an addition hanging vppon it. Againe he ſpeaketh none otherwiſe of baptiſme but ſo farre as the miniſtratiō of it is vnder the office of teachinge. For Chriſt ſendeth the Apoſtles to publiſhe the Goſpel to all ỹ nations of the world, that they ſhould frō echwhere with the doctrine of ſaluation gather together into his kingdom men that before were loſt. But whom, or what maner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of thē that are able to receiue teaching. Afterward he addeth that ſuch, when they are inſtructed, ought to be baptiſed, adioyninge a promiſe, that they which beleue and are baptiſed ſhalbe ſaued. Is there in all that ſaying ſo much as one ſillable of infantes? What forme therefore of reaſoning ſhall this be wherewith they aſſaile vs: they which are of growen age, muſt firſt be inſtructed, that they may beleue, ere they be baptiſed: therfore it is vnlawful to make baptiſme common to infantes? Although they would burſt themſelues, they ſhall proue nothing elſe by this place but that the Goſpel muſt be preached to thē that are of capacity able to heare it, before ỹ they be baptiſed, foraſmuch as he there ſpeaketh of ſuch only. Let them hereof, if they can, make a ſtoppe to debarre infantes from baptiſme.

29 But, that euen blinde men alſo may with groping finde out their deceites, I will point them out with a very cleare ſimilitude. If any man cauill that infantes ought to haue meate taken from them, vpon

2. Thes. 3.10. this pretense that the Apostle suffereth none to eate but them that labour, shall he not be worthy that all men should spit at him? Why so? Because he without difference draweth that to all men, which was spoken of one kinde & one certaine age of mē. No whit handsomer is their handeling in this present cause. For, that which euery man seeth to belonge to one age alone, they draw to infantes, that this age also may be subiect to ẏ rule which was made for none but thē that were more growen in yeres. As for the example of Christ, it nothinge vp-
Luc. 3. 23. holdeth their side. He was not baptised before ẏ he was thirty yeres olde. That is in deede true: but there is a reason thereof ready to be shewed: because he then purposed by his preachinge to lay a sounde fundation of baptisme, or rather to stablish the fundation which had bin before layd of Iohn. Therfore when he minded with his doctrine to institute baptisme, to procure the greater authority to his institution, he Sanctified it with his owne body, and that in such firnesse of time as was most conuenient, namely when he began his preaching. Finally they shall gather nothing else hereof, but that baptisme toke his originall and beginninge at the preachinge of the Gospell. If they list to appoint the thirtith yeare, why do they not keepe it, but do receiue euery one to baptisme as he hath in their iudgement sufficiently profited? yea & Seruettus one of their maisters, when he stiffely required this time, yet began at the 21. yere of his age to boast himselfe to be a Prophete. As though he were to be suffered that taketh vpon himselfe the place of a teacher in the Church, before that he be a mēber of the Church.

30 At the last they obiect, that there is no greater cause why baptisme should be giuen to infantes, than the Lordes Supper, which yet is not graunted them. As though the Scripture did not euery way expresse a large difference. The same was in dede vsually done in the old Church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Augustine: but that maner is worthily growen out of vse. For if we consider the nature and property of baptisme, it is truely an entry into the Church and as it were a forme of admission, whereby we are adnumbred into the people of God, a signe of our spirituall regeneration by which we are borne againe into the children of God: whereas on the other side the Supper is giuen to them that be more growen in age, which hauing passed tender infancy, are now able to beare strong meate. Which difference is very euidently shewed in the Scripture. For there the Lord so much as pertaineth to baptisme, maketh no choise of ages. But he doth not likewise giue the Supper to all to take part of it, but only to them which are fit to diſcerne the body and blood of the Lord, to examine their owne conſcience, to declare the Lordes death, to weye the power thereof. Would we haue any thing plainer, than that which the Apoſtle teacheth whē he exhorteth that euery man ſhould proue and examine himſelfe, and then eate of this bred and drinke of this cup? Therefore examination muſt go before, which ſhould in vaine be loked for of infantes. Againe, he that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh damnatiō to himſelfe, not diſcerning the Lordes body. If none can partake worthily but they that can well diſcerne the holineſſe of the Lordes body, why ſhould we geue to our tender children, poiſon in ſteede of liuely foode? What is that commaundement of the Lorde, ye ſhall do it in remembrance of me? what is that other which the Apoſtle deriueth from the ſame, So oft as ye ſhall eate of this bread, ye ſhall declare the Lordes death till he come? What remembrance (I beſeche you) ſhall we require at our infantes of the thing which they neuer atteined with vnderſtanding? what preaching of the croſſe of Chriſt, the force and benefite whereof they do not yet comprehende in minde? None of theſe things is preſcribed in baptiſme. Therefore betwene theſe two ſignes is great difference: which we note alſo in like ſignes in the olde teſtament. Circumciſion, which is knowen to aunſwere to our baptiſme, was appointed for infants. But the paſſeouer into whoes place the Supper hath nowe ſucceeded, did not receiue all maner of geſtes without difference, but was rightly eaten of them onely that might by age enquire of the ſignification of it. If theſe men had remaining one crumme of ſounde braine, would they be blinde at a thing ſo clere and offring it ſelfe to ſight? 1. Cor. 11.28.

31 Although it greueth me to lode the readers with a heape of trifles: yet it ſhalbe worth the trauaill brefely to wipe away ſuch gay reaſons as Seruettus not the leaſt of the Anabaptiſtes, yea the great glory of that company, thought himſelfe to bring when he prepared himſelfe to cōflict. He allegeth, that Chriſtes ſignes as they be perfect, ſo do require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the ſolution is eaſy: that the perfection of baptiſme, which extēdeth euen to death, is wrongfully reſtrained to one point of time. I ſay yet further, that perfection is fooliſhly required in man at the firſt day, whereunto baptiſme allureth vs all our life long by continual degrees. He obiecteth that Chriſtes ſignes were ordeined for remembrance, that euery man ſhould remember that he was buried together with Chriſt. I aunſwere that, that which he hath fained of his owne head, needeth no confutation: yea that which he draweth to baptiſme, Paules wordes ſhewe to be propre to the holy Supper, that euery man ſhould examine himſelf: but of baptiſme there is no where any ſuch thing. Whereupon we gather that they be rightly baptiſed which for their ſmalneſſe of age, are not yet able to receiue examination. Whereas he thirdly allegeth, that all they abide in death which beleue not the Sonne of God, and that the wrath of God abideth vpon them: and therefore that infants which can not beleue lie in their damnation: I aunſwere that Chriſt there ſpeaketh not of the generall giltineſſe wherewith all the poſteritie of Adam are enwrapped, but onely threteneth the deſpiſers of the Goſpell, which do proudely and ſtubbornely refuſe the grace offred them. But this nothing perteineth to infantes. Alſo I ſet a contrarie reaſon againſt thē: that whomſoeuer Chriſt bleſſeth, he is diſcharged from the curſe of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is knowen that infantes are bleſſed of him, it followeth that they are diſcharged from death. Then he falſly citeth that which is no where red, that whoſoeuer is borne of the Spirit, heareth the voice of the Spirit. Which although we graunt to be written, yet ſhall proue nothing els but that the faithfull are framed to obedience, according as the Spirit worketh in them. But that which is ſpoken of a certaine number, it is faultie to drawe indifferently to all. Fowerthly he obiecteth: becauſe that goth before which is naturall, we muſt tarry ripe time for baptiſme which is ſpirituall. But although I graunt that all the poſteritie of Adam begotten of the fleſhe do from the very wombe beare their owne damnation, yet I denie that that withſtandeth but that God may preſently bring remedy. For neither ſhall Seruettus proue that there were many yeares appointed by God that the ſpirituall newneſſe of life many beginne. As Paule teſtifieth, although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by ſupernaturall grace they are ſaued. Then he bringeth forth an allegorie, that Dauid going vp into ỹ toure of Sion, did leade neither blinde men nor lame men with him but ſtrong ſouldiors. But what if I ſet a parable againſt it, wherein God calleth to the heauenly banket blinde men and lame men: howe will Seruettus vnwinde himſelfe out of this knott? I aſke alſo whether lame and maimed men had not firſt bene ſouldiors with Dauid. But it is ſuperfluous to tary lōger vpon this reaſon, which the readers ſhall finde by the holy hiſtorie to be made of mere falſehod. There followeth an other allegorie, that the Apoſtles were fiſhers of men, not of litle children. But I aſke, what that ſaying of Chriſt meaneth, that into the nette of the Goſpel are gathered all kindes of fiſhes. But becauſe I like not to play with allegories, allegories, I aunſwere that when the office of teaching was enioined to the Apoſtles, yet they were not forbidden from baptiſing of infantes. Howbeit I would yet knowe, when the Euangeliſte nameth them Anthropous men, (in which word is comprehended all mankinde without exception) why they ſhould deny infantes to be men. Seuenthly he allegeth, that ſith ſpirituall things agree with ſpirituall, infantes which are not ſpirituall, are alſo not mete for baptiſme. But firſt it is plainly euident howe wrongfully they wreſt the place of Paule. There is entreated of doctrine: when the Corinthians did to much ſtande in their owne conceite for vaine ſharpneſſe of witte, Paule rebuketh their ſluggiſhneſſe, for that they were yet to be inſtructed in the firſt introductions of heauenly wiſdome. Who can thereof gather that baptiſme is to be denied to infants, whom being begotten of the fleſh God doth by free adoption make holy to himſelfe? Whereas he ſaith, that they muſt be fed with ſpirituall meate, if they be newe men, the ſolution is eaſy, that by baptiſme they are admitted into the flocke of Chriſt, and that the ſigne of adoption ſuffiſeth them, till being growen to age they be able to beare ſtrong meate: that therefore the time of examination which God expreſly requireth in the holy Supper, muſt be taried for. Afterward he obiecteth that Chriſt calleth all his to the holy Supper. But it is certaine enough that he admitteth none, but them that be already prepared to celebrate the remembrance of his death. Whereupon followeth that infantes, whom he vouchesaued to embrace, do ſtay in a ſeuerall and proper degree by themſelues till they growe to age, and yet are not ſtrangers. Whereas he ſayeth, that it is monſtrous that a man after that he is borne, ſhould not eate: I aunſwere that ſoules are otherwiſe fed than by the outward eating of the Supper: and that therefore Chriſt is neuertheleſſe meate to infantes, although they abſteine from the ſigne. But of baptiſme the caſe is otherwiſe, by which onely the gate into the Church is opened to them. Againe he obiecteth that a good Stewarde diſtributeth meate to the houſeholde in due time. Which although I willingly graunt: yet by what right will he appoint vnto vs the certaine time of Baptiſme, that he may proue that it is not geuen to infantes out of time. Moreouer he bringeth in that commaundement of Chriſt to the Apoſtles, that they ſhould make haſt into the harueſt, while the fieldes waxe white. Verily Chriſt meaneth this onely, that the Apoſtles ſeying the fruit of their labor preſent, ſhould the more cherefully prepare themſelues to teache. Who ſhall thereof gather that the onely time of harueſt is the ripe time for baptiſme? His eleuenth reaſon is, that in the firſt Church

Christians and disciples were all one: but we see now that he fondly reasoneth from the parte to the whole. Disciples are called men of full age, which had bene already throughly taught, and had professed Christ: as it behoued that the Iewes vnder the lawe should be the disciples of Moses: yet no man shall thereof rightly gather, that infantes were strangers, whom the Lorde hath testified to be of his household. Beside these he allegeth, that all Christians are brethren, in which number infantes are not vnto vs, so long as we debarre them from the Supper. But I returne to that principle, that none are heires of the kingdome of heauen, but they that are the membres of Christ: then, that the embracing of Christ was a true token of the adoption, whereby infantes are ioined in common with full growen men, and that the absteining for a time from the Supper withstandeth not but that they perteine to the body of the Church. Neither did the these that was conuerted on the Crosse, cesse to be brother of the godly, although he neuer came to the Supper. Afterward he addeth, that none is made our brother but by the Spirit of adoption, which is geuen onely by the hearing of faith. I aunswere, that he still falleth backe into the same deceitefull argument, because he ouerthwartly draweth ẏ to infants which was spokē only of growē men. Paule teacheth there that this is Gods ordinarie maner of calling to bring his elect to the faith, whē he stirreth vp to them faithfull teachers, by whoes ministerie and trauaile he reacheth his hande to them. Who dare thereby appoint a lawe to him, but that he may by some other secret way graffe infantes into Christ? Where he obiecteth that Cornelius was baptised after that he had receiued the Holy Ghost: howe wrongfully he doth out of one example gather a generall rule, appereth by the Eunuch and the Samaritanes, in whom the Lorde kepte a cōtrary order, that baptisme went before the gifts of the Holy Ghost. The fiftenth reason is more than fooliſh. He saith that we are by regeneration made gods: and that they be gods to whom the word of God is spoken, which accordeth not to children that be infantes. Whereas he faineth a Godhead to the faithfull, that is one of his dotages, which it perteineth not to this present place to examine. But to wrest the place of the Psalme to so cōtrarie a sense, is a point of desperate shameleſnesse. Christ saith, that Kings and Magistrates are called of the Prophet goddes, because they beare an office appointed them of God. But, that which concerning the speciall commaundement of gouernance is directed to certaine men, this handsome expositor draweth to the doctrine of the Gospell, that he may banish infantes out of the Church. Againe he obiecteth,

Act. 8. 27.
Iohn. 1. 35.

that

that infantes can not be accompted newe men, becauſe they are not begotten by the word. But I do nowe againe repete that which I haue often ſaid, that to regenerate vs doctrine is the vncorruptible ſeede, if we be fit to receiue it: but when by reaſon of age there is not yet in vs aptneſſe to learne, God kepeth his degrees of regenerating. Afterward he commeth backe to his allegories, that in the lawe a ſhepe and a goate were not offred in ſacrifice ſo ſone as they came out of the wombe. If I liſted to drawe figures to this purpoſe, I could likewiſe redily obiect againſt him, that all firſt begotten things were conſecrate to God ſo ſone as they had opened the wombe: then, that a lambe muſt be killed at a yeares age. Wherupō followeth that manly ſtrength is not to be taried for, but rather that the newe and yet tender iſſues are choſen of God for ſacrifices. Furthermore he affirmeth that none can come to Chriſt, but they that haue bene prepared of Iohn. As though Iohns office were not enduring but for a time. But, to omitt this, truely that ſame preparation was not in the children whom Chriſt embraced and bleſſed. Wherefore let him go with his falſe principle. At length he calleth for patrones Triſmegiſtus and the Sibylles, to proue that holy waſhings perteine not but to them that are of growen age. Lo howe honorably he thinketh of the baptiſme of Chriſt, which he reduceth to the Ceremonies of the Gentiles, that it may be no otherwiſe miniſtred than pleaſeth Triſmegiſtus. But we more eſteeme the authoritie of God, whom it hath pleaſed to make infantes holy to himſelf, and to admitte them with the holy ſigne, the force whereof they did not yet by age vnderſtād. Neither do we compt it lawfull to borowe out of the cleanſings of the Gentiles any thing that may change in our baptiſme the euerlaſting and inuiolable lawe of God, which he hath ſtabliſhed concerning circumciſion. Laſt of all, he maketh this argument: that if it be lawful to baptiſe infantes without vnderſtanding, then baptiſme may enterludelike and in ſport be miniſtred of boyes when they play. But of this matter let him quarell with God by whoes commaundement circumciſion was common to infantes before that they had atteined vnderſtanding. Was it therefore a playing matter, or ſubiect to the follies of children, that they might ouerthrow the holy ordinance of God? But it is no meruaile that theſe reprobate Spirits, as though they were vexed with a phreneſie, do thruſt in all the groſſeſt abſurdities for defence of their errors: becauſe God doth with ſuch giddineſſe iuſtly take vengeance of their pride and ſtubborneſſe. Verily I truſt I haue made plaine with howe feble ſuccors Seruettus hath holpen his ſilly brethren the Anabaptiſts.

Exo. 12. 5.

32 Nowe I thinke it will be doutfull to no ſobre man, howe raſhly they trouble the Church of Chriſt, that moue brawles and contentions for the baptiſme of infantes. But it is profitable to cõſider, what Satan goeth about with this ſo great ſutteltye: euen to take away from vs the ſingular fruit of affiance and ſpirituall ioy which is to be gathered hereof, & to diminiſh as much alſo of the glory of the goodneſſe of God. For howe ſwete is it to godly mindes, to be certified not onely by word, but alſo by ſight to be ſeene with eyes; that they obteine ſo much fauor with the heauenly father, that he hath alſo care of their poſteritie? For here it is to be ſeene, howe he taketh vpon him the perſon of a moſt prouident Father of houſeholde toward vs, which euen after our death doth not lay away his carefulneſſe of vs, but prouideth and forſeeth for our children. Ought we not here after the example of Dauid with al our hart to leape vp vnto thankeſgeuing, that by ſuch ſhewe of his goodneſſe, his name may be ſanctified? This, verily Satan intendeth, in aſſailing with ſo great armies the baptiſme of infantes: namely, that this teſtifying of the grace of God being taken away, the promiſe which by it is preſent before our eyes, may at length by little and little vaniſh away. Whervpon ſhould growe not onely a wicked vnthankfulneſſe toward the mercy of God, but alſo a certaine ſlouthfulneſſe in inſtructing our children to godlineſſe. For by this ſpurre we are not a little pricked forward to bring them vp in the earneſt feare of God & in the keping of his lawe, when we cõſider that euen immediatly from their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. Wherefore vnleſſe we liſt enuiouſly to darken the bountifulneſſe of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whom he geueth a place among them that be of his familie and houſeholde, that is to ſay, the members of the Church.

Pſa. 48. 11.

The xvij. Chapter.

Of the holy Supper of Chriſt: and what it auaileth vs.

AFter that God hath ones receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his ſeruantes, but as his children: that he may fulfill the office of a moſt good Father, and carefull for his iſſue, he taketh alſo vpon him to nouriſh vs throughout the whole courſe of our life. And not cõtented therewith, it pleaſed him by a pledge geuen, to aſſure vs of this continuall liberalitie. To this ende therefore he hath geuen his Church an other Sacrament by the hand of his only begotten Sonne, namely a ſpirituall banket, wherein Chriſt teſtifieth himſelfe to be the quickning bread, wherewith with our ſoules are fed to true & bleſſed immortalitie. But foraſmuch as the knowledge of ſo great a miſterie is very neceſſarie, and according to the greatneſſe thereof, requireth a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereue the Church of this ineſtimable treaſure, hath long ago ſpred miſtes, and ſins that time darkneſſe, to obſcure the light of it, and then hath ſtirred ſtriues and battels that might eſtrange the mindes of the ſimple from taſting of this holy fode, and hath alſo in our time attempted the ſame craft: therefore when I ſhall haue brefely knit vp the ſumme for the capacitie of the vnlearned, I will vndo thoſe knottes, wherewith Satan hath endeuored to ſnare the world. Firſt, bread and wine are ſignes, which repreſent vnto vs the inuiſible foode, which we receiue of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt. For as in baptiſme God againe begetting vs doth graffe vs into the fellowſhippe of his Church, and by adoption doth make vs his owne: ſo we haue ſaid that he performeth the office of a prouident Father of houſeholde, in this that he continually miniſtreth vs meate, that he ſuſteineth and preſerueth vs in that life whereinto he hath by his word begotten vs. Nowe the onely meate of our ſoule is Chriſt, and therfore the heauenly Father calleth vs to him, that being refreſhed with common partaking of him, we may from time to time gather liuely force, vntill we atteine to heauenly immortalitie. But foraſmuch as this miſterie of the ſecret vniting of Chriſt with the godly is by nature impoſſible to be comprehended, he geueth the figure and image thereof in viſible ſignes moſt fit for our ſmall capacitie: yea as it were by earneſtes and tokens geuen, he maketh it ſo aſſured vnto vs as if it were ſene with our eies, becauſe this ſo familiar a ſimilitude entreth euen into the groſſeſt mindes, that ſoules are ſo fed with Chriſt, as bread and wine do ſuſteine the bodily life. Nowe therefore we haue it declared, to what ende this miſticall bleſſing tendeth, namely to aſſure vs, that the body of the Lorde was ſo ones offred for vs, that we nowe eate it, and in eating it do fele in vs the effectuall working of that onely ſacrifice: that his blood was ſo ones ſhed for vs, that it is vnto vs continuall drinke. And ſo ſounde the words of the promiſe there adioined. Take, this is my body, which is deliuered for you. The body therefore which was ones offred vp for our ſaluation, we are commaunded to take and eate: that when we ſee our ſelues to be made partakers of this, we may certainly determine that the power of his death which bringeth life ſhalbe effectuall in vs. Whereupon alſo he calleth the cuppe, the couenãt in his blood. For after a certaine maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the couenãt which he hath ones ſtabliſhed with his blood, ſo much as pertaineth to the confirming of our faith, ſo ofte as he teacheth vnto vs that holy blood to be taſted of.

Ioh. 6. 51.

2 A great fruit verily of affiáce and ſweteneſſe may godly ſoules gather of this Sacrament, becauſe they haue a witneſſe, that we are growen together into one body with Chriſt, ſo that whatſoeuer is his we may call ours. Hereupon followeth that we may boldly promiſe vnto our ſelues, that euerlaſting life is ours, whereof he is heire: and that the kingdome of heauen, whereinto he is nowe entred, can no more fall away from vs than from him: againe that we can not nowe be condemned by our ſinnes, from the giltineſſe whereof he hath acquited vs, when he willed them to be imputed to himſelf as if they were his owne. This is the maruailous exchange, which of his immeaſurable boũtifulneſſe he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the ſonne of man, hath made vs with him the ſonnes of God: that by his comming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to go vp into heauen: that putting vpon him our mortalitie, he hath geuen vs his immortalitie: that taking on him our weakeneſſe, he hath ſtrengthened vs with his power: that taking our pouerty to himſelfe he hath conueyed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnrighteouſnes, wherewith we were oppreſſed, he hath clothed vs with his righteouſneſſe.

3 Of all theſe things we haue ſo full a witneſſing in this ſacrament, that we muſt certainly determine, that Chriſt is truely geuen vs, as if Chriſt himſelf were ſet preſent before our eyes, and handled with our handes. For this word can neither lie to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eate, drinke: this is my body which is deliuered for you: this is the blood, which is ſhed into the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. Whereas he commaundeth to take, he ſignifieth that it is ours. Whereas he commaundeth to eate, he ſignifieth that that is made one ſubſtance with vs. Whereas he ſaith of the body, that it is deliuered for vs: of the blood, that it is ſhed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not ſo much his as ours: becauſe he toke and laide away both, not for his commoditie, but to our ſaluation. And truely it is to be diligently marked, that the chiefe and in a maner whole pith of the ſacrament ſtandeth in theſe words, Which is deliuered for you, Which is ſhed for you. For, otherwiſe it ſhould not much profit vs, that the body and blood of the Lorde are nowe diſtributed, vnleſſe they had bene ones geuen forth for our redemption and ſaluation. Therefore they are repreſented vnder bread and wine, that we ſhould learne that they are not onely ours, but alſo ordeined for the nouriſhment of ſpirituall life. This is it that we before ſayed, that from the corporall porall things which are shewed forth in the Sacrament, we are by a certaine proportionall relation guided to spirituall things. So when bread is geuen vs for a signe of the body of Christ, we ought by and by to conceiue this similitude: As bread nourisheth, sustaineth, and mainteineth the life of our body: so the body of Christ is the onely meate to quicken and geue life to our soule. When we see wine set forth for a signe of his blood: we must call to minde what vses wine bringeth to the body, that we may consider that the same are brought to vs spiritually by the blood of Christ: those vses be, to cherish, to refresh, to strengthen, to make mery. For if we sufficiently weye, what the deliuering of this holy body, what the shedding of this holy blood, hath profited vs: we shall plainly perceiue that these things which are spoken of bread and wine, according to such proportionall relation do very well accorde with them toward vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

4 Therefore the chiefe partes of the Sacrament are not, simply and without hier consideration to reach to vs the body of Christ: but rather that same promise, whereby he testifieth, that his flesh is verily meate, and his blood is drinke, with which we are fed into eternall life: whereby he affirmeth himselfe to be the breade of life, of which who so eateth, he shall liue for euer: to seale (I say) and confirme that promise: and for bringing the same to passe, to tende vs to the crosse of Christ, where that promise hath bene truely performed, and in all pointes fulfilled. For we do not well and healthfully eate Christ but crucified, when we do with liuely feeling conceiue the effectualnesse of his death. For whereas he called himselfe the breade of life, he did not borrowe that name of the sacrament, as some do wrongfully expounde it: but because he was geuen vs such of the Father, and performed himselfe such, when being made partaker of our humane mortalitie, he made vs parteners of his diuine immortalitie: when offring himselfe for sacrifice, he toke our accursednesse vpon himself, that he might fill vs with blessing: when with his death he deuoured and swalowed vp death: when in his resurrection he raised vp this our corruptible flesh which he had put on, to glory and vncorruption.

5 It remaineth that by appliance all the same may come to vs. That is done, both by the Gospell, and more cleerely by the holy Supper, where both he offreth himself to vs with all his good things, and we receiue him by faith. Wherefore the sacrament maketh not that Christ first beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance, that he was made the bread of life, which we continually eate, and when it geueth vnto vs the tast and sauor of that breade then it maketh vs to fele the ſtrength of that bread. For it promiſeth vs, that whatſoeuer Chriſt did or ſuffred, the ſame was done to geue life to vs. Then, that this geuing of life is euerlaſting, by which we may without ende be nouriſhed, ſuſteined, & preſerued in life. For as Chriſt ſhould not haue bene to vs the bread of life, vnleſſe he had bene borne and had died for vs, vnleſſe he had riſen againe for vs: ſo now he ſhould not be the ſame vnleſſe the effectualneſſe and fruit of his birth, death and reſurrectiō, were an euerlaſting and immortall thing. All which Chriſt hath very well expreſſed in Iohn. 6. 51. theſe wordes: The bread which I will geue, is my fleſh, which I will geue for the life of the world. By which words without dout he ſignifieth, that his body ſhould therfore be to vs for bread, to the ſpirituall life of the ſoule, becauſe it ſhould be geuen forth to death for our ſaluation: and that it is deliuered to vs to eate of it, when by faith he maketh vs partakers of it. Ones therfore he gaue it, that he might be made bread, when he gaue forth himſelfe to be crucified for the redemption of the world: daily he geueth it, when by the word of the Goſpell he offreth it vnto vs to be receiued, ſo farre as it was crucified: where he ſealeth that deliueráce with the holy miſterie of the Supper: where he inwardly fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Nowe herein we muſt beware of two faultes, that neither doing to much in abacing the ſignes, we ſeeme to plucke them from their miſteries to which they are in a maner knitte faſt: nor that being immeaſurable in aduancing the ſame, we ſeeme in the meane time ſomwhat to darkē the miſteries themſelues. That Chriſt is the bread of life, wherewith the faithfull are nouriſhed into eternall ſaluation, there is no man but he graunteth, vnleſſe he be altogether without religion. But this point is not likewiſe agreed vpon among all men, what is the maner of partaking of him. For there be that in one word define, that to eate the fleſh of Chriſt, and to drinke his blood, is nothing els but to beleue in Chriſt himſelfe. But I thinke that Chriſt meant ſome certainer and hier thing, in that notable ſermon where he commendeth to vs the eating of his fleſhe: namely, that we are quickned by the true partaking of him: which alſo he therefore expreſſed by the wordes of eating and drinking, leaſt any man ſhould thinke, that the life which we receiue of him is conceiued by bare knowledge only. For as not the ſight, but the eating of bread ſuffiſeth the body for nouriſhmēt: ſo it behoueth that the ſoule be truely and throughly made partaker of Chriſt, that by the power of him it may be quickened into a ſpirituall life. But in the meane time we confeſſe that there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined.

imagined. But this is the difference betweene my wordes and theirs, that whith them to eate is onely to beleue: but I say that the flesshe of Christ is eateh with beleuing, because by faith he is made ours, and I say that eating is the fruite and effect of faith. Or, if you will haue it plainer, with them eating is faith: and I thinke it rather to followe of faith. In wordes verily the difference is but smalle: but in the thing it selfe, not small. For though the Apostle teacheth that Christ dwelleth in our hartes by Faith: yet no man will expounde this dwelling to be faith: but all men do perceiue that there is expressed a singular effect of faith, for that by it the faithfull do obteine to haue Christ dwelling in them. After this maner, the Lorde meant, in calling himselfe the bread of life, not onely to teache that in the faith of his death and resurrection, saluation is reposed for vs: but also that by true partaking of himselfe it is brought to passe, that his life passeth into vs, and becometh oures: like as bread, when it is taken for foode, ministreth liuelinesse to the body. Ephe. 3. 17. Iohn. 6. 51.

6 Neither did Augustine, whom they bring in for their patron, in any other meaning write that we eate by beleuing, than to shewe that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I also denie not: but yet therewithall I adde, that we do by faith embrace Christ, not appearing afarre of, but making himselfe one with vs, that he may be out head, and we his membres. Yet do not I vtterly disalowe that maner of speaking: but onely I deny it to be a full declaration, if they meane to define what it is to eate the flesshe of Christ. Otherwise I see that Augustine hath ofte vsed this forme of speche: as when he saith in the thirde boke Of Christian doctrine, Vnlesse ye eate the flesshe of the sonne of man: this is a figure teaching that we must communicate with the passion of the Lorde, and must sweetely and profitably lay vp in remembrance that for vs his flesshe was crucified and wounded. Againe when he sayeth, that the three thousande menne which were conuerted at Peters sermon, did drinke the bloode of Christ by beleuing, which they had shedde by cruell dealing. But in many other places he honorably setteth out that benefit of faith, that by it our soules are no lesse refreshed with the communicating of the flesshe of Christ, than our bodies are with the breade which they eate, And the same is it which in a certaine place Chrisostome writeth, that Christ doth not onely by faith, but also in deede make vs his body. For he meaneth not that we do from any other where than from faith, obteine such a benefite: but this onely he meaneth to exclude, that none when he heareth faith to be named, shoulde conceiue a naked imagination. As for Homel. in Ioh. 31. and 40. Act. 2. 41. Homel. 60.

them that wil haue the Supper to be onely a marke of outward profession, I do nowe passe them ouer: becausе I thinke that I haue sufficiently confuted their error, when I entreated of Sacraments generally. Onely this thing let the reders marke, that when the cup is called the couenant in the blood, there is a promise expressed that may be of force to confirme faith. Wherupon followeth, that vnlesse we haue respect to God, and embrace that which he offreth, we do not rightly vse the holy Supper.

7 Moreouer they also do not satisfie me, which acknowledging that we haue some communion with Christ, when they meane to expresse it, do make vs partakers onely of the Spirit, without making any mention of flesh and blood. As though all those things were spoken of nothing, that his flesh is verily meate, that his blood is verily drinke: that none hath life, but he that eateth that flesh, and drinketh that blood: and such other sayings that belong to the same ende. Wherfore if it be certaine that the full cõmunicating of Christ procedeth beyonde their description, as it is to narowly strained: I will nowe go about to knit vp in fewe wordes, howe large it is and howe farre it extendeth it selfe, before that I speake of the contrarie fault of excesse. For I shall haue a longer disputation with the excessiue teachers, which, when according to their owne grossnesse they frame a maner of eating and drinking full of absurditie, do also transfigure Christ stripped out of his flesh into a fantasie: if yet a man may with any wordes comprehende so great a misterie, which I se that I can not sufficiently comprehende with minde: and therefore I do willingly confesse it, that no man shoulde measure the hinesse thereof by the small proportion of my childishnesse. But rather I exhorte the reders, that they do not restraine the sense of their minde within these to narrowe boundes: but endeuor to rise vp much hier, than they can by my guiding. For I my selfe, so oft as I speake of this thing, when I haue trauailed to say all, thinke that I haue yet said but litle in respect of the worthinesse thereof. And although the minde can do more in thinking, than the tong in expressing: yet with greatnesse of the thing, the mind also is surmounted and ouerwhelmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but that I must breake fourth into admiration of that misterie, which neither the minde can suffise to thinke of, nor the tong to declare. Yet after such maner as I can, I will set fourth the summe of my sentẽce: which as I nothing dout to be true, so I trust that it will not be disallowed of godly hartes.

8 First of all, we are taught out of the Scripture, that Christ was

from the beginning that life bringing word of the Father, the fountaine and originall of life, from whenſe all things euer receiued their hauing of life. Wherefore Iohn ſometime calleth him the word of life, and ſomtime writeth that life was in him: meaning that he euen then flowing into all creatures, poured into them the power of breathing and liuing. Yet the ſame Iohn addeth afterward, that the life was then and not till then openly ſhewed, when the Sonne of God, taking vpon him our fleſhe, gaue himſelfe to be ſene with eyes and felte with handes. For though he did before alſo ſpred abrode his power into the creatures: yet becauſe man, being by ſinne eſtranged from God, hauing loſt the cõmunion of life, ſawe on euery ſide death hanging ouer him: that he might recouer hope of immortalitie, it behoued that he ſhould be receiued into the communion of that word. For howe ſmall a confidence mayeſt thou conceiue thereof, if thou heare that the word of God in deede, from which thou art moſt farre remoued, conteineth in it ſelfe the fulneſſe of life, but in thy ſelfe and rounde about thee nothing offreth it ſelfe and is preſent before thine eyes but death? But ſins that fountaine of life beganne to dwell in our fleſhe, nowe it lieth not a farre of hidden from vs, but preſently deliuereth it ſelfe to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very fleſhe, wherein it reſteth, to be of power to bring life to vs, that by partaking thereof we may be fed to immortalitie. I am (ſaith he) the bred of life, that am come downe from heauen. And the bred which I will geue, is my fleſhe, which I will geue for the life of the world. In which wordes he teacheth, not onely that he is life, in reſpect that he is the eternall word of God which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in comming downe he poured the ſame power into the fleſhe which he did put on, that from thenſe the communicating of life might flowe fourth vnto vs. Hereupon alſo theſe things nowe followe, that his fleſhe is verily meate, and his blood is verily drinke, with which ſuſtenances the faithfull are foſtered into eternall life. Herein therefore conſiſteth ſingular comfort to the godly, that nowe they finde life in their owne fleſhe. For ſo they do not onely with eaſy paſſage atteine vnto it, but haue it of it ſelfe laid abrode for them and offring it ſelfe vnto them. Onely let them holde open the boſome of their hart, that they may embrace it being preſent, and they ſhall obteine it. Iohn. 6. 48. and 58.

9 But although the fleſhe of Chriſt haue not ſo great power of it ſelfe, that it can geue life to vs, which both in the owne firſt eſtate of it was ſubiecte to mortalitie, and nowe being endued with immortalitie, liueth not by it ſelfe: yet it is rightfully called life bringing, which is filled with fulneſſe of life, to poure it into vs. In which mea-Iohn. 5. 19 ning I do with Cirill expounde that ſaying of Chriſt: as the Father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath alſo geuen to the Sonne to haue life in himſelfe. For there he properly ſpeaketh of his giftes, not which he from the beginning poſſeſſed with the Father, but with which he was garniſhed in the ſame fleſhe in which he appeared. Therefore he ſheweth that in his manhode alſo dwelleth the fulneſſe of life, that whoſoeuer partaketh of his fleſhe and blood, may therewithall alſo enioy the partaking of life. Of what ſort that is, we may declare by a familiar example. For as out of a fountaine water is ſometime dronke, ſometime is drawen, ſometime by forrowes is conueyed to the watering of groundes, which yet of it ſelfe doth not ouerflowe into ſo many vſes, but from the very ſpring it ſelfe which with euerlaſting flowing yeldeth and miniſtreth vnto it from time to time new aboundance: ſo the fleſhe of Chriſt is like a riche and vnwaſted fountaine which poureth into vs the life ſpringing from the Godhead into it ſelfe. Nowe who ſeeth not, that the communion of the fleſhe and blood of Chriſt is neceſſarie to all that aſpire to heauenly life? Hereunto tendeth that ſaying of the Apoſtle, that the Church is the body of Chriſt and the fulfilling of it: and that he is the head out of which the whole body coupled and knit together by iointes, maketh encreaſe of the body: that our bodies are the members of Chriſt. All which things we vnderſtande to be impoſſible to be brought to paſſe, but that he muſt wholly cleaue to vs in Spirit and body. But that moſt nere fellowſhip whereby we are coupled with his fleſhe, he hath yet ſet out with a more glorious title, when he ſaid that we

Eph. 5. 30. are members of his body, and are of his bones and of his fleſhe. At the laſt, to declare it to be a matter greater than all wordes, he concludeth his ſaying with an exclamation, This is (ſaith he) a great ſecret. Therefore it ſhould be a pointe of extreme madneſſe, to acknowledge no communion of the faithfull with the fleſhe and blood of the Lord, which the Apoſtle declareth to be ſo great, that he had rather wonder at it than expreſſe it.

10 Let the ſumme be, that our ſoules are ſo fed with the fleſh & blood of Chriſt, as bred and wine do mainteine and ſuſteine the bodily life. For otherwiſe the proportionall relation of the ſigne ſhould not agree, vnleſſe ſoules did finde their fode in Chriſt. Which can not be done, vnleſſe Chriſt do truely growe into one with vs, and refreſh vs with the eating of his fleſhe and drinking of his blood. But although it ſeeme incredible, that in ſo great diſtance of places the fleſh of Chriſt reacheth to vs that it may be meate to vs: let vs remēber

howe much the ſecret power of the Spirit ſurmounteth aboue all our ſenſes, and howe fooliſh it is to go about to meaſure his vnmeaſurableneſſe by our meaſure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the Spirit truely knitteth in one thoſe thinges that are ſeuered in places. Nowe that ſame holy communicating of his body and blood, whereby Chriſt poureth his life into vs, euen as if he pearced it into our bones and marowes, he in the Supper alſo teſtifieth and ſealeth: and that not with ſetting before vs a vaine or voide ſigne, but bringing fourth there the effectuall working of his ſpirit, whereby he fulfilleth that which he promiſeth. And verily he there offreth and deliuereth the thing ſignified to all them that ſit at that ſpirituall banket: although it be receiued with fruit of the faithfull onely, which receiue ſo great bountifulneſſe with true faith and thankfulneſſe of minde. After which maner the Apoſtle ſaid, that the bred which we breake is the communion of the body of Chriſt: and that the cup which we hallowe with the word and prayers to that purpoſe, is the communion of his blood. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould obiect, that it is a figuratiue ſpeche, by which the name of the thing ſignified is geuē to the ſigne. I graunt verily that the breaking of the bred is a ſigne, not the thing it ſelfe. But this being admitted, yet we ſhall rightly gather of the deliuerance of the ſigne, that the thing it ſelfe is deliuered. For vnleſſe a man will call God a deceiuer, he can neuer be ſo bolde to ſay that he ſetteth before vs an empty ſigne. Therefore if by the breaking of bred the Lorde doth truely repreſente the partaking of his body, it ought to be out of dout that he truely performeth and deliuereth it. And this rule is alway to be holden of the godly, that ſo oft as they ſe the ſignes ordeined of the Lorde, they certainely thinke and perſuade them ſelues that ỹ truth of the thing ſignified is there preſent. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Lord deliuer to thee into thy hande the ſigne of his body, but to aſſure thee of the true partaking of it? If it be true, that a viſible ſigne is geuen vs, to ſeale the gift of an inuiſible thing: when we receiue the ſigne of the body, let vs no leſſe certainly beleue that the body it ſelfe alſo is geuen vs. 2. Cor. 10.16.

11 I ſay therefore (which both hath bine alway receiued in the Church, and all they teache at this day that thinke right) that the holy miſterie of the Supper conſiſteth of two things: that is to ſay, of the bodily ſignes, which being ſet before our eyes do repreſent vnto vs inuiſible things according to the capacitie of our weakeneſſe: and of ſpirituall trueth, which is by thoſe ſignes both figured and deliuered. Of what ſort that is, when I meane to ſhewe it familiarly,

I vſe to ſet three things: the ſignification, the matter which hangeth of the ſignification, the vertue or effect wich followeth of both. The ſignification conſiſteth in the promiſes, which are after a certaine manner wrapped together with the ſigne. The matter or ſubſtance I call Chriſt with his death and reſurrection. By effect I vnderſtande the redemption, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and eternall life, and whatſoeuer other benefites Chriſt bringeth vs. Nowe although all theſe things haue reſpect to faith: yet I leaue no place to this cauillation: as though when I ſay that Chriſt is receiued by faith, I would haue him conceiued with vnderſtanding onely and imagination. For the promiſes offer him, not that we ſhould ſticke faſt in the ſight alone and in bare knowledge: but that we ſhould enioy the true communicating of him. And truely I ſe not howe any man may haue confidence that he hath redemption and righteouſneſſe in the croſſe of Chriſt, and life in his death, but principally ſtanding vpon the true communion of Chriſt himſelfe. For thoſe good things ſhould not come to vs, vnleſſe Chriſt firſt made himſelfe ours. I ſay therefore, that in the miſterie of the Supper, by the ſignes of bread and wine Chriſt is truely deliuered to vs, yea and his body and blood, in which he hath fulfilled all obedience for purchaſing of righteouſneſſe to vs: namely that firſt we ſhould growe together into one body with him: and then being made partakers of his ſubſtance, we may alſo fele his power in the communicating of all his good things.

12 Nowe I come downe to the exceſſiue mixtures which ſuperſtition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath played with maruelous ſutteltie, that withdrawing the mindes of men from heauen, he might fill them with peruerſe error, as though Chriſt were faſtened to the element of bred. And firſt we muſt not dreame ſuch a preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as the crafteſment of the court of Rome haue fained: as though the body of Chriſt were made preſent with preſence of place, to be handled with handes, to be brooſed with teethe, and ſwallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicolas endited to Berengarius, to be a witneſſe of his repentance: namely with wordes ſo far monſtruous, that the author of the gloſe crieth out that there is danger, if the reders do not wiſely take heede to themſelues, leaſt they ſhould ſucke out of them an hereſie worſe than was that of Berengarius. In the ſeconde diſtinction, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he trauaile much in excuſing the abſurdity, yet more inclineth to the contrary ſentẽce. For as we nothing dout that it hath limites according to the perpetuall nature of the body of men, and is holden in heauen, into which it was once receiued, vntil he returne to iudgement: so to draw it backe vnder these corruptible elementes or to imagine it present euery where, we accompt it to be vtterly vnlawfull. Neither verily is it so nedefull to this that we may enioy the partakinge of it: forasmuch as the Lord giueth vs this benefit by his Spirite, that we be made one with him in body, Spirite, and soule. The bonde therefore of this conioyninge is the Spirite of Christ, by the knitting wherof we be coupled together, and as it were a certaine conduit, by which whatsoeuer Christ himselfe both is and hath, is conueied to vs. For if we beholde the sunne shininge foorth with his beames vppon the earth after a certaine maner to cast forth his substance vnto it to engender, nourishe, and quicken the frutes thereof: why should the extendinge of beames of the Spirite of Christ be inferiour to conuey the communion of his flesshe and blood into vs? Wherefore the Scripture, when it speaketh of our partakinge with Christ, referreth the whole force thereof to the Spirite. Yet in stede of many, one place shalbe sufficient. For Paule in the eight Chapter to the Romaines, sayeth that Christ dwelleth in vs none otherwise than by his Spirit: whereby yet he taketh not away that communion of his flesshe and blood of which we now speake, but teacheth that the Spirite alone worketh that we possesse whole Christ and haue him dwelling in vs.

13 The Schoolemen thought more shamefastly which were withholden with horrour of so barbarous vngodlinesse. Yet they also thēselues do nothing but mocke with sutteler deceites. They graūt that Christ is not contained there by way of circumscription nor after a bodily maner: but afterward they inuent a way, which neither themselues do vnderstande, nor they can declare to other: yet it is such as falleth to this point that Christ must be sought in the forme of bred as they call it. For what is it? When they say that the substance of bread is turned into Christ, do they not fasten him to the whitenes which they there leaue? But (say they) he is so contained in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heauen: and we determine no other presence but of habitude. But whatsoeuer words they bring in to cloke it with a deceitfull colour, this is the ende of all, that that is by consecration made Christ, which before was bread: that from thense foorth Christ lieth hid vnder that colour of bread. Which also they are not ashamed in plaine words to expresse. For these be ỹ words of Lombarde: that the body of Christ, which in it selfe is visible, when the consecration is ended, lieth hidden and is couered vnder the forme of bred. So the forme of that bread is nothing else but a visour, that taketh away the ſight of the fleſh from the eies. Neither nede we many coniectures, to finde what ſnares they minded to lay with theſe wordes, ſith the thinge it ſelfe plainely ſpeaketh it. For it is to be ſeene with howe great ſuperſtition in certaine ages paſt, not onely the common ſorte of men, but alſo the very chiefe of them haue bin holden, and at this day be holden in popiſhe Churches. For hauinge litle care of true Faith (by which alone we both come into ỹ felowſhip of Chriſt, and do cleaue together with him) ſo that they haue a carnal preſence of him, which they haue framed beſide the worde, they thinke that they haue him preſent enough. Therefore in a ſumme, we ſee that this hath bin gotten by this witty ſuttelty, that bread was taken for God.

14 From henſe proceeded that ſame fained tranſubſtantiation, for which at this day they fight more earneſtly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the firſt builders of that locall preſence could not vnwinde themſelues frō this dout how the body of Chriſt ſhould be mingled with the ſubſtance of bread, but that by and by many abſurdities did thruſt themſelues in place. Therefore they were driuen of neceſſity to flee to his inuention, that there is made a turninge of bread into the body: not that the body is properly made of God, but becauſe Chriſt, that he might hide himſelfe vnder the forme, bringeth the ſubſtance to nothing. But it is maruelous, that they fell to ſo great ignorance, yea ſenſeleſſe dulneſſe, that not onely the Scripture but alſo the conſent of ỹ old Church fighting againſt it, they brought abroade that monſter. I graunt in dede that ſome of the olde writers ſomtime vſed the name of turning: not for that they woulde deſtroy the ſubſtance in the outwarde ſignes, but that they might teache that the bread dedicate to the myſtery differeth farre from common bread and is nowe other. But ech where they all plainely declare, that the holy Supper conſiſteth of two partes, an earthly parte, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they do without controuerſie expound to be bread and wine. Truely whatſoeuer they babble, it is plaine that in confirming of this doctrine they want the defenſe of antiquity, which they oftentimes preſume to ſet againſt the euident word of God. For it is not ſo long ago ſince it was inuented: it was verily vnknowē not only to thoſe better ages, in which the purer doctrine of religion yet floriſhed, but alſo euen when that ſame pureneſſe was much defiled. There is none of the old writers that doth not in expreſſe words confeſſe that the holy ſignes in the Supper are bread and wine: although, as we haue ſayd, they ſometime ſette it out with diuerſe titles, to aduaunce the dignity of the myſtery. For whereas they ſay that in the consecration is made a secrete turning, that now it is an other thing than bread and wine: I haue euen now giuen warninge that they do not thereby meane that the things thẽselues are brought to nought, but that they are now to be otherwise estemed than cõmon meates, which are appointed only to feede the belly: forasmuch as in them is deliuered to vs the spirituall meate and drinke of the soule. This we also deny not. If (say these men) there be a turninge, it must needes be that there is of one thinge made an other thinge. If they meane that there is some thinge made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will draw it to ẏ their owne imagination, let them aunswere me what chãge they thinke to be made in baptisme. For herein the Fathers also do determine a maruellous turning, whẽ they say that of a corruptible element is made a spirituall washing of the soule, yet none of them denieth that water remaineth. But (say they) there is no such thing in baptisme, as is that in the Supper. This is my body. As though the question were of those words, which haue a meaning plaine enough: & not rather, of ẏ word of turning, which ought to signify no more in the Supper thã in baptisme. Therfore farewel they with these snares of syllables, whereby they do nothing else but bewray their owne hungrinesse. For otherwise the signification woulde not agree together, vnlesse the trueth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outward signe. Christes wil was by the outward signe to testifie that his flesh is meate. If he did set before vs only an empty imaginatiue forme of bread not true bread, where were the corelation or similitude which shoulde leade vs frõ the visible thing to the inuisible? For, that all thinges may agree together, the signification shall extende no further, but that we be fed with the forme of the flesh of Christ. As, if in baptisme ẏ forme of water should deceiue our eies, it shoulde not be to vs a certaine pledge of our washinge: yea by that deceitfull shewe there should be giuen vs an occasion of waueringe. Therfore the nature of the Sacrament is ouerthrowen, vnlesse in the maner of signifying, the earthly signe answere to the heauenly thing. And therfore we loose the trueth of this mystery, vnlesse true bread represent to vs the true body of Christ. I repeate it againe: Sith the Supper is nothing else, than a visible testifyinge of that promise which is in the 6. chapter of Iohn, namely ẏ Christ is the bread of life, which came downe frõ heauen: there must be visible bread vsed for a meane, whereby that same spiritual bread may be figured: vnlesse we will that we loose all the frute, which in this behalfe God tenderly graunteth to sustaine our weakenesse. Now by what reason should Paule gather, that all we are one body and one bread, which do together partake 1. Cor. 10. 17.

15 But they could neuer haue bin so fowly begiled with ỹ deceites of Satan, but because they were already bewitched with this errour, that the body of Christ enclosed vnder bread was by ỹ bodily mouth sent downe into the belly. The cause of so brutish imagination was, that consecration signified as much amonge them as a magicall enchauntment. But this principle was vnknowen to them, that bread is a Sacrament to none but to men, to whom the word is directed: like as the water of baptisme is not changed in it selfe, but so soone as the promise is adioined, it beginneth to be that to vs which it before was not. This shall better appeare by example of a like Sacrament. The water springing out of the rocke in the desert was to the fathers a token and signe of the same thing, which the wine doth figure to vs in the Supper. For Paule teacheth that they dronke the same spirituall drinke. But it was a common wateringe for the beastes and catell of the people. Whereupon it is easily gathered, that in earthly elements, when they are applied to a spirituall vse, there is made no other turninge but in respect of men, in so much as they are to them seales of the promises. Moreouer sith Gods purpose is (as I often repeate) as it were by handsome chariots to lift vs vppe to himselfe, they do by their waywardnesse wickedly disappoint the same, which do in deede call vs to Christ, but lurking inuisibly vnder bread. For it is not possible that the minde of men, vncombring it selfe from the immeasurableness of places, should attaine to Christ euen aboue the heauens. That which nature denied them, they attempted to amende with a more hurtfull remedy: that abiding in earth, we should neede no heauenly neereness of Christ. Loe, this is the necessity, that compelled them to transfigure the body of Christ. In Bernardes time, although a harder maner of speaking was growen in vse, yet transubstantiation was not then kuowen. And in all ages before that, this similitude did flie about in euery mans mouth, that there is with bread and wine a spirituall thing ioyned in this mystery. Of the wordes they answere, as they thinke, wittily: but bringing nothing fit for this present cause. The rod of Moses (say they) being turned into a Serpent, although it did get the name of a Serpent, yet keepeth still the olde name, and is called a rod. So in their opinion it is as probable, that although the bread passe into a newe substance, it may be abusiuely and yet not vnaptly called that which it appeareth to the eies. But what likelihoode or nereness finde they betwene a cleare miracle, and their fained illusion, of which no eie in earth is witnesse? The Magicians had mocked

with deceites, so that the Ægyptians were perswaded, that they excelled in diuine power to change creatures aboue the order of nature. Moses came forth, and driuinge away all their deceites, shewed that the inuincible power of God was on his side, because his owne rod consumed all the rest. But forasmuch as that was a turninge discernable with eies, therefore as we haue sayd, it pertaineth nothinge to this present cause: and in a litle time after, the rod visibly returned into his owne forme. Beside that it is not knowē, whether that sudden turning was of substance or no. Also the alludinge to the rods of the Magicians is to be considered, which the Prophet therefore woulde not call Serpentes, leaſt he shoulde seeme to signifie a turninge where none was: because those deceiuers had done nothinge but cast a myst before the eies of the beholders. What likenesse herewith haue these formes of speeche, The bread which we breake, So oft as ye shall eate this bread, They communicated in breaking of bread, & such other? It is certaine that their eies were onely deceiued with the enchauntment of the Magicians. As concerninge Moses, the matter is more doutfull, by whose hande it was no more hard for God to make of a rod a Serpent, and againe of a Serpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleshely bodies, and byandby after to vncloth them. If the nature of this mystery were the same or like, there were some colour for their solution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truely nor fitly promised vs that in the Supper the flesh of Christ is truely to vs for meate, vnlesse the true substance of the outwarde Signe agree with it. And (as one errour groweth of an other) the place of Ieremy is so foolishely wrested to proue transubstantiation, that it irketh me to rehearse it. The Prophet complaineth that wood is put in his bread: meaninge that by the cruelty of his enemies, his bread was infected with bitternesse. As Dauid with a like figure bewaileth that his meate was corrupted with gall, and his drinke with vineger. These men will haue it that the body of Christ was by way of allegorie fastened to the crosse. But some of the olde fathers thought so. As though we ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, and to burie their shame, than to adde shamelesnesse to compell them yet still to fight like enemies with the naturall meaninge of the Prophet.

16 Other, which see that the proportionall relation of the signe & the thinge signified, can not be ouerthrowen, but that the trueth of the mystery must fall, do confesse that the bread of the Supper is verily a substance of an earthly and corruptible element, and suffereth no change in it selfe, but hath vnder it selfe the body of Christ enclo-

ſed. If they did ſo declare their meaninge, that when the bread is deliuered in the myſterie, there is adioyned the deliueringe of the body, becauſe the trueth is vnſeuerable from the ſigne: I woulde not much ſtriue with them. But becauſe they placing the body in the bread, do faine to it a beinge euery where contrary to the nature therof, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is neceſſarie a litle while to drawe ſuch ſutteltries out of their dennes. For my mind is not yet as of ſet purpoſe to go through with all this point: but only that I may lay the fundations of the diſputation which ſhall byandby folowe in place fitte for it. They will therefore haue the body of Chriſt to be inuiſible and immeaſurable, that it may he hid vnder the bread: becauſe they thinke they do not otherwiſe communicate with him than if he deſcend into bread: but they comprehend not the maner of deſcending, wherby he lifteth vs vpward to himſelfe. They lay vpon it all the colours that they can: but when they haue ſaid all, it ſufficiently appeareth, that they ſtay vpon the locall preſence of Chriſt. Whenſe commeth that? euen becauſe they can abide to conceiue no other partaking of the fleſh & blood, but which conſiſteth either of ioyning and touchinge of place, or of ſome groſſe encloſing.

17 And, that they may obſtinatly defende the errour once raſhly conceiued, ſome of them ſticke not to ſay, that the fleſh of Chriſt had neuer any other meaſurings, but ſo far & wide as heauen and earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a child out of the wombe, whereas he grew, whereas he was ſpread abroad on the croſſe, wheras he was encloſed in the ſepulchre, the ſame was done by a certaine diſpenſation, that he might be borne & die, & performe the other dueties of man. Wheras after his reſurrectiō he was ſeene in his wonted forme of body, wheras he was taken vp to heauē, wheras laſt of all alſo after his aſcenſion he was ſeene of Stephen and Paule: it was done by the ſame diſpenſation, that it might appeare to the ſight of men that he was made a king in heauen. What is this elſe, but to raiſe vp Marcion out of hell? For no man can dout that the body of Chriſt was a fantaſie or a fantaſticall thinge, if he was of ſuch ſtate. Some ſlippe away ſomwhat more ſuttelly, with ſaying that this body which is giuen in the Sacrament is glorious and immortall: and that therefore it is no abſurdity, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the ſacrament. But I aske what manner of body Chriſt gaue to the diſciples the day before that he ſuffred: do not the words ſounde that he gaue the ſame mortall body, which was within a litle after to be deliuered? He had already before (ſay they) ſhewed his glory to be ſeene to three of the diſciples. That is true in deede, but his will was by that brightnes to giue them a taſt of immortality for an houre. In the meane time they ſhall not there finde a double body, but that one body which Chriſt did beare, garniſhed with newe glory. But when he diſtributed his body at his firſt Supper, the time was now at hand, when he being ſtriken of God, and humbled ſhould lie without glory as a leprous man: ſo far is it of that he then woulde ſhew forth the glory of his reſurrection. And how great a window is here opened to Marcion, if the body of Chriſt was ſeene in one place mortal and baſe, and in an other place was holden immortall & glorious? Howbeit if their opinion take place, the ſame happeneth daily: becauſe they are compelled to confeſſe that the body of Chriſt beinge viſible in it ſelfe, lieth hid inuiſibly vnder the ſigne of bread. And yet they that vomit out ſuch monſtruouſnes, are ſo not aſhamed of their owne ſhame, that they do vnprouoked hainouſly taile at vs, becauſe we do not ſubſcribe to them. Eſa. 53. 4.

18 Now if they liſt to faſtē the body & blood of the Lord to bred & wine: the one ſhall of neceſſity be plucked in ſunder frō the other. For as the bread is deliuered ſeuerally from the cup, ſo the body vnited to the bread muſt nedes be diuided frō the blood encloſed in the cup. For when they affirme that the body is in the bread & the blood in the cup: & the bread & wine are by ſpaces of place diſtant the one frō the other: they can by no ſhift eſcape, but that the body muſt be ſeuered frō the blood. But whereas they are wont to alleage, that by accōpaning (as they faine) in the body is the blood, & likewiſe in the blood is the body, that verily is too trifling: foraſmuch as the Signes in which they are encloſed, are ſo ſeuered. But if we be lifted vp with our eies & mindes to heauen, that we ſeeke Chriſt there in the glory of his kingdom: as the ſignes do allure vs to him whole, ſo vnder the ſigne of bread, we ſhalbe fed with his body, vnder the ſigne of wine we ſhall ſeuerally drinke his blood, that at length we may enioy him whole. For although he hath taken away his fleſhe from vs, and in his body is aſcended vp into heauen, yet he ſitteth at the right hande of the Father, that is to ſay, he reigneth in the power, & maieſty, & glory of the Father. This kingdom is neither bounded with any ſpaces of place, nor compaſſed about with any meaſuringes, but that Chriſt may ſhew forth his might whereſoeuer it pleaſeth him both in heauen and in earth: but that he may ſhew himſelfe preſent with power and ſtrength: but that he may alway be at hande with them that be his, breathing his life into them, may liue in them, ſtrengthen them, quickē them, preſerue them ſafe, euen as if he were preſent in body:

finally but that he may ſeede them with his owne body, the communion whereof he doth by the power of his Spirite poure into them. After this maner the body & blood of Chriſt is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

19 But we muſt appoint ſuch a preſence of Chriſt in ỹ Supper, as may neither faſten him to the element of bread, nor ſhut him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compaſſe him in, (for it is plaine that all theſe thinges abate his heauenly glory) finally ſuch as may neither take from him his owne meaſure, nor diuerſly drawe him in many places at once, nor faine to him ſuch an vnmeaſurable greatneſſe as is ſpread abroade throughout heauen and earth, for theſe thinges are plainely againſt the trueth of the nature of manhoode. Let vs (I ſay) neuer ſuffer theſe two exceptions to be taken away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glory of Chriſt, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elementes of this worlde, or is bound to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothinge be by faining applied to his body, that agreeth not with the nature of man: which is done, when it is either ſayd to be infinite, or is ſet in many places at once. But theſe abſurdities being taken away, I willingely receiue whatſoeuer may auayle to expreſſe the true and ſubſtantiall communicating of the Body and Blood of the Lord, which communicating is deliuered to the faithful vnder the holy ſignes of the Supper: & ſo that they may be thought not to receiue it by imagination only or vnderſtanding of minde, but to enioy it in deede to the foode of eternall life. Why this ſentence is ſo hatefull to the world, & all defence taken away from it by the vniuſt iudgements of many, there is no cauſe at all, but for that the deuill hath with horrible bewitchinge madded their mindes. Truely that which we teach, doth in all points very well agree with the Scriptures: it contayneth neither any abſurdity, nor darkeneſſe, nor doutfulneſſe: it is not againſt true godlineſſe and ſound edification: finally it hath nothinge in it, that may offend, ſauing that in certaine ages paſt, whē that ignorance and barbarouſneſſe of Sophiſters reigned in the Church, ſo cleare light and open truth hath bin vnworthily oppreſſed. Yet becauſe Satā at this day alſo trauaileth by troubleſome Spirites to ſpot it with all the ſclaunders and reproches that he can, and bendeth himſelfe to no other thinge with greater endeuour: it is profitable the more diligently to defend and reſcue it.

20 Nowe before that we go any further, we muſt entreate of the ſelfe inſtitution of Chriſt, ſpecially becauſe this is the moſt glorious obiection that our aduerſaries haue, that we depart from the wordes

of Christ. Therefore that we may be discharged of the false cause of malice wherewith they burden vs, our fittest beginninge shall be at the exposition of the words. Three Euangelistes and Paul rehearse, that Christ tooke bread, when he had giuen thanks he brake it, gaue it to his disciples and sayd, Take eate: this is my Body which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cuppe Matthewe and Marke say thus. This cuppe is the blood of the Newe testament, which shallbe shedde for many vnto forgiuenesse of sinnes. But Paul and Luke say thus: This cuppe is the Newe testament in my blood. The patrones of transubstantiation will haue by the pronoune (this) the forme of bread to be signified, because the consecration is made in the whole content of the sentence, and there is no substance that can be shewed. But if they be holden with religious care of the wordes, because Christ testified, that that which he reached into the disciples handes, was his body: truely this their deuise, that that which was bread is nowe the body, is moste farre from the proper meaninge of them. That which Christ tooke into his handes and gaue the Apostles, he affirmeth to be his body: but he tooke bread: who therefore can not vnderstande that bread is yet shewed? and therefore there is no greater absurdity, than to remoue that to the forme, which is spoken of the bread. Other, when they expounde this worde (is) for (to be transubstantiate,) do flee to a more enforced and violently wrasted glose. Therefore there is no cause why they should pretende that they be moued with reuerence of wordes. For this was vnheard of amonge all nations and languages, that the word (is) should be taken in this sense, namely for to be turned into an other thing. As for thē that leaue bread in the Supper, and affirme that there is the body of Christ, they much differ among themselues. They which speake more modestly, although they precisely exact the letter, This is my body, yet afterward swarue from their precisenesse, and say that it is as much in effect as that the body of Christ is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the matter it selfe which they affirme, we haue alredy touched somwhat, and we shall by and by haue occasion yet to speake more. Now I dispute only of the wordes, by which they say they are restrained that they can not admit bread to be called the body, because it is a signe of the body. But if they shunne all figures, why do they leape away from the plaine shewinge of Christ, to their owne maners of speaking farre differinge from it? For there is great difference betwene this that bread is the body, and this that the body is with bread. But because they sawe it to be impossible, that this simple proposition might stande, that bread is the body: they haue attempted to ſcape away by thoſe formes of ſpeeche, as it were by croked turninges. Some more bolde ſticke not to affirme that euen in proper ſpeakinge, bread is the body, and by this meane they truely proue themſelues to be literall men. If it be obiected, that therefore the bread is Chriſt, and is God: this verily they will deny, becauſe it is not expreſſed in the wordes of Chriſt. But they ſhall nothinge preuaile by denyinge it: foraſmuch as all do agree that whole Chriſt is offered vs in the Supper. But it is an intolerable blaſphemy, that it be without figure ſpoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Chriſt. Now I aske of them, whether theſe two propoſitions be both of one effect, Chriſt is the Sonne of God, and bread is the body of Chriſt. If they graunt that they are diuers, (which we will enforce them to graunt whether they will or no) then lette them aunſwere whence commeth the difference. I thinke they wil bring none other but that the bread is after the ſacramentall manner called the body. Whereupon foloweth, that Chriſtes wordes are not ſubiect to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammar. Alſo I aske of all the preciſe and ſtiffe requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paule do call the cuppe the teſtament in the blood, whether they do not expreſſe the ſame thing which they did in the firſt parte, where they cal bread the body. Truely the ſame religion was in the one parte of the myſtery that was in the other: and becauſe ſhortneſſe is darke, longer ſpeech doth better open the meaninge. So oft therefore as they ſhall affirme by one worde, that the bread is the body: I will out of moe wordes bringe a fitte expoſition, that it is the Teſtament in the body. For why? Shall we neede to ſeeke a more faithfull or ſurer expoſitor than Paule and Luke? Neither yet do I tende hereunto, to diminiſh any thing of that communicating of the body of Chriſt which I haue confeſſed: only my purpoſe is to confute that fooliſh waiwardneſſe, wherby they do ſo hatefully brawle about words. I vnderſtand, by the authority of Paul & Luke, that the bred is the body of Chriſt, becauſe it is the couenant in the body. If they fight againſt this, they haue warre not with me, but with the Spirite of God. Howeſoeuer they cry out that they be touched with reuerence of the wordes of Chriſt, whereby they doe not figuratiuely vnderſtand thoſe thinges that are plainly ſpoken: yet this is not a pretence rightfull enough, why they ſhoulde ſo refuſe all the reaſons which we obiect to the contrary. In the meane time, as I haue already giuen warning, it is conuenient to learne, what maner of thing this is, The teſtament in the body and blood of Chriſt: becauſe the couenant ſtabliſhed with the ſacrifice of death, ſhould otherwiſe not profit vs, vnleſſe there were

adioyned that ſecret communicatinge whereby we growe into one with Chriſt.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinity which ỹ things ſignified haue with their ſignes, we confeſſe that the ſelfe name of the thing was giuen to the ſigne: figuratiuely in deede, but not without a moſt fit proportionall agreement. I leaue allegories and parables, leaſt any man ſhould quarell that I ſeeke ſtartinge holes, and wander out of the preſent purpoſe. I ſay that this is a ſpeeche by figure of tranſnomination which is commonly vſed in the Scripture, when myſteries are entreated of. For neither can you otherwiſe vnderſtand that which is ſayd: that circumciſion is a couenant: that the lambe is the Paſſeouer: that the Sacrifices of the lawe are expiations: finally that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the deſert, was Chriſt: vnleſſe you take it to be ſpoken by way of transferringe of names. Neither are names transferred only from the hier name to the lower: but cõtrariwiſe the name of the viſible ſigne is alſo giuen to the thinge ſignified: as when it is ſayd that God appeared to Moſes in the buſhe: when the arke of couenant is called God, and the face of God: and the doue is called the holy Ghoſt. For though the ſigne differ in ſubſtance from the thinge ſignified: becauſe this is ſpiritual and heauenly, and that is corporall and viſible: yet becauſe it doth not only figure the thinge which it is holily appointed to repreſent, as a naked and empty token, but doth alſo truely deliuer it in deede: why may not the name of the thing rightly accorde with it? If ſignes deuiſed by menne, which are rather images of thinges abſent, than markes of thinges preſent, which ſelfe abſent things, they do oftentimes deceitfully ſhadow, are yet ſomtime garniſhed with the titles of the things: then thoſe things that are ordained of God, do by much greater reaſon borrow the name of thoſe things, of which they alway both beare a ſure and not deceitfull ſignification, and haue the trueth adioyned with them. There is therefore ſo great likeneſſe and nereneſſe of the one to the other, that it is eaſie to draw their names to & froe. Therfore let our aduerſaries ceaſſe to heape vnſauory ſcoffings againſt vs, in callinge vs Tropiſtes: becauſe we expounde the Sacramentall maner of ſpeaking after the common vſe of the Scripture. For whereas the Sacramentes agree together in many thinges: in this transferring of names, they haue all a certaine community together. As therefore the Apoſtle teacheth, that the ſtone out of which ſpirituall drinke did ſpringe to the Iſraelites, was Chriſt, becauſe it was a viſible ſigne, vnder which that ſpirituall drinke was truely in deede but not diſcernably to ỹ eie perceiued: ſo bread is at this day called ỹ body of Chriſt, foraſmuch as it is a ſigne whereby the Lorde offereth to vs the true eatinge of his bodie. Neither did Auguſtine otherwiſe thinke or ſpeake, leaſt any man ſhoulde deſpiſe this as a newe inuention. If (ſayth he) the Sacramentes hadde not a certayne likeneſſe of thoſe thinges whereof they are Sacramentes, they ſhoulde not be Sacramentes at all. And of this likeneſſe oftentimes they take the names of the thinges themſelues. As therefore after a certaine manner the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, is the body of Chriſt: the Sacrament of the blood of Chriſt, is the blood of Chriſt: ſo the Sacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were ſuperfluous to heape together, ſith that ſame one ſuffiſeth: ſauing that the readers muſt be warned that the holy man teacheth the ſame thinge in the Epiſtle to Enodius. But it is a triflinge ſhift to ſay, that where Auguſtine teacheth, that when transferringe is often and commonly vſed in myſteries, he maketh no mention of the Supper: becauſe if this ſhift were receiued, we might not reaſon from the generaltie to the ſpecialltie, neither were this a good argument: Euery feeling creature hath power of mouinge, therefore an oxe and a horſe haue power of mouinge. Howebeit long diſputation hereof is in an other place ended by the wordes of the ſame holy man, where he ſaith, that Chriſt ſticked not to call it his bodie, when he gaue the ſigne of his body. Againſt Adimantus, the Manichean, in the twelue Chapter. And in an other place, vpon the third Pſalme. Maruelous (ſayth he) is the patience of Chriſt, that he receiued Iudas to the banket, wherein he committed and deliuered to his diſciples the figure of his body and blood.

22 But if ſome preciſe man, beinge blinde at all the reſt, do ſtande onely vppon this worde (this is) as though it ſeuered this myſterie from all other, the ſolution is eaſie. They ſay that the vehemence of the ſubſtantiue verbe (is) is ſo great that it admitteth no figure. Which if we graunt to them: euen in the wordes of Paule is redde the ſubſtantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communicatinge of the body of Chriſt. But the communicatinge is an other thinge than the body it ſelfe. Yea commonly where ſacramentes are entreated of, we finde the ſame worde vſed. As: This ſhall be to you a couenant with me. This lambe ſhall be to you a Paſſeouer. To rehearſe no moe: when Paule ſayeth that the rocke was Chriſt, why do they take the ſubſtantiue verbe in that place to be of leſſe vehemence than in the ſpeeche of Chriſt? Lette them alſo aunſwere, where Iohn ſayth, the holy Ghoſt was not yet, becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified, of what force the ſubſtantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide faſte-

ned to their rule, the eternall essence of the holy Ghost shalbe destroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the Ascension of Christ. Finally let them aunswere, what meaneth that saying of Paul, that baptisme is the washing of regeneration and renuing, which it is euident to be vnprofitable to many. But nothing is stronger to confute them, than that saying of Paule, that the Church is Christ. For, bringinge a similitude of the body of manne, he addeth, So is Christ: in which place he vnderstandeth the only begotten sonne of God, not in him selfe, but in his members. Hereby I thinke I haue obtayned that to soundewitted and vncorrupted men the sclaunders of our enemies, are lothsome, when they spread abroade, that we withdrawe credit from the wordes of Christ: which we do no lesse obediently embrace than they, and do wey them with more godly reuerence. Yea their negligent careleſneſſe sheweth that they do not greatly care what Christ ment, so that it giue them a buckler to defende their obstinacie: like as our earnest searchinge ought to be a witnesse howe much we esteeme the authority of Christ. They odiously spread abroade, that naturall sense of man withholdeth vs from beleuing that which Christ hath vttered with his owne holy mouth: but how maliciously they burden vs with this sclaunder, I haue a great parte already made plaine, and hereafter it shall more clearely appeare. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleuing Christ when he speaketh, nor from obeying so soone as he doth but with becke will this or that. Only this is the question, whether it be vnlawefull to enquire of the naturall meaning.

Tit. 3. 5.

1. Cor. 11. 12.

23 These good maisters, that they may seme well lettred, do forbid men to departe beit neuer so litle from the letter. But I on the other side, when the Scripture nameth God a warlike man, because I see that without figuratiue translatiō it is too rough a maner of speaking, do not dout that it is a comparison taken from men. And truely vpon none other pretence in the old time the Anthropomorphits troubled the true teachinge Fathers, but that catchinge fast holde of these sayings, The eies of God do see, It wēt vp to his eares, His hand stretched out, The earth his footestole, they cried out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture assigneth vnto him. If this lawe be receiued, outragious barbarousnesse shall ouerwhelme the whole light of faith. For, what monsters of absurdities may not phrentike mē picke out, if it be graunted them to alleage euery small title to stablish their opinions? That which they obiect, that it is not likely, that when Christ prepared for his Apostles a singular comfort in aduersities, he did then speake in a riddle or darkely, maketh of our ſide. For if it had not come in the mindes of the Apoſtles, that bread was figuratiuely called the body, becauſe it was the ſigne of the body, they had without dout bin troubled with ſo monſtruous a thing. Almoſt at the ſame moment Iohn reporteth that they did ſticke in perplexitie at euery of the leaſt difficulties. They which ſtriue among themſelues, how Chriſt will go to the Father: and do moue queſtion, how he will go out of the world: they which vnderſtand nothinge of thoſe thinges that are ſpoken concerninge the heauenly Father, till they ſee him: how would they haue bin ſo eaſie to beleue that which all reaſon refuſeth, that Chriſt ſitteth at the boorde in their ſight, and is encloſed inuiſible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the bread without doutinge, teſtified their conſent, hereby appeareth that they tooke Chriſtes wordes in the ſame ſenſe that we do, becauſe they remembred that which ought not to ſeeme ſtrange in myſteries, that the name of the thing ſignified is transferred to the ſigne. Therefore it was to the diſciples, as it is to vs, a certaine and cleare comforte, entangeled with no riddle. Neither is there any other cauſe why ſome ſhoulde departe from our expoſition, but becauſe the enchauntment of the deuil hath blinded them, namely that they ſhould faine darkeneſſe to themſelues, where the expoſition of an apt figure offreth it ſelfe. Moreouer if we preciſely ſtand vpon the words, Chriſt ſhould wrongfully haue ſpoken in one place ſeuerally an other thing cõcerning the bread than he ſpeaketh of the cup. He calleth the bred his body, he calleth ẏ wine his blood: either it ſhalbe a confuſed vaine repetition, or it ſhalbe ſuch a partitiõ as ſhal diuide the body from the blood. Yea it ſhall as truely be ſaid of the cup, This is my body, as of the bread it ſelfe, & it may likewiſe enterchangeably be ſayd, that the bread is the blood. If they anſwere that we muſt cõſider to what end or vſe the ſignes were ordained: I graunt it in dede: but in the meane time they ſhal not vnwinde thẽſelues, but that their errour muſt draw this abſurdity with it, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body. Nowe I wote not what this meaneth, when they graunt the bread and the body to be diuerſe things, yet to affirme that the one is ſpoken of the other properly & without any figure: as if a man ſhould ſay that a garment is in dede a thing differing from a man, & yet that it is properly called a man. In the meane while as though their victory conſiſted in obſtinacy & railing, they ſay that Chriſt is accuſed of lyinge, if an expoſition be ſought of the wordes. Nowe it ſhalbe eaſie for vs to ſhew to the readers how vniuſt wrong theſe catchers of ſyllables do to vs, when they fill the ſimple with this opinion, that we withdraw credit from the words of Chriſt, which we haue proued to be furiouſly peruerted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

24 But the ſclaunder of this lie can not be vtterly purged, till an other crime be wiped away. For they ſpread abroade, that we be ſo addicted to naturall reaſon, that we giue no more to the power of God, than the order of nature ſuffereth, & common ſenſe teacheth. Fró ſo malicious ſclaunders I appelle to the very doctrine it ſelf which I haue declared: which doth clearely enough ſhew, ỹ I do not meaſure this myſtery by the proportion of mans reaſon, nor do make it ſubiect to the lawes of nature. I beſeech you, haue we learned out of naturall philoſophie, that Chriſt doth ſo frō heauen feede our ſoules and bodies with his fleſh, as our bodies are nouriſhed with bread and wine? Whence cōmeth this power to fleſh, that it may giue life? All men wil ſay that it is not done naturally. It wil no more pleaſe mans reaſon, that the fleſhe of Chriſt reacheth to vs, that it may be foode vnto vs. Finally whoſoeuer hath taſted of our doctrine, ſhalbe rauiſhed into admiration of the ſecrete power of God. But theſe good mē that be ſo zealous of it, forge to thēſelues a miracle, which being taken away, God himſelfe vaniſheth with his power. I deſire to haue the readers once againe warned, that they diligently wey what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common ſenſe, or with the wings of Faith, ſurmounting the world, climbeth vp beyonde it into the heauens. We ſay that Chriſt as well with the outwarde ſigne as with his Spirite, deſcendeth to vs, that he may truly quicken our ſoules with the ſubſtance of his fleſh and of his blood. In theſe fewe words he that perceiueth not to be cōtained many miracles, is more than ſenſeleſſe: foraſmuch as there is nothinge more beſide nature, than that ſoules ſhoulde borrowe ſpirituall and heauenly life, of the fleſh which tooke her beginning of the earth, and which was ſubiect to death. Nothinge is more incredible, than that thinges diſtant and aſunder by the whole ſpace of heauen and earth, ſhould in ſo great diſtance of places not only be conioyned, but alſo vnited, that ſoules may receiue foode of the fleſh of Chriſt. Therefore let waiward men ceaſſe to procure hatred to vs by a filthy ſclaunder, as though we did enuiouſly reſtraine any thing of the immeaſurable power of God. For they do either to fooliſhly erre or to maliciouſly lie. For it is not here in queſtion what God could, but what he would. We affirme ỹ to be done which pleaſed him. But it pleaſed him, ỹ Chriſt ſhould be made like to his brethren in all things, except ſinne. What maner of thing is our fleſh? Is it not ſuch as conſiſteth of the certaine meaſure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is ſeene? And why (ſay they) may not God make, that one ſelfe ſame fleſh may occupy many & diuerſe places, may be contained in one place, may be without meaſure and forme? Thou madde man, why requireſt thou of the power of God, to make fleſh at one ſelfe time to be and not to be fleſh? Like as if thou ſhouldeſt inſtantly require him to make at one ſelfe time the light to be both light and darkeneſſe. But he willeth light to be light, darkeneſſe to be darkeneſſe, fleſhe to be fleſhe. He ſhall in deede when it pleaſeth him, turne darkeneſſe into light, and light into darkeneſſe: but when thou requireſt that light and darkenes may not differ, what doeſt thou elſe but peruert the order of the wiſdom of God? Therefore fleſhe muſt be fleſhe: and Spirit, Spirit: euery thinge in ſuch law and condition as God hath created it. But ſuch is the condition of fleſhe, that it muſt be in one yea and that a certaine place, and conſiſt of her meaſure and of her forme. With this condition Chriſt toke fleſhe vpon him, to which (as Auguſtine witneſſeth) he hath giuen in deede vncorruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and trueth.

Epi. ad darda.

25 They aunſwere, that they haue the worde, whereby the will of God is made plaine: namely if it be graunted them to baniſhe out of the Church the giſt of expoſitiō, which may bring light to the word. I graunt that they haue the worde: but ſuch as in olde time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God hauinge a body: ſuch as Marcion & the Manichees had, when they fained the body of Chriſt to be either heauēly or fantaſtical. For they alleaged for teſtimonies, The firſt Adam was of the earth, earthly: the ſecond Adam is of heauen, heauenly. Againe, Chriſt abaced himſelfe, taking vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, and was founde in likenes as a man. But the groſſe eaters thinke that there is no power of God, vnleſſe with the monſter forged in their braines the whole order of nature be ouerthrowen: which is rather to limit God, when we couet with our fained inuentions to proue what he cā do. For out of what word haue they taken, that the body of Chriſt is viſible in heauen, but lurketh inuiſible in earth vnder innumerable litle peces of bread? They will ſay that neceſſity requireth this, that the body of Chriſt ſhould be giuen in the Supper. Verily becauſe it pleaſed them to gather a fleſhly eatinge out of ẏ words of Chriſt: they being caried away by their own foreiudgement, were driuen to neceſſity to coine this ſuttelty, which the whole Scripture crieth out againſt. But that any thing is by vs diminiſhed of the power of God, is ſo falſe, ẏ by our doctrine the praiſe of it is very honorably ſette out. But foraſmuch as they alway accuſe vs, that we defraude God of his honor, when we refuſe that which accordinge

to cõmõ ſenſe is hard to be beleued, although it haue bine promiſed by the mouth of Chriſt: I make againe the ſame aunſwere that I made euen nowe, that in the miſteries of faith we do not aſke counſell of common ſenſe, but with quiet willingneſſe to learne, and with the Spirit of mekeneſſe which Iames commendeth, we receiue the doctrine come from heauen. But in that when they perniciouſly erre, I deny not that we followe a profitable moderation. They hearing the wordes of Chriſt, This is my body, imagine a miracle moſt farre from his minde. But when out of this fained inuention ariſe fowle abſurdities, becauſe they haue already with hedlong haſt put ſnares vpon themſelues, they plunge themſelues into the bottomleſſe depthe of the almightineſſe of God, that by this meane they may quenche the light of truth. Hereupon commeth that proude preciſeneſſe: We will not know howe Chriſt lieth hidde vnder the bred, holding our ſelues contented with this ſaying of his, This is my body. But we, as we do in the whole Scripture, do with no leſſe obedience than care, ſtudy to obteine a ſounde vnderſtanding of this place: neither do we with prepoſterous heate raſhly and without choiſe catch holde of that which firſt thruſteth it ſelfe into our mindes: but vſing diligent muſing vpõ it, we embrace the meaning which the Spirit of God miniſtreth: and ſtanding therupon we do from aloſte deſpiſe whatſoeuer earthly wiſdome is ſet againſt it. Yea we holde our mindes captiue, that they may not be bolde ſo much as with one litle worde to carpe againſt it: and do humble them, that they may not dare to riſe vp againſt it. Hereupon ſprong vp the expoſition of the wordes of Chriſt, which to be by the continuall vſage of the Scripture common to all Sacraments, all they that haue bene though but meanly exerciſed therein, do knowe. Neither do we, after the exãple of the holy virgin, thinke it lawefull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire howe it may be done. Iam. 1. 21. Luke, 1. 34.

26 But becauſe nothing ſhall more auaile to confirme the faith of the godly, than when they haue learned that the doctrine which we haue taught, is taken out of the word of God, and ſtandeth vpon the authoritie thereof: I will make this alſo euident with as great brefenes as I can. The body of Chriſt, ſins the time that it roſe againe, not Ariſtotle but the Holy Ghoſt teacheth to be limited, and that it is comprehended in heauen vntill the laſt day. Neither am I ignorãte that they boldly mocke out thoſe places that are alleged for this purpoſe. So oft as Chriſt ſaith that he will departe, leauing the world, they aunſwere that that departing is nothing els but a changing of mortall ſtate. But after this maner, Chriſt ſhould not ſet the Holy Ghoſt in his place to ſupplie (as they call it) the wante of his abſence: Ioh. 14. 22. and 28.

foraſmuch as he doth not ſuccede into his place, nor Chriſt hinſelfe doth deſcende againe out of the heauenly glorie to take vppon him the ſtate of mortall life. Truely the comming of the Holy Ghoſt, and the aſcending of Chriſt are things ſet as contrarie: therefore it can not be that Chriſt ſhould accordinge to the fleſhe dwell with vs after the ſame maner that he ſendeth his Spirit. Moreouer he in plaine wordes expreſſeth, that he will not be alway with his diſciples in the world. This ſaying alſo they thinke that they do gaily wipe away, as though Chriſt ſaid that he will not alway be poore and miſerable or ſubiect to the neceſſities of this fraile life. But the circumſtãce of the place crieth plainely to the contrarie, becauſe there is not entreated of pouertie and neede, or of the miſerable ſtate of earthly life, but of worſhip and honor. The anointing pleaſed not the diſciples, becauſe they thought it to be a ſuperfluous and vnprofitable coſt, and nere vnto riotous exceſſe, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be il waſted, had bene beſtowed vppon the poore. Chriſt aunſwereth that he ſhall not alway be preſent, that he may be worſhipped with ſuch honor. And none otherwiſe did Auguſtine expounde it, whoes wordes be theſe which are nothing doutfull. When Chriſt ſaid, Ye ſhall not alway haue me, he ſpake of the preſence of his body. For according to his maieſtie, according to his prouidence, according to his vnſpeakable and inuiſible grace, this was fulfilled which he ſaid, Behold, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. But according to the fleſhe which the word toke vnto him, according to this that he was borne of the Virgin, according to this that he was takẽ of the Iewes, that he was faſtened to the tree, that he was taken downe from the croſſe, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, that he was layed in the graue, that he was manifeſtly ſhewed in the reſurrection, this was fulfilled, Ye ſhal not alway haue me with you. Why ſo? Becauſe he was conuerſante according to the preſence of his bodie fortie dayes with his diſciples, and while they accompanied him in ſeing not in following, he aſcended. He is not here: for he ſitteth there at the right hande of the Father. And yet he is here: becauſe he is not gone away in preſence of maieſtie. Otherwiſe according to the preſence of maieſty we haue Chriſt alway: and according to the preſence of the fleſh it is rightly ſaid, But me ye ſhall not alway haue. For according to the preſence of the fleſhe, the Church had him a fewe dayes: nowe ſhe holdeth him by faith, but ſeeth him not with eies. Where (that I may note this alſo brefely) he maketh him preſente to vs three wayes, by maieſtie, prouidence, and vnſpeakable grace, vnder which I comprehende this maruelous communion.

munion of his body and blood: if ſo that we vnderſtande it to be done by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, not by that fained encloſing of his body vnder the element. For our Lorde hath teſtified, that he hath fleſhe and bones which may be felt and ſene. And to Go away and Aſcende do not ſignifie to make a ſhewe of one aſcending and going away, but to do in deede that which the wordes ſounde. Shall we then (will ſome man ſay) aſſigne to Chriſt ſome certaine coaſt of heauen? But I aunſwere with Auguſtine, that this is a moſt curious and ſuperfluous queſtion, if ſo that yet we beleue that he is in heauē. Lib. de fide & ſymb. cap. 6.

27 But what doth the name of aſcending ſo oft repeted: doth it not ſignifie a remouing from one place to an other? They denie it: becauſe after their opinion, by heighth is onely ſignified maieſtie of Empire. But what meaneth the very maner of aſcending? was he not, in ſight of his diſciples loking on, lifted vp on hy? Do not the Euangeliſtes plainly declare, that he was taken vp into the heauens? Theſe witty Sophiſters do aunſwere, that with a cloude ſet betweene him and them, he was conueyed out of their ſight, that the faithfull might learne that from thenſe fourth he ſhould not be viſible in the world. As though, to make credit of his inuiſible preſence, he ought not rather to vaniſhe away in a moment: or as though the cloude ought not rather to compaſſe him before that he ſtirred his foote. But when he is carried vp on hy into the aire, and with a cloude caſt vnderneth him, teacheth that he is no more to be ſought in earth: we ſafely gather, that nowe he hath his dwelling place in the heauens: as Paule alſo affirmeth, and from thenſe biddeth vs to loke for him. After this maner the Angels warned the diſciples, that they in vaine gazed vp into heauen: becauſe Ieſus which is taken vp into heauen, ſhall ſo come as they haue ſene him go vp. Here alſo the aduerſaries of ſounde doctrine ſtarte away with a pleaſante ſhifte as they thinke, ſaying that he ſhall then come viſible, which neuer wente out of the earth but that he abideth inuiſible with them that be his. As though the Angells did there ſignifie a double preſence, and do not ſimply make the diſciples witneſſes of his going vp ſeing it with their eyes, that no douting might remaine: euen as if they had ſaid: he in your ſightes beholding it, being taken vp into heauen, hath claimed to himſelfe the heauenly Empire: it remaineth that ye paciently abide in expectation, till he come againe the iudge of the world: becauſe he is nowe entred into heauen, not that he may alone poſſeſſe it, but that he may gather together with him you and all the godly.

Act 1. 9. Mark. 16. 16. Luc. 24. 51. Phil. 3. 10.

28 But foraſmuch as the defenders of this baſtarde doctrine are not aſhamed to garniſhe it with the conſenting voices of the olde writers and ſpecially of Auguſtine: I will in fewe wordes declare howe peruerſly they go about it. For whereas their teſtimonies haue bene gathered together of learned & godly mẽ, I will not do a thing already done: let him that will, ſeke them out of their workes. I will not heape together, neither out of Auguſtine himſelfe, all that might make to the purpoſe: but will be contente to ſhewe by a fewe that he is without controuerſie whole on our ſide. As for this that our aduerſaries, to writhe him from vs, do allege that it is commonly red in his bookes, that the fleſhe and blood of Chriſt is diſtributed in the Supper, namely the Sacrifice ones offred in the croſſe: it is but trifling: ſith he alſo calleth it either Thankeſgeuing, or the Sacramẽt of the body. But in what ſenſe he vſeth the words of fleſhe & blood, we neede not to ſeke with long compaſſing about: foraſmuch as he declareth himſelfe, ſaying that Sacraments take their names of the likeneſſe of the things which they ſignifie: and that therefore after a certain maner ỹ Sacramẽt of the body is the body. Wherwith accordeth an other place which is wel enough knowen: The Lord ſticked not to ſay, This is my body, when he gaue the ſigne of it. Againe they obiect, that Auguſtine writeth expreſly, that ỹ body of Chriſt falleth to the grounde, and entreth into the mouth: euen in the ſame ſenſe, that he affirmeth it to be conſumed, becauſe he ioineth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrarie, which he ſaith, that when the miſterie is ended the bred is conſumed: becauſe he had a litle before ſaid: ſith theſe things are knowẽ to men, foraſmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honor as things: but as maruelous things, they may not. And to no other ende tendeth that which our aduerſaries do to vnaduiſedly drawe to themſelues: that Chriſt did (after a certaine maner) beare himſelfe in his owne hãdes, when he reached ỹ miſticall bred to the diſciples. For by enterlacing this aduerbe of likneſſe (after a certain maner) he ſufficiently declareth, that he was not truely nor really encloſed vnder the bred. And no maruell: ſith in an other place he plainly affirmeth that bodies, if ſpaces of places be taken from them, ſhalbe no where: and becauſe they ſhalbe no where, they ſhall not be at all. It is a hungry cauillation, to ſay that in that place is not entreated of the Supper, in wich God vttereth ſpeciall power: becauſe the queſtiõ was moued concerning the fleſhe of Chriſt, and the holy man of ſet purpoſe aunſwering ſaith: Chriſt gaue immortalitie to his fleſhe, but toke not nature from it. After this forme it is not to be thought that he is eche where ſpred abrode: for we muſt beware that we do not ſo affirme the Godhed of the man, that we take away the trueth of the body.

body. And it followeth not, that that which is in God muſt be eche where as God is. There is a reaſon by and by added: for one perſon is God and man, and both are one Chriſt: eche where, by this that he is God: in heauen, by this that he is man. What a negligence had it bene, not to excepte the miſterie of the Supper being a thing ſo earneſt and weighty, if there had bene in it any thinge againſt the doctrine which he entreated of. And yet if a manne do heedefully read that which followeth within a litle after, he ſhall finde that vnder that generall doctrine, the Supper is alſo comprehended, that Chriſt the onely begotten Sonne of God, and the ſame the ſonne of man, is eche where whole preſent as God: that he is in the temple of God (that is in the Church) God as it were there dwelling, and in ſome certaine place of heauen by reaſon of the meaſure of his true body. We ſee howe, to the vniting of Chriſt with the Church, he doth not drawe his body out of heauen: which ſurely he would haue done, if the body of Chriſt were not truely meate to vs vnleſſe it were encloſed vnder bred. In an other place defining howe the faithfull do now poſſeſſe Chriſt, Thou haſt him (ſaith he) by the ſigne of the croſſe, by the Sacrament of Baptiſme, by the meate and drinke of the altar. Howe rightly he reckeneth a ſuperſtitious vſage among the Signes of the preſence of Chriſt, I do not nowe diſpute: but he that compareth the preſence of the fleſhe to the ſigne of the croſſe, ſufficiently ſheweth that he faineth not a two bodied Chriſt, that the ſame he may lurke hidden vnder the bred, which ſitteth viſible in heauen. If this neede plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the ſame place, that according to the preſence of maieſtie, we alway haue Chriſt: that according to the preſence of the fleſhe, it is rightly ſayed, Me ye ſhall not alway haue. They aunſwere, that this is alſo added, that according to an vnſpeakable and inuiſible grace, it is fulfilled which is ſaid of him, I am with you, euen vnto the ending of the world. But that is nothing for their auantage: becauſe this is at length reſtrained to his maieſty, which is euer in cõpariſon ſet againſt the body, and his fleſhe by expreſſe name is made different from his grace and power. As in an other place the ſame compariſon of contraries is red in him, that Chriſt by bodily preſence left the diſciples, that by ſpirituall preſence he may be ſtill with them: where it is plaine that the ſubſtance of the fleſhe is diſtinguiſhed from the power of the Spirit, which conioineth vs with Chriſt, though we be otherwiſe farre ſeuered by diſtance of places. The ſame maner of ſpeaking he oftentimes vſeth, as when he ſaith: He is to come againe to the quicke and the dead with bodily preſence, according to the rule of.

Faith and ſounde doctrine. For with ſpirituall preſence he was alſo to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the world vntill the ending of the world. Therfore this ſpeche is directed to the beleuers, whom he had already begonne to ſaue with bodily preſence, and whom he was to leaue with bodily abſence: that he might with his Father ſaue them with ſpirituall preſence. To take bodily for viſible is but trifling: ſith he ſetteth alſo the body in compariſon againſt the diuine power: and adding (to ſaue with the Father) he clearely expreſſeth that he doth poure abrode his grace from heauen to vs by his Spirit.

29 And ſith they put ſo much confidence in this lurking hole of inuiſible preſence, go to, let vs ſee howe well they hide themſelues in it. Firſt they ſhall not bring fourth one ſyllable out of the Scriptures, whereby they may proue that Chriſt is inuiſible: but they take that for confeſſed which no man that hath his ſounde witt will graunt them, that the body of Chriſt can not otherwiſe be geuen in the Supper but being couered with the viſor of bred, And this is the very pointe about which they ſtriue with vs, ſo farre is it of from hauing the place of a principle. And when they ſo babble, they are cõpelled to make a double body of Chriſt: becauſe after their opinion, it is in it ſelfe viſible in heauen, but inuiſible in the Supper after a ſpeciall maner of diſpenſation. But howe trimly this agreeth, it is eaſy to iudge both by other places of Scripture, and by the witneſſe of Peter. Peter ſaith that Chriſt muſt be holden or conteined in heauen, till he come againe. Theſe men teache that he is euery where, but without forme. They take exception and ſay that it is vniuſt dealing, to make the nature of a glorified body ſubiect to the lawes of common nature. But this aunſwere draweth with it that doting error of Seruettus, (which is worthily to be abhorred of all the godly) that the body was ſwallowed vp of the Godhed. I do not ſay that they thinke ſo. But if this be reckened among the qualities of a glorified body, to fill all things after an inuiſible maner, it is euident that the bodily ſubſtance is deſtroyed, and that there is left no difference of the godhed and the nature of man. Againe if the body of Chriſt be ſo of many faſhions and diuerſe, that it is ſene in one place, and is inuiſible in an other: where is the very nature of a body which conſiſteth of his meaſured proportions? and where is the vnitie? Much more rightly doth Tertullian ſay, which affirmeth that the body of Chriſt was a true and naturall body, becauſe in the myſterie of the Supper the figure of it is ſet before vs for a pledge and aſſurance of the ſpirituall life. And verily Chriſt ſaid of his glorified body, ſee and fele, for a

Spirit

Spirit hath not fleshe and bones. Lo by Christs owne mouth the truth of his fleshe is proued, because it can be felt and sene. Take away these things, than it shall cesse to be fleshe. They still flee to their denne of dispensation which they haue framed to themselues. But it is our part so to embrace that which Christ absolutely pronounceth, that that which he meaneth to affirme may be of force with vs with out exception. He proueth himselfe to be no ghost, because he is visible in his fleshe. Let that be taken away which he claimeth as propre to the nature of his body: must they not then be faine to coine a newe definitiō of a body? Nowe whether soeuer they turne thēselues about, their fained dispensation hath no place in that place of Paul where he saith, that we loke for a Sauior from heauen, which shall fashion our base body like to his glorious body. For we may not hope for a like fashioning in those qualities which they faine to Christ, that euery one should haue an inuisible and vnmeasurable body. Neither shall there be founde any man so dull witted whom they may make to beleue so great an absurdity. Let them not therefore ascribe this gift to Christs glorified body, to be at ones in many places, and to be conteined in no space. Finally let them either opēly deny the resurrection of the fleshe, or let them graunt that Christ beinge clothed with heauenly glory, did not put of his fleshe, who shall make vs in our fleshe fellowes and parteners of the same glory, when we shall haue the resurrection common with him. For, what doth the Scripture teache more plainely, than that as Christ did put on our true fleshe when he was borne of the Virgin, and suffred in our true fleshe when he satisfied for vs: so he receiued againe also the same true fleshe in rising againe, and caried it vp to heauen. For this is to vs the hope of our resurrection and ascending into heauen, that Christ is risen againe and ascended: and (as Tertullian saith) he carried the earnest of our resurrection into the heauens with him. Nowe howe weake and fraile should that hope be, vnlesse this our selfe flesh had bene raised vp with Christ & entred into the kingdome of heauen? But this is the propre trueth of a body, to be conteined in space, to consist of his measured proportions, to haue his forme. Therefore away with this foolish deuise, which doth fasten both the mindes of men and Christ to the bred. For to what purpose serueth the secret presence vnder bred, but that they which couet to haue Christ ioined with them, may rest in that signe? But the Lorde himselfe willed vs to withdrawe not onely our eyes but all our senses from the earth, forbidding himselfe to be touched of the women vntill he had gone vp to his Father. When he seeth Marie with godly zele of reuerẽce to make haſt to kiſſe his fete, there is no cauſe why he ſhould diſalowe and forbid this touching till he haue bene taken vp into heauen, but becauſe he will be ſought no where els. Whereas Act.7. 56. they obiect that he was afterwarde ſene of Stephen, the ſolution is eaſy. For neither was it therefore neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould change place, which could geue to the eyes of his ſeruant ſuch ſharpneſſe of ſight as might pearce through the heauens. The ſame alſo is to be

Act.9.4 Mat.28 6. Ioh.20, 19 ſaid of Paule. Whereas they obiect that Chriſt came out of the Sepulchre being ſhut: & entred in among the diſciples, the dores being ſhut: that maketh neuer a whit more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a faſt pauement made a way to Chriſt walking Mat.14. 25. vpon the lake: ſo it is no maruell, if at his comming the hardneſſe of the ſtone yelded it ſelfe. Howbeit it is more prouable, that by his commaundement the ſtone was remoued, and by and by after paſſage giuen him returned into his place. And to enter, the dores being ſhut, is not aſmuch in effect as to pearce through the whole ſubſtãce, but by diuine power to open an entrie for himſelfe, that he ſodenly ſtode among the diſciples, verily after a maruelous maner, when the Luc.24. 31. dores were faſt locked. That which they allege out of Luke, that Chriſt ſodenly vaniſhed away from the eyes of the diſciples with whom he went to Emaus, profiteth them nothing, and maketh for vs. For, that he might take away the ſight of himſelfe from them, he was not made inuiſible, but onely went out of ſight. As when he went in Luc.24. 16. iourney together with them (as the ſame Luke witneſſeth) he did not put on a newe face, that he might not be knowen, but helde their eyes. But theſe fellowes do not onely transforme Chriſt, that he may be conuerſant in earth, but in diuerſe places they make him diuerſe and vnlike himſelfe. Finally in ſo trifling they do, not by one word in deede, but by a circumehnce, make of the fleſhe of Chriſt a Spirit: and not contented therewith, they put vpon it altogether contrarie qualities. Whereupon of neceſſitie followeth that it is double.

30 Nowe although we graunt them that which they prate of the inuiſible preſence, ỹ vnmeaſurablenes ſhal not be yet proued, without which they ſhall in vaine attempt to encloſe Chriſt vnder bred. Vnleſſe the body of Chriſt may be euery where at ones, without any compaſſe of place, it ſhall not be likely that he lieth hidden vnder bred in the Supper. By which neceſſitie they brought in the monſtruous being euery where. But it is ſhewed by ſtrong and plaine witneſſes of Scripture, that it was limited about by the meaſure of the body of a man: and then that by his aſcẽding he hath made it plaine that he is not in all places, but that when he paſſeth into one place,

leaueth the other that he was in before. Neither is the promise which they allege, to be drawē to the body, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. Mat. 28. 20. First the continuall conioining can not stande, vnlesse Christ dwell in vs corporally without the vse of the Supper. Therefore there is no iust cause why they should so sharply brawle about the wordes of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclose Christ vnder bred. Againe the text it selfe proueth, that Christ speaketh nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples inuincible helpe, whereby he may defende and susteine them against all the assaultes of Satan and the world. For when he enioined them a hard charge: least they should dout to take it in hande, or should fearefully execute it, he strēgtheneth them with affiance of his presence: as if he had said, that his succor shall not faile them, which shalbe impossible to be ouercome. Vnlesse they listed to confounde all things, ought they not to haue made distinction of the maner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vtter their ignorance, than to yelde neuer so litle of their error. I speake not of the Papistes: whoes doctrine is more tolerable, or at the least more shamefast. But cōtentiousnes so carrieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vnited in Christ, whersoeuer the Godhed of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which can not be seuered from his Godhed. As though that same vniting haue compounded of those two natures I wote not what mean thing which was neither God nor man. So in deede did Eutiches, and after him Seruettus. But it is plainly gathered out of the Scripture, that the onely one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath still her owne propertie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfully condemned, they will be ashamed to deny: it is maruell that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference betwene the natures, enforcing the vnitie of person, he made of God man, and of man God. What madnesse therefore is it, rather to mingle heauen and earth together, than not to drawe the body of Christ out of the heauenly Sanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themselues these testimonies, None is gone vp to heauen but he that is come down, the Sonne of man which is in heauen. Againe, The sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, he shall declare them: it is a point of like senslesse dullnesse, to despise the communicating of properties which was in olde time not without cause inuented of the holy Fathers. Truely, when the Lorde of glory is said to be crucified, Paule doth not meane that he suffred any thing in his Godhed: but because the same Christ which being an abiect and Iohn. 3. 13. Iohn 1. 18. 1. Cor. 2. 8.

deſpiſed in the fleſhe did ſuffer, was both God and Lorde of glory. After this maner alſo the Sonne of man was in heauen: becauſe the ſelfe ſame Chriſt, which according to the fleſhe did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heauen. In which ſorte he is ſaid to haue deſcended from the ſaid place according to his Godhed: not that the Godhed did forſake heauen, to hide it ſelfe in the priſon of the body: but becauſe, although it filled all things, yet in the very manhode of Chriſt it dwelled corporally, that is to ſay naturally and after a certaine vnſpeakable maner. It is a common diſtinction in ſcholes, which I am not aſhamed to reherſe: that although whole Chriſt be euery where, yet not the whole that is in him is euery where. And I woulde to God the Scholemen themſelues had well weyed the pith of this ſaying: for ſo ſhould the vnſauorie inuention of the fleſhly preſence of Chriſt haue bine met withall. Therfore our mediator, ſith he is whole euery where, is alway at hande with his, & in the Supper after a ſpeciall maner geueth himſelfe preſent: but yet ſo, that whole he is preſent, not the whole that he is: becauſe, as it is ſaid, in his fleſhe he is cõteined in heauen till he appeare to iudgemẽt.

31 But they are farre deceiued, which conceiue no preſence of the fleſhe of Chriſt in the Supper, vnleſſe it be made preſent in bread. For ſo they leaue nothing to the ſecret working of the Spirit, which vniteth Chriſt himſelfe vnto vs. They thinke not Chriſt preſent, vnleſſe he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vs vp to him, we ſhould not aſwell enioy his preſence. Therefore the queſtion is onely of the maner: becauſe they place Chriſt in the bread, but we thinke it not lawfull for vs to pluck him out of heauẽ. Let the readers iudge whether is the righter. Onely let this cauillatiõ be driuen away, that Chriſt is taken away from his Supper, vnleſſe he be hidden vnder the couer of bread. For ſith this miſterie is heauenly, it is no neede to drawe Chriſt into the earth, that he may be ioined to vs.

32 Nowe if any man do aſke me of the maner, I will not be aſhamed to confeſſe, that it is a hier ſecret than that it can be either comprehended with my witt, or vttered with my wordes: and, to ſpeake it more plainly, I rather fele it, than I can vnderſtand it. Therefore I do herein without cõtrouerſie embrace the truth of God, in which I may ſafely reſt. He pronounceth that his fleſhe is the meate of my ſoule, and his blood is the drinke. With ſuch foode I offre my ſoule to him to be fedde. In his holy Supper he commaundeth me vnder the ſignes of bread and wine to take, eate, and drinke his body and blood. I nothing dout that both he doth truely deliuer them, and I do receiue them. Onely I refuſe the abſurdities, which appeare to be either vnworthy of the heauenly maiestie of Christ, or disagreing from the truth of his nature of manhode: forasmuch as they must also fight with the word of God, which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glorie of the heauenly kingdome that it lifteth him vp aboue all estate of the world, and no lesse diligently setteth forth in his nature of man, those things that are proprely belonging to his true manhode. Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not consonant to reason: because as the whole kingdome of Christ is spirituall, so whatsoeuer he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this world. Or, that I may vse the wordes of Augustine, this misterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God: in earth, but from heauen. Such (I say) is the presence of the body, as the nature of the Sacramēt requireth: which we say here to excell with so great force, and so great effectualnesse, that it not onely bringeth to our mindes vndouted trust of eternall life, but also assureth vs of the immortalitie of our flesh. For it is nowe quickened of his immortall flesh, and after a certaine maner communicateth of his immortalitie. They which are caried aboue this with their excessiue speaches, do nothing but with such entanglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would haue him here a while to consider with me, that we nowe speake of a Sacrament, all the partes whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do no lesse deintily and plentifully feede faith with this partaking of the body which we haue declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heauen. In the meane time I plainly confesse, that I refuse that mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the pouring out of it such as they teache: because it suffiseth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his flesh breath life into our soules, yea doth poure into vs his owne life, although the very flesh of Christ doth not entre into vs. Moreouer it is no dout that the proportion of faith, whereby Paul willeth vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, doth in this behalfe very well agree with me. As for them that speake against so euident a truth, let them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselues. He that doth not confesse that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or marke it not, do spoile him of his flesh.

33 Of communicating is to be likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, vnlesse they deuoure the flesh of Christ vnder bread. But there is no small wrong done to the Holy Ghost, vnlesse we beleue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that we communicate with the flesh and blood of Christ. Yea if the force of the misterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was knowen to the olde Church from fower hundred yeres ago, were weyed according to the worthinesse of it, there was enough and more wherevpon we might be satisfied: the gate had bine shut against many fowle errors, out of which haue bene kindled many horrible dissensions wherewith both in olde time and in our age the Church hath bene miserably vexed, while curious men do enforce an excessiue maner of presence, which the Scripture neuer sheweth. And they turmoile about a thing fondly and rashely conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnder bread were (as the prouerbe is) the prowe and poupe of godlinesse. It principally behoued to knowe, howe the body of Christ, as it was ones deliuered for vs, is made ours: howe we are made partakers of his blood ẏ was shedde: because this is to possesse whole Christ crucified, that we may enioy all his good things. Nowe these things, in which was so great importãce, being omitted yea neglected and in a maner buried, this onely crabbed question pleaseth them, howe the body of Christ lieth hidde vnder bread or vnder the forme of bread. They falsly spread abrode that whatsoeuer we teache concerning spirituall eating, is contrarie to the true and reall eating, as they call it: because we haue respect to nothing but to the maner, which among them is carnall, while they enclose Christ in bread: but to vs it is spirituall, because the secret power of the Spirit is the bonde of our cõioining with Christ. No truer is that other obiection, that we touche onely the frute or effect which the faithfull take of the eating of the flesshe of Christ. For we haue said before, that Christ himselfe is the substance of the Supper: and that thereupon followeth the effect, that by the sacrifice of his death we are cleansed from sinnes, by his blood we are washed, by his resurrection we are raised vp into hope of the heauenly life. But the foolishe imagination, wherof Lombarde was the author, hath peruerted their mindes, while they thinke that the eating of the flesshe of Christ is the Sacra-Libr. 4. Dist. 8. ment. For thus saith he: The Sacrament and not the thing are the formes of bread and wine: the Sacrament and the thing, are the flesshe and blood of Christ: the thing and not the Sacrament, is his misticall flesshe. Againe within a littell after. The thing signified and conteined, is the propre flesshe of Christ: the thing signified and not conteined is his misticall body. Whereas he maketh difference betwene the flesshe of Christ, and the effectuall power of norishing, wherewith it is endued, I agree: but whereas he faineth it to be a Sacrament, yea and conteined vnder bread, it is an error not to be suffred. Herevpon hath growen the false exposition of sacramentall eating, be-

cauſe they haue thought that wicked men alſo and euell doers do eate the fleſhe of Chriſt, howe much ſoeuer they be ſtrangers from him. But the fleſhe of Chriſt it ſelfe in the miſterie of the Supper is no leſſe a ſpirituall thing than eternall ſaluation. Wherupon we gather, that whoſoeuer be voide of the Spirit of Chriſt, can no more eate the fleſhe of Chriſt, than they can drinke wine wherewith is ioined no taſt. Truely Chriſt is to hainouſly torne in ſonder, when that dead body and which hath no liuely ſtrength, is geuen forth in common to vnbeleuers: and his expreſſe wordes are directly againſt it, Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſhe and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him. They aunſwere that in that place is not entreated of the ſacramentall eating: which I graunt, ſo that they will not nowe and then ſtomble againſt the ſame ſtone, in ſaying that the fleſhe it ſelfe is eaten without fruit. But I would knowe of them, howe long they holde it when they haue eaten it. Here, in my iudgement, they ſhall haue no way to gett out. But they obiect, that nothing can be withdrawen or faile of the promiſes of God by the vnthankefulneſſe of men. I graunt in deede, and I ſay that the force of the miſterie remaineth whole, howeſoeuer wicked men do, as much as in them lieth, endeuor to make it voide. Yet it is one thing to be offred, and an other thing to be receiued. Chriſt reacheth this ſpirituall meate and offreth this ſpirituall drinke to all men: ſome do gredily eate of it, ſome do lothingly refuſe it: ſhall theſe men refuſinge make the meate and the drinke to loſe their nature? They will ſay that their opinion is holpen by this ſimilitude, namely that the fleſhe of Chriſt, though it be vnſauorie, is neuertheleſſe his fleſhe. But I denie that it can be eaten without the taſt of faith: or (if we liſt rather to ſpeake as Auguſtine doth) I ſay that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the veſſell of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacramẽt, yea the truth and effectualneſſe therof remaineth vnminiſhed, although the wicked depart emptie from the outward partaking of it. If they againe obiect that this word, this is my body, is diminiſhed, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing els: we haue a ſolution ready, that God will not be acknowen true in the receiuing it ſelfe, but in the ſtedfaſtneſſe of his owne goodneſſe, when he is ready to geue, yea liberally offreth to the vnworthy that which they refuſe. And this is the fulneſſe of the Sacrament, which the whole world can not breake, that the fleſhe and blood of Chriſt is no leſſe geuen to the vnworthy than to the choſen faithfull ones of God: but therewithall it is true, that as water lighting vpon a hard ſtone, falleth away, becauſe there is no entrie open into the

ſtone: ſo the wicked do with their hardneſſe driue backe the grace of God that it can not pearce into them. Moreouer, that Chriſt ſhould be receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reaſon, than ſeede to budde in the fire. Whereas they aſke, howe Chriſt is come to damnation to ſome, vnleſſe they receiue him vnworthily, it is a very colde queſtion: foraſmuch as we no where reade, that men do procure death to themſelues by vnworthily receiuing Chriſt, but rather Mat.13. 7. by refuſing him. Neither doth Chriſts parable helpe them, where he ſaith that ſeede groweth vp among thornes, and afterwarde being choked is marred: becauſe he there entreateth, of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they do not thinke to be neceſſary to the eating of Chriſtes fleſh and drinking of his blood, that in this behalfe do make Iudas egally fellowe with Peter. But rather by the ſame parable their error is confuted, where Chriſt ſaith that ſome ſeede falleth in the hy way, other ſome vpon ſtones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnbeleuers their owne hardneſſe is a let that Chriſt atteineth not to them. Whoſoeuer deſireth to haue our ſaluation holpen by this miſterie, ſhall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithfull being led to the very fountaine, ſhould drawe life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignitie of it is honorably enough ſet out, when we keepe in minde that it is a helpe whereby we be graffed into the body of Chriſt, or being graffed do more & more growe together, till he do fully make 1.Cor. 11.29. himſelf one with vs in the heauenly life. They obiect that Paul ought not to haue made them giltie of the body & blood of Chriſt, vnleſſe they were partakers of them. But I aunſwere that they are not therefore cõdemned, becauſe they haue eaten them, but only becauſe they haue prophaned the miſterie, in treading vnder feete ỹ pledge of the holy conioining with God, which they ought reuerently to receiue.

34 Now becauſe Auguſtine among the olde writers chiefly hath affirmed that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made voide by the infidelite or noughtineſſe of men: it ſhalbe profitable to proue clearely by his owne wordes, howe vnfittly and peruerſly they do drawe that to this preſent cauſe, which caſt the body of Chriſt to dogges to eate. The ſacramentall eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receiue the body & blood of Chriſt without the power of the Spirit, Homil. in Ioh. 26. Ioh.6. 50. or any effect of grace. Auguſtine contrariwiſe weyeng wiſely thoſe wordes, He that eateth my fleſhe, and drinketh my blood, ſhall not die for euer, ſayeth: Namely the power of the Sacrament, not onely the viſible Sacrament: and verily within, not without: he that eateth it with harte, not he that presseth it with tooth. Whereupon at length he concludeth that the sacrament of this thing, that is to say, of the vnity of the body & blood of Christ, is set before men in the Supper of the Lord, to some vnto life, to some vnto destructiō: but the thing it selfe whereof it is a sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruction, whosoeuer be partaker of it. That none should here cauill, that the thing is called not the body, but the grace of the Spirit which may be seuered from the body, the contrarie cōparison betwene these two wordes of addition Visible and Inuisible driueth away all these mistes: for vnder the first of them can not be comprehended the body of Christ. Wherupō followeth that the vnbeleuers do cōmunicate onely of the visible signe. And that all doutinge may be better taken away, after that he had said that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eate Manna, pleased God. Why so? Exo. 16. 14.

because the spirituall meate they spiritually vnderstoode, spiritually hungred, spiritually tasted, that they might be spiritually filled. For we also at this day haue receiued spirituall meat: but the Sacramēt is one thing, and the power of the sacramēt is an other. A litle after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whom Christ abideth not, without dout neither eateth spiritually his flesh, nor drinketh his blood, though carnally and visibly he presseth with teeth the signe of the body and blood. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in cōparison as cōtrary to spirituall eating. Whereby that error is confuted, that the body of Christ inuisible is in deede eaten sacramētally, though not spiritually. We heare also that nothing is graūted to prophane & vncleane men beside ỹ visible receiuing of the signe. Herupō Homil. in Ioh. 59.
cometh his famous saying, that the other disciples did eate the bred the Lord, but Iudas did eate the bread of the Lord: wherin he plainly excludeth the vnbeleuers from the partaking of the body & blood. Neither tēdeth it to any other ende which he saith in an other place: What meruailest thou, if to Iudas was geuen the bread of Christ, by Homil. 62.
which he might be made bond to the deuel: when thou seest on the cōtrary side that to Paul was geuen the Angel of the deuil, by whom 2. Cor. 11. 7.
he might be made perfect in Christ? He saith verily in an other place, Libr. 5. de bap. contra Dona.
that the bread of the Supper was the body of Christ to thē to whom Paul said, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth & drinketh iudgemēt to himselfe: and that they haue not therfore nothing, because they haue 1. Cor. 11. 29.
receiued noughtily. But in what sense, he declareth more fully in an other place. For (taking in hād purposely to define howe the wicked and euell doers, which professe the Christian faith with mouth but with deedes do deny it, do eate the body of Christ, and that against the opinion of some which thought that they did not eate in sacrament onely but in very deede.) But neither (saith he) ought it to be said that they eate the body of Christ, because they are not to be reckned among the membres of Christ. For (to speake nothing of the rest) they can not together be the members of Christ, and the membres of a harlot. Finally where himselfe saith, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him, he sheweth what it is not sacramẽtally but in very deede to eate ỹ body of Christ. For this is to abide in Christ, that Christ may abide in him. For he so said this, as though he had said, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not say or thinke that he doth eate my body, or drinke my blood. Let the readers wey the things set as contraries in the cõparison to eate, sacramentally, and in very deede: and there shall remaine no dout. He confirmeth the same, no lesse plainly in these wordes: Prepare not your iawes, but your hart: Hereupon is this Supper commended. Loe we beleue in Christ, when we receiue by faith: in receiuing we knowe what to thinke. We receiue a litle and are fatted in hart. Therefore not that which is seene, but that which is beleued, doth feede. Here also that which the wicked receiue, he restraineth to the visible signe: & teacheth that Christ is none otherwise receiued than by faith. So also in an other place, pronouncing expressly that the good and the euell do communicate together in the signes, he excludeth the euell from ỹ true eating of the flesh of Christ. For if they receiued the thing it selfe, he would not vtterly haue left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Also in an other place, entreating of the eating & the frute therof, he cõcludeth thus: Then shall the body and blood of Christ be life to euery man, if that which in the Sacrament is visibly receiued, be in the truth it selfe spiritually eaten, spiritually dronke. Therefore whoso make vnbeleuers partakers of the flesh and blood of Christ, that they may agree with Augustine, let them shewe vs the visible body of Christ: forasmuch as, by his iudgement, the whole truth is spirituall. And it is certainly gathered out of his wordes, that the Sacramentall eating, when vnbelefe closeth vp the entrie to truth, is as much in effect as visible or outwarde eating. If the body of Christ might be eaten truely and yet not spiritually, what should that meane which he saith in an other place? Ye shall not eate this body which ye see, and drinke the blood which they shall shedde that shall crucifie me. I haue commended a certaine Sacramente vnto you, being spiritually vnderstanded it shall quicken you. Verily he would not deny but that the same body which Christ offred for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did set out the maner of eatinge: namely that beinge receiued into heauenly glory, by the secrete power of the Spirite, it breatheth life into vs. I graunt in dede that there is oftentimes founde in him this maner of speakinge, that the body of Christ is eaten of the vnbeleuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding, In Sacrament. And in an other place he describeth spirituall eatinge, in which our bitinges consume not grace. And leaſt mine aduersaries shoulde say, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would knowe of them howe they can vnwinde themselues from one sayinge of his, where he sayeth that Sacraments do worke in the only elect that which they figure. Truely they dare not deny but that the bread in the Supper figureth the body of Christ. Wherupon foloweth that the reprobate are debarred from the partakinge of it. That Cyrill also thought none otherwise, these wordes do declare. As if a man vpon molten waxe do poure other waxe, he wholly tempereth the one waxe with the other: so is it necessary if any man receiue the flesh and blood of the Lorde that he be ioyned with him, that Christ may be founde in him and he in Christ. By these wordes I thinke it is euident, that they are bereued of the true and reall eatinge, that do but sacramentally eate the body of Christ, which can not be seuered from his power: and that therefore faileth not the faith of the promises of God, which cesseth not to raine from heauen, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

35 This knowledge shall also easily draw vs away from the carnal worshipping, which some haue with peruerse rashnesse erected in the Sacrament: becauſe they made accompt with themselues in this maner: If it be the body, then both the soule and the Godhead are together with the body, which now can not be seuered: threfore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompanyinge which they pretende be denied them, what will they do? For howe much soeuer they crie out vpō an absurdity, if the body be seuered from the soule and the godhead: yet what soundewitted and sober man can perswade himselfe that the body of Christ is Christ? They thinke themselues in dede gaily to proue it with their logical argumentes. But sith Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and blood, but describeth not the maner of presence: how will they of a doutfull thinge gather certainely that which they woulde? What then? If their consciences chaunce to be exercised with any more greuous feling, shall not they byandby with their logicall argumentes be dissolued and melt? namely when they shall see themselues destitute of the certain word of God, vpon which alone our ſoules do ſtand faſt, whē they are called to accompt, and without which they faint at euery firſt moment: when they ſhall call to mind that the doctrine & examples of the Apoſtles are againſt them, and that themſelues alone are to themſelues the authors of it. To ſuch motions ſhalbe added other not ſmall prickinges. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worſhip God in this forme, where nothing was preſcribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worſhip of God, ought they with ſo great lightneſſe to haue attempted that of which there is no where read any one worde? But if they had, with ſuch humbleneſſe as they ought, holden al their thoughtes vnder the word of God, they would truely haue harkened to ẏ which he ſaid, Take, eate, drinke, & would haue obeied this commaundemēt, wherein he biddeth the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worſhipped. But they which, as it is commaunded of God, do receiue it without worſhipping, are aſſured that they do not ſwarue from Gods cōmaundement: than which aſſurednes there is nothing better when we take anyworke in hand. They haue ẏ example of the Apoſtles, whom we read not to haue fallen downe flat and worſhipped it, but euen as they were ſitting, to haue receiued it & eaten it. They haue the vſe of Act. 2. 4. the Apoſtolike Church, wherin Luke reporteth that the faithfull did communicate not in worſhippinge but in breakinge of bread. They

1. Cor. 11. haue the Apoſtles doctrine, wherewith Paule inſtructed the Church of the Corinthians, profeſſing that he had receiued of the Lord that which he deliuered.

36 And theſe thinges verily tend to this ende, that the godly readers ſhould wey howe perillous it is in ſo hie matters to wander from the ſimple worde of God to the dreames of our owne braine. But thoſe thinges that are aboue ſaid, ought to deliuer vs from all dout in this behalfe. For, that godly ſoules may therein rightly take holde of Chriſt, they muſt needes be lifted vp to heauen. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to help the minde of man which otherwiſe is weake, that it may riſe vpward to reache the height of ſpirituall myſteries: then they which are holdē downe in the outward ſigne do ſtray from the right way of ſeeking Chriſt. What then? Shall we deny that it is a ſuperſtitious worſhippinge, when men do throwe themſelues downe before bread, to worſhip Chriſt therin? Doutleſſe the Nicene Synode meant to mete with this miſchiefe, when it forbade vs to be humbly Sur ſum corda. intentiue to the ſignes ſet before vs. And for none other cauſe was it in old time ordained, that before the cōſecration the people ſhould with a loude voice be put in minde to haue their hartes lifted vpward. The Scripture it ſelfe alſo, beſide that it diligently declareth vnto vs

maundeth vs to be in mindes raiſed vpward, and to ſeke him in heauen ſitting at the right hand of the Father. According to this rule he was rather to be ſpiritually worſhipped in heauenly glorie, than this ſo perillous a kinde of worſhipping to be deuiſed, full of carnall and groſſe opinion of God. Wherfore they that haue inuented the worſhipping of the Sacrament, haue not only dreamed it of themſelues beſide the Scripture, in which no mẽtion of it can be ſhewed (which yet ſhould not haue bin ouerpaſſed if it had bin acceptable to God.) But alſo all the Scripture cryinge out againſt it, they haue framed to themſelues a God after the will of their owne luſt, leauing the liuing God. For what is idolatry, if this be not, to worſhippe the giftes in ſteede of the giuer himſelfe? Wherein they haue doublely offended: For both the honor taken from God was conueyed to a creature: & he himſelfe alſo diſhonored in the defiling and prophaninge of his benefit, when of his holy Sacrament is made a curſed idole. But let vs contrariwiſe, leaſt we fall into the ſame pit, throughly ſettle our eares, eies, harts, mindes, & tongues in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the ſchole of the holy Ghoſt, the beſt ſcholemaiſter, in which ſuch profit is attained, that nothing neede more to be gotten frõ any where elſe, but we willingly ought to be ignorãt of whatſoeuer is not taught in it.

37 But nowe (as ſuperſtition, when it hath once paſſed the right boundes, maketh no end of ſinning) they fel a great way further. For they haue deuiſed Ceremonies altogether ſtraunge frõ the inſtitution of the Supper, to this end only that they might giue diuine honors to the ſigne. We yeelde (ſay they) this worſhip to Chriſt. Firſt, if this were done in the Supper, I would ſay that that worſhipping only is lawfull, which reſteth not in the ſigne, but is directed to Chriſt ſittinge in heauen. But nowe by what pretenſe do they boaſt that they worſhippe Chriſt in that bread: when they haue no promiſe thereof? They conſecrate an hoſt, as they call it, which they may cary about in pompe, which they may ſhewe foorth in a common gazinge to be looked vppon, worſhipped, and called vppon. I aske by what power they thinke it to be rightly conſecrate. Verily they will bring foorth thoſe words, This is my body. But I will obiect to the contrary, that it was therewithall ſaid, Take and eate. Neither will I do that of nothing. For when a promiſe is knit to a commaundement, I ſay that the promiſe is ſo contained vnder the commaundemẽt, that being ſeuered it is made no promiſe at all. This ſhalbe made plainer by a like Pſa. 50 15. example. God gaue a commaundement, when he ſaid, Call vpon me: He added a promiſe, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter and Paule, do glory vpon this promiſe, will not all men crie out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray you, do they which leauing the cõmaundement concerning eating, do catch hold of a maimed promiſe, this is my body, to abuſe it to ſtrange ceremonies from the inſtitution of Chriſt? Let vs therefore remember that this promiſe is giuen to them which kepe the commaundement ioined with it: but that they be deſtitute of all the word, which remoue the Sacramẽt to any other way. We haue heretofore entreated how the myſtery of the holy ſupper ſeru:th our Faith before God. But foraſmuch as the Lord doth here not only bringe into our remembrance ſo great largeſſe of his bounty, as we haue before ſhewed, but doth as it were from hande to hande bringe it foorth, and ſtirreth vs to acknowledge it: he doth therewithall warne vs that we be not vnthankefull to ſo plentifull liberality: but rather that we ſhould publiſh it with ſuch praiſes as it is meete, and aduaunce it with thankeſgiuing.

Luc. 22. 19. 1. Cor. 11. 26. Therefore when he deliuered the inſtitution of the Sacrament it ſelf to the Apoſtles, he taught them that they ſhoulde do it in remembrance of him. Which Paule expoundeth, to declare the Lordes death. That is, publikely and altogether with one mouth openly to confeſſe, that all our affiance of life and ſaluation is repoſed in the death of the Lorde: that we may glorifie him with our confeſſion, and may by our example exhorte other to giue glory to him. Here againe it appeareth whereunto the marke of this Sacrament is directed, namely to exerciſe vs in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt. For, this that we are commaunded to declare the Lords death till he come to iudge, is nothing elſe but that we ſhould publiſh that with confeſſion of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the Sacrament, that is, that the death of Chriſt is our life. This is the ſecond vſe of the Sacrament, which perteineth to outward confeſſion.

38 Thirdly the Lorde alſo willed it to be to vs in ſteede of an exhortation, thã which none other can more vehemently encourage & enflame vs both to purenes and holines of life, and alſo to charitie, peace, and agreement. For the Lord doth therein ſo communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Now ſith he hath but one body, whereof he maketh vs all partakers, it is neceſſary that all we alſo be by ſuch partakinge made one body. Which vnity the bread which is deliuered in the Sacramẽt, repreſenteth: which as it is made of many graines in ſuch ſort mingled together that one can not be diſcerned from an other: after the ſame maner we alſo ought to be conioyned & knit together with ſo great agreemēt of mindes, that no diſagrement or diuiſion come betwene vs. This I had rather to be expreſſed with Paules wordes. The cup of bleſſinge (ſayth he) which we bleſſe, is the communicating of the blood of Chriſt: & the bread of bleſſing which we breake, is the partakinge of the body of Chriſt. Therefore we all are one body, that partake of one bread. We ſhall haue very well profited in the Sacrament, if this thought ſo ſhalbe emprinted & engraué in our mindes, that none of the brethren can be hurt, deſpiſed, refuſed, abuſed, or in any wiſe be offended of vs, but that therewithall we do in ſo doinge hurt, deſpiſe and abuſe Chriſt with our iniurious dealinges: that we can not diſagree with our brethren, but that we muſt therewithall diſagree with Chriſt: that Chriſt can not be loued of vs, but that he muſt be loued in our brethren: that what care we haue of our owne body, ſuch alſo we ought to haue of our brethren which are members of our body: as no part of our body is touched with any feling of griefe, which is not ſpread abroad into all the other parts, ſo we muſt not ſuffer, our brother to be greued with any euil wherof we ſhould not alſo be touched with compaſſion. Therfore Auguſtine not without cauſe ſo oft calleth this Sacrament the bond of charity. For what ſharper ſpur could be put to vs, to ſtirre vp mutuall charity among vs, than when Chriſt giuing himſelfe to vs, doth not only allure vs with his owne example that we ſhoulde mutually dedicate and deliuer our ſelues one to an other: but in ſo much as he maketh himſelfe cōmon to all, he maketh all vs alſo one in himſelfe? 1. Cor. 10.16.

39 But hereby is that very well confirmed which I haue ſayd in an other place, that the true miniſtration of the Sacramēt ſtandeth not without the word. For whatſoeuer profit commeth to vs of the Supper, requireth the word: whether we be to be confirmed in Faith, or to be exerciſed in confeſſion, or to be ſtirred vp to duety, praier is needefull. Therefore nothinge can be more diſorderly done in the Supper, than if it be turned to a dumme action: as hath bin done vnder the tyranny of the Pope. For they would haue the whole force of conſecration to hange vpon the intent of the Prieſt, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whom it moſt of all behoued that the myſtery ſhould be declared. But thereupon hath growen this errour, that they marked not that thoſe promiſes wherewith the conſecration is made, are directed not to the elementes themſelues, but to them that receiue them. But Chriſt ſpeaketh not to the bread, that it may be made his body, but commaundeth his diſciples to eate, and promiſeth to them the communicating of his body and blood. And none other order doth Paul teach, than that together with the bred and the cup, the promiſes ſhould be offred to the faithfull. Thus it is truely. We ought not here to imagine any magicall enchauntment, that it be ſufficient to haue mumbled vp the wordes, as though the elementes did heare them: but let vs vnderſtande that thoſe wordes are a liuely preachinge, which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly pearce into their mindes, which may be emprinted and ſettled in their hartes, which may ſhewe foorth effectualneſſe in the fulfilling of that which it promiſeth. By theſe reaſons it clearely appeareth, that the layinge vp of the Sacrament, which many do earneſtly require, that it may be extraordinarily diſtributed to the ſicke, is vnprofitable. For either they ſhall receiue it without rehearſing of the inſtitution of Chriſt, or the miniſter ſhall together with the ſigne ioyne the true declaration of the myſtery. In ſilence is abuſe & fault. If the promiſes be rehearſed, and the myſterie declared, that they which ſhall receiue it may receiue it with frute, there is no cauſe why we ſhould dout that this is the true conſecration. To what end then will that other conſecration come, the force whereof commeth not ſo farre as to the ſicke men? But they that do ſo, haue the example of the old Church. I graunt: but in ſo great a matter, & in which we erre not without great daunger, nothinge is ſafer than to folow the trueth it ſelfe.

40 Now as we ſee that this holy bread of the Supper of the Lord is ſpirituall meate, no leſſe ſweete and delicate than healthfull to the godly worſhippers of God, by the taſt whereof they feele that Chriſt is their life, whom it raiſeth vp to thankeſgiuing, to whom it is an exhortation to mutuall charity among themſelues: ſo on the other ſide it is turned into a moſt noyſome poyſon to all them whoſe Fayth it doth not nouriſh and confirme, and whom it doth not ſtirre vp to cõfeſſion of praiſe and to charity. For as bodily meate, when it findeth a ſtomach poſſeſſed with euill humors, being it ſelfe alſo therby made euill and corrupted doth rather hurt than nouriſhe: ſo this ſpirituall meate, if it light vppon a ſoule defiled with malice and naughtineſſe, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meate it ſelfe, but becauſe to defiled and vnbeleuinge men nothinge is cleane, though otherwiſe it be neuer ſo much ſanctified by the bleſſing of the Lord. For (as Paule ſayth) they that eate & drinke vnworthily, are gilty of the body and blood of the Lord, and do eate and drinke iudgement to themſelues, not diſcerning the body of the Lord. For, ſuch kinde of mẽ as without any ſparcle of Faith, without any zeale of charity, do thruſt themſelues foorth like ſwine to take the Supper of the Lorde, do not diſcerne the body of the Lorde. For in ſo much as they do not beleue that that body is their life, they do as much as in them lyeth diſhonor it, ſpoylinge it of all the dignitie thereof, and finally in ſo receiuinge it they prophane and defile it. But in ſo much as being eſtraunged and diſagreeinge from their brethrē, they dare mingle the holy ſigne of the body of Chriſt with their diſagreementes, it is no thanke to them that the body of Chriſt is not rent in ſunder, and limmemeale torne in peeces. And ſo not vnworthily they are gilty of the body and blood of the Lord, which they do with vngodlines full of ſacrilege ſo fowly defile. Therfore by this vnworthy eatinge, they take to themſelues damnation. For whereas they haue no Faith repoſed in Chriſt, yet receiuing the Sacrament they profeſſe that there is ſaluation for them no where elſe than in him, and do forſweare all other affiance. Wherfore they themſelues are accuſers to themſelues, they themſelues pronounce witneſſe againſt themſelues, and they themſelues ſeale their owne damnation. Againe when they being with hatred and euill will diuided & drawen in ſunder from their brethren, that is, from the members of Chriſt, haue no parte in Chriſt: yet they do teſtifie that this is the only ſaluation to communicate with Chriſt, & to be made one with him. For this cauſe Paule commaundeth, that a man proue himſelfe, before that he eate of this bread or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expounde it) he meant that euery man ſhould deſcend into himſelfe, and weie with himſelfe, whether he do with inward affiance of hart reſt vpon the ſaluatiō which Chriſt hath purchaced: whether he acknowledge it with confeſſion of mouth: then whether he do with deſirous endeuour of innocence and holineſſe aſpire to the following of Chriſt: whether after his example he be ready to giue himſelfe to his brethren, & to cōmunicate himſelfe to them with whom he hath Chriſt cōmon to him: whether, as he himſelfe is accompted of Chriſt, he do likewiſe on his behalfe take all his brethren for members of his owne body: whether he couet to cheriſh, defende, and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that theſe duties both of Faith & charity can now be perfect in vs: but becauſe we ought to endeuor this, & with all our deſires to long toward it, that we may daily more & more encreaſe our Faith begon. 1. Cor. 11. 28.

41 Commonly when they go about to prepare men to ſuch worthines of eating, they haue in cruell wiſe tormented and vexed poore conſciences: and yet they brought neuer a whit of all thoſe thinges that might ſerue to the purpoſe. They ſaid that thoſe did eat worthily which were in ſtate of grace. To be in ſtate of grace they expounded to be pure & cleanſed from all ſinne. By which doctrine all the men that euer haue at any time bin or now be in earth, were debarred frō the vſe of this Sacrament. For if we go about this, to fetch our worthineſſe from our ſelues, we are vtterly vndone: onely deſpeire and damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeuor with our whole ſtrengthes, we ſhall nothinge more preuaile, but that then at laſt we ſhalbe moſt vnworthy, when we haue moſt of all trauailed about ſeekinge of worthineſſe. To ſalue this ſore, they haue deuiſed a way to attaine worthineſſe: that, as much as in vs lieth, māking examination, and requiring of our ſelues accompt of all our doings, we ſhould with contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction cleanſe our vnworthineſſe which way of cleanſinge, what maner of thinge it is, we haue already ſhewed there where was more conuenient place to ſpeake of it. So much as ſerueth for our preſent purpoſe, I ſay that theſe be to hungry and vaniſhinge comfortes to diſmaied and diſcouraged conſciences & ſuch as are ſtriken with horrour of their ſinne. For if the Lord by ſpeciall forbidding, admitteth none to the partakinge of his Supper but the righteous & innocent: there needeth no ſmal heede that may make a man aſſured of his owne righteouſnes which he heareth to be required of God. But whereby is this aſſurednes confirmed vnto vs, that they are diſcharged afore God, which haue done ſo much as in them lay? But although it were ſo, yet when ſhall it be that a man may be bold to aſſure himſelfe that he hath done as much as in him lay? So when there is made no certaine aſſurance of our worthineſſe, the entry ſhall alway remaine ſhut by that horrible forbidding, wherby is pronounced that they eate & drinke iudgement to themſelues, which eate and drinke vnworthily.

42 Now it is eaſie to iudge what maner of doctrine this is which reigneth in the Papacy, & frō what author it hath proceeded, which with the outragious rigor thereof bereueth and ſpoyleth, miſerable ſinners and ſuch as be tormented with feare and ſorow, of the comfort of this Sacrament, in which yet all the ſwete delicates of the Goſpell were ſet before them. Surely the deuill could by no redier way deſtroy men, than by ſo making them ſenſeleſſe, that they coulde not perceiue the taſt and ſauour of ſuch foode, wherewith it was the will of the moſt good heauenly Father to feede them. Leaſt therefore we runne into ſuch headlonge downefall, let vs remember that this holy banket is medicine to the ſicke, comfort to ſinners, liberall gift to the poore: which bring no profit to the healthy, righteous, and riche, if any ſuch could be found. For wheras in it Chriſt is giuen vs for meate:

we vnderſtande that without him we pyne, ſtarue, and faint, like as famine deſtroieth the liuely ſtrength of the body. Againe wheras he is giuen vs for life: we vnderſtande that without him we are in our ſelues vtterly dead. Wherefore this is the worthineſſe both the only and beſt that we can bringe to God, if we offer to him our owne vileneſſe and (as I may ſo call it) vnworthineſſe, that of his mercy he may make vs worthy of him: if we deſpeire in our ſelues, that we may be comforted in him: if we humble our ſelues, that we may be raiſed vp of him: if we accuſe our ſelues, that we may be iuſtified of him: moreouer if we aſpire to that vnity which he commendeth to vs in his Supper: and as he maketh vs all, one in himſelfe, ſo if we wiſh to vs all altogether one ſoule, one hart one tonge. If we haue theſe things throughly well weyed and conſidered, ſuch thoughtes although they ſhake vs, yet ſhall neuer ouerthrow vs. As, how ſhould we being needy and naked of al good things, we defiled with filthineſſe of ſinnes, we halfe dead, eate the body of the Lorde worthily? We will rather thinke that we being poore come to the liberal giuer, we ſeeke to the Phiſician, we ſinners to the author of righteouſneſſe, finally we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthineſſe which is commaunded of God, conſiſteth chiefly of Faith, which repoſeth al things in Chriſt and nothinge in vs: and next of charity, and the ſelfe ſame charity which it is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that he may encreaſe it to better, foraſmuch as it can not be giuen perfect. Some other agreeinge with vs in this, that the worthineſſe it ſelfe conſiſteth in Fayth and charity: yet in the meaſure of worthineſſe haue gone farre out of the way, requiringe a perfection of Fayth, whereunto nothing may be added, & a charity egall with that which Chriſt hath ſhewed toward vs. But hereby they do none otherwiſe than thoſe other before, driue all men away from comminge to this holy Supper. For if their ſentence ſhoulde take place, no man ſhoulde receiue but vnworthily, foraſmuch as all without exception ſhoulde be holden gilty and conuict of their vnperfectneſſe. And truely it were a point of too much amazed dulneſſe, I will not ſay fooliſhneſſe, to require ſuch perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament voide and ſuperfluous: which was not ordained for the perfect, but for the weake and feeble to awake, to ſtirre vp, to pricke forward, and exerciſe the affection of Faith and charity, and to correct the defaut of either of them.

43 But ſo much as concerneth the outward forme of doing, whether the faithfull receiue it in their hand or no: whether they deuide it, or euery one eate that which is giuen him: whether they put againe

the cup in the hand of the Deacon,or deliuer it to the next:whether the bread be leuened,or vnleuened: whether the wine be redde or white: it maketh no matter. Theſe thinges be indifferent and left in the liberty of the Church. Howebeit it is certaine, that the vſage of the old Church was,that euery one ſhould take it into his hand. And Chriſt ſaid,Diuide it among you. The hiſtories report,that it was leuened and common breade before the time of Alexander biſhoppe of Rome, which firſt delited in vnleuened bread:but for what reaſon I ſee not,vnleſſe it were with a newe ſight to draw the eies of the cõmon people to wondringe at it, rather than to inſtruct their mindes with good religion. I adiure all thẽ that are touched with any though but light zeale of godlines,to tell whether they do not euidently ſee, both how much more brightly the glory of God ſhineth herein,and how much more abundant ſweetenes of ſpirituall comfort commeth to the faithfull, than in theſe colde and plaierlike trifles, which bring none other vſe but to deceiue the ſenſe of the amaſed people. This they call the holdinge of the people in religion, when beinge made fooliſh and ſenſleſſe with ſuperſtition it is drawen whether they liſt. If any man will defende ſuch inuentions by antiquity, I my ſelfe alſo am not ignorant how auncient is the vſe of chreſme,and blowing in Baptiſme: Howe nye to the age of the Apoſtles the Supper of the Lorde was infected with ruſtineſſe: but this verily is the waywardneſſe of mans boldeneſſe, which can not withholde it ſelfe but that it muſt alway play and be wanton in the myſteries of God. But lette vs remember that God doth ſo highly eſteeme the obedience of his word, that he willeth vs in it to iudge both his Angels and the whole worlde. Now, bidding farewell to ſo great a heape of ceremonies:it might thus haue bin moſt comlily miniſtred,if it were oft and at leaſt euery weke ſette before the Church, but that firſt they ſhoulde begin with publike praiers:then a ſermon ſhould be made:then the miniſter, hauinge bread and wine ſette vpon the boorde,ſhoulde rehearſe the inſtitution of the Supper:and then ſhoulde declare the promiſes that are in it leſte vnto vs: and therewithall ſhoulde excommunicate all them that by the Lords forbiddinge are debarred from it, afterwarde they ſhoulde pray that with what liberality the Lorde hath giuen vs this holy foode, he woulde inſtruct and frame vs alſo with the ſame Faith & thankefulneſſe of minde to receiue it, & that foraſmuch as we are not of our ſelues,he would of his mercy make vs worthy of ſuch a banket:that then either Pſalmes ſhould be ſong,or ſomwhat red, and the faithful ſhould in ſemely order cõmunicate of the holy bãket,the miniſters breaking the bread & giuing it to the people:that when the Supper is ended, exhortation ſhould be made to pure Faith & confeſſion of Faith, to charity, and to maners mete for Chriſtians: laſt of all that giuing of thanks ſhould be rehearſed, & praiſe be ſong to God: which being ended the congregation ſhould be let go in peace.

44 Theſe thinges that we haue hitherto ſpoken of this Sacrament do largely ſhewe, that it was not therefore ordained, that it ſhould be receiued yearely once, & that ſlightly for maners ſake (as now commonly the cuſtome is) but that it ſhould be in often vſe to all Chriſtians, that with often remembrance they ſhould repeate the paſſion of Chriſt: by which remembrance they might ſuſtaine and ſtrengthen their Faith, & exhort themſelues to ſing confeſſion of praiſe to God, and to publiſh his goodnes: finally by which they might nouriſh mutuall charity, and teſtifie it amonge themſelues, whereof they ſaw the knot in the vnity of the body of Chriſt. For ſo oft as we communicate of the ſigne of the body of the Lord, we do as by a token giuen & receiued, enterchaungeably binde our ſelues one to an other vnto all dueties of loue, that none of vs do any thing whereby he may offend his brother, nor leaue any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when nede requireth and ability ſufficeth. That ſuch was the vſe of the Apoſtolike Church, Luke rehearſeth in the Actes, when he ſaith that the faithfull were continuinge in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, in communicating, in breaking of bread, and in praiers. So was it altogether mete to be done, that there ſhoulde be no aſſembly of the Church without the word, praiers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was alſo inſtitute amonge the Corinthians we may ſufficiently gather of Paule: and it is certaine that in many ages afterward it was in vſe. For thereupon came thoſe olde Canons, which they father vpon Anicletus & Calixtus, that when the conſecration is done, all ſhould communicate, that wil not be without the dores of the Church. And it is red in thoſe olde Canons, which they call the Canons of the Apoſtles: that they which continue not vnto the end, & do not receiue the holy communion, muſt be corrected as mē that moue vnquietnes of the Church. Alſo in the Councell at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into ỹ Church, & heare the Scriptures, & do abſtaine from the communion, ſhoulde be remoued from the Church, till they haue amended this fault. Which although in the firſt Councell at Toletum it was either ſomwhat qualified or at leaſt ſet forth in milder wordes, yet it is there alſo decreed, that they which when they haue heard the ſermon are found neuer to communicate, ſhould be warned: if after warning they abſtaine, they ſhoulde be debarred from it.

Act. 2. 42.

45 Verily by theſe ordinances the holy men meant to retaine and maintaine the often vſe of the Communion, which ofte vſe they had receiued from the Apoſtles themſelues, which they ſawe to be moſt holſome for the faithfull, and by litle and litle by the negligence of the common people to growe out of vſe. Auguſtine teſtifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (ſaith he) of this thing, of the vnity of the Lords body, is ſomewhere daily, ſomewhere by certaine diſtances of dayes, prepared vpon the Lordes table, and is there receiued at the table, to ſome vnto life, to other ſome vnto deſtruction. And in the firſt Epiſtle to Ianuarius: ſome do daily communicate of the body and blood of the Lorde: ſome receiue it at certaine daies: in ſome places there is no day let paſſe wherein it is not offered: in ſome other places onely vppon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in ſome other places neuer but on the Sunday. But foraſmuch as the common people was (as we haue ſayd) ſomwhat ſlacke, the holy men did call earneſtly vpon them with ſharp rebukinges, leaſt they ſhoulde ſeeme to winke at ſuch ſlothfulneſſe. Such an example is in Chryſoſtome vpon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians. It is not ſaid vnto him that diſhonored the banket: wherefore didſt thou ſit downe? but, wherefore didſt thou come in? Whoſoeuer is not partaker of the myſteries, he is wicked and ſhameleſſe for that he ſtandeth here preſent. I beſeeche you, if any be called to a banket, waſheth his handes, ſitteth downe, ſeemeth to prepare himſelfe to eate, and then doth taſt of nothinge: ſhall he not ſhame both the banket, and the maker of the banket? So thou, ſtanding among them that with prayer do prepare themſelues to receiue the holy meate, haſt euen in this that thou haſt not gone away confeſſed that thou art one of the number of them, at the laſt thou doeſt not partake: had it not bin better that thou hadſt not bin preſent. Thou wilt ſay, I am vnworthy. Therfore neither waſt thou worthy of the communion of praier, which is a preparinge to the receiuing of the holy myſtery.

46 And truely this cuſtome, which commaũdeth to communicate yearely once, is a moſt certaine inuention of the deuill, by whoſe miniſtery ſoeuer it was brought in. They ſay that Zepherinus was author of that decree, which it is not likely to haue bin ſuch as we now haue it. For he by his ordinance did peraduẽture not after the worſt maner prouide for ỹ church, as the times then were. For it is no dout but that then the holy ſupper was ſette before the faithfull ſo oft as they came together in aſſembly, neither is it any dout but that a good part of them did communicate. But when it ſcarſely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was neceſ-

ſary that they which were mingled with prophane men & idolaters, ſhoulde by ſome outwarde ſigne teſtifie their faith: the holy man for order & policies ſake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Chriſtians ſhould by partaking of the Lords ſupper vtter a cõfeſſion of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus beinge otherwiſe good hath bin euill wreſted of them that came after, whẽ a certaine law was made of one communicating yearely: whereby it is come to paſſe, that almoſt al men whẽ they haue once cõmunicate, as though they had gaily diſcharged themſelues for al the reſt of the yere, ſlepe ſoundly on both eares. It ought to haue bin farre otherwiſe done. Euery weke at the leaſt, the Lordes table ſhoulde be ſet before the aſſembly of ỹ Chriſtians: the promiſes ſhould be declared, which might feede vs ſpiritually at it: none ſhould in dede be compelled by neceſſity, but all ſhould be exhorted and pricked forward: the ſluggiſhneſſe alſo of the ſlothfull ſhould be rebuked. All ſhould by heapes, as hungry men, come together to ſuch dainties. Not without rightfull cauſe therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the deuill this cuſtome was thruſt in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yeare, maketh men ſlothfull for all the reſt of the yeare. We ſee in deede that this peruerſe abuſe was crept in euen in the time of Chryſoſtome: but we may alſo therewithal ſee how much it diſpleaſed him. For he complaineth with greuous words in the ſame place which I euen now alleaged, that there is ſo great inequality of this matter, that often in ſome times of the yere they came not euen when they were cleane, but at Eaſter they came euen when they were vncleane. Then he crieth out: O cuſtome. O preſumption. Then in vaine is the daily offering vſed: in vaine we ſtande at the altar: there is none that partaketh together with vs. So farre is it of that he allowed it by his authority adioyned to it.

And then ſuttelly forſooth they reaſon, that the one is enough for both. For if (ſay they) it be the body, it is whole Chriſt, which cā not now be ſeuered from his body. Therefore by accompanyinge the body containeth the blood. Loe how our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer ſo litle begon with looſe reines, to be wanton & wilde. The Lord ſhewing bread, ſaith that it is his body: when he ſheweth the cup, he calleth it his blood. The boldneſſe of mans reaſon, crieth out contrariwiſe that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body: as though the Lorde had for no cauſe ſeuered his body from his blood both in wordes and in ſignes: or as though it hadde euer bin heard ſpokē that the body or blood of Chriſt is called God & man. Verily if he had meant to ſignifie whole himſelf, he might haue ſaid it is I: as he is wont to ſpeake in the Scriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my blood. But he willinge to helpe our weakeneſſe, did ſet the cuppe ſeuerally from the bread, to teache that he ſuffiſeth no leſſe for drinke than for meate. Now let one part be takē away, then we ſhall finde but the one halfe of the nouriſhments in him. Therefore although it be true which they pretend, that the blood is in the bread by way of accompanyinge, and againe the body in the cup, yet they defraude godly ſoules of the confirmation of faith which Chriſt deliuereth vs as neceſſary. Therfore biddinge their ſuttleties farewell, we muſt holde faſt the profite which is by the ordinance of Chriſt in the two earneſts.

48 I know in deede that the miniſters of Sathan do here cauill, as it is an ordinary thing with them to make mockery of the Scriptures. Firſt they alleage that of one bare doinge ought not to be gathered a rule whereby the Church ſhoulde be bounde to perpetuall obſeruinge. But they lye when they ſay that it was but a bare doinge: for Chriſt did not only deliuer the cup, but alſo did inſtitute that his Apoſtles ſhould in time to come do the ſame. For they are the words of a commaunder, drinke ye all of this cup. And Paule ſo rehearſeth that it was a deede, that he alſo commendeth it for a certaine rule. An other ſtartinge hole is, that the Apoſtles alone were receiued of Chriſt to the partakinge of this ſupper whom he had already choſen and taken into the order of the ſacrificinge Prieſtes. But I woulde haue them anſwere me to fiue queſtions, from which they ſhall not be able to eſcape, but that they ſhalbe eaſily conuinced with their lies. Firſt, by what oracle haue they this ſolution reuealed, beinge ſo ſtraunge from the worde of God? The Scripture reckeneth twelue that ſatte with Ieſus: but it doth not ſo obſcure the dignitie of Chriſt that it calleth them ſacrificing Prieſtes of which name we will ſpeake hereafter after in place fit for it. Though he gaue it then to the twelue, yet he commaunded that they ſhould do the ſame, namely that they ſhould ſo diſtribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apoſtles almoſt a thouſand yeares, were all without exception made partakers of both the ſignes? was the olde Church ignorant what geſtes Chriſt had receiued to his Supper? It were a point of moſt deſperate ſhameleſneſſe, here to ſticke and dally in graunting it to be true. There remaine ẏ eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, there remaine the bokes of the olde writers, which miniſter euident teſtimonies of this matter. The fleſhe (ſaith Tertullian) is fed with the body and blood of Chriſt, that the ſoule may be fatted which feding vpō God. Howe (ſaid Ambroſe to Theodoſius) wilt thou receiue with ſuch handes the holy body of the Lorde? With what boldneſſe wilt thou with thy mouth partake of the cup of the precious blood? And Hierome ſaith. The prieſts which make the Thankeſgeuing, and do diſtribute the blood of the Lorde to the people. Chriſoſtome. Not as in the olde lawe the Prieſt did eate part, and the people part: but one body is ſet before all, and one cup. Thoſe things that perteine to the Thankeſgeuing, are all common betweene the Prieſt and the people. The ſelfe ſame thing doth Auguſtine teſtifie in many places.

49 But why diſpute I about a thing moſt knowen? Let all the Greke and Latine writers be red ouer; ſuch teſtimonies ſhall echewhere offer themſelues. Neither was this cuſtome growen out of vſe, while there remained one drop of pureneſſe in the Church. Gregory, whom you may rightly ſay to haue bene the laſt Biſhop of Rome, teacheth ẏ it was kept in his time. What is the blood of the lambe, ye haue nowe learned, not by hearing but by drinking. His blood is poured into the mouthes of the faithfull. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeares after his death, when all things were growen out of kinde. For neither was that taken onely for an vſage, but alſo for an inuiolable lawe. For then was in force the reuerence of Gods inſtitutiō, and they douted not that it was ſacrilege, to ſeuer thoſe things which the Lorde had conioined. For thus ſaith Gelaſius. We haue founde, that ſome receiuing onely the portion of the holy body, do abſteine from the cup. Let them without dout, bycauſe they ſeeme to be bounde with I wote not what ſuperſtition, either receiue the Sacramēts whole, or be debarred from them whole. For the diuiding of this miniſtery is not committed without great ſacrilege. Thoſe reaſons of Cyprian were heard, which truely ought to moue a Chriſtian minde. Howe (ſaith he) do we teache or prouoke them to ſhed their blood in the confeſſing of Chriſt, if we deny his blood to them that ſhall fight? Or how do we make them fit for the cup of Martyrdome if we do not firſt in the church by the right of cõmunion admit thẽ to drinke the cup of the Lorde. Whereas the Canoniſts do reſtraine that decree of Gelaſius to the Prieſtes, that is ſo childiſh a cauill that it nede not to be confuted.

50 Thirdly, why did he ſimply ſay of the bread, that they ſhoulde eate: but of the cuppe, that they ſhould all drinke? euen as if he had meant of ſet purpoſe to mete with the craft of Sathan. Fourthly, if (as they would haue it) the Lord vouchſaued to admit to his ſupper only ſacrificinge Prieſtes, what man euer durſt call to the partakinge of it, ſtraungers whom the Lord had excluded? yea and to the partaking of that gift, the power whereof was not in their hands, without any cõmaundement of him which only could giue it? Yea vpon confidence of what warrant do they vſe at this day to diſtribute to the common people the Signe of the body of Chriſt, if they haue neither commaundement nor example of the Lord? Fiftly, did Paule lye, when he ſaid to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lord that which he had deliuered to them? For afterward he declareth the thing that he deliuered, that all without differẽce ſhould communicate of both the ſignes. If Paule receiued of the Lord, that all ſhould be admitted without differẽce: let them looke of whom they haue receiued which do driue away almoſt all the people of God: becauſe they can not now pretend God to be the author of it, with whom there is not yea and nay. And yet ſtill for clokinge of ſuch abhominations they dare pretende the name of the church, and with ſuch pretence defende it. As though either theſe Antichriſtes were the church, which ſo eaſily treade vnderfoote, ſcatter abroad, & deſtroy the doctrine and inſtitution of Chriſt: or the Apoſtolike Church were not the church, in which the whole force of religion floriſhed.

The xviij. Chapter.

Of the Popish Maſſe, by vvhich ſacrilege the Supper of Chriſt hath not onely bin prophaned, but alſo brought to nought.

WIth theſe and like inuentions Satan hath trauailed, as by ouerſpreadinge of darkeneſſe to obſcure and defile the holy ſupper of Chriſt, ẏ at leaſt the pureneſſe of it ſhould not be kept ſtill in the church. But the head of horrible abhomination was when he aduanced a Signe, by which it might not onely be darkened and peruerted, but beinge vtterly blotted and aboliſhed ſhoulde vaniſhe and fall out of the remembrance of men: namely namely when he blinded almoſt the whole world with a moſt peſtilent error, that they ſhould beleue that the Maſſe is a ſacrifice and oblation to obteine the forgiuenes of ſinnes. Howe at the beginning the ſounder ſort of the ſcholemē toke this doctrine, I nothing regard: farewell they with their crabbed ſuttelties: which howeſoeuer they may be defended with cauilling, yet are therefore to be refuſed of all good men becauſe they do nothing els but ſpread much darkneſſe ouer the brightneſſe of the Supper. Therfore bidding them farewell, let the readers vnderſtande that I here match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romiſhe Antichriſt and his Prophets haue infected the whole world, namely that the Maſſe is a worke whereby the ſacrificing Prieſt which offreth vp Chriſt, and the other that do partake at the ſame oblation, do deſerue the fauor of God: or that it is a cleanſing ſacrifice, whereby they reconcile God to themſelues. Neither hath this bene receiued onely in common opinion of the people, but the very doing it ſelfe is ſo framed, that it is a kinde of pacifying wherewith ſatisfaction is made to God for the purging of the quicke and dead. The wordes alſo which they vſe, do expreſſe the ſame: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vſe of it. I knowe howe deepe rootes this peſtilence hath taken, vnder howe great ſeming of goodneſſe it lurketh, howe it beareth in ſhewe the name of Chriſt, howe in the one name of Maſſe many beleue that they comprehende the whole ſumme of faith. But when it ſhalbe by the word of God moſt clerely proued, that this Maſſe, howe much ſoeuer it be colored and glorious, yet ſhamefully diſhonoreth Chriſt, burieth and oppreſſeth his croſſe, putteth his death in forgetfulneſſe, taketh away the frute that cometh therof vnto vs, doth weaken and deſtroy the Sacrament wherin was left the memorie of his death: ſhall there then be any ſo deepe rootes, which this moſt ſtrong axe, I meane the worde of God, ſhall not cutt dowe and ouerthrowe? Is there any face ſo beautifull, that this light can not bewray the euell which lurketh vnder it?

2 Let vs therfore ſhewe that which hath bene ſet in the firſt place, that in it is intolerable blaſphemie and diſhonor done to Chriſt. For he was conſecrate of his Father a Prieſt and Biſhop, not for a time as we reade that they were ordeined in the olde teſtament, whoes life being mortall their prieſthode alſo could not be immortall: for which cauſe alſo there needed ſucceſſors that ſhould from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Chriſt, which is immortall, there needeth no vicar to be ſet after him. Therefore he was ordeined of the Father a prieſt for euer, according to the order of

Melchiſedech, that he ſhoulde execute an euerlaſting prieſthode.
Gen.14. 18. This miſterie had bine long before figured in Melchiſedech, whom when the Scripture had ones brought in for the prieſt of the liuing God, it neuer afterwarde made mention of him, as though he had had no ende of his life. After this point of likeneſſe, Chriſt was called a prieſt according to his order. Nowe they that do daily ſacrifice, muſt needes appoint prieſts to make the oblations, whom they muſt appoint as it were ſucceſſors & vicars in the ſteede of Chriſt. By which putting in ſteede of him, they do not onely ſpoile Chriſt of his honor, and plucke from him the prerogatiue of eternall prieſthode, but alſo trauaile to thruſt him downe from the right hande of his Father, on which he can not ſit immortall, but that he muſt therewithall remaine the eternall prieſt. Neither let them lay for themſelues, that their pety ſacrificers are not put in place of Chriſt as if he were dead, but onely are helpers of his eternall prieſthod, which ceaſſeth not therefore to continue. For they are more ſtrongly holden faſt with Hebr.7. 23. the wordes of the Apoſtle, than that they may ſo eſcape: namely, that there were many other prieſts made, becauſe they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, and he needeth no cõpanions. Yet, ſuch is their frowardneſſe, they arme themſelues with the example of Melchiſedech to defend their wickedneſſe. For, becauſe it is ſaid that he offred bread & wine, they gather that he was a foreſhewing of their Maſſe: as though the likeneſſe betweene him and Chriſt were in the offring of bread and wine. Which is ſo emptie and trifling that it needeth no cõfutation. Melchiſedech gaue bread and wine to Abraham and his companiõs, to refreſhe them being weary after their iorney and battail. What is this to a ſacrifice? Moſes praiſeth the gentleneſſe of the holy king: theſe fellowes vnſeaſonably coine a miſterie whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfully paint their error with an other color, becauſe it followeth by and by after, And he was the prieſt of the hieſt God. I aunſwere, that they wrongfully drawe to the bread and wine that Hebr.7. 7. which the Apoſtle referreth to the bleſſing. Therefore when he was the prieſt of God he bleſſed Abraham. Wherupon the ſame Apoſtle (than whom we neede to ſeke no better expoſitor) gathereth his excellence, becauſe the leſſer is bleſſed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchiſedech were a figure of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, would the Apoſtle, I pray you, which ſearcheth out all euen the leaſt things, haue forgotten ſo earneſt & weightie a thing? Nowe (howeſoeuer they triſle) they ſhall in vaine go about to ouerthrowe the reaſon which the Apoſtle himſelfe bringeth, that the right and honor of

ſacrificing prieſthode ceaſſeth among mortall men, becauſe Chriſt which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall ſacrificing prieſt.

3 An other vertue of the Maſſe was, that it oppreſſeth and burieth the croſſe and paſſion of Chriſt. This verily is moſt certaine, Hebr. 9. 12.
that the croſſe of Chriſt is ouerthrowen ſo ſone as the altar is ſet vp. For if he offred himſelfe for a ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, that he might ſanctifie vs for euer, and purchaſe to vs eternall redemption: vndoutedly the force and effectualneſſe of that ſacrifice continueth without any ende. Otherwiſe we ſhould thinke nothing more honorably of Chriſt than of oxen and calues which were ſacrificed vnder the lawe: the offringes whereof are proued vneffectuall and weake by this that they were oft renued. Wherfore either we muſt confeſſe, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which he fulfilled vppon the croſſe, wãted the force of eternall cleanſing, or that Chriſt hath made an ende of all with one ſacrifice ones for euer. This is it that the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr. 9. 26. and 10. 10.
that this chiefe Biſhop Chriſt ones appered by offring vp of himſelfe before the ending of the world, to the driuing away of ſinne. Againe, That we are ſanctified by the will of God, by the offring of the body of Ieſus Chriſt ones. Againe, That Chriſt with one oblation for euer hath made perfect them that are ſanctified: wherunto he adioineth a notable ſentẽce that forgeueneſſe of ſinnes being ones purchaced, there remaineth no more any oblation. This alſo Chriſt ſignified by his laſt ſaying and vttered among his laſt gaſpings, when he ſaid. It is Ioh. 19. 19.
ended. We are wont to note the laſt ſayings of men when they are dieng, for oracles. Chriſt dieng teſtifieth that by his one ſacrifice is perfited & fulfilled whatſoeuer was for our ſaluatiõ. Shall it be lawfull for vs daily to patch innumerable ſacrifices to ſuch a ſacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath ſo ſhiningly ſet forth) as though it were vnperfect? When the holy word of God not onely affirmeth, but alſo crieth out, and proteſteth, that this ſacrifice was ones fully done that the force thereof remaineth euerlaſting: whoſo require an other ſacrifice, do they not accuſe this of imperfection and weakeneſſe? But as for the Maſſe, which hath bene deliuered in ſuch ſort that there may euery day be made a hundred thouſand ſacrifices, to what ende tendeth it, but that the paſſion of Chriſt, whereby he offred him an onely ſacrificed oblatiõ to the Father, ſhould ly buried and drowned? Who, vnleſſe he be blinde, can not ſee that it was ỹ boldnes of Satan which wraſtled againſt ſo open and clere truth? Neither am I ignorant with what deceites that Father of lying vſeth to color this his fraude, ſaying that there are not ſondry nor diuerſe ſacrifices, but that one ſelfe ſame ſacrifice is repeted. But ſuch ſmokes are eaſily blowen away. For in the whole discourse the Apostle trauaileth to proue: not only that there are no other sacrifices, but that that one sacrifice was once offred vp, and shall no more be repeated. The sutteller men do yet slip our at a narrower hole, saying that it is not a repeating but an applying. But this Sophisticall argument also is no lesse easily confuted. For neither did Christ once offer vp himselfe with this condition, that his sacrifice shoulde be daily confirmed with newe oblations: but that by the preaching of the Gospel, and ministring of the holy Supper, the frute thereof shoulde be communicated vnto vs.

1.Cor.5 7. So Paul saith that Christ our Passeouer was offred vp, and biddeth vs to eate of him. This (I say) is the meane whereby the Sacrifice of the Crosse is rightly applied to vs, when it is communicated to vs to take the vse of it, and we with true faith receiue it.

4 But it is worth the labour to heare, with what other fundation beside these they vpholde the sacrifice of the Masse. For they draw

Mal.1.8 to this purpose the prophecy of Malachie, whereby the Lorde promiseth that the time shall come when throughout the whole world there shalbe offered to his name incense and a cleane sacrifice. As though it were a new or vnwonted thing among the Prophets, when they speake of the calling of the Gentils to expresse by the outward ceremony of the law the spiritual worshipping of God, to which they exhort thē: that they might the more familiarly declare to ỹ men of their age, that the Gentils should be called into the true felowship of religion. Like as also they are wont altogether to describe by figures of their law, the trueth that was deliuered by the Gospell. So they set

Ioel.2. 28. for turning to the Lord, ascendinge into Ierusalem: for the worshipping of God, the offering of all kindes of giftes: for larger knowledge of him which was to be giuen to the faythfull in the kingdome of Christ, dreames and visions. That therefore which they alleage, is

Esa.19. 21. like vnto an other prophecy of Esay, where the Prophet foretelleth of three altars to be set vp in Assiria, Ægipt, & Iury. For first I aske, whether they do not graunt that the fulfilling of this prophecy is in the kingdome of Christ. Secondly, where be these altars, or when they were euer sette vp. Thirdly whether they thinke that to euery seuerall kingdome is appointed a seuerall temple, such as was that at Ierusalem. These thinges if they wey, I thinke they will confesse, that the Prophet vnder figures agreeable with his time, prophecieth of the spirituall worship of God to be spread abroad into the whole worlde. Which we giue to them for a solution. But of this thing sith there do euery where examples commonly offer themselues, I will not busie my selfe in longer rehearsall of them. Howbeit herein also they are miſerably deceiued, that they acknowledge no ſacrifice but of the Maſſe, whereas in deede the faithfull do nowe ſacrifice to the Lorde, & do offer a cleane offring, of which ſhalbe ſpoken by and by.

5 Nowe I come downe to the third office of the Maſſe, where I muſt declare howe it blotteth out the true and onely death of Chriſt, and ſhaketh it out of the remembrance of menne. For as among men the ſtrength of a teſtament hangeth vppon the death of the teſtator: ſo alſo our Lorde hath with his death confirmed the teſtament whereby he hath geuen vs forgeueneſſe of ſinnes & eternall righteouſneſſe. They that dare varie or make newe any thing in this teſtament, do deny his death, and holde it as it were of no force. But what is the Maſſe, but a newe and altogether diuerſe teſtament? For why? Doth not euery ſeuerall Maſſe promiſe newe forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, newe purchaſing of righteouſneſſe: ſo that nowe there be ſo many teſtaments, as there be Maſſes? Let Chriſt therfore come again, and with an other death confirme this teſtament, or rather with infinite deathes confirme innumerable teſtaments of Maſſes. Haue I not therfore ſaid true at the beginning, that the only and true death of Chriſt is blotted out by Maſſes? Yea what ſhall we ſay of this that the Maſſe directly tendeth to this ende, that if it be poſſible, Chriſt ſhould be ſlaine againe? For where is a teſtament (ſayeth the Apoſtle) there of neceſſitie muſt be the death of the teſtator. The Maſſe ſheweth it ſelfe to be a new teſtament of Chriſt: therefore it requireth his death. Moreouer the hoſte which is offred, muſt neceſſarily be ſlaine and ſacrificed. If Chriſt in euery ſeuerall Maſſe be ſacrificed, then he muſt at euery moment be in a thouſand places cruelly ſlaine. This is not mine, but the Apoſtles argument, If he had needed to offer himſelfe ofte, he muſt ofte haue died ſins the beginning of the world. I knowe that they haue an aunſwere in redineſſe, whereby alſo they charge vs with ſcláder. For they ſay that that is obiected againſt them which they neuer thought, nor yet canne. And we knowe, that the death & life of Chriſt is not in their hande. We loke not whether they go about to kill him: onely our purpoſe is to ſhewe, what maner of abſurdity followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which ſelfe thing I proue by the Apoſtles owne mouth. Though they crie out to the contrarie a hundred times, that this ſacrifice is vnbloody: I will deny that it hangeth vpon the will of men, that ſacrifices ſhould change their nature, for by this meane the holy and inuiolable ordinance of God ſhould faile. Wherupon followeth that this is a ſure principle of the Apoſtle, that there is required ſheding of blood, that waſhing may not be wanting.

Heb. 9. 16.

6 Nowe is the fourth office of the Masse to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the fruit that came to vs of the death of Christ, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke vpon it. For who can call to mind that he is redemed by ỹ death of Christ when he seeth a newe redemption in the Masse? Who can trust that sinnes are forgeuen him, when he seeth a newe forgeuenesse? Neither shall he escape that shall say, that we do for no other cause obteine forgeuenesse of sinnes in the Masse, but because it is already purchased by the death of Christ. For he bringeth nothing els than as if he should bost, that Christ hath redemed vs with this condition that we should redeme our selues. For such doctrine hath bene spred by the ministers of Satan, and such at this day they mainteine with cryings out, with swerd and fier, that we when in the Masse we offer vp Christ to his Father, by this worke of offring do obteine forgeuenesse of sinnes, and are made partakers of the passiō of Christ. What nowe remaineth to the passion of Christ, but to be an example of redemptiō, whereby we may learne to be our owne redemers? Christ himselfe, when in the Supper he sealeth the confidence of pardon, doth not bid his disciples to sticke in that doinge, but sendeth them away to the sacrifice of his death: signifying that the Supper is a moniment or memoriall (as the common speech is) whereby they may learne that the satisfactorie clensing sacrifice, by which the Father was to be appeased, must haue bene offred but ones. For neither is it enough to know that Christ is the onely sacrifice, vnlesse the onely sacrificing be ioined with it, that our faith may be fastened to his crosse.

7 Nowe I come to the conclusion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lorde had left the remembrance of his passion grauen and expressed, is by the setting vp of the Masse, taken away, defaced, and destroyed. For the Supper it selfe is the gift of God, which was to be receiued with thankesgeuing. The sacrifice of the Masse is famed to pay a price to God, which he may receiue for satisfaction. Howe much difference there is betweene to geue and to receiue, so much doth the sacrifice differ from the Sacramēt of the Supper. And this truely is the most wretched vnthankfulnesse of man, that where the largesse of Gods bountie ought to haue bene acknowledged, and thankes to be geuen, therein he maketh God his dettor. The Sacrament promised, that by the death of Christ we are not onely ones restored into life, but are continually quickned, because then all the partes of our saluation were fulfilled. The sacrifice of the Masse singeth a farre other song, that Christ must be daily sacrificed, that he may somwhat profit vs. The Supper should haue bene distributed in the common assemblie of the Church, that it might enforme vs of the communion whereby we all cleaue together in Christ Iesus. The sacrifice of the Masse dissolueth and plucketh in sonder this communitie. For after that the error grewe in force, that there must be sacrificers that should sacrifice for the people, the Supper of the Lorde as though it were posted ouer to them, cessed to be communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commaundement of the Lorde. An entrie was made open to priuate Masses, which might rather resemble a certaine excommunication, than that same communitie ordeined of the Lorde, when the pety sacrificer willing seuerally by him selfe to deuoure his sacrifice, doth seuer himselfe frō the whole people of the faithfull. I call priuate Masse (least any man be deceiued) whereſoeuer there is no partaking of the Lordes Supper among the faithfull, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

8 And whense the very name of Masse first sprong, I could neuer certainly iudge: sauing that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offrings that were geuen. Whereupon the olde writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But, to leaue striuing about the name, I say that priuate Masses are directly against the ordinance of Christ, and therefore they are a wicked prophaning of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lord commaunded vs? not to take, and diuide it among vs? What maner of obseruing of the commaundement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread, which is the cōmunion of the body and blood? Therefore when one taketh it without distributing, what likenesse is there? But that same one man doth it in the name of the whole Church. By what commaundement? Is not this openly to mocke God, when one man priuatly taketh to him selfe that which ought not to haue bene done but amōg many? But because the words of Christ and Paule are plaine enough, we may brefely cōclude, that whersoeuer is not breaking of bread to the cōmunion of the faithful, there is not the Supper of the Lord, but a false and wrongful counterfaiting of the Supper. But a false counterfaiting is a corrupting. Nowe the corrupting of so great a misterie is not without wickednesse. Therefore in priuate Masses is a wicked abuse. And (as one fault in religion from time to time bredeth an other) after that that maner of offring without cōmunion was ones crept in, by litle and litle they beganne in euery corner of Churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuersly to drawe the people hether and thether, which should haue come together into one assembly, ỳ they might reknowledge the misterie of their owne vnitie. Nowe let them go and deny it to be ydolatrie, that in their Masses they shewe forth bread to be worshipped in steede of Christ. For in vaine they bost of those promises of the presence of Christ, which howesoeuer they be vnderstode, verily were not geuen to this purpose, that wicked and prophane men, so oft as they will, and to whatsoeuer abuse they list, may make the body of Christ: but that the faithfull, when with religious obseruation they do in Celebrating of the Supper followe the commaundement of Christ, may enioy the true partaking of him.

9 Beside that, this peruersnes was vnknowen to ỹ purer Church. For howsoeuer the more shameleſſe sort among our aduersaries do here go about to diguise the matter with false colors, yet it is most sure that all antiquitie is against them, as we haue afore proued in other things, and it may more certeinly be iudged by the continuall reding of olde writers. But ere I make an ende of speakinge of it, I
1.Sam. 16.22. aske our Massing doctors, sith they knowe that obedience is more esteemed of God than oblations, and that he more requireth that his voice be harkened to, than that sacrifices be offred: howe they beleue that this maner of sacrificing is acceptable to God, whereof they haue no certaine commaundement, and which they see not to be allowed by any one sillable of the Scripture. Moreouer when they heare the Apostle say, that no man taketh to himselfe the name and honor of sacrificing priesthode, but he that is called as Aaron was: yea & that Christ himselfe did not thrust in himselfe, but obeied the calling of his Father: either they must bring forth God the author and ordeiner of their sacrificing priesthode, or they must cõfesse that the honor is not of God, into which they haue with wicked rashnes broken in vncalled. But they can not shewe one title of a letter that mainteineth their sacrificing priesthod. Why therfore shall not their sacrifices vanish away, which can not be offred without a priest?

10 If any man do thrust in short sentences of the olde writers gathered here and there, and do by their authoritie trauaill to proue that the sacrifice which is done in the Supper is farre otherwise to be vnderstanded than we do expounde it: let him be bretly aunswered thus: if the question be of allowing the forged deuise of sacrifice, such as the Papistes haue fained in the Masse, the olde writers do neuer speake in defense of such sacrilege. They do in deede vse the word Sacrifice: but therewithall they expounde, that they meane ſacrifices of beaſtes which they offred to God, did celebrate a prophecie of the ſacrifice to come, which Chriſt offred: the Chriſtians do with the holy oblation and partaking of the body of Chriſt celebrate a remembrance of the ſacrifice already made. Here verily he teacheth altogether the ſame thing, which is writtē in moe words in the boke of faith to Peter the Deacon, whoſoeuer be the author of it. The words be theſe, Beleue moſt ſteedfaſtly and dout not at all, that the onely begotten himſelfe, being made fleſhe for vs, offred himſelfe for vs a ſacrifice and oblation to God into a ſauor of ſweteneſſe: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt in the time of the olde teſtament beaſtes were ſacrificed: and to whom nowe with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt (with whom he hath one Godhed) the holy Church throughout ỹ whole world ceſſeth not to offer the ſacrifice of bred and wine. For in thoſe fleſhly ſacrifices was a figuring of the fleſhe of Chriſt which he ſhould offer for our ſinnes, and of his blood which he ſhould ſhed to the forgeuenes of ſinnes. But in this ſacrifice is thankeſgeuing and rehearſall of the fleſhe of Chriſt which he offered for vs, and of his blood which the ſame he hath ſhed for vs. Whereupon Auguſtine himſelfe in many places expoundeth it to be nothing els but a ſacrifice of praiſe. Finally you ſhall cōmonly finde in him, that the Supper of the Lorde is for no other reaſon called a ſacrifice, but becauſe it is the remembrāce, image, and witneſſe of that ſingular, true, and onely ſacrifice wherewith Chriſt hath cleanſed vs. Alſo there is a notable place in his fourth boke of the Trinitie the xxiiij. Chapter, where after that he hath diſcourſed of the onely ſacrifice, he thus concludeth: becauſe in a ſacrifice fower things are cōſidered, to whom it is offred, & of whom, what is offred, & for whom. The ſame he himſelfe the one and true mediator reconciling vs to God by the ſacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whom he offred: maketh them one in him for whom he offred: is one himſelfe which offred, and the thing which he offred. To the ſame effect alſo ſpeaketh Chriſoſtome. But they ſo chalenge the honor of ſacrificing prieſthode to Chriſt, that Auguſtine teſtifieth it to be ỹ voice of Antichriſt if any man make a Biſhop interceſſor betwene God and men.

11 Yet do we not deny but that the offring vp of Chriſt is there ſo ſhewed in vs, that the ſpectacle of the croſſe is in a maner ſet before our eyes: as ỹ Apoſtle ſaith that Chriſt was crucified in the eyes of the Galathians, when the preaching of the croſſe was ſet before them. But foraſmuch as I ſe that thoſe olde Fathers alſo wreſted this remembrance an other way than was agreable with the inſtitution of the Lorde (becauſe their Supper contained I wote not what repeted or at leaſt renewed forme of ſacrificing) the ſafeſt way for godly hartes ſhalbe to reſt in the pure and ſimple ordinance of God: whoes alſo the Supper is therfore called, becauſe in it his authority alone ought to be in force. Truely ſith I finde that they haue kepte a godly & true ſenſe of this whole miſterie, and I do not perceiue that they meante to abate any thing were it neuer ſo litle from the only ſacrifice of the Lord, I can not cõdemne them of vngodlineſſe: yet I thinke that they can not bè excuſed, but that they haue offended ſomwhat in ỹ maner of the celebration. For they counterfaited the Iewiſhe maner of ſacrificing more nerely than either Chriſt had ordeined, or the nature of the Goſpell did beare. Therefore that ſame ouerthwart appliance to heauenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that being not cõtented with the ſimple and naturall inſtitution of Chriſt, they ſwarued to the ſhadowes of the lawe.

12 If a man do diligently wey, that this difference is put by the word of the Lorde betwene the ſacrifices of Moſes, and our Thankeſgeuing, that whereas thoſe did repreſent to the Iewiſhe people, the ſame effectualneſſe of the death of Chriſt, which is at this day deliuered to vs in the Supper, yet the maner of repreſentinge was diuerſe. For in thoſe, ỹ Leuiticall Prieſts were cõmaunded to figure that which Chriſt ſhould performe: there was brought a ſacrifice which ſhould be in the ſteede of Chriſt himſelf: there was an altar wherupõ it ſhould be offred: Finally all things were ſo done, that there was ſet before their eyes an image of the ſacrifice which was to be offred to God for a ſatisfactorie cleanſing. But ſins the time that the ſacrifice is ended, the Lorde hath apointed to vs an other order: namely that it ſhould cõuey to the faithfull people the frute of the ſacrifice offred to him by the Sonne. Therfore he hath geuen vs a table whereat we ſhould eate, not an altar wherupon ſacrifice ſhould be offred: he hath not cõſecrated prieſts to ſacrifice, but miniſters to diſtribute the holy banket. Howe much more hy and holy the miſterie is, ſo much more religiouſly and with greater reuerẽce it is mete to be handled. Therfore there is no way ſafer, than putting away all boldneſſe of mãs vnderſtanding, to ſticke faſt in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truely if we cõſider that it is ỹ Supper of the Lord & not of men, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſuffer our ſelues to be remoued one heare bredth frõ it by any authority of men or preſcription of yeres. Therfore when ỹ Apoſtle minded to cleanſe it from all faultes which had already crept into the church of the Corinthiãs, he vſeth the redieſt way therunto, that is, he calleth it backe to the only inſtitution of it, from whenſe he ſheweth ỹ a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

13 Nowe leaſt any wrangler ſhould ſtirre vs vp ſtrife by reaſon of the names of ſacrifice and ſacrificing prieſt, I will alſo declare, but yet brefely, what in the whole diſcourſe I haue meant by a ſacrifice, and what by a Sacrificing prieſt. Whoſo ſtretche the word ſacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doings of religion, I ſe not by what reaſon they do it. We do knowe that by the continuall vſe of the Scripture a ſacrifice is called that which the Grekes call ſomtime Thuſia, ſometime Proſphora, ſomtime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehendeth whatſoeuer is in any wiſe offred to God. Wherefore we muſt make diſtinction: but yet ſo that this diſtinction may haue a ſupernall appliance of ſimilitude from the ſacrifices of the lawe of Moſes: vnder the ſhadowes whereof the Lorde willed to repreſent to his people the whole truth of ſacrifices. Of thoſe although there were diuerſe formes, yet they may all be referred to two ſortes. For either there was oblation made for ſinne after a certaine maner of ſatisfaction, whereby giltineſſe was redemed before God: or it was a ſigne of the worſhipping of God, and a teſtifying of religiō: ſomtime in ſteede of ſupplication, to craue the fauor of God: ſomtime in ſteede of thankeſgeuing, to teſtifie thankfulneſſe of minde for benefites receiued: ſomtime onely for an exerciſe of godlineſſe, to renewe the ſtabliſhinge of the couenant: to which latter ſort perteined burnt offrings, drinke offrings, oblatiōs, firſt frutes, and peace offrings. Wherefore let vs alſo diuide ours into two kindes: and for teachinges ſake let vs call the one the ſacrifice of worſhip and of godly deuotion, becauſe it conſiſteth in the honoring and worſhipping of God, which the faithfull both owe and yelde vnto him: or, if you will, the ſacrifice of Thankeſgeuing: foraſmuch as it is geuen to God of none but of them the being loden with immeaſurable benefites, do render to him themſelues with all their doinges. The other may be called propitiatorie or of expiation. The ſacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appeaſe the wrath of God, to ſatisfie his iudgement, and ſo to waſh and wipe away ſinnes: whereby the ſinner cleanſed from the filthy ſpottes of them and reſtored into puritie of righteouſneſſe, may returne into fauor with God himſelfe. So in the lawe thoſe were called ſacrifices that were offred for the purging of ſinnes: not for that they were ſufficient to recouer the fauor of God, or to put away iniquitie: but for that they ſhadowed out ſuch a true ſacrifice which at length was fully done by Chriſt alone: & by him alone, becauſe it could be done by none other: and ones, becauſe the effectualneſſe and force of that one ſacrifice which Chriſt hath fully done, is eternall, as he himſelf hath teſtified with his own mouth, whē he ſaid ỳ it was ended & Exo. 29. 39. Ioh. 19. 30.

fulfilled: that is to say, that whatsoeuer was necessarie to the reconciling of the Fathers fauor, to the obteining of the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, to righteouſneſſe and to ſaluation, all the ſame was performed and fulfilled with that his onely oblatiō, and there ſo nothing wanted thereof, that there was afterward no place left to any other ſacrifice.

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a moſt wicked reproch, and blaſphemy not to be ſuffred, as well againſt Chriſt as againſt the ſacrifice which he hath fully done by his death vpon the croſſe for vs, if any man by renewinge an oblation thinke to purchace the pardon of ſinnes, to appeaſe God, and to obteine righteouſneſſe. But what is els done by Maſſing, but that by deſeruing of newe oblation we may be made partakers of the paſſion of Chriſt? And, that there might be no meaſure of madding, they thought it but a ſmal thing to ſay that there is made indifferently a cōmon ſacrifice for the whole Church, vnleſſe they further ſaid that it is in their choiſe to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whom they would, or rather to euery one whoſoeuer he were that would buy for himſelfe ſuch ware with redy money. Nowe becauſe they could not reache to the price that Iudas had, yet that they might in ſome marke reſemble their author, they kepte the likeneſſe of number. Iudas ſolde him for thirty ſiluer pens: theſe fellowes ſell him, after the French accompt, for xxx. braſen pens: but Iudas ſolde him ones, theſe fellowes ſell him as oft as they can finde a bier. In this ſence alſo we deny that they be ſacrificing prieſts, that is to ſay, they that with ſuch an oblation are meanes to God for the people, they that appeaſing God, may purchace the ſatisfactorie purging of ſinnes. For Chriſt is the onely Biſhop and ſacrificing prieſt of the newe Teſtamēt, into whom all Prieſthodes are remoued, and in whome they be ſhut vp and ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternall Prieſthode of Chriſt: yet foraſmuch as God, ſins that he hath taken away thoſe olde Prieſthodes, hath ordeined none, the Apoſtles argument remaineth inuincible, that no man taketh honor to himſelfe but he that is called of God. By what affiance therefore dare theſe robbers of God, that boſt themſelues for the butchers of Chriſt, call themſelues the ſacrificing Prieſts of the liuing God?

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his ſeconde boke of Cōmon weale. Where when he entreateth of the olde maners of expiation, and laugheth to ſcorne the fooliſhe cōfidence of euill men & wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by theſe as by coueringes hidden that the gods could not ſe them, and did, as if they had gotten warrant of the gods by couenant, more careleſly folowe their owne luſtes: he ſeemeth throughly to touche the maner of ſatisfactorie purging of the Maſſe, ſuch as is at this day in the world. To beguile and vndermine an other man, all men knowe to be vnlawfull. To greue widowes with wrongful dealings, to robbe the fatherleſſe, to troble the poore, by euill crafty meanes to catch other mens goods to themſelues, with forſwerings and deceites to enter forceably into any mans poſſeſſions, to oppreſſe any man with violence and tyrannous feare, all men cõfeſſe to be wicked. Howe therefore dare ſo many commonly do all theſe thinges, as though they ſhould freely be bolde to do them? Truely, if we rightly wey it, no other cauſe doth ſo much encourage them, but becauſe they haue confidence, that by the ſacrifice of a Maſſe, as by paiment of full price for recompenſe, they ſhall ſatisfie God, or at the leaſt that this is an eaſy way to compounde with him. Then Plato procedeth further to ſcorne their groſſe blockiſhneſſe, which thinke that by ſuch ſatisfactorie cleanſings thoſe peines are redemed that otherwiſe they ſhould ſuffer in hell. And wherto ſerue at this day the yerely obites, and the greater part of Maſſes, but that they which throughout all their life haue bene moſt cruell tyrantes, or moſt rauenous robbers, or geuẽ foorth to all miſcheuous doings, ſhould as though they were redemed by this price, eſcape the fier of purgatorie?

16 Vnder the other kinde of ſacrifice, which we haue called the ſacrifice of Thankeſgeuing, are conteined all the dutieſull workes of charitie, which when we extẽde to our brethren, we honor the Lord hinſelfe in his members: then, all our prayers, praiſinges, geuinges of thanks, and whatſoeuer we do to the worſhipping of God. All which things finally do hang vpon the greater ſacrifice, whereby we are in ſoule & body hallowed to be a holy temple to the Lord. For neither is it enough, if our outward doings be applied to the obeying of him: but firſt our ſelues, and then all that is ours ought to be conſecrate and dedicate to him: that whatſoeuer is in vs, may ſerue his glory, and may ſauor of zelous endeuor to aduance it. This kinde of ſacrifice tendeth nothing at all to appeaſe the wrath of God, nothing at all to obteine forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, nothing at all to deſerue righteouſneſſe: but is occupied onely in magnifying and extolling of God. For it can not be pleaſant and acceptable to God, but at their handes, whom by forgeueneſſe of ſinnes already receiued he hath by other meanes reconciled to himſelfe, and therefore acquited them from giltineſſe. But it is ſo neceſſary for the Church, that it can not be away from it. Therefore it ſhalbe euerlaſting, ſo long as the people of God ſhall cõtinue, as we haue before already ſhewed out of the Prophets for in that meaning I will take this prophecie, For from the rising of the sunne to the going downe thereof, great is my name among the Gentiles, and in euery place incense shalbe offred to my name, and a cleane offringe: because my name is terrible among the Gētiles, saith the Lorde: to farre is it of, that we would put it away. So Paul biddeth vs to offer our bodies, a sacrifice liuing, holy, acceptable to God, a reasonable worship. Where he spake very pithily, when he added that this is our reasonable worshipping: for he meant the spirituall maner of worshipping of God, which he did secretely set in comparison against the carnall sacrifices of the lawe of Moses. So liberall doing of good and communicating are called sacrifices by which God is pleased. So the liberalitie of the Philippians, whereby they had releued the pouertie of Paule, is called a sacrifice of swete smelling. So all the good workes of the faithfull are called spirituall sacrifices.

Rom.12 1. Heb.13 16. Phili.4 18.

17 And why do I seke out many examples? For commonly this maner of speaking is often founde in the Scriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holden vnder the outward schooling of the law, yet the Prophets did sufficiently expresse, thet vnder those carnall sacrifices was the truth, which the Christian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which maner Dauid prayed, that his prayer might as incense ascēde into the sight of God. And Osee called geuinges of thankes, the calues of lippes, which in an other place Dauid calleth the sacrifices of praise. Whom the Apostle himselfe following, calleth them also the sacrifices of praise, and expoundeth them the frutes of lippes confessing to his name. This kinde of sacrifice the Supper of the Lord can not want: wherein when we declare his death and render thanksgeuing, we do nothing but offer the sacrifice of praise. Of this office of sacrificing, all we Christians are called a kingly Priesthode: because by Christ we offer to God that sacrifice of praise of which the Apostle speaketh, the frute of lippes that confesse to his name. For neither do we with our giftes appeare in the sight of God without an intercessor. Christ is he, which being the mediator cōming betwene, we offer vs and ours to the Father. He is our Bishop, which being entred into the sanctuary of heauen, hath opened the entry to vs. He is the altar, vpon which we lay our giftes, that in him we may be bolde all that we are bolde. It is he (I say) that hath made vs a kingdom and Priests to the Father.

kings and peoples of the earth, from the hieſt to the loweſt, hath ſo ſtriken them with drowſineſſe and giddineſſe, that being become more ſenſleſſe than brute beaſtes, they haue ſet the whole ſhip of their ſafetie onely in this deadly deuouring gulf. Truely Satan neuer did bende himſelfe with a ſtronger engine than this to aſſaile and vanquiſh the kingdome of Chriſt. This is the Helene, for whom the enemies of the trueth fight at this day with ſo great rage, ſo great furiouſneſſe, ſo great crueltie: & a Helene in deede, with whom they ſo defile themſelues with ſpiritual whordome, which is the moſt curſed of all. I do not here ſo much as ones touch with my little finger thoſe groſſe abuſes, wherwith they might color the vnholy pureneſſe of their holy Maſſe: howe filthy markettings they vſe, howe vnhoneſt gaines they make with their maſſinges, with howe great rauening they fill their couetouſneſſe. Onely I do point vnto, and that with fewe and plaine wordes, what maner of thing is euen the very holieſt holineſſe of the Maſſe, for which it hath deſerued in certain ages paſt to be ſo honorable and to be had in ſo great reuerence. For, to haue theſe ſo great miſteries ſet out according to their worthineſſe, requireth a greater worke: and I am vnwilling to mingle herewith thoſe filthy vncleanneſſes that cõmonly ſhewe themſelues before the eyes & faces of all men: ỹ all men may vnderſtand, that the Maſſe taken in her moſt piked pureneſſe, and wherewith it may be ſet out to the beſt ſhewe, without her appendãces, from the roote to the topp ſwarmeth full of all kinde of wickedneſſe, blaſphemie, idolatrie, and ſacrilege.

19 The Readers now haue in a maner almoſt all thoſe things gathered into an abridgement, which we haue thought behouefull to be knowen concerning theſe two Sacramẽts: the vſe of which hath bene deliuered to the Chriſtian Church from the beginning of the newe teſtament, to continue to the very ende of the world: namely, that Baptiſme ſhould be as it were a certain entry into it, & an admiſſion into faith: & the Supper ſhould be as it were a continual foode, wherewith Chriſt ſpiritually fedeth the familie of his faithfull. Wherfore as there is but one God, one faith, one Chriſt, one Church his body: ſo there is but one Baptiſme, and is not ofte miniſtred againe. But the Supper is frõ time to time diſtributed, that they which haue bene ones receiued into the Church, may vnderſtand that they be continually fed with Chriſt. Beſide theſe two as there is no other Sacramẽt ordeined of God, ſo neither ought the Church of the faithful to acknowledge any other. For, that it is not a thing that lieth in the choiſe of man, to raiſe & ſet vp newe Sacramẽts, he ſhall eaſily vnderſtand ỹ remẽbreth that which hath bene here before plainly enough declared, that is, that Sacraments are appointed of God to this ende, that they ſhould inſtruct vs of ſome promiſe of his, and teſtifie to vs his good will towarde vs: and he alſo that calleth to minde, that none hath bene Gods counſeller, that might promiſe vs any certaintie of his will, or aſſure vs & bring vs out of care, what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will geue, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is alſo determined, that no man can ſet fourth a ſigne to be a teſtimonie of any will or promiſe of his: it is he himſelf alone, that can by a ſigne geuen teſtifie to vs of himſelfe. I will ſpeake it more brefely, and paraduenture more groſly, but more plainly, A Sacrament can neuer be without promiſe of ſaluation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themſelues promiſe nothing of our ſaluatiō. Therfore neither can they of themſelues ſet fourth or ſet vp a Sacrament.

Eſa.40. 13. Rom.11 34.

20 Therfore let the Chriſtian Church be contented with theſe two, and let her not onely not admitt or acknowledge any third for the preſent time, but alſo not deſire or loke for any to the ende of the world. For whereas certaine diuerſe Sacraments, beſide thoſe their ordinarie ones, were geuen to the Iewes, according to the diuerſe courſe of times, as Manna, Water ſpringing out of the rocke, the Braſen ſerpent and ſuch other: they were by this change put in minde that they ſhould not ſtay vpon ſuch figures, whoes ſtate was not very ſteedfaſt: but that they ſhould loke for ſome better thing from God, which ſhould continue without any decaying, and without any ende. But we are in a farre other caſe, to whom Chriſt is openly ſhewed: in whom all the treaſures of knowledge and wiſdome are hidden with ſo great abundance and plentie, that either to hope for or loke for any newe encreaſe to theſe treaſures, is verily to moue God to wrath, & to prouoke him againſt vs. We muſt hunger for, ſeke, loke vpon, learne, and throughly learne Chriſt alone, vntill that great day ſhall appeare, wherein the Lord ſhall openly ſhewe to the full the glory of his kingdome, & himſelfe ſuch as he is, to be beholden of vs. And for this reaſon this our age is in the Scriptures ſignified by the laſt houre, the laſt dayes, the laſt times, that no man ſhould deceiue himſelfe with vaine loking for any newe doctrine or reuelation. For many times and in many ſortes he ſpake before by his Prophetes: in theſe laſt dayes the heauenly Father hath ſpoken in his beloued Sonne, which only can manifeſtly ſhewe the Father: and in deede he hath manifeſtly ſhewed him to the full, ſo much as behoueth vs, while we nowe beholde him by a glaſſe. As therefore this is nowe taken away from men, that they can not make newe Sacramentes in the Church of God: ſo it were to be wiſhed, that as litle as were poſſible of mans inuention might be mingled with those Sacramentes that are of God. For like as when water is poured in, the wine departeth and is delaied: and as with leauen scattered amonge it, the whole lumpe of doae waxeth sower: so the pureneſſe of the mysteries of God is nothing elſe but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we ſee how farre the Sacramentes are ſwarued out of kinde from their naturall pureneſſe, as they be handled at this day. There is echwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and geſturinges: but of the worde of God in the meane time there is neither any conſideration nor mention, without which euen the Sacramentes themſelues are not Sacramentes. Yea and the very ceremonies that are ordayned of God, in ſo great a rout can not once lift vp their head, but lye as it were oppreſſed. Howe litle is that ſeene in Baptiſme, which onely ought there to haue ſhined and bin looked vpon, as we haue in an other place rightfully complained, euen Baptiſme it ſelfe? As for the Supper, it is vtterly buried, ſince that it hath bin turned into ỹ Maſſe, ſauinge that it is ſeene once euery yeare but in a mangeled and halfe torne faſhion.

The xix. Chapter.

Of the fiue falſely named Sacramentes: vvhere it declared, that the other fiue vvhich haue bin hitherto commonly taken for Sacramentes, are not Sacramentes: and then it shevved vvhat maner of things they be.

OVr former diſcourſe concerninge Sacramentes might haue obtained this with the ſober and willing to learne, that they ſhould not ouer curiouſly procede any further, nor ſhoulde without the word of God embrace any other Sacramentes beſide thoſe two which they knew to be ordained of the Lorde. But foraſmuch as that opinion of the ſeuen Sacraments, being commonly vſed in all mens talke, hauinge wandered through all ſchooles and preachinges, hath by very auncienty gathered rootes, and is yet ſtill ſettled in the mindes of mẽ: I thought that I ſhould do a thing worth the trauell, if I ſhoulde ſeuerally and more neerely ſearch thoſe other fiue that are commonly adnumbred amonge the true and naturall Sacramentes of the Lord, and wiping away all deceitfull colour, ſhould ſet thẽ forth to be ſeene of the ſimple ſuch as they be, & how falſely they haue bin hitherto taken for Sacramentes. Firſt, I here proteſt to all the godly, that I do not take in hande this contention about the name for any deſire of ſtriuing, but that I am by weighty cauſes led to fight againſt the abuſe of it. I am not ignorant that Chriſtians are Lords,as of words,ſo of all things alſo,& therfore may at their wil apply words to thinges, ſo that a godly ſenſe be kept,although there be ſome vnproperneſſe in the ſpeaking. All this I graunt:although it were better that the wordes ſhould be made ſubiect to thinges,than thinges to the words. But in the name of Sacrament there is an other conſideration. For they which make ſeuen Sacraments,do therwithall giue to them all this definition, that they be viſible formes of inuiſible grace: they make them altogether veſſells of the holy Ghoſt: inſtrumentes of giuing of righteouſneſſe,cauſes of the obtaininge of grace. Yea and the Maiſter of the ſentences himſelfe denieth that the Sacramentes of the lawe of Moſes are properly called by this name, becauſe they did not deliuer in dede the thing that they figured. Is it, I beſeech you,to be ſuffered,that thoſe ſignes which the Lorde hath hallowed with his owne mouth,which he hath garniſhed with excellent promiſes, ſhould not be accompted for Sacramentes:and in the meane time this honor ſhold be cõueied away to thoſe vſages which mẽ either haue deuiſed of themſelues, or at leaſt do obſerue without expreſſe commaundement of God?Therfore either let them change the definition, or let them abſtaine from the wrongfull vſinge of this word, which doth afterward engender falſe opinions & full of abſurdity. Extreme anointinge (ſay they)is a figure and cauſe of inuiſible grace, becauſe it is a Sacrament. If we ought in no wiſe to graunt that which they gather vpon it,then truely we muſt reſiſt thẽ in the name it ſelfe,leaſt therby we admit that it may giue occaſion to ſuch an errour. Againe when they would proue it to be a Sacrament,they adde this cauſe,for that it conſiſteth of the outward ſigne and the word. If we finde neither commaundement nor promiſe of it, what can we do elſe but crie out againſt them?

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about ỹ word, but do moue a controuerſie not ſuperfluous cõcerning the thing it ſelfe. Therfore this we muſt ſtrongly hold faſt, which we haue with inuincible reſon before confirmed, that the power to inſtitute a Sacrament is in the hande of none but of God only. For a Sacrament ought with a certaine promiſe to raiſe vp and comfort the conſciences of the faithfull:which could neuer receiue this certainty from man. A Sacramẽt ought to be to vs a witneſſinge of the good will of God towarde vs, whereof none of all men or Angels can be witnes,foraſmuch as none hath bin of Gods counſell. Therefore it is he alone which doth with right authority teſtifie of himſelfe to vs by his word. A Sacrament is a ſeale, wherewith the teſtament or promiſe of God is ſealed. But it could not be ſealed with bodily thinges & elementes of this world,

vnleſſe they be by the power of God framed and appointed thereunto. Therefore man can not ordaine a Sacrament, becauſe this is not in the power of manne, to make that ſo great myſteries of God ſhould lye hidden vnder ſo baſe thinges. The word of God muſt go before, which may make a Sacrament to be a Sacrament, as Auguſtine very well teacheth. Moreouer it is profitable that there be kept ſome difference betwene the Sacramentes and other ceremonies, vnleſſe we will fall into many abſurdities. The Apoſtles prayed kneling: therefore men ſhall not kneele without a Sacrament. It is ſayd that the diſciples praied toward the Eaſt: therefore the lookinge into the Eaſt ſhalbe a Sacrament. Paule willeth men in euery place to lift vppe pure handes, & it is rehearſed that holy men oftentimes prayed with their handes lifted vp: then let the lifting vp of handes alſo be made a Sacrament. Finally let all the geſtures of the holy ones turne into Sacramentes. Howebeit I woulde not alſo much paſſe vppon theſe thinges, if ſo that they were not ioyned with thoſe other greater diſcommodities.

Homil. in Ioan. 80.
Act. 19. 40 & 10 36.
1. Tim. 2 8.

3 If they will preſſe vs with the authority of the old Church, I ſay that they pretend a falſe colour. For this number of ſeuen is no where founde among the Eccleſiaſticall writers: neither is it certaine at what time it firſt crept in. I graunt in dede that ſometime they be very free in vſing the name of a ſacrament: but what meane they thereby? euen all ceremonies and outward rites, and all exerciſes of godlineſſe. But when they ſpeake of thoſe ſignes, that ought to be witneſſes of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with theſe two, Baptiſme, and the Supper. Leaſt any man ſhoulde thinke that I falſely boaſt of this, I will here rehearſe a few teſtimonies of Auguſtine. To Ianuarius he ſayth First I would haue thee to hold faſt that which is the chiefe point of this diſputation, that our Lord Chriſt (as he himſelfe ſayth in the Goſpell) hath made vs ſubiect to a light yoke and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the felowſhip of the new people with Sacramentes very fewe in number, very eaſie in obſeruinge, very excellent in ſignification. As are Baptiſme hallowed in the name of the Trinity, and the Communicating of the body and blood of the Lord, and whatſoeuer elſe is ſette foorth in the Canonicall Scriptures. Againe, in his booke of Chriſtian doctrine, Since the Lordes reſurrection, the Lorde himſelfe and the doctrine of the Apoſtles hath deliuered certaine few ſignes in ſteede of many, and thoſe moſt eaſie to be done, moſt reuerende in vnderſtandinge, moſt pure in obſeruing: as is Baptiſme, and the Celebratinge of the body and blood of the Lord. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of ſeuen? Is it likely that he would haue paſſed it ouer, if it had bin at that time ordained in the Church, ſpecially ſith he is otherwiſe in obſeruinge of numbres more curious than neede were? Yea, when he nameth Baptiſme and the Supper, and ſpeaketh nothinge of the reſt: doth he not ſufficiently ſignifie, that theſe two myſteries do excell in ſingular dignity, & that the other ceremonies do reſt beneth in a lower degree? Wherfore I ſay that theſe Sacramentarie Doctors are deſtitute not onely of the worde of the Lord, but alſo of the conſent of the olde Church, howe much ſoeuer they glory of this pretence. But nowe lette vs come downe to the ſpeciall things themſelues.

Of Confirmation.

4 This was the maner in olde time, that the children of Chriſtians, when they were growen to age of diſcretion, ſhould be brought before the Biſhop: that they ſhoulde fulfil that duety which was required of thoſe that being growen in yeares did offer themſelues to Baptiſme, For theſe ſate amonge thoſe that were to be catechiſed, till beinge fully inſtructed in the myſteries of the faith, they coulde make a confeſſion of their faith before the Biſhop and the people. Therefore they that were baptiſed being infantes, becauſe they had not then made confeſſion of their faith before the Church, were about the end of their childhoode or in the beginning of their yeres of diſcretion preſented againe by their parentes, and were examined of the Biſhop according to the forme of the Catechiſme, which they had then certaine and common. And that this doing, which otherwiſe ought worthily to be graue and holy, might haue the more reuerence and dignity, there was added alſo the Ceremony of laying on of handes. So that ſame childe, his faith beinge allowed, was let go with ſolemne bleſſing. The olde wryters do oft make mention of this maner. Leo the Pope wryteth: If any returne from heretikes, let
Epi. 39. him not be baptiſed againe: but (which he wanted amonge the Heretikes) let the vertue of the Spirite be giuen him by the Biſhops laying on of his handes. Here our aduerſaries will crie out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in which the holy Ghoſt is giuen, but Leo himſelfe doth in an other place declare what he meaneth by thoſe
Epi. 77. words: Who ſo (ſaith he) is baptiſed amonge heretikes, let him not be rebaptiſed, but with calling vpon the holy Ghoſt, let him be confirmed with laying on of hands: becauſe he receiued only the forme of baptiſme without ſanctifying. Hierom alſo maketh mention of it, wryting againſt the Luciferiãs. But although I do not deny that Hierom ſomwhat erreth therein, for that he ſayth that it is an obſeruation of the Apoſtles: yet he is moſt farre from theſe mens follies. And the very ſame alſo he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this bleſſing is giuen to the biſhops onely, rather in honor of their prieſthoode than by the neceſſity of law. Therefore ſuch laying on of handes, which is done ſimply in ſtede of bleſſing, I praiſe and would that it were at this day reſtored to the pure vſe thereof.

5 But the later age hauinge in a maner blotted out the thinge it ſelfe, hath ſet I wote not what fained confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue fained that the vertue of Cõfirmation is, to giue the holy Ghoſt to the encreaſe of Grace, which in baptiſme was giuen to innocency: to ſtrengthen them to battaile, which in baptiſme were new begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annointinge, and with this forme of words, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the holy croſſe, and confirme thee with the chreſme of ſaluation, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt. All this is gaiely and trimly done. But where is the word of God, that may promiſe here the preſence of the holy Ghoſt? They can not bringe foorth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs that their chreſme is the veſſel of the holy Ghoſt? We ſee oyle, that is, a thicke and fat liquor and nothing elſe. Let the word (ſaith Auguſtine) be added to the element, and there ſhalbe made a Sacrament. Let them (I ſay) bringe foorth this word, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vpõ any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themſelues miniſters of the Sacramentes, as they ought, we needed to ſtriue no longer. This is the firſt law of a miniſter, that he do nothing without commaundement. Go to, let them bring forth any commaundement of this point of miniſtery, & I will not ſpeake one word more. If they haue no commaundement, they can not excuſe their boldneſſe full of ſacrilege. After this maner the Lorde asked the Phariſees, whether the Baptiſme of Iohn were from heauen or from men: if they had anſwered, from men, thẽ he had made them confeſſe that it was triflinge and vaine: if from heauen, then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of Iohn. Therefore leaſt they ſhoulde too much ſclaunder Iohn, they durſt not confeſſe that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is proued to be vaine and triflinge: if they will perſwade vs that it is from heauen, lette them proue it. Mat. 12. 25.

6 They do in deede defende themſelues with the example of the Apoſtles, whom they thinke to haue done nothinge raſhly. That is well in deede: neither would we blame them, if they ſhewed themſelues followers of the Apoſtles. But what did the Apoſtles? Luke re- Act. 8. 21.

Apostles: yet he is most farre from these mens follies. And the very same also he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this blessing is giuen to the bishops onely, rather in honor of their priesthoode than by the necessity of law. Therefore such laying on of handes, which is done simply in stede of blessing, I praise and would that it were at this day restored to the pure vse thereof.

5 But the later age hauinge in a maner blotted out the thinge it selfe, hath set I wote not what fained confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue fained that the vertue of Cõfirmation is, to giue the holy Ghost to the encrease of Grace, which in baptisme was giuen to innocency: to strengthen them to battaile, which in baptisme were new begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annointinge, and with this forme of words, I signe thee with the signe of the holy crosse, and confirme thee with the chresme of saluation, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. All this is gaiely and trimly done. But where is the word of God, that may promise here the presence of the holy Ghost? They can not bringe foorth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs that their chresme is the vessel of the holy Ghost? We see oyle, that is, a thicke and fat liquor and nothing else. Let the word (saith Augustine) be added to the element, and there shalbe made a Sacrament. Let them (I say) bringe foorth this word, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vpõ any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themselues ministers of the Sacramentes, as they ought, we needed to striue no longer. This is the first law of a minister, that he do nothing without commaundement. Go to, let them bring forth any commaundement of this point of ministery, & I will not speake one word more. If they haue no commaundement, they can not excuse their boldnesse full of sacrilege. After this maner the Lorde asked the Pharisees, whether the Baptisme of Iohn were from heauen or from men: if they had answered, from men, thẽ he had made them confesse that it was trifling and vaine: if from heauen, then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of Iohn. Therefore least they shoulde too much sclaunder Iohn, they durst not confesse that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is proued to be vaine and trifling: if they will perswade vs that it is from heauen, lette them proue it. Mat. 12. 25.

6 They do in deede defende themselues with the example of the Apostles, whom they thinke to haue done nothinge rashly. That is well in deede: neither would we blame them, if they shewed themselues followers of the Apostles. But what did the Apostles? Luke re- Act 8. 21.

porteth in the Actes, that the Apoſtles which were at Hieruſalem, when they heard that Samaria had receiued the worde of God, ſent thither Peter and Iohn: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receiue the holy Ghoſt, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptiſed onely in the name of Ieſus: when they had praied, they laid their hands vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans receiued the holy Ghoſt. And of this laying on of hands he diuerſe times maketh mention. I heare what the Apoſtles did: that is, they faithfully executed their miniſtery. The Lord willed that thoſe viſible and wonderfull graces of the holy Ghoſt, which he then poured out vpon his people, ſhould be miniſtred & diſtributed of his Apoſtles by the layinge on of handes. But vnder this layinge on of handes: I thinke there was not contained any hier myſtery: but I expound it, that they adioyned ſuch a ceremonie, that by the very outward doing they might ſignifie, that they commended and as it were offred to God him vpon whom they laid their hands. If this miniſtery which the Apoſtles then executed, were yet ſtill remaininge in the Church, the laying on of handes alſo ought to be kept. But ſince that ſame grace hath ceaſſed to be giuen, whereto ſerueth the laying on of handes? Truely the holy Ghoſt is yet preſent with the people of God, without whom being guider & directer, the Church of God can not ſtand. For we haue the eternall promiſe and which ſhall euer ſtand in force, by which Chriſt calleth to himſelf them that thirſt, that they may drinke liuing waters. But thoſe miracles of powers, & manifeſt workinges, which were diſtributed by the laying on of handes, haue ceaſſed, neither behoued it that they ſhould be, but for a time. For it behoued that the preaching of the Goſpell while it was new, ſhould be glorioufly ſet forth & magnified, with vnheard of and vnwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceaſſed, he did not byandby forſake his Church, but taught that the royalty of his kingdom & the dignity of his word was excellently enough diſcloſed. In what point therfore will theſe ſtageplaiers ſay that they folow ỹ Apoſtles? They ſhould haue done it with laying on of handes, that the euident power of the holy Ghoſt might byandby ſhewe foorth it ſelfe. This they bring not to paſſe: why therfore do they boaſt that the laying on of handes maketh for them, which we read in dede that the Apoſtles vſed, but altogether to an other end?

7 This hath like reaſon as if a mā ſhould teach that that breathing wherwith the Lord breathed vpon his diſciples, is a Sacrament wherby the holy Ghoſt is giuen. But wheras the Lord did this once, he did not alſo will that we ſhoulde do the ſame. After the ſame maner alſo

the Apoſtles laid on their handes, during the time that it pleaſed the Lord that the viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt ſhoulde be diſtributed at their praiers: not that they which come after, ſhould onely plaier-like & without the thing in dede counterfait an empty & cold ſigne, as theſe apes do. But if they proue that in layinge on of handes they folow the Apoſtles, (wherein they haue no like thing with the Apoſtles, ſauing I wote not what ouerthwart wrongfull counterfaitinge) yet whenſe commeth their oyle which they cal the oyle of ſaluation? Who taught them to ſeeke ſaluation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of ſtrengthening? Did Paule, which draweth vs farre away from the elements of this world, which condemneth nothinge more than the ſtickinge to ſuch pety obſeruations? But this I bodly pronounce, not of my ſelfe, but from the Lorde. Who ſo call oyle the oyle of ſaluation, they forſweare the ſaluation which is in Chriſt, they deny Chriſt, they haue no part in the kingdom of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle: the Lorde ſhall deſtroy both. For all theſe weake elementes, which decay with very vſe, belong nothinge to the kingdom of God, which is ſpirituall and ſhall neuer decay. What then? will ſome mē ſay: do you meaſure with the ſame meaſure, the water wherewith we be baptiſed, and the breade and wine vnder which the Supper of the Lorde is giuen? I anſwere that in Sacramentes giuen of God, two thinges are to be looked vnto: the ſubſtance of the bodily thing which is ſette before vs, and the forme that is by the word of God printed in it, wherein lyeth the whole ſtrength. In reſpect therefore that the bread, wine, and water that are in the Sacramentes offered to our ſight, do keepe their owne ſubſtance, this ſayinge of Paule alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God ſhall deſtroy them both. For they paſſe and vaniſh away with the faſhion of this worlde. But in reſpect that they be ſanctified by the worde of God, that they may be Sacramentes, they do not holde vs in the fleſh, but do truely and ſpiritually teach vs.

8 But let vs yet more neerely looke into it, howe many monſters this fat liquor foſtereth and feedeth. Theſe anoynters ſay, that the holy Ghoſt is giuen in baptiſme, to innocence: in Confirmation, to encreaſe of grace, that in Baptiſme, we are new begotten into life: in confirmation, we are prepared to battell. And they are ſo paſt ſhame, that they deny that baptiſme can wel be done without confirmation. O wickedneſſe. Are we not therefore in baptiſme buried together with Chriſt, being made partakers of his death, that we may be alſo parteners of his reſurrection. But this felowſhip with the death and life of Christ Paule expoundeth to be the mortifying of our flesh, & quickeninge of our spirit: for that our olde man is crucified, that we may walke in newnesse of life. What is to be armed to battell if this be not? If they compted it a matter of nothing, to tread vnder feete the word of God: why did they not yet at least reuerence the Church, to whom they will in euery point seeme so obedient. But what can be brought forth more stronge against their doctrine, than that decree of the Mileuitane councel? Who so sayth that baptisme is giuen only for forgiuenesse of sinnes, and not for a help of grace to come, accursed be he. But whereas Luke, in the place which we haue alleaged, sayth that they were baptised in the name of Iesus Christ, which had not receiued ỹ holy Ghost: he doth not simply deny that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghost, which beleued in Christ with hart, and confessed him with mouth: but meaneth of that receiuing of the holy Ghost, whereby the open powers and visible graces were receiued. So is it sayd that the Apostles receiued the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, whereas it had bin long before said vnto them of Christ, It is not you that speake, but the Spirite of my Father which speaketh in you. Beholde all ye that are of God, the malicious and poysonous deceite of Sathan. That thing which was truely giuen in baptisme, he lyingely sayth to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by stealth leade you vnware from baptisme. Who now can dout that this is the doctrine of Satan, which cuttinge away from baptisme the promises properly belonging to baptisme, doth conuey away & remoue them, to an other thinge? It is founde (I say) vpon what maner of fundation this godly anointing standeth. The word of God is, that al they which are baptised in Christ, haue put on Christ with his gifts. The word of the annointers is, ỹ they receiued in baptisme no promise, by which they may be armed in batrails. That is the voice of trueth, therefore this must be the voice of lyinge. Therefore I can more truely define this Confirmation than they haue hitherto defined it: namely, that it is a notable sclaunder of baptisme, which darkeneth, yea aboliſheth the vse thereof: that it is a false promise of the deuil, which draweth vs away from the trueth of God. Or, if you wil, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the deuill, which as it were by ouerspreadinge of darkenesse, deceiueth the eies of the simple.

thinges pertained to Christianity, were all set foorth in wrytinge and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be sought and learned from else where than out of the Scriptures. Therfore the whole wisdom of God, the heauenly trueth, the whole doctrine of Christ, doth but beginne Christians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this sentence are damned all the Apostles, and so many Martyrs, whome it is most certaine to haue neuer bin chrelmed: forasmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which being poured vpon them, they might fulfil all the partes of christianty, or rather might be made Christians which yet were none. But, though I holde my peace, they do largely confute themselues. For, how many of the number of their owne people do they annoynt after baptisme? why therfore do they suffer such halfe christians in their flocke, whose imperfection might easily be holpen? Why do they with so careles negligence suffer thē to omit that which was not lawfull to be omitted without greuous offense? Why do they not more seuerely call vpon the keping of a thing so necessary, & without which saluatiō can not be obtained, vnlesse peraduenture some be preuented by death? Verily when they so freely suffer it to be despised, they secretly cōfesse that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

10 Last of all they determine that this holy annoyntinge is to be had in greater reuerence thā baptisme: because this anointing is peculiarly ministred by the handes of the chiefe bishops, but baptisme is commonly distributed by euery Priest. What may a man here say, but that they are vtterly mad, which so flatter their owne inuentions, that in comparison of them they careleslly despise the holy ordinances of God? O mouth that robbest God, darest thou set a fat liquor onely defiled with the stinke of thine owne breath, and enchaunted with murmuring sounde of wordes, against the Sacrament of Christ, and to compare it with water hallowed with the worde of God? But thy wickednesse accompted this but a smal matter, vnlesse thou didst also preferre it aboue the same. These be the answers, of the holy see, these be the Oracles of the Apostolike trestle. But some of them, euen in their owne opinion, begonne somwhat to qualifie this vnbridled madnes. It is (say they) to be worshipped with greater reuerence: peraduenture not for the greater vertue and profit that it giueth: but because it is giuen of the worthier men, and is made in the worthier parte of the body, that is, in the forehead: or because it bringeth a greater encrease of vertues, although baptisme auaile more to forgiuenesse. But in the first reason do they not bewray themselues to be Donatistes, which measure the force of the Sacrament by the wor-

But if a man aske of them, from whenſe ſo great prerogatiue hath bin giuen to Biſhops, what reaſon will they bring beſide their owne luſt? The Apoſtles alone vſed that power, which alone diſtributed the holy Ghoſt? Are the biſhops alone Apoſtles? Yea, are they Apoſtles at all? But let vs alſo graunt them that: why do they not by the ſame argument affirme, that biſhops alone ought to touche the Sacrament of the blood in the Supper of the Lord: which they therefore deny to lay mē, becauſe the Lord gaue it to the Apoſtles alone? If to the Apoſtles alone, why do they not conclude: therefore to the biſhops alone? But in ẏ place they make the Apoſtles, ſimple prieſts: but now the giddines of their hed carieth thē an other way, ſuddenly to create thē biſhops. Finally Ananias was no Apoſtle, to whom yet Paule was ſent, that he ſhould receiue his ſight, be baptiſed, & be filled with the holy Ghoſt. I will adde this alſo to the heape: If by the law of God this was the proper office of biſhops, why haue they bin ſo bold to giue it away to common prieſtes? as we read in a certaine epiſtle of Gregory.

Act.9. 17. Dist.9. cap. Peruenit.

11 As for their other reaſon, how trifling, fond, and fooliſh is it, to call their Confirmation worthier than the baptiſme of God, becauſe in it the forehead is anointed with oyle, and in baptiſme the hinder parte of the head, as though baptiſme were done with the oyle and not with the water? I cal all the godly to witnes, whether theſe loſels do not endeuour themſelues to this only ende, to corrupt the pureneſſe of the Sacraments with their leuen. I haue already ſpoken this in an other place, that in the Sacramēts, that which is of God ſcarcely glimmereth through at holes, amonge the rout of the inuentions of men. If any man did not beleue me therein, let him nowe at leaſt beleue his owne maiſters. Loe paſſinge ouer the water, and makinge no accompt of it, they hiely eſteeme the onely oyle in baptiſme. We therefore on the contrary ſide do ſay, that in baptiſme the forehead alſo is dipped in water. In cōpariſon of this, we eſteeme not your oyle worth one piece of dong, whether it be in baptiſme or in confirmation. If any alleage that it is ſold for more: by this adding of price, the goodnes (if any were in it) is corrupted: ſo much leſſe may they cōmende a moſt filthy deceit by theft. In the third reaſon they bewray their own vngodlines, while they prate that in confirmation is giuen a greater encreaſe of vertues than in baptiſme. By the layinge on of handes ẏ Apoſtles diſtributed the viſible graces of the Spirit. In what thinge do theſe mens fat liquor ſhew it ſelfe frutefull? But away with theſe qualifiers, that couer one ſacrilege with many ſacrileges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in ſunder, than to labor ſo much in vndoinge it.

12 But nowe when they ſee themſelues deſtitute of the worde of God and probable reaſon, they pretende as they are wont, that it is a moſt auncient obſeruation & ſtabliſhed by conſent of many ages. Although that were true, yet they winne nothinge thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but from heauen: not from men, but from God alone. They muſt proue God to be the author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a Sacrament. But why do they obiect antiquitie, whereas the olde wryters, when they minde to ſpeake properly, do no where recken moe Sacramentes than two? If a fortreſſe of our faith were to be ſought from men, we haue an inuincible tower, that the olde Fathers neuer acknowledged thoſe for Sacramentes which theſe men do lyingely faine to be Sacramentes. The olde wryters ſpeake of the laying on of handes: but do they call it a Sacrament? Auguſtine plainly affirmeth that it is no other thing than praier. Neither let them here barke againſt me with their ſtinking diſtinctions, that Auguſtine meant that not of the layinge on of handes vſed to confirmation, but which was vſed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth & is abroade in the handes of men. If I wreſt it to any other ſenſe than Auguſtine himſelf wrote it, I giue them leaue after their ordinary maner to oppreſſe me not only with railing, but alſo with ſpitting at me. For he ſpeaketh of them that returned frō Schiſme to the vnity of the Church. He denieth that they neded to be newly baptiſed: for he ſaith, that the laying on of hands ſufficeth, that by the bond of peace the Lord may giue them the holy Ghoſt. But foraſmuch as it might ſeeme an abſurdity, that the laying on of hands ſhould be done of new rather than baptiſme: he ſheweth a differēce. For (ſaith he) what other thing is the laying of hands, than praier vpon a man? And that this is his meaninge, appeareth by an other place, where he ſaith: Hande is laid vpon heretikes amended, for the coupling of Charity, which is the greateſt gift of the holy Ghoſt, without which whatſoeuer holy things are in man they auaile not to ſaluation.

Lib 5. cap. 23.

13 But I would to God we did kepe ſtill the maner which I haue ſaid to haue bin in the olde time, before that this vntimely deliuered image of a Sacrament was borne: not that it ſhould be ſuch a confirmation as they faine, which can not once be named without iniury to baptiſme: but a catechiſing, whereby children or they that were nere to the age of diſcretion did declare an accompt of their faith before the Church. But it ſhould be the beſt maner of Catechiſing, if a forme were written to that vſe, containing & familiarly ſetting out a ſumme in a maner of all ỹ articles of our religion, in which the whole church of the faithfull ought without controuerſie to agree: that a childe being ten yeres old ſhould offer himſelfe to the Church to declare a confeſſion of his faith, ſhould be examined of euery article, & anſwere to euery one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not vnderſtand it, he might be taught. So ſhould he, before the Church witneſſing & beholding it, profeſſe the only, true, & pure faith, wherwith the people of the faithfull doth with one minde worſhip the one God. If this diſcipline were at this day in force, truely the ſlothfulnes of ſome parentes would be whetted, who do careleſly neglect the inſtruction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to thē, which then without opē ſhame they could not omit: there ſhould be among Chriſtiā people a greater cōſent of faith, & not ſo great ignorance & rudenes of many: ſome ſhould not be ſo raſhly caried away with new & ſtrāge doctrines: finally all ſhould haue as it were a certaine orderly inſtruction of chriſtian learning.

Of Penance.

14 In the next place they ſet Penance, of which they entreate ſo confuſely & diſordredly, that conſciences can beare away no ſure or ſounde thinge of their doctrine. We haue already in an other place declared at large, what we had learned out of the Scriptures concerning repentance, and then what they alſo teach of it. Nowe we haue this onely to touch, what reaſon they had that raiſed vp the opinion, which hath heretofore reigned in Churches and ſchooles, that it is a Sacrament. But firſt I will briefely ſay ſomewhat of the vſage of the olde Church, the pretenſe wherof they haue abuſed to ſtabliſh their fained inuention. This order they kept in publike penance, that they which had fully done the ſatisfactions enioyned them, were recōciled with ſolemne laying on of handes. That was the Signe of abſolution, whereby both the ſinner himſelfe was raiſed vppe before God with truſt of pardon, and the Church was admoniſhed gently to receiue him into fauour, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Ciprian oftētimes calleth, to giue peace. That this doing might be of greater dignity, and haue more commendation amonge the people, it was ordained that the biſhops authority ſhould alway be vſed for the meane herein. From henſe came that decree of the ſecond councel at Carthage: Be it not lawful to a prieſt at the Maſſe publikely to reconcile a penitent. And an other decree of the councel at Arauſium, Let thoſe, which in time of their penāce depart out of this life, be admitted to the Communion without the laying on of handes vsed in reconcilinge: if they recouer of their sickenesse let them stande in the degree of penitentes, and when the time is fully expired, let them receiue of the bishop the laying on of hands vsed in reconciling. Again Cap. 33

the decree of ỹ third councel at Carthage: Let not the priest without the authority of the bishop, reconcile a penitent. All these tended to this ende, that the seuerity which they would haue to be vsed in that behalfe, shoulde not with too much lenity grow in decay. Therefore they willed ỹ bishop to be iudge of it, which was likely that he would be more circumspect in the examination therof. Howbeit Ciprian in a certaine place sheweth, that not only the bishop, but also the whole Clergie layd their handes on him. For thus he saith. At the full time they do penance, then they come to the Communion, & by the laying on of handes of the bishop and the clergy, they receiue power to partake of the Communion. Afterwarde by processe of time it came to this point, that beside publike penance they vsed this ceremonie also in priuate absolutions. Hereupon came that distinction in Gratian betwene publike & priuate reconciliation. I iudge that same olde vsage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to haue bin holy & healthfull for the Church, and I woulde that it were at this day restored. As for this later, although I dare not disallowe it, or at least speake more sharply against it, yet I thinke it to be lesse necessary. Howesoeuer it be, yet we see that the layinge on of handes in penance is a ceremony ordained of men, not of God, which is to be set among meane things & outward exercises: & those verily which are not to be despised, but which ought to be in a lower degree, than those that are commẽded vnto vs by the word of the Lord. Decret. 26. que. 6.

15 But the Romanistes and the schoolemen, (which haue an ordinary custome to corrupt all thinges with wrong expounding them) do here very carefully trauail in findinge out a Sacrament. Neither ought it to seeme any maruell, for they seeke a knot in a rushe. But where they haue it best, they leaue a thing entangeled in suspense, vncertaine, and confounded and troubled with diuersity of opinions. They say therefore either that the outward penance is a Sacrament, and if it be so, that it ought to be taken for a signe of the inwarde penance, that is, of the contrition of hart, which shalbe the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacrament, not two Sacramentes, but one full one. But, that the outward penance is only the Sacrament: the inward is both the thing and the Sacrament: and that the forgiuenes of sinnes is the thing and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definition of a Sacrament which Lib. 4. Sen. di. 12. ca. 2.

we haue aboue ſet, examine thereby that which theſe men call a Sacrament, and they ſhall finde that it is not an outward ceremony ordained of the Lorde for the confirminge of our faith. If they cauill that my definition is not a lawe which they neede to obey: let them heare Auguſtin, whom they faine that they eſteme as moſt holy. Viſible Sacramentes (ſayth he) were ordained for carnall mens ſakes, that by degrees of Sacramentes they may be conueied from thoſe things that are ſeene with eies to thoſe things that are vnderſtanded. What like thinge do either they themſelues ſee, or can they ſhew to other in that which they call the Sacrament of Penance? The ſame Auguſtine ſaith in an other place: It is therfore called a Sacramēt, becauſe in it one thing is ſeene, & an other other thing is vnderſtanded. That which is ſeene, hath a bodily forme: that which is vnderſtanded, hath a ſpirituall frute. Neither do theſe things in any wiſe agree with the Sacrament of penance, ſuch as they faine it, where there is no bodily forme that may repreſent a ſpiritual frute.

Sermone de bap. infant.

16 And, to kil theſe beaſts vpon their owne fighting place, if there be any Sacrament here to be ſought, may it not be much more colerably ſaid that the abſolutiō of the prieſt is a Sacramēt, than penance either inward or outward? For it might readily be ſayd, that it is a ceremony to aſſure our faith of the forgiuenes of ſinnes, & hath a promiſe of the keies as they call it, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall binde or looſe vpon earth, ſhalbe bounde or looſed in heauen. But ſome man would haue obiected, that the moſt parte of them that are abſolued of the prieſtes, obtaine no ſuch thing by ſuch abſolutiō: whereas by their doctrine the Sacramentes of the new law ought to worke in deede that which they figure. This were but to be laughed at. For, as in the Supper, they make a double eating, a Sacramentall eating which is egally common to good & to euill, & a ſpiritual eating which is only proper to the good: why might they not alſo faine that abſolution is receiued two wayes? Yet coulde I not hitherto vnderſtande what they meant with this their doctrine, which we haue already taught howe far it diſagreeth from the trueth of God, whē we purpoſely entreated of that argumēt. Here my minde is only to ſhew, that this dout withſtandeth not, but that they may call the abſolution of the prieſt a Sacrament. For they might aunſwere by the mouth of Auguſtine, that ſanctification is without the viſible Sacrament, & the viſible Sacramēt without inward ſanctification. Againe, that the Sacraments do worke in the only elect that which they figure. Againe, that ſome do put on Chriſt ſo far as to the partaking of the Sacramēt, other ſome to ſanctification: the one, the good and euill egally do: this other, the good only, onely. Truely they haue more than childiſhly erred & be blinded in the cleare ſunne, which trauailing with great hardnes, yet eſpied not a thing ſo plaine and open to euery man.

17 Yet leaſt they ſhoulde waxe too proude, in what parte ſocuer they ſet the Sacrament, I deny that it ought rightfully to be taken for a Sacrament. Firſt, becauſe there is no ſpeciall promiſe to it, which is the only ſubſtance of a Sacrament. Againe, becauſe whatſoeuer ceremony is here ſhewed foorth, it is the mere inuention of menne: wheras we haue already proued that the ceremonies of Sacraments can not be ordained but of God. Therefore it was a lye and a deceite which they haue inuented of the Sacrament of penance. This fained Sacrament they haue garniſhed with a meete commendation, calling it a ſeconde boord after ſhipwrecke: becauſe if a man haue by ſinninge marred the garment of innocence which he receiued in baptiſme he may by penãce repaire it. But it is the ſaying of Hierom. Whoſe ſoeuer it be, it can not be excuſed but ỹ it is vtterly wicked, if it be expoũded after their meaning. As thogh baptiſme be blotted out by ſinne, & is not rather to be called to remembrance of euery ſinner, ſo oft as he thinketh of the forgiueneſſe of ſinne, that he may thereby gather vp himſelfe, and recouer courage, and ſtrenghthen his Faith, that he ſhall obtaine the forgiuenes of ſinnes which is promiſed him in baptiſme. But that which Hierome hath ſpoken hardly and vnproperly, that by penance baptiſme is repaired (from which they fall away that deſerue to be excommunicate from the Church) theſe good expoſitours drawe to their wickednesſe. Therefore you ſhall moſt fitly ſpeake, if you cal baptiſme the Sacrament of penance, ſith it is giuen for a confirmation of grace, and ſeale of confidence, to them that purpoſe repentance. And leaſt you ſhoulde thinke this to be our deuiſe, beſide this that it agreeth with the wordes of the Scripture, it appeareth that it was in the old Church commonly ſpoken like a moſt certaine principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is ſaid to be Auguſtines, it is called the Sacrament of Faith & of penance. And why flee we to vncertaine ſayings? As though we could require any thing more plaine, than that which the Euangeliſt reciteth: that Iohn preached ỹ baptiſme of repentance vnto forgiuenes of ſinnes?

Of extreme vnction as they call it.

18 The third fained Sacrament is extreme vnction, which is not done but of the Prieſt, & that in extremes, (ſo they terme it) & with oyle conſecrate of the biſhop, & with this forme: By this holy anoynting, & by his moſt kind mercy, God pardõ thee whatſoeuer thou haſt offended by ſeing, by hearing, by ſmelling, feling, taſting. They faine that there be two vertues of it, ỹ forgiuenes of ſinnes, & eaſe of bodily ſickeneſſe if it be ſo expedient: if not, the ſaluation of the ſoule.

Iam.5. 14. They ſay that the inſtitution of it is ſet of Iames, whoſe wordes are theſe. Is any ſicke amonge you? Let him bringe in the Elders of the Church, & let them pray ouer him, anointinge him with oyle in the name of the Lord: & the praier of Faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke man, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him vp: & if he be in ſinnes, they ſhalbe forgiuen him. Of the ſame ſort is this anointing, of which we haue aboue ſhewed that ỹ other laying on of hands is, namely a playerlike hipocriſie, whereby without reaſon and without frute they would reſemble the Apoſtles. Marc rehearſeth that the Apoſtles at their firſt ſending, ac-

They anointed (ſaith he) many ſicke men with oyle, & they were healed. Hereunto Iames had reſpect, when he commaunded the Elders to be called together to anoint the ſicke man. That vnder ſuch Ceremonies is contained no hier myſtery, they ſhall eaſily iudge which marke howe great liberty the Lord & his Apoſtles vſed in theſe outward thinges.

Act.3.6 & 5.16. & 19.12 likely that this anointing was not (as all other thinges alſo were not) cauſeleſly put in vre. I graunt: yet not that it ſhoulde be a meane of healing, but only a ſigne, that the dulnes of the vnskilfull might be put Pſal.45. 8. in minde from whenſe ſo great power proceeded, to this ende that they ſhould not giue the praiſe therof to the Apoſtles. And, that the holy Ghoſt & his giftes are ſignified by oyle it is a common & vſuall thing. But that ſame grace of healings is vaniſhed away, like as alſo the other miracles, which the Lord willed to be ſhewed for a time, wherby he might make the new preaching of the Goſpel marueilous for euer. Therfore though we graunt neuer ſo much, that anointing was a Sacrament of thoſe powers which were then miniſtred by the hands of the Apoſtles, it now nothinge pertaineth to vs to whom the miniſtration of ſuch powers is not committed.

Iohn.9. 7. 19 And by what greater reaſon do they make a Sacrament of this Act.20. 10. anointing, thā of all other ſignes that are rehearſed to vs in the Scripture? Why do they not appoint ſome Siloah to ſwim in, whereinto at certaine ordinary recourſes of times ſicke menne may plunge themſelues themſelues? That (ſay they) ſhould be done in vaine. Truely no more in vaine than anointing. Why do they not lie along vpon dead men, becauſe Paul raiſed vp a dead childe with lying vpon him? Why is not cley made of ſpittle and duſt, a Sacrament? But the other were but ſingular examples: but this is geuen of Iames for a commaundement. Verily Iames ſpake for the ſame time, when the Church yet ſtill enioyed ſuch bleſſing of God. They affirme in dede that there is yet ſtill the ſame force in their anointing: but we finde it othetwiſe by experience. Let no man nowe maruell howe they haue with ſuch boldneſſe mocked ſoules, which they knowe to be ſenſleſſe & blinde when they are ſpoiled of the word of God, that is, of their life and light: ſith they are nothing aſhamed to go about to mocke the liuing and feling ſenſes of ỹ body. Therfore they make themſelues worthy to be ſcorned, while they boſt that they are endued with the grace of healings. The Lorde verily is preſent with his in all ages, and ſo oft as neede is he helpeth their ſicknefles no leſſe than in olde time: but he doth not ſo vtter thoſe manifeſt powers, nor diſtributeth miracles by the handes of the Apoſtles: becauſe this gift both was but for a time, and alſo is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulneſſe of men.

20 Therefore as not without cauſe the Apoſtles haue by the ſigne of oile openly teſtified, that the grace of healings committed to them was not their own power, but the power of the holy Ghoſt: ſo on the other ſide they are wrongdoers to the Holy Ghoſt, which make a ſtinking oile and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether like as if one would ſay that all oile is the power of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe it is called by that name in Scripture: that euery doue is ỹ holy Ghoſt, becauſe he appered in that forme. But theſe things, let them loke to. So much as for this preſent is enough for vs, we do moſt certainly perceiue that their annointing is no Sacramẽt: which is neither a Ceremonie ordeined of God, nor hath any promiſe. For when we require theſe two things in a Sacrament, that it be a ceremonie ordeined of God, and that it haue a promiſe of God: we do therewithall require that the ſame Ceremonie be geuen to vs, and that the promiſe belong vnto vs. For no man doth affirme that Circumciſion is nowe a Sacrament of the Chriſtian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promiſe knitt vnto it: becauſe it was neither commaunded to vs, nor the promiſe which was adioined to it was giuen to vs with the ſame cõdition. That the promiſe wich they proudely boſt of in their annointinge, is not geuen to vs, we haue euidently ſhewed, and they themſelues declare by experience. The Ceremonie ought not to haue bene vſed, but of them that were endued with the grace of healings, not of these butchers that can more skill of slaying and murthering than of healing.

21 Howbeit although they obteine this, that that which Iames commaundeth concerning annointing, agreeth with this age (which they are most farre from) yet euen so they shall not haue much preuailed in proving of their vnction wherewith they haue hetherto annointed vs. Iames willeth that all sicke men be annointed: these men infect with their fat liquor, not sicke men, but corpses half dead, when the life lieth already laboring at the toppe of their lippes, or (as they themselues terme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a present medicine, whereby they may either ease the sharpenesse of diseases, or at the least may bring some comfort to the soule, they are to cruel that do neuer heale in time. Iames willeth that the sicke man be annointed of the Elders of the Church: these men allowe no annointer but the pety sacrificing Priest. Whereas they expounde in Iames presbyteros the Elders to be Priests, and fondly say that the plurall number is there set for comlinesse sake: that is but trifling: as though the Churches at that time abounded with swarmes of sacrificing Priests, that they might go in a long pompous shewe to carrie a pageante of holy oile. When Iames simply biddeth that sicke men be annointed, I vnderstande by it none other annointing but of common oile: and none other is found in Markes rehearsall. These men vouchesaue to haue none other oile, but that which is hallowed of the Bishop, that is to say, warmed with much breathing on it, enchaunted with much mumbling, and with the knee bowed nine times saluted in this maner: thrise Haile holy oile: thrise Haile holy chresme: thrise Haile holy balme. Out of whom haue they sucked such coniurations? Iames saith: that when the sicke man is annointed with oile, and prayer hath bene pronounced ouer him, if he be in sinnes they shalbe forgeuen him: namely, that the giltinesse being taken away, they may obteine release of the peine: not meaning that sinnes are put away with fat liquor, but that the prayers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God, shall not be vaine. These mē do wickedly ly, that by their holy, that is to say, abhominable annointing, sinnes are forgeuen. Lo howe gaily they shall preuaile, when they haue bene at large suffred to abuse the testimonie of Iames at their pleasure. And least we should neede to trauaile long in profe hereof, their owne chronicles do discharge vs of this hardnes. For they report that Pope Innocentius, which in Augustines time gouerned the Church of Rome, ordeined that not onely Priests, but also all Christians should vse oile to annoint for their owne necessitie

Of Eccleſiaſticall Orders.

22 The fourth place in their regiſter hath the Sacrament of Order: but the ſame ſo frutefull, that it bredeth out of it ſelfe ſeuen litle Sacraments. But this is very worthy to be laughed at, that wheras they affirme that there be ſeuen Sacraments, when they go about to rehearſe them they recken vp thirtene. Neither can they allege for themſelues, that they are but one Sacrament, becauſe they tende all to one Prieſthode, and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it. For ſith it is euident that in euery one of them are ſeueral Ceremonies, and they themſelues ſay that there be diuerſe graces: no mā can dout but that they ought to be called ſeuen Sacraments, if their opinions be receiued. And why ſtriue we about it as though it were a thing doutfull, foraſmuch as they themſelues do plainly and ſeuerally declare ſeuen? But firſt we will brefely knitt vp by the way, howe many and howe vnſauorie abſurdities they thruſt in vnto vs, whē they go about to commende to vs their Orders in ſteede of Sacraments: and then we wil ſe whether the Ceremony which Churches vſe in ordering of miniſters, ought to be called a Sacrament at all. They make therefore ſeuen eccleſiaſticall Orders or degrees, which they garniſh with the name of a Sacrament. Thoſe be, dorekepers, Reders, Exorciſtes, Acoluthes or followers, Subdeacons, Deacons, Prieſts. And vii they ſay that they be, for the ſeuenfolde grace of the Holy ghoſt, wherewith they ought to be endued that are promoted vnto them. But it is encreaſed and more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Nowe the number it ſelfe is hallowed with a wrongfull expounding of Scripture, when they thinke that they haue red in Eſai vii vertues of the Holy ghoſt whereas both in deede Eſay there rehearſeth but ſix, and alſo the prophet ment not to comprehende them all in that place: for he is els where as well called the Spirit of life, of ſanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirit of wiſdome, of vnderſtāding, of counſell, of ſtrength, of knowledge, & of the feare of the Lorde. Howbeit ſome ſutteler men make not ſeuen orders, but nine, after the likeneſſe (as they ſay) of the Church triumphing. But among them alſo there is ſtrife: becauſe ſome would haue the ſhauing of the clergie to be the firſt order of all, and Biſhoprike the laſt: other ſome excluding ſhauing altogether, recken Archebiſhoprike among the orders. Iſidore otherwiſe diuideth them? For he maketh Pſalmiſtes and Reders to be diuerſe: he appointeth the Pſalmiſtes for ſonges, and the Reders to the reding of the Scriptures, wherewith the people may be inſtructed. And thir

So teacheth the master of the schole: but the most illuminate doctors do otherwise determine. Againe they also disagree among themselues. Moreouer the most sacred canons call vs an other way. Thus forsoth do men agree, when they dispute of godly matters without the word of God.

Ephe. 5. 2. 23 But this excedeth all folly, that in euery one of these they make Christ fellowe with them. First (say they) he executed the office of dorekeper, when he did with a whip made of cordes, driue the biers and sellers out of the temple. He signifieth himselfe to be a dorekeper, when he sayeth, I am the dore. He toke vpō him the office of Reader, when he red Esay in the Sinagoge. He did the office of an Exorcist, when touching the tong and eares of the deffe and dumme man, he restored to him his hearing. He testified himselfe to be an Acoluth or follower in these wordes, He that followeth me, walketh not in darkenesse. He executed the office of Subdeacon, when being girded with a linen cloth he washed the disciples feete. He did beare the person of a Deacon, when he distributed his body and blood in the Supper. He fulfilled the office of Priest, when he offred himselfe vpon the crosse a sacrifice to his Father. These things can not so be heard without laughing, that I maruel that they were writtē without laughing, if yet they were men that wrote them. But most notable is their sutteltie wherewith they play the Philosophers about the name of Acoluth, calling him a Ceroferar, a taper bearer with a word (as I thinke) of sorcerie, truely such a one as was neuer heard of in all natiōs and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greke simply signifieth a follower. Howbeit if I should earnestly tarry in confuting these men, I should my selfe also worthily be laughed at, they are so trifling and very mockeries.

24 But that they may not be able yet still with false colors to deceiue euen very silly womē, their vanitie is by the way to be vttered. They create with great pompe and solemnitie their Reders, Psalmistes, Dorkepers, Acoluthes, to execute those offices, wherunto they appoint very children, or those whome they call lay men. For who for the most part lighteth the candels, who poureth wine and water into the cruet, but a childe or some base fellowe of the laitie, that maketh his gaine thereof? Do not the same men sing, Do they not shutt and open the Church dores? For who euer sawe in their temples an Acoluth, or a Dorekeper executing his office? But rather he that whē he was a boy did the office of an Acoluth, when he is ones

admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceſſeth to be that which he beginneth to be called, that they may ſeeme to will of purpoſe to caſt of the office when they take vpon them the title. Beholde why they haue neede to be conſecrate by Sacraments, and to receiue the Holy ghoſt, namely, that they may do nothing. If they allege for exercise, that this is the frowardneſſe of times, that they forſake and neglect their miniſteries: let them therewithall confeſſe that there is at this day in the Church no vſe nor frute of their holy Orders, which they maruelouſly aduance, and that their whole Church is full of curſe: becauſe it ſuffreth tapers & cruets to be handled of children and prophane men, which none are worthy to touch but they that are conſecrate Acoluthes: and becauſe it committeth the ſonges to children, which ought not to be heard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorciſtes, to what ende do they conſecrate them? I here that the Iewes had their Exorciſtes: but I ſe that they were ſo called of the exorciſmes or coniurations which they vſed. Of theſe counterfait exorciſtes who euer heard it ſpoken, that they ſhewed any example of their profeſſion? It is fained that they haue power geuen them to lay their handes vpon mad men, them that are to be catechiſed, and men poſſeſſed with deuils: but they can not perſwade the deuils that they haue ſuch power, becauſe the deuils do not only not yelde to their commaundements, but alſo vſe commaunding authoritie ouer them. For a man can ſcarcely finde euery tēth of them, that is not led with an euill Spirit. Therefore whatſoeuer things they babble concerning their pety Orders, are patched together of foliſh and vnſauory lies. Of the olde Acoluthes, and Dorekepers, and Reders, we haue ſpoken in an other place, when we declared the order of the Church. Our purpoſe here is onely to fight againſt that newe founde inuention of the ſeuenfold Sacrament in eccleſiaſticall Orders. Of which there is no where any thing red, but among theſe fooliſh praters the Sorboniſtes and Canoniſtes. Act. 19. 13.

25 Nowe let vs cōſider of the ceremonies which they vſe about it. Firſt whomſoeuer they receiue into their order of ſoldiars, they do with one cōmon ſigne entre them into Clergie. For they ſhaue them in the crowne, that the crowne may betoken kingly dignitie, becauſe Clerkes ought to be kinges, that they may rule themſelues and other. For Peter ſpeaketh thus of them, Ye are a choſen kinde, a kingly prieſthode, a holy nation, a people of purchace. But it was ſacrilege to take to themſelues alone that which is geuē to the whole Church, and proudely to glory of the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter ſpeaketh to the whole Church: theſe fellowes wreſt it Capit. Dupl. 12. queſtio. 1. Pet. 2. 9.

Duo sunt. to a fewe shauen men: as though it were said to them alone, be ye holy: as though they alone were purchaced by the blood of Christ: as though they alone were by Christ made a kingdome & priesthode to God. Then they assigne also other reasons: the top of their hed is made bare, that their minde may be declared to be free vnto the Lord, which with open face may beholde the glory of God. Or that they may be taught that the faultes of their mouth and their eyes must be cut of. Or the shauing of their hed is the putting away of temporall things, and the heary compasse about the crowne are the remnantes of goodes that are reteined for their sustenance. All insignes: because forsoth the veile of the tẽple is not yet cut in sonder. Therefore being persuaded that they haue gaily discharged their duties, because they haue figured such things by their crowne, of the very things in deede they performe nothing at all. Howe long will they mocke vs with such false colors and deceites? The clergie by shearing of a fewe heares do signifie that they haue cast away the aboundance of temporall goods, that they beholde the glory of God, that they haue mortified the lust of the eares and eyes: but there is no kinde of men more rauening, more senslesly dull, more lustfull? Why dõ they not rather truely performe holinesse, than with false and lieng signes counterfait a shewe of it?

26 Moreouer when they say that the crown of the Clergie hath the beginning and reason from the Nazarites: what other thing do they allege, than that their misteries are sprong out of the Iewish Ceremonies, or rather that they are mere Iewishnesse? But whereas they further say, that Priscilla, Acila, and Paul himselfe, taking a vowe vpon them did sheare their hedes, that they might be purified: they bewray their grosse ignorance. For it is no where red of Priscilla: and of Acila also it is doutfull: for that same shearing may as well be referred to Paule as to Acila. But, that we may not leaue to them that which they require, that they haue an example of Paule: the simpler must note, that Paul did neuer sheare his head for any sanctification, but onely to serue the weakenesse of his brethren. I am wont to call such vowes the vowes of charitie not of godlinesse: that is to say, not taken in hande for any seruice of God, but to beare with the rudenesse of the weake: as he himselfe saith, that he was made a Iewe to the Iewes, &c. Therefore he did this, and the same but ones, and for a shorte time, that he might for a time fashion himselfe to the Iewes. These men, when they will without any vse coũterfait the purifyings of the Nazarites, what do they els but raise vp an other Iewishnesse, when they wrongfully couet to followe the olde Iewishnesse? the ſame religiouſneſſe was that decretall Epiſtle made, which, according to the Apoſtle, forbiddeth clerkes that they ſhould not ſuffer their heare to growe, but ſhere it rounde like a boowle. As though the Apoſtle, when he teacheth what is comly for all men, were carefull for the rounde ſhearinge of the Clergie. Hereby let the reders conſider, of what force and worthineſſe are thoſe other miſteries that followe, into which there is ſuch an entrie. Ca. prohibemus Diſt. 25. 1. Cor. 11.4.

27 Whenſe the ſhearing of Clerkes toke beginning, appeareth ſufficiently euen by Auguſtine alone. Whereas at that time none ſuffred their heare to grow, but nice men, & ſuch as couered a ſmotheneſſe & trimneſſe not mete enough for men: it ſeemed to be a point of no good example, if that were permitted to the clergie. Therefore Clerkes were cõmaunded either to ſheare their head or to ſhaue it, that they ſhould not beare any ſhewe of womanlike trimming. But this was ſo common, that certaine monkes, that they might the more ſet out their owne holineſſe with notable & ſeuerall attire from other men, did let their heare growe long. But afterward when the faſhion turned to wearing of heare, and certain nations were added to Chriſtiandome which alway vſed to weare long heare, as Fraunce, Germany, & England: it is likely that clerkes did euery where ſheare their hedes, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to couet the gaineſſe of heare. At the laſt in a corrupter age, when all olde ordinances where either peruerted or gone out of kinde into ſuperſtitiõ, becauſe they ſawe no cauſe in the ſhearing of the clergie (for they had reteined nothing but a foliſhe counterfating) they fled to a miſterie, which nowe they ſuperſtitiouſly thruſt in vnto vs for the approuing of their Sacrament. The dorekepers at their conſecration receiue the keyes of the Church, whereby they may vnderſtand that the keping of it is committed to them. The reders receiue the holy Bible. The exorciſtes receiue the formes of exorciſmes, which they ſhoulde vſe ouer mad & them that are to be catechiſed. The Acoluthes receiue the tapers and cruet. Lo theſe are the ceremonies, wherein (if God will) there is ſo much ſecret power, that they may be not only ſignes and tokens, but alſo cauſes of inuiſible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will haue them taken among the Sacramẽts. But to make an ende in fewe wordes, I ſay it is an abſurditie that in their ſcholes and canõs they make theſe leſſer orders Sacramẽts: whereas euen by their owne confeſſion that teache this, they were vnknowen to the primitiue Church, and deuiſed many yeares after. For Sacramẽts, ſith they conteine the promiſe of God, can not be ordeined of Angels, nor of men, but of God alone, whoes office alone it is to geue promiſe. Auguſt. de ope. monac. in fine. Item in Retrac. Libr. 4. Senten. Diſtin. 24. c. 8.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Subdeaconrie (as they call it) was remoued into that number, sins that the route of the smaller ones beganne to growe. But because they seeme to haue a testimonie for these out of the word of God, they do peculiarly for honors sake, call them holy orders. But nowe it is to be sene, howe crokedly they abuse the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will begin at the order of Priesthode or the sacrificers office. For by these two names they signifie one thing, and so they call them to whom they say that it perteineth to offer vpon the altar the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ, to pronounce prayers, and to blesse the giftes of God. Therefore at their consecration they receiue the patine with the hostes, for tokens of power geuen to them, to offer acceptable sacrifices to God. And their handes are annointed: by which signe they are taught, that they haue power geuen them to consecrate. But of the Ceremonies we shall speake hereafter. Of the thing it selfe I say: it so hath no title of the word of God which they pretende, that they could not more wickedly corrupt the order set by God. First verily this ought to stande for a thing confessed (which we haue affirmed in entreating of the Popishe masse) that they are all wrong doers to Christ, which call themselues sacrificing priests, to offer a sacrifice of appeasement. He was appointed and consecrate of the Father a priest with an othe, according to the order of Melchisedech, without any ende, without any successor. He ones offred a sacrifice of eternall satisfactorie cleansing, and reconciliation: and nowe also being entred into the Sanctuarie of heauen, he maketh intercession for vs. In him we are all sacrificing priests, but to praises and geuings of thankes, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his singular office alone, with his offring to appease God, and to purge sinnes. When these men take that vpon them, what remaineth but that their sacrificing Priesthode is vngodly and full of sacrilege? Truely they are to wicked, when they dare garnish it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Priesthode, which is commended to vs by the mouth of Christ, I willingly accompt it in that degree. For therein is a ceremonie, first taken out of the Scriptures, then such a one as Paule testifieth not to be vaine nor superfluous, but a faithfull Signe of spirituall grace. But whereas I haue not set it for a thirde in the number of Sacraments, I did it because it is not ordinarie and common among all the faithfull, but a speciall rite for one certaine office. But sith this honor is geuen to the Christian ministerie, there is no cause therefore why the Popish sacrificers should be proude.

Heb. 5. 6. & 7. 3.

1. Tim. 4. 14.

For

For Christ commaunded distributers of his Gospell and misteries to be ordeined, not sacrificers to be consecrated. He gaue them commaundement to preache the Gospell and to feede the flocke, not to offer sacrifices. He promised thē the grace of the holy Ghost, not to make satisfactorie purging of sinnes, but rightly to execute and to mainteine the gouernement of the Church. Mat. 28 19. Mar. 16 15. Ioh. 21. 15.

29 The ceremonies agree very well with the thing it selfe. Our Lorde when he sent forth the Apostles to preache the Gospell, did blowe vppon them. By which Signe he represented the power of the holy Ghost which he gaue vnto thē. This blowing these good men haue reteined, and as though they did put forth the holy Ghost out at their throte, they whisper ouer their silly priests that they make, Receiue the holy Ghost. So leaue they nothing which they do not ouerthwartly counterfait: I will not say like players (which vse their gesturings neither without arte nor without significatiō) but like apes, which counterfait euery thing wantonly and without any choise. We kepe (say they) the example of the Lorde. But the Lorde did many things which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lorde said to the disciples, Receiue ỹ holy Ghost. He said also to Lazarus, Lazarus come forth. He said to the man sicke of the palsey, Rise and walke. Why do not they say the same to all dead men & sicke of the palsey? He shewed a profe of his diuine power, when in blowing vpon the Apostles he filled them with the grace of the holy Ghost. If they go about to do the same thing, they enuiously counterfait God, and do in a maner chalenge him to striue with them: but they are farre from the effect, & do nothing with this fooliſh gesturing but mock Christ. Verily they be so shameleſſe, that they dare affirme that they geue the holy Ghost. But howe true that is, experiēce teacheth, which crieth out that so many as be consecrated priests are of horses made asses, of fooles made madmen. Neither yet do I striue with them for that: onely I condemne the ceremonie it selfe, which ought not to haue bene drawen to be an example, forasmuch as it was vsed of Christ for a singular signe of one miracle: so farre is it of, that the excuse of following his example ought to defend them. Ioh. 20 22. Ioh. 11. 42. Matt 9. 5. Ioh. 5. 8

30 But of whom receiued they the annointing? They aunswere that they receiued it of the sonnes of Aaron, from whom their order also toke beginning. Therfore they had rather alway to defend them selues with wrongfull examples, than to cōfesse that themselues haue deuised that which they vse without cause. But in the meane time they consider not, that while they professe themselues the successors of the sonnes of Aaron, they are wrongdoers to the priesthode of Libr. 4. Senten. Distin. 24. ca. 8 & in canon. dist. 21. cap. 1.

Christ, which alone was shadowed and figured by all the olde sacrificing priesthodes. In him therefore they were all conteined and fulfilled, in him they ceassed, as we haue somtimes already repeted, and the Epistle to the Hebrues without helpe of any gloses testifieth. But if they be so much delited with the ceremonies of Moses, why do they not hastily take oxen, calues, and lābes to make sacrifices? They haue in deede a good part of the olde tabernacle and of the whole Iewish maner of worshipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they do not sacrifice calues and oxen. Who can not see, that this obseruatiō of annointing is much more hurtfull than Circumcision, specially when there is adioined superstition and Pharisaicall opinion of the worthinesse of the worke? For the Iewes did set in Circumcision, trust of righteousnesse: these men do set in annointing, spirituall graces. Therfore while they couet to be counterfaiters of the Leuites, they are made Apostataes from Christ, and do put themselues from the office of Pastors.

31 This is (if God wil) the holy oile that printeth the marke that can not be raced out. As though oile could not be wiped away with dust and salt, or if it sticke faster, with sope. But this marke is spirituall. What hath oile to do with the soule? Haue they forgottē that which they oft chaunt to vs our of Augustine, that if the word be taken from the water, it shalbe nothing but water, and that it hath this from the word that it is a Sacrament? What word will they shewe in their fat liquor? Will they shewe the commaundement the was geuen to
Exo. 30 Moses, concerning the annointing of the sonnes of Aaron? But there 30. is also commaundemēt geuen, of the coate, the ephod, the hatt, the crowne of holinesse, with which Aaron vas to be garnished, and of the coates, girdles, and miters, wherewith the sonnes of Aaron were to be clothed. There is commaundement geuen to kill a calfe, and burne the fat of him for incense, to cut rammes and burne them, to sanctifie their eares and garments with the blood of an other ramme, and innumerable other obseruations, which being passed ouer, I maruell why the onely annointing of oile pleaseth them. But if they loue to be sprinkled, why are they rather sprinkled with oile than with blood? Forsoth they go about a witty thing, to make one religion of Christianitie, Iewishnesse, and Paganisme, as it were of patches sowed together. Therefore their annointing stinketh which is without the salt, that is, the word of God. There remaineth laying on of handes, which as I graunt in true and lawfull Orderings to be a Sacrament, so I deny that it hath any part in this play, where they neither obey the commaundement of Christ, nor haue respect to the ende whereunto the promise ought to leade vs. If they will not haue the signe denied them, they must apply it to the thing it selfe, whereunto it is appointed.

32 About the order also of Deaconrie I would not striue with them, if that same ministerie which was in the Apostles time and in the purer Church were restored to the vncorrupted state thereof. But what like thing haue they whom those men faine to be deacons? I speake not of the men (least they should cõplaine that the doctrine is wrongfully weyed by the faultes of the menne) but I affirme that for those whom they deliuer vs by their doctrine, they vnworthily fetche testimonie from the example of them whom the Apostolike Church ordeined Deacons. They say that it perteineth to their deacons to stand by the priests, to minister in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namely in Baptisme, in the chresme, in the patine, in the chalice: to bring in the offrings and lay them vpon the altar, to make ready the Lordes table, and to couer it: to carry the Crosse, to pronounce and sing the Gospell and Epistle to the people. Is here any one word of the true ministerie of Deacons? Nowe let vs heare the instituting of them. Vppõ the Deacon that is ordered, the Bishop alone layeth his hande. He layeth a prayer boke and a Stoale vpon his lefte shoulder, that he may vnderstande that he hath receiued the light yoke of the Lorde, whereby he may subdue to the feare of God those thinges that perteine to the left side. He geueth him the texte of the Gospell, that he may perceiue himselfe to be a publisher of it. And what belong these things to Deacons? They do euen like as if a man would say that he ordeined them Apostles whom he appointed onely to burne frankincense, to trimme the Images, to swepe the Churches, to catche mise, to driue away dogs. Who could suffer such kinde of men to be called Apostles, and to be compared with the very Apostles of Christ? Therefore let them not hereafter liengly say that those be Deacons, whom they institute onely for their enterludelike playes. Yea & by the very name it selfe they sufficiẽtly declare what maner of office they haue. For they call them Leuites, and will haue their order and beginninge referred to the children of Leui. Which I geue them leaue to do, so that they do not afterward garnish them with the fethers of other.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpose is it to speake? For whereas in deede they were in olde time appointed for care of the poore, they assigne to them I wote not what trifling businesse, as to bring the chalice and the patine, the litle cruet with water, and the towel to the altar, to powre water to washe handes, &c. Nowe wheras they speake of receiuing and bringing in of offrings, they meane thoſe which they deuoure as abandoned to their holy vſe. With this office very well agreeth the forme of their conſecrating. That he receiue of the Biſhop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruet with water, the manuale, and ſuch other baggage. Within theſe trifles they require to haue vs confeſſe that the holy Ghoſt is encloſed. What godly man can abide to graunt this? But, to make ones an ende, we may determine the ſame of them that we do of the reſt. Neither neede we to repete further thoſe things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the ſober and willing to learne (whom I haue taken in hand to inſtruct) that there is no Sacrament of God but where is ſhewed a Ceremonie ioined with a promiſe: or rather verily but where is a promiſe ſene in a Ceremonie. Here is not found one ſyllable of any certain promiſe: therefore it were in vaine to ſeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promiſe. Againe of thoſe Ceremonies that they vſe, it is not red that any one is inſtitute of God. Therefore here can be no Sacrament.

Of Matrimonie.

34 The laſt is Matrimonie, which as all men confeſſe to be ordeined of God, ſo no man vntill the time of Gregorie euer ſawe that it was geuen for a Sacrament. And what ſober man would euer haue thought it? It is a good and a holy ordinance of God: ſo tillage, carpentrie, ſhoemakers craft, barbers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacraments. For there is not onely this required in a Sacrament, that it be the worke of God, but that it be an outward Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promiſe. That there is no ſuch thing in Matrimonie, very children alſo can iudge. But (ſay they) it is a Signe of a holy thing, that is, of the ſpirituall conioining of Chriſt with the Church. If by this word Signe, they vnderſtande a Token ſet before vs of God, to this ende to raiſe vp the aſſurednеſſe of our faith, they are farre beſide the truth. If they ſimply take a Signe for that which is brought to expreſſe a ſimilitude, I will ſhewe howe wittily they reaſon. Paule ſaith, As one ſtarre differeth from an other ſtare in brightneſſe, ſo ſhalbe the reſurrection of the dead. Lo here is one Sacrament. Chriſt ſaith, The kingdome of heauen is like to a grain of muſtardſede. Lo here is an other. Againe, The kingdome of heauen is like vnto leauen. Lo here is the third. Eſay ſaith, Behold, the Lord ſhall feede his flocke as a ſhepherd. Lo here is the fowerth. In an other place, The Lorde ſhall go forth as a Giant. Lo here is the fifith. Finally what ende or meaſure ſhall there be? There is nothing but by this meane it ſhall be a Sacrament.

1. Cor. 15.42. Mat 13. 31. and 33. Eſa. 40. 11. Eſa. 42. 13. 1. Theſ. 5.2. Io 15 1. Ioh. 10. 11.

Howe many parables and similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacraments there shalbe. Yea and theft shalbe a Sacrament, because it is written, the day of the Lord is like a thefe. Who can abide these sophisters prating so fooliſhly? I graunt in deede that so oft as we see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrãce that which Christ saith, I am a vine, ye be branches, my Father is the vinedresser. So oft as a shepherde with his flocke cometh toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepherd, my shepe heare my voice. But if any man adde such similitudes to the number of Sacramentes, he is mete to be sent to Antycira. Antycira, vvhere groweth VVellebor, a good purgatiõ for phrenetike heades.

35 But they still lay fourth the wordes of Paule, in which he geueth to Matrimonie the name of a Sacrament: he that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man euer hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, euen as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. For this a man shall leaue his Father and mother, and shall cleaue to his wife, and they shalbe two into one flesh. This is a great Sacrament: but I say in Christ and the Church. But so to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heauen and earth together. Paule, to shewe to maried men, what singular loue they ought to beare to their wiues, setteth fourth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured fourth the bowels of his kindenesse vpon the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought euery man to be affectioned toward his owne wife. It followeth after, He that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Nowe, to teache howe Christ loued the Church as himselfe, yea howe he made himselfe one with his spouse the Church, he applieth to him those things which Moses reporteth that Adam spake of himselfe. For when Eue was brought into his sight, whom he knewe to haue bene shapen out of his side: This woman (saith he) is a bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. Paule testifieth that all this was spiritually fulfilled in Christ and vs, when he sayeth that we are membres of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, yea and one flesh with him. At length he addeth a cõcluding Sentẽce, This is a great mistery. And least any man should be deceiued with the double signifying of the wordes, he expresseth that he speaketh not of the fleshely conioining of man and woman, but of the spirituall mariage of Christ and the Church. And truely it is in deede a great misterie, that Christ suffred a ribbe to be takẽ from himselfe, whereof we might be shapen: that is to say, when he was strõg, he willed to be weake, that we might be strengthened with his strength: that nowe we may not our selues liue, but he may liue in vs. Gen. 2. 23. Galat. 2. 20.

36 The name of Sacrament deceiued them. But was it rightfull that the whole Church ſhould ſuffer the puniſhment of their ignorance? Paule ſaid Miſterie: which word when the tranſlater might haue left being not vnuſed with Latin eares, or might haue tranſlated it a Secret: he choſe rather to put in the word Sacrament, yet in no other ſenſe than Paul had in Greke called it Miſterie. Now let them go and with crying out raile againſt the ſkill of tonges, by ignorance whereof they haue ſo long moſt fowly bene blinde in an eaſy matter, and ſuch as offreth it ſelfe to be perceiued of euery man. But why do they in this one place ſo earneſtly ſticke vpon this litle word Sacrament, and ſome other times do paſſe it ouer vnregarded? For alſo in the firſt Epiſtle to Timothee the Tranſlater hath vſed it, and in the ſelfe ſame Epiſtle to the Epheſians: in euery place for Miſterie. But let this ſlipping be pardoned them: at leaſt the liers ought to haue had a good remembrance. For, when they haue ones ſet out Matrimonie with title of a Sacrament, afterward to call it vncleanneſſe, defiling, and ſtinking filthineſſe, howe giddy lightneſſe is this? Howe great an abſurditie is it to debarre prieſts from a Sacrament? If they deny that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the luſt of copulation: they eſcape not ſo away from me. For they teache that the copulation it ſelfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the vniting that we haue with Chriſt in conformitie of nature: becauſe man and woman are not made one but by carnall copulation. Howbeit ſome of them haue here founde two Sacraments: the one of God and the ſoule, in the betrouthed man and woman: the other of Chriſt and the Church, in the husbād and the wife. Howſoeuer it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it was vnlawfull that any Chriſtian ſhould be debarred: Vnleſſe peraduenture the Sacraments of Chriſtians do ſo ill agree, that they can not ſtand together. There is alſo an other abſurditie in their doctrines. They affirme that in the Sacrament is geuen the grace of the holy Ghoſt: they teache that copulation is a Sacrament: and they denie that at copulation the holy Ghoſt is at any time preſent.

37 And, becauſe they would not ſimply mocke the Church, howe long a roawe of errours, lies, deceites, and wickedneſſes haue they knitte to one error? ſo that a man may ſay, that they did nothing but ſeke a denne of abhominations, when they made of matrimonie a Sacrament. For when they ones obteined this, they drew to themſelues the hering of cauſes of matrimony: for it was a ſpirituall matter, which profane iudges might not medle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they ſtabliſhed their tyrannie, but thoſe partly manifestly wicked against God, and partly most vniust toward men. As are these: That mariages made betweene yong persones without consent of their parentes, shoulde remaine of force and stablished. That the mariages be not lawfull betweene kinsfolkes to the seuenth degree: and if any such be made, that they be diuorced. And the very degrees they faine against the lawes of all nations, and against the ciuile gouernment of Moses. That it be not lawefull for a manne that hath put away an adultéresse, to mary an other. Deute. 18.6. That spirituall kinsfolkes may not bee coupled in mariage. That there be no mariages celebrate, from Septuagesime to the vtas of Easter, in three weekes before Midsommer, nor from Aduent to Twelftide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to reherse. At length we must crepe out of their mire, wherein our talke hath nowe taried longer than I would. Yet I thinke I haue somewhat profited, that I haue partly plucked the lions skinnes from these asses.

The xx. Chapter.

Of ciuile Gouernement.

NOwe whereas we haue aboue set two kindes of gouernement in man: and whereas we haue spoken enough of the one kinde which cõsisteth in the soule or in the inward man, and hath respect to eternall life: this place requireth that we speake somwhat also of the other, which perteineth onely to the ciuile and outward righteousnesse of maners. For the course of this matter seemeth to be seuered from the spirituall doctrine of faith, which I toke in hande to entreate of: yet the proceding shall shewe that I do rightfully ioine them together, yea that I am of necessitie compelled to do it: specially sith on the one side, mad and barbarous men do furiously go about to ouerthrowe this order stablished by God: and on the other side the flatterers of princes, aduauncing their power without measure, sticke not to set it against the empire of God himselfe. Vnlesse both these mischeues be met withal, the pureneſse of faith shall be lost. Beside that it is not smally for our behofe, to knowe howe louingly God hath in this behalfe prouided for mãkinde, that there may florishe in vs a greater desire of godlinesse to witnesse our thankfulnesse, first, ere we enter into the thing it selfe, we must holde fast that distinction which we haue aboue set, least (as it commonly happeneth to many) we vnwisely mingle these two things together, which haue altogether diuerse consideration. For whē they heare that liberty is promiſed by ỹ Goſpel, which acknowledgeth amonge men no king and no magiſtrate, but hath regarde to Chriſt alone: they thinke that they can take no fruit of their libertie, ſo long as they ſee any power to haue preeminēce ouer them. Therefore they thinke that nothing ſhalbe ſafe, vnleſſe the whole world be reformed into a newe faſhion: where may neither be iudgemēts, nor lawes, nor magiſtrats, nor any ſuch thing which they thinke to withſtande their libertie. But whoſoeuer can put differēce betwene the body and the ſoule, betwene this preſent and tranſitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: he ſhall not hardly vnderſtande that the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, and the ciuile gouernement are thinges far a ſonder. Sith therefore that is a Iewiſh vanitie, to ſeke & encloſe the kingdome of Chriſt vnder the elements of this world: let vs rather thinking, as the Scripture plainely teacheth, that it is a ſpirituall fruit, which is gathered of the benefite of Chriſt, remember to kepe within the boundes thereof this whole libertie which is promiſed & offred vs in him. For, what is the cauſe why the ſame Apoſtle which biddeth vs to ſtande, and not to be made ſubiecte to the yoke of bondage, in an other place forbiddeth bond ſeruantes to be careful of their ſtate: but becauſe ſpirituall libertie may very well agree with ciuile bondage? In which ſenſe alſo theſe his ſayings are to be taken: In the kingdome of God there is no Iewe, nor Grecian, no male nor female, no bondeman nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iew nor Grecian, Circumciſiom, Vncircumciſiō, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freman: but Chriſt is all in all. Whereby he ſignifieth, that it maketh no matter in what eſtate thou be among men, nor vnder the lawes of what nation thou liueſt: foraſmuch as in theſe things conſiſteth not the kingdome of Chriſt.

2 Yet doth not this diſtinction tende hereunto, that we ſhould thinke that the whole order of policie is an vncleane thing, not perteining at all to Chriſtiā men. So in deede do the phrentike men, that are delited with vnbridled licentiouſneſſe, crie out and boſt. For ſith we be dead by Chriſt to the elements of this world, & being remoued into the kingdome of God do ſit among the heauenly ones: they thinke that it is vnworthy for vs, and farre beneth our excellence, to be occupied with theſe prophane and vncleane cares that are buſied about affaires not perteining to a Chriſtian man. To what purpoſe (ſay they) are lawes without iudgements and iudgement ſeates? But what hath a Chriſtian man to do with iudgements themſelues? yea if it be not lawfull to kill, wherto ſerue lawes and iudgements among vs? But as we haue euen nowe geuen warning, that this kinde of

gouernment is seuerall from that spirituall and inward kingdome of Christ: so it is also to be knowen that they nothing disagree together. For the Ciuile gouernment doth now beginne in vs vpon earth certaine beginnings of the heauenly kingdom, and in this mortall and vanishing life, doth as it were entre vpon an immortall and incorruptible blessednesse: but the entent of this spirituall gouernment is, so long as we shall liue amonge men, to cherish and maintaine the outward worshipping of God, to defend the sound doctrine of godlines and the state of the Church, to frame our life to the felowship of mē, to fashiō our maners to ciuil righteousnes, to procure vs into frendship one with an other, to nourishe common peace and quietnes: all which I graunt to be superfluous, if the kingdom of God, such as it is now among vs, do destroy this present life. But if the will of God be so, that we while we longe toward the heauenly countrey, should be wayfaringe from home vpon the earth: & sith the vse of such wayfatinge nedeth such helpes: they which take them from man, do take from him his very nature of man. For whereas they alleage that there is so great perfection in the Church of God, that her owne moderate gouernment suffiseth it for a law: they thēselues do foolishly imagine that perfection which can neuer be found in the common felowship of men. For sith of naughty men the pride is so great, & the wickednes so obstinate, as cā not be restrained with great sharpnes of lawes: what thinke we that they will do, if they see vnpunished liberty lye open to their lewdnes, which can not euen with force be sufficiently compelled not to do euill?

3 But of the order of policy, there shalbe an other fitter place to entreate. Now our meaning is to haue this onely vnderstanded, that to thinke to driue it away, is outragious barbarousnesse, the vse whereof is no lesse amonge men, than of bread, water, the sunne, & aire, but the dignity much more excellent. For it tendeth not only hereunto (which is the onely commodity of all those thinges) that men may breath, eate, drinke & be cherished (although in dede it comprehendeth all these thinges, while it maketh that they liue together) yet I say, it tēdeth not hereunto only: but also ý idolatry, sacrileges against the name of God, blasphemies against his trueth, and other offences of religion may not rise vp and be scattered amonge the people, that common quiet be not troubled, that euery man may keepe his owne safe and vnappeired, that men may vse their affaires together without hurt, that honesty and modesty be kept among them: finally that amonge Christians may be a common shew of religion, and amonge men may be manlike ciuility. Neither let any mā be moued, for that

I do now referre the care of ſtabliſhinge of religion to the policy of men, which I ſeme before to haue ſet without the iudgement of mẽ. For I do no more here, than I did before, giue men leaue after their owne will to make lawes concerning religion and the worſhippinge of God, when I allowe the ordinance of pollicy, which endeuoreth hereunto, that ỹ true religion which is contained in the law of God, be not openly and with publike ſacrileges freely broken and defiled. But the readers beinge holpen by the very plainneſſe of order, ſhall better vnderſtande what is to be thought of the whole kinde of ciuile gouernment, if we ſeuerally entreat of the partes thereof. There be three parts of it: the magiſtrate, which is the gouernour and keper of the lawes, ỹ lawes according to which he gouerneth: ỹ people, which are gouerned by the lawes, & obey ỹ magiſtrate. Therfore let vs firſt conſider of the office of the Magiſtrate, whether it be a lawfull vocation & allowed of God, what maner of office he hath, & how great is his power: then with what lawes a Chriſtian ciuile ſtate is to be ordered: then laſt of all, what profite of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuerence is due to the Magiſtrate.

4 The Lorde hath not only teſtified that the office of magiſtrates is allowed & acceptable to him, but alſo ſetting out the dignity therof with moſt honorable titles, he hath marueloufly commended it vnto vs. That I may rehearſe a fewe of them. Whereas whoſoeuer be in place of magiſtrates are named gods, let no mã thinke that in that naminge is ſmall importance: For thereby is ſignified that they haue commaundemẽt from God, that they are furniſhed with the authority of God, & do altogether beare the perſon of God, whoſe ſteede they do after a certaine maner ſupply. This is not my cauillation, but the expoſition of Chriſt. If the Scripture (ſaith he) called them gods to whom the word of God was giuen: What is this elſe, but that God hath committed his buſineſſe to them, that they ſhoulde ſerue in his office, & (as Moſes and Ioſaphat ſaid to their iudges whom they appointed in euery ſeuerall city of Iuda) that they ſhould ſit in iudgement, not for mã but for God? To the ſame purpoſe maketh this that the wiſdom of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that kinges reigne, and counſellers decree righteous thinges, that Princes beare principality, and al the iudges of the earth execute iudgement. For this is all one in effect as if it had bin ſayd, that it cõmeth not to paſſe by the peruerſeneſſe of men, that the gouernment of al things in earth is in the hãd of kings & other Rulers, but by the prouidence and holy ordinance of God, to whom it ſo ſeemed good to order the matters of menne: foraſmuch as he is both preſent and preſident among them in making of lawes and in executing vprightneſſe of iudgementes. Which Paul alſo plainely teacheth, when he reckeneth Gouernmentes among the giftes of God, which being diuerſly diſtributed accordinge to the diuerſity of grace, ought to be employed of the ſeruants of Christ to the edification of the Church. Rom.12 8.

For although he there properly ſpeaketh of a councell of graue men, which in the Primitiue Church were appointed that they ſhoulde haue the rule of orderinge the publike diſcipline (which office in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians he calleth Gouernmēt) yet foraſmuch as we ſee that the ende of ciuile power commeth to the ſame point, it is no dout but that he commendeth vnto vs all kinde of iuſt Gouernment. But he ſpeaketh more plainely, where he purpoſely maketh a full diſcourſe of that matter. For he both ſheweth that Power is ỹ ordinance of God, and that there are no powers, but they are ordained of God: and that the Princes themſelues are the miniſters of God, to the wel doers vnto praiſe: to ỹ euil, reuengers vnto wrath. Hereunto may be added alſo the examples of holy menne: of which ſome haue poſſeſſed kingdomes, as Dauid, Ioſias, Ezechias: other ſome, Lordſhips, as Ioſeph and Daniell: other ſome, Ciuile gouernmentes in a free people, as Moſes, Ioſue, and the Iudges: whoſe offices the Lorde hath declared that he alloweth. Wherfore none ought now to dout that the ciuile power is a vocation not only holy and lawfull before God, but alſo the moſt holy, and the moſt honeſt of all other in the whole life of men. 1. Cor. 12.28. Ro.13.1

5 They which couet to bring in a ſtate without Rulers, take exception and ſay that although in old time there were kings & Iudges ouer the rude people, yet at this day that ſeruile kinde of gouerninge agreeth not with the perfection which Chriſt hath brought with his Goſpell. Wherein they bewray not onely their ignorance, but alſo their deuiliſh pride, while they take vppon themſelues perfection, of which not ſo much as the hundreth part is ſeene in them. But what maner of men ſoeuer they be, it is eaſie to confute it: becauſe where Dauid exhorteth all kinges and Rulers to kiſſe the ſonne of God, he doth not bid them, giuinge ouer their authority, to ſtake themſelues to a priuate life, but to ſubmit the power that they beare to Chriſt, that he alone may haue preeminence aboue all. Likewiſe Eſay, when he promiſeth ỹ kings ſhalbe foſterfathers of the Church, & Quenes ſhalbe nourſes, he doth not depoſe them from their honor: but rather doth by an honorable title make them defenders to the godly worſhippers of God? For, that prophecy pertaineth to the comminge of Chriſt. I do wittingely paſſe ouer many teſtimonies which do eche Pſ.3.12. Eſa.49. 23.

where offer themſelues, & ſpecially in the Pſalmes wherein all gouernours haue their right maintained. But moſt cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admoniſhing Timothee that in the common aſſembly praiers muſt be made for kings, he byandby addeth a reaſon,

1.Tim.2.2. That we may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlines & honeſty: in which wordes he committeth the ſtate of the Church to their defenſe and ſauegarding.

6 Which conſideration ought continually to buſie the magiſtrates themſelues, foraſmuch as it may put a great ſpurre to them whereby they may be pricked forward to their duety, and bring them a ſingular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardneſſes of their office, which truely are both many and great. For with howe great an endeuour of vprightneſſe, wiſdom, mildneſſe, continence, and innocency, ought they to charge themſelues, which know themſelues to be appointed miniſters of the righteouſnes of God? By what affiance ſhall they admit vniuſtice to their iudgement ſeate, which they heare to be the throne of the liuinge God? By what boldeneſſe ſhall they pronounce a wrongful ſentence with that mouth, which they vnderſtand to be appointed an inſtrumēt for the truth of God? With what conſcience ſhall they ſubſcribe to wicked decrees with the hande, which they knowe to be ordained to wryte the actes of God? In a ſumme, if they remember that they be the vicegerentes of God, they muſt watch with all care, earneſtneſſe, and diligence, that they may repreſent in themſelues vnto men a certaine image of the prouidēce, preſeruation, goodneſſe, good will, and righteouſneſſe of God. And

Iere.48.10. they muſt continually ſet this before their eies, that if all they be accurſed, that do execute in deceite the worke of the vengeāce of God, they are much more greuouſly accurſed, that vſe themſelues deceitfully in a rightfull vocation. Therefore when Moſes & Ioſaphat minded to exhort their iudges to their duty, they had nothing more effectuall to moue their mindes withall, than that which we haue before

Deut.1.16. rehearſed, Looke what ye do. For ye ſit in iudgement not for man

2.Chro.19.6. but for God: namely he which is neere to you in the cauſe of iudgement. Now therefore let the feare of the Lorde be vpon you. Looke

Pſ.82.1 & be diligent: becauſe there is no peruerſenes with ỹ Lord our God.

Eſay.3.14. And in an other place it is ſaid, ỹ God ſtode in ỹ aſſembly of the gods, & ſitteth iudge in the middeſt of the gods, that they may be encouraged to their duety when they heare ỹ they be the deputies of God, to whome they muſt one day yeelde accompt of the gouernment of their charge. And worthily this admonitiō ought to be of great force with them. For if they make any default, they are not onely wronge does to men whom they wickedly vexe, but also sclaūderers to God himselfe, whose holy iudgementes they defile. Againe they haue also whereupon they may singularly comfort themselues, when they cō-sider with themselues that they are not busied in prophane affaires & such as are not fitte for the seruant of God, but in a most holy office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

7 As for them that are not moued with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bolde to raile at this holy ministery, as a thinge disagreeing with Christian religion and godlinesse: what do they elsse but raile at God himselfe, the dishonor of whom can not but be ioined with the reproche of his minister? And verily they do not refuse the magistrates, but do cast away God, that he shoulde not reigne ouer them. For if the Lord sayd this truely of the people of Israel, because they had refused the gouernment of Samuel: why shal it be lesse truely sayd at this day of them that giue themselues leaue to rage against all gouernmentes ordained of God? But sith the Lord sayd to the disciples, that the kings of nations beare rule ouer them, but that amonge them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this sayinge it is forbidden to all Christians that they shoulde not take kingdomes or gouernmentes vpon them. O handsome expositors. There rose a strife among the disciples, which of them excelled other: the Lord, to suppresse this vaine ambition, taught them that their ministery is not like vnto kingdomes, in which one manne hath preeminence aboue the rest. I beseche you, what doth this comparison make to ỹ dishonor of kingly dignity? yea what doth it proue at all, but that the ministery of an Apostle is not the office of a kinge? Moreouer although among the magistrates themselues there be diuerse formes, yet there is no difference in ths behalfe, but ỹ we ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doth comprehend them altogether, when he sayth that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimony aboue the other, namely the power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all, (except that one man, to whose will it maketh all thinges subiect) in olde time coulde lesse be allowed of noble and the excellent sorte of natures. But the Scripture, to meete with their vniust iudgementes, expresly by name affirmeth, that it is the prouidence of Gods wisdome that kinges do reigne, and peculiarly commaundeth the king to be honored.

8 And truely it were very vaine that it shoulde be disputed of priuate men, which shoulde be the best state of policy in the place where they liue: for whome it is not lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And alſo the ſame could not be ſimply determined without raſhnes, for aſmuch as a great parte of the order of this queſtion conſiſteth in circumſtances. And if thou compare alſo the ſtates themſelues together without circuſtances, it ſhall not be eaſie to diſcerne which of them ouerweieth the other in profitableneſſe, they match ſo egally together. There is an eaſie way to fall from kingdom into tyranny: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefeſt men to the faction of a fewe: but moſt eaſie of all, from the peoples gouernment, to ſedition. Truly, if thoſe three formes of gouernmentes which the Philoſophers ſet out, be conſidered in themſelues, I will not deny that either the gouernmēt of the chiefeſt mē, or a ſtate tempered of it and common gouernment far excelleth all other: not of it ſelfe, but becauſe it moſt ſeldom chaunceth that kings ſo temper themſelues, that their wil neuer ſwarueth from that which is iuſt and right, againe, that they be furniſhed with ſo great ſharpeneſſe of iudgement and wiſdom, that euery one of thē ſeeth ſo much as is ſufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is ſafer & more tolerable that many ſhould haue the gouernment, that they may mutually one helpe an other, one teach and admoniſh an other, and if any aduance himſelfe hier than is mete, there may be ouerſeers and maiſters to reſtraine his wilfulneſſe. This both hath alway bin approued by experience, and the Lord alſo hath confirmed it with his authority, whē he ordained among the Iſraelites a gouernment of the beſt men very neere vnto common gouernment, at ſuch time as he minded to haue them in beſt eſtate, till he brought foorth an image of Chriſt in Dauid. And as I willingly graunt that no kinde of gouernment is more bleſſed than this, where liberty is framed to ſuch moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly ſtabliſhed to continuāce: ſo I compt them alſo moſt bleſſed, that may enioy this eſtate; & if they ſtoutly and conſtantly trauaill in preſeruing and retaininge it, I graunt that they do nothing againſt their duety. Yea & the magiſtrates ought with moſt great diligence to bend themſelues hereunto, that they ſuffer not the liberty of the people, of which they are appointed gouernours, to be in any part miniſhed, much leſſe to be diſſolued: if they be negligent & litle careful therin, they are falſe Faithbreakers in their office, & betraiers of their contree. But if they would bring this kinde to themſelues, to whom the Lord hath appointed an other forme of gouernment, ſo that thereby they be moued to deſire a change, the very thinking thereof ſhall not only be fooliſh & ſuperfluous, but alſo hurtfull. But if thou bende not thine eies only to one city, but looke about or behold the whole world together, or at leaſt ſpread abroade thy ſight into farther diſtances of contrees, without dout thou ſhalt finde that this is not vnprofitably appointed by the prouidence of God, that diuerſe contrees ſhould be ruled by diuerſe kindes of gouernment. For as the elementes hange together but by an vnegall temperature, ſo contrees, alſo are with their certaine inequality very well kept in order. Howbeit all theſe things alſo are ſpoken in vaine to them whom the will of the Lord ſhall ſatisfie. For if it be his pleaſure, to ſet kinges ouer kingdomes, Senates or officers ouer free cities, whomſoeuer he maketh rulers in the places where we are conuerſant, it is our duety to ſhew our ſelues yelding & obedient vnto them.

9 Now ỹ office of Magiſtrats is in this place to be declared by the way, of what ſort it is deſcribed by ỹ word of God, & in what thinges it conſiſteth. If the Scripture did not teach, that it extendeth to both the tables of the law, we might learne it out of the prophane writers. For none hath entreated of the duety of magiſtrates, of makinge of lawes & of the publike weale, that hath not begon at religion and the worſhipping of God. And ſo haue they all cõfeſſed, that no policy can be happily framed, vnleſſe the firſt care be of godlines: and that thoſe lawes be prepoſterous which neglecting the right of God, do prouide only for men. Sith therfore with all the Philoſophers religiõ hath the firſt place, and ſith the ſame hath alway bin obſerued by the vniuerſall conſent of al nations, Let Chriſtiã Princes & magiſtrates be aſhamed of their ſlothfulnes, if they endeuor not themſelues to this care. And we haue already ſhewed, that this duety is ſpecially enioyned them of God: as it is mete, that they ſhould employ their trauail to defende & maintaine his honor, whoſe vicegerentes they be, & by whoſe benefit they gouerne. For this cauſe alſo chiefly are the holy kings praiſed in Scripture, for that they reſtored the worſhip of God being corrupted or ouerthrowen, or tooke care of religiõ, that it might floriſh pure and ſafe vnder them. But contrariwiſe the holy hiſtorie reckeneth ſtates without gouernours, amonge faults, ſaying that there was no king in Iſraell, and that therfore euery man did what pleaſed himſelfe. Whereby their follie is confuted, which would haue them, neglecting the care of God, only to apply themſelues to be iudges of law amonge men. As though God appointed gouernours in his name to deciſe cõtrouerſies, & omitted that which was of much weightier importãce, that he himſelfe ſhould be worſhipped according to the preſcribed rule of his law. But a deſire to innouate all things without puniſhment, moueth troubleſome men to this point, that they wiſhe all reuengers of the breach of peace to be takẽ away. As for ſo much as Iud. 21. 25.

Ier. 22. 3. pertaineth to the second table, Ieremy warneth kinges, to do iudgement and righteousnesse, to deliuer the forceably oppressed from the hande of the false accuser, not to greue the straunger and widowe, not to do wrong, and not to shed innocent blood. To the same purpose maketh the exhortation which is read in the 82. Psalme, that they should render right to the poore and needy, acquite the poore and needy, deliuer the poore and needy from the hande of the oppressor. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whom he had sette in his stede: let them heare the cause of their brethren, and iudge betwene a man and his brother and a straunger, and not know faces in iudgement, let them heare as well the litle as the great, and be not afraied of any man: becausse it is the iudgement of God. But I speake not of these thinges: that kinges should not get to themselues multitudes of horses, not cast their mindes to couetousnesse, not be lifted vp aboue their brethren: that they may be continually busied in studying vpon the law of the Lord all the dayes of their life: that Iudges swarue not to the one side, nor receiue giftes: becausse in declaringe here the office of magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the magistrates themselues, as to teach other what Magistrates be, & to what ende they are set of God. We see therefore that they be ordained defenders and reuengers of innocence, modesty, honesty, and quietnesse, whose only endeuor shoulde be to prouide for the common safety and peace of all men. Of which vertues Dauid professeth that he will be an examplar, when he shalbe aduaunced to the royall seate: that is, that he will not consent to any euill doinges, but abhorre wicked men, sclaunderers, and proude men, and get to himselfe from echewhere honest and faithfull men. But sith they can not performe this, vnlesse they defende good men from the wronges of the euill, let them helpe the good with succour and defense, let them also be armed with power wherby they may seuerely suppresse open euil doers and wicked men by whose lewdnesse the common quiete is troubled or vexed. For we throughly finde this by experiẽce which Solon said, that common weales consist of reward and punishment, & that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth & is dissolued. For the care of equity and iustice waxeth colde in the mindes of many, vnlesse there be due honor ready for vertue: neither can the wilfulnesse of wicked men be restrained but by seuerity and chastisement of paines. And these two partes the Prophet comprehendeth, when he biddeth kinges and other gouernours to do iudgement and righteousnesse. Righteousnes is, to take into charge of tuition, to embrace, to defende, to reuenge, to deliuer the innocent. Iudgement is, to withstand the boldnes of wicked men, to represse their violence, to punish their offences.

10 But here, as it seemeth, doth arise a hie and hard question: If by the law of God all Christians are forbidden to kill: and the Prophet prophecieth of the holy mount of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shal not afflict nor hurt: how many magistrates be together both godly and blood sheders? But if we vnderstande, that the Magistrate in executing of punishmentes, doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the very selfe iudgementes of God, we shall be nothinge combred with this dout. The lawe of the Lorde forbiddeth to kill: least manslaughter should be vnpunished, the law maker himselfe giueth to the ministers the swerd in their hand, which they shold draw foorth against all manslayers. To afflict and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, nor to afflict, by the Lordes commaundemēt to reuenge the afflictions of the godly. I would to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is here done by the rashenesse of man, but all thinges by the authority of God that commaundeth, which goinge before vs, we neuer swarue out of the right way. Vnlesse perhappes there be a bridle put vpon the righteousnes of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any law to it, why shall we cauill against the ministers of it? They beare not the swerd in vaine, saith Paule: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, reuengers to euil doers. Therfore if Princes and other rulers know that nothing shalbe more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them apply this ministerie, if they desire to shew their godlinesse, righteousnesse, & vncorruptnesse allowable to God. With this affection was Moses ledde, when knowing himself appointed by the power of the Lord to be the deliuerer of his people, he laid his hāds vpon the Ægyptiā. Againe, when by slaying of three thousand men in one day, he tooke vengeance of the sacrilege of the people. Dauid also, when nye to the ende of his life he gaue commaundement to Salomon his sonne to slay Ioab & Semei. Whereupon he also rehearseth this amonge the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the lande, that all workers of wickednesse, may be driuen out of the city of God. To which purpose also pertaineth ỹ praise that is giuē to Salomon, Thou hast loued righteousnes and hast hated wickednesse. Howe doth that milde and gētle nature of Moses burne out into so great cruelty, that beinge sprinkeled and embrued with the blood of his brethren, he runneth throughout the campe to new slaughters? How doth Dauid, a man of so great gentlenes in al his life, among his last breathings make that bloody testamēt, that his ſonne ſhoulde not bringe the hoare heare of Ioab and Semei in peace to the graue ? But they both when they executed the vengeance committed to them of God, ſo ſanctified with cruell dealinge their handes which they had defiled with ſparinge. It is an abhomination with kinges, ſayth Salomon, to do iniquity, becauſe his throne is ſtabliſhed in righteouſneſſe. Againe, The king which ſitteth in the throne of iudgement, ſpredeth his eyes vpon euery euill man. Againe, A wiſe king ſcattereth the wicked and turneth them vpon the whele. Againe, Take away the droſſe from the ſiluer and there ſhall come foorth a veſſell to the melter: take away the wicked man from the ſight of the king, and his throne ſhalbe faſt ſet in righteouſneſſe. Againe, He that iuſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abhomination to the Lord. Againe, A rebellious man purchaſeth euill to himſelfe, and a cruel meſſenger is ſent vnto him. Againe, who ſo ſaith to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations do curſe. Now if their true righteouſneſſe be, with drawen ſwerd to purſue gilty and wicked men: let them put vp their ſwerd, and holde their hands pure from blood, while in the meane time deſperate menne do range with murthers and ſlaughters: then they ſhall make themſelues gilty of moſt great wickedneſſe, ſo much leſſe ſhall they gette thereby the praiſe of goodneſſe and righteouſneſſe. Only let there be no preciſe and cruel rigorouſneſſe, and that iudgement ſeate which may worthily be called the rocke of accuſed men. For I am not he that either fauour extreme crueltie, or do thinke that righteous iudgement can be pronounced, but while clemency the beſt & ſureſt counſeller of kings, as Salomon affirmeth, the preſeruer of the kinges throne is aſſiſtent, which a certaine man in olde time truely ſaid to be the principal gift of Princes. Yet a magiſtrate muſt take hede to both, that he do neither with rigorouſneſſe of minde wound rather than heale, or by ſuperſtitious affectation of clemency fall into a moſt cruell gentlenes, if with ſoft and looſe tendernes he be diſſolute to the deſtruction of many mē. For this was in old time not without cauſe cōmonly ſpokē vnder ỹ empire of Nerua, that it is in dede euill to liue vnder a prince vnder whom nothing is lawful, but much worſe vnder whom al things are lawfull.

11 But ſith ſometime kinges and peoples muſt of neceſſity take ſwerd in hande to execute ſuch publike vengeance, by this reaſon we may alſo iudge that the warres are lawful which are ſo taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, whereby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may keepe downe the ſeditions dous ſtirres of vnquiet men, whereby they may help the forceably oppreſſed, whereby they may puniſh euill doinges: can they at fitter ſeaſon vtter it, than to ſuppreſſe his rage which troubleth both priuately the reſt of euery man, & the common quiet of all men, which ſeditiouſly maketh vprores, which committeth violent oppreſſions and haynous euill doinges? If they ought to be preſeruers and defenders of the lawes, they muſt alſo ouerthrowe the enterpriſes of all them by whoſe wicked doinge the diſcipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they worthily puniſhe thoſe theeues whoſe iniuries haue extended onely to a few: ſhall they ſuffer a whole contree to be without puniſhment vexed and waſted with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether he be a king or one of the baſeſt of ỹ cõmonalty, that inuadeth an others contree into which he hath no right, & ſpoileth it like an enemy: all are alike to be taken and puniſhed for robbers. This therefore both naturall equitie, and the rule of duetie teacheth that Princes are armed not onely to reſtraine priuate dueties with iudiciall puniſhmentes, but alſo to defend with warre the dominions committed to their charge, if at any time they be enuielike aſſailed. And ſuch warres the holy Ghoſt by many teſtimonies of Scripture declareth to be lawfull.

12 If it be obiected againſt me, that in the new Teſtament is neither witneſſe nor example which teacheth that warre is a thing lawfull for Chriſtians: firſt I anſwere, that the ſame rule of making warre which was in old time remaineth alſo at this day, & that on the contrary ſide there is no cauſe that may debarre magiſtrates from defending of their ſubiects. Secondly that an expreſſe declaration of theſe matters is not to be ſought in the writinges of the Apoſtles, where their purpoſe is not to frame a ciuile ſtate, but to ſtabliſh the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt. Laſt of all I ſay that in them alſo is ſhewed by the way, that Chriſt hath by his comming chaunged nothinge in this behalfe. For if Chriſtian doctrine (that I may ſpeake in Auguſtines owne words) condemned all warres, he would rather haue ſaid this to ſoldiars when they asked counſell of ſaluation, that they ſhoulde caſt away their weapons, & vtterly withdraw themſelues from the warre. But it was ſaid to thẽ: ſtrike no man, do no man wrong, let your wages ſuffiſe you. Whom he taught that their wages ought to ſuffiſe them, he did verily not forbid them to be warriers. But al magiſtrates ought here to take great hede, that they nothing at all folow their owne deſires: but rather, if they muſt puniſh, let them not be borne away with a headlong angrineſſe, let them not be violently caried with hatred, let thẽ not broile with vnappeaſable rigor, yea let them (as Auguſtine ſaith) pity common nature in him in whom they puniſhe his priuate fault. Or if they muſt put on armoure againſt the enemy, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly ſeeke occaſion thereof, nor take it beinge offred vnleſſe they be driuen to it by extreme neceſſity. For if we ought to performe much more than that heathen man required, which would haue warre to ſeeme a ſeeking of peace: truely we ought first to attempt all thinges ere we ought to trie the matter by warre. Finally in both kindes lette them not ſuffer themſelues to be caried with any priuate affection, but be led only with common feeling. Otherwiſe they do very ill abuſe their power, which is giuen them, not for their own commodity, but for others benefit & miniſtery. Moreouer of the ſame rightfull rule of makinge warre hangeth the order both of garriſons, and leagues, & other ciuile fortifications. Garriſons I call thoſe that are placed in townes to defende the borders of the contree: Leagues, which are made with Princes adioining for this couenant that if any trouble happen in their landes they may mutually help them, and ioyne their forces in common together to ſuppreſſe the common enemies of mankinde: Ciuile fortification, whoſe vſe is in the art of warre.

Cicero of duties.

13 This alſo I will laſt of all adde, that tributes and taxes are the lawfull reuenues of princes, which they may chiefly employ to ſuſtain the common charges of their office: which yet they may likewiſe vſe to their priuate royalty which is after a certaine maner cõioined with honor of the princely ſtate that they beare. As we ſee that Dauid, Ezechias, Ioſias, Ioſaphat, and other holy kinges, and Ioſeph alſo and Daniell, according to the ſtate of the perſon that they did beare, were without offenſe of godlines ſumptuous of the common charge, and we read in Ezechiell that there was a very large portion of land aſſigned to the kinges. Where although he paint out the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, yet he fetcheth the examplar of his ſimilitude from the lawfull kingdom of men. But yet ſo, that Princes againe on their behalues ſhoulde remember, that their treaſure chambers are not ſo much their owne priuate cofers, as the treaſuries of the whole people (for ſo Paule teſtifieth) which they may not without manifeſt wrõg prodigally waſt or ſpoyle: or rather that it is the very blood of the people, which not to ſpare, is moſt cruell vnnaturallneſſe: and let them thinke, that their impoſitions, and ſubſidies, and other kindes of tributes, are nothing but the ſupportes of publike neceſſity, wherwith to wery the poore communaltie without cauſe, is tyrannicall extortion. Theſe thinges do not encourage Princes to waſtfull expenſe and riot, (as verily there is no neede to adde a fierbrande to their their luſtes that are of thēſelues too much already kindled) but ſith it much behoueth that they ſhould with pure cōſcience before God be bold, to do al y they are bold to do, leaſt with wicked boldner they come into deſpiſing of God, they muſt be taught how much is lawful for them. Neither is this doctrine ſuperfluous for priuate men, that they ſhould not raſhly & ſtubbornly giue themſelues leaue to grudge at any expenſes of Princes, although they exceede common & ciuile meaſure.

14 Next to the magiſtrate in ciuile ſtates are lawes, the moſt ſtronge ſinewes of common weales, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the ſoules, without which the Magiſtrate can not ſtande, as they againe without the Magiſtrate haue no liuely force. Therefore nothinge could be more truely ſaid, than that the law is a dumme Magiſtrate, and that the Magiſtrate is a liuing law. But whereas I promiſed to ſpeake, with what lawes a Chriſtian ciuil ſtate ought to be ordered, there is no cauſe why any mā ſhould looke for a long diſcourſe of the beſt kinde of lawes, which both ſhould be infinite, & pertained not to this preſent purpoſe and place: yet in a few words, and as it were by the way, I will touche what lawes it may vſe godlily before God, and be rightly gouerned by them amonge men. Which ſelfe thinge I had rather to haue vtterly paſſed ouer with ſilence, if I did not vnderſtande that many do herein perilouſly erre. For there be ſome that deny that a common weale is well ordered, which neglecting the ciuile lawes of Moſes is gouerned by the common lawes of nations. Howe dangerous and troubleſome this ſentence is, let other menne conſider, it ſhall be enough for me to haue ſhewed that it is falſe and fōoliſhe. That common diuiſion is to be kept, which diuideth the whole lawe of God publiſhed into morall, ceremoniall, and iudiciall lawes: and all the partes are to be ſeuerally conſidered, that we may knowe what of them pertayneth to vs, and what not. Neither in the meane time lette any manne be combred with this dout, that iudicialls and ceremonialls alſo pertayne to the morall lawes. For although the olde wryters which haue taught this diuiſion, were not ignorant that theſe two later partes hadde their vſe about maners, yet becauſe they might be changed and abrogate, the moralls remaininge ſafe they did not call them moralls. They called that firſt part peculiarly by that name, without which can not ſtande the true holineſſe of manners, and the vnchangeable rule of liuinge rightly.

15 Therfore the Morall law (that I may firſt beginne thereat) ſith it is cōtained in two chiefe pointes, of which the one commaundeth

ſimply to worſhip God with pure faith and godlineſſe, & the other to embrace men with vnfained loue, is the true and eternall rule of righteouſnes, preſcribed to the men of all ages & times that will be willing to frame their life to the will of God. For this is his eternal &
Gal.4.4 vnchangeable will, that he himſelfe ſhould be worſhipped of as all, & that we ſhould mutually loue one an other. The Ceremonial law was the ſchooling of the Iewes, wherewith it pleaſed the Lord to exerciſe the certaine childhoode of that people, till that time of fulnes come, wherin he would to the ful manifeſtly ſhew his wiſdom to the earth, & deliuer the trueth of thoſe things which then were ſhadowed with figures. The iudiciall law giuen to them for an order of ciuile ſtate, gaue certaine rules of equity & righteouſnes, by which they might behaue themſelues harmleſly & quietly together. And as that exerciſe of ceremonies properly pertained in dede to the doctrine of godlineſſe (namely which kept the Church of the Iewes in the worſhip & religion of God) yet it might be diſtinguiſhed from godlines it ſelfe: ſo this forme of iudiciall orders (although it tended to no other ende, but how the ſelfe ſame charity might beſt be kept which is commaunded by the eternall law of God) yet had a certaine thinge differing from the very commaundement of louing. As therfore the Ceremonies might be abrogate, godlines remaining ſafe and vndeſtroied: ſo theſe iudicial ordinances alſo being take away, the perpetuall dueties & commaundementes of charity may continue. If this be true, verily there is liberty left to euery nation to make ſuch lawes as they ſhall foreſee to be profitable for them: which yet muſt be framed after ỳ perpetual rule of charity, that they may in dede vary in forme, but haue the ſame reaſon. For I thinke that thoſe barbarous & ſauage lawes, as were thoſe that gaue honor to theues, that allowed common copulations, & other both much more filthy & more againſt reaſon, are not to be taken for lawes: foraſmuch as they are not only againſt all righteouſnes, but alſo againſt naturall gentilnes and kindeneſſe of men.

16 This which I haue ſayd ſhalbe playne, if in all lawes we behold theſe two things as we ought, the making and the equity of the law, vpon the reaſon wherof the making it ſelfe is founded & ſtaieth. Equity, becauſe it is naturall, can be but one of all lawes: and therefore one law, according to the kinde of matter, ought to be the propounded ende to all lawes. As for makings of Lawes, becauſe they haue certaine circũſtances vpon which they partly hang, if ſo ỳ they tende al together to one marke of equity, though they be diuerſe it maketh no matter. Now ſith it is certaine that the law of God which we call

moral is nothing elſe but a teſtimonie of the natural law, and of that conſcience which is engrauen of God in the mindes of menne, the whole rule of this equity whereof we now ſpeake is ſet forth therein. Therefore it alone alſo muſt be both the marke and rule and end of all lawes. Whatſoeuer lawes ſhalbe framed after that rule, directed to that marke, and limited in that ende, there is no cauſe why we ſhould diſallow them, howſoeuer they otherwiſe differ from the Iewiſhe law or one from an other. The lawe of God forbiddeth to ſteale. What peine was appointed for thefts in the ciuile ſtate of the Iewes, is to be ſeene in Exodus. The moſt auncient lawes of other nations puniſhed theft with recompence of double: the lawes that followed afterwarde, made difference betwene manifeſt theft and no manifeſt. Some proceeded to baniſhment, ſome to whippinge, ſome at laſt to the puniſhment of death. Falſe witneſſe was among the Iewes puniſhed with recompence of egall paine, in ſome places onely with great ſhame, in ſome places with hanginge, in other ſome with the Croſſe. Manſlaughter al lawes vniuerſally do reuenge with blood, yet with diuerſe kindes of death. Againſt adulterers in ſome places were ordained ſeuerer paines, in ſome places lighter. Yet we ſee how with ſuch diuerſity all tende to the ſame ende. For with one mouth they al togethe pronounce puniſhment againſt all the offences which haue bin condemned by the eternall law of God, as manſlaughters, theſts, adulterie, falſe witneſſinges: but in the maner of puniſhement they agree not. Neither is the ſame needefull, nor yet expedient. There is ſome contree, which vnleſſe it ſhew rigor with horrible examples againſt manſleyers, ſhould immediatly be deſtroyed with murders & robberies. There is ſome time that requireth the ſharpneſſe of paines to be encreaſed. If there ariſe any trouble in a common weale, the euills that are wont to growe thereof muſt be amended with newe ordinances. In time of warre all humanitie woulde in the noyſe of armure fall away, vnleſſe there were caſt into men an vnwonted feare of puniſhementes. In barenneſſe, in peſtilence, vnleſſe greater ſeueritie be vſed, all thinges will come to ruine. Some nation is more bent to ſome certaine vice, vnleſſe it be moſt ſharply ſuppreſſed. How malicious and enuious ſhall he be againſt the publike profite, that ſhalbe offended with ſuch diuerſitie which is moſt fitte to holde faſt the obſeruinge of the lawe of God? For, that which ſome ſay, that the Lawe of God giuen by Moſes is diſhonored, when it beinge abrogate, newe are preferred aboue it, is moſt vaine. For neither are other preferred aboue it, when they are more allowed, not in ſimple compariſon, but in reſpect of the eſtate of the times, place, and nation:

neither is that abrogate which was neuer made for vs. For the Lord gaue not that law by the hande of Moſes, which ſhould be publiſhed into al nations, and floriſh euery where: but when he had receiued the nation of the Iewes into his faith, defence, & protection, he willed to be a lawemaker peculiarly to them, and like a wiſe lawemaker, he hadde in makinge of his lawes a certaine ſingular conſideration of them.

17 Now remaineth that we conſider that which we haue ſet in the laſt place, what profit of lawes, iudiciall orders, and magiſtrates, commeth to the common felowſhippe of Chriſtians. Wherewith alſo is coupled an other queſtion, howe much priuate men ought to yeelde to magiſtrates, and howe farre their obedience ought to proceede. Many thought the office of magiſtrate to be ſuperfluous amóg Chriſtians, becauſe forſooth they can not godlily craue their aide, namely ſith they are forbidden to reuenge, to ſue in the law, & to haue any Ro.13.4 controuerſie. But whereas Paule contrariwiſe plainly teſtifieth, that he is the miniſter of God to vs for good: we thereby vnderſtand, that he is ſo ordained of God, that we beinge defended by his hande and ſuccours againſt the maliciouſnes & iniuries of miſchieuous mē, may liue a quiet and aſſured life. If he be in vaine giuen vs of the lord for defence, vnleſſe it be lawfull for vs to vſe ſuch benefite: it ſufficiently appeareth that he may alſo without vngodlineſſe be called vppon and ſued vnto. But here I muſt haue to do with two kindes of menne. For there be many men that boyle with ſo great rage of quarelling at the lawe, that they neuer haue quiet with themſelues vnleſſe they haue ſtrife with other. And their controuerſies they exerciſe with deadly ſharpneſſe of hatred, and with mad greedines to reuenge and hurt, & do purſue them with vnappeaſable ſtiffeneſſe euen to the very deſtruction of their aduerſarie. In the meane time, that they may not be thought to do any thing but rightfully, they defend ſuch peruerſenes with colour of law. But though it be graunted thee to go to law with thy brother, yet thou maiſt not byandby hate him, not be carried againſt him with furious deſire to hurt him, not ſtubbornly to purſue him.

18 Let this therefore be ſaid to ſuch men, that the vſe of lawes is lawfull, if a man do rightly vſe it. And that the right vſe both for the pleintife to ſue, and for the defendant to defende, is if the defendant beinge ſummoned do appeare at an appointed day, and doth with ſuch exception as he can, defende his cauſe without bitterneſſe, but onely with this affection to defend that which is his owne by law: & if the pleintife being vnworthily oppreſſed either in his perſon or his goodes, do resort to the defence of the Magistrate, make his complainte, and require that which is equitie and conscience, but farre from all gredy will to hurte or reuenge, farre from sharpnesse and hatred, farre from burning heate of contention, but rather redy to yeld of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be caried with an enemilike minde against his aduersarie. Cõtrariwise when being filled with malice of minde, corrupted with enuie, kindled with wrath, breathing out reuenge, or finally so enflamed with the heate of the contention, they geue ouer any parte of charitie, the whole proceding euen of a most iust cause can not but be wicked. For this ought to be a determined principle to all Christians, that a controuersie though it be neuer so righteous, can neuer be rightly pursued of any man, vnlesse he beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, as if the matter which is in controuersie were already concluded and ended by composition. Some man will here peraduenture say, that such moderation is so neuer vsed in going to lawe, that it should be like a miracle if any such were founde. I graunt in deede, as the maners of these times be, that there is seldome sene an example of a good contender in lawe, [illegible]he thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no euell, ceasseth not to be good and pure. But when we heare that the help of ỹ Magistrat is a holy gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take hede, that it be not defiled by our faulte.

19 As for them that precisely condemne al contendings at law, let them vnderstande that they do therwithall despise the holy ordinãce of God, and a gifte of that kinde of giftes which may be cleane to the cleane: vnlesse peraduenture they will accuse Paule of wicked doing, which did both put away from himselfe the sclanders of his accusers with declaring also their deceite and maliciousnesse, and in iudgemẽt claimed for himselfe the prerogatiue of the citie of Rome, and when neede was he appelled from an vnrighteous gouernor to the Emperors iudgemẽt seate. Neither withstandeth it, that all Christians are forbidden to desire reuenge, which we also do driue farre away from Christian iudgemẽt seates. For, if the contention be about a common case, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocent simplicitie, commit his cause to the iudge as to a common defender, thinking nothing lesse than to render mutuall recompence of euill, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life and death, or any greate criminall action be commenced, we require that the accuser be such a one, as commeth into the court being taken with no boiling heate of reuenge, and touched with no displeasure of priuate iniurie, but onely hauing in minde to withstande the enter-priſes of a miſcheuous manne, that they may not hurt the commo-weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done againſt that commaundement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Chriſtians. But they are not onely forbidden to deſire reuenge, but they are alſo commaunded to wait for the hande of the Lorde, which promiſeth that he will be a preſent reuenger for the oppreſſed and afflicted: but they do preuent all reuenge of the heauenly defendor, which require helpe at the Magiſtrats hande either for themſelues or other. Not ſo. For we muſt thinke that the Magiſtrats reuenge is Rom.13 4. not the reuenge of man but of God, which (as Paule ſaith) he extendeth and exerciſeth by the miniſterie of man for our good.

Matt.5. 39. 20 And no more do we diſagree with the wordes of Chriſt, by which he forbiddeth to reſiſt euell, and commaundeth to turne the righte cheke to him that hath geuen a blowe on the left, and to ſuffer him to take away thy cloke that taketh away thy coate. He willeth in deede there that the mindes of his ſhould ſo much abhorre from deſire of recompenſing like for like, that they ſhould ſoner ſuffer double iniurie to be done to themſelues, than deſire to reacquite it:
from which patience neither do we alſo leade them away. For Chriſtians truely ought to be a kinde of men made to beare reproches and iniuries, open to the malice, deceites, and mockages of noughty men:
and not that onely, but alſo they muſt be bearers of all theſe euilles, that is to ſay ſo framed with all their hartes, that hauing receiued one diſpleaſure they make themſelues redy for an other, promiſing to themſelues nothing in their whole liſe but the bearing of a continual Croſſe. In the meane time alſo they muſt do good to them that do them wrong, and wiſhe well to thoſe that curſe them, and (which is their onely victorie) ſtriue to ouercome euill with good. Being ſo Chriſt) they will ſo ſuffer their body to be mangled, and their goodes to be maliciouſly taken from them, that they will forgeue and of their owne accorde pardon thoſe euels ſo ſone as they are done to them.

Yet this euenneſſe and moderation of mindes ſhall not withſtande, but that the frendſhip toward their ennemies remaining ſafe, they may vſe the helpe of the magiſtrat to the preſeruing of their goodes, or for zele of publike commoditie may ſue a giltie and peſtilent man to be puniſhed, whom they knowe that he can not be amended but Epiſt.5. ad Mar-cell. by death. For Auguſtine truely expoundeth that all theſe commaundements tende to this ende, that a righteous and godly man ſhould be ready to beare patiently the malice of them whom he ſeeketh to

haue made good men, that rather the number of the good may encreaſe, not that he ſhould with like malice adde himſelfe alſo to the numbre of the euell: then, that they more perteine to the preparation of the hart, which is inwardely, than to the worke which is done openly: that in ſecret may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we ſee may be profitable to them to whom we ought to beare good will.

21 But this which is wonte to be obiected, that contendings in lawe are altogether condemned of Paule, is alſo falſe. It may eaſily be perceiued by his wordes, that there was an immeaſurable rage of ſtriuing at lawe in the Church of the Corinthians: ſo farre forth that they did make the Goſpell of Chriſt and the whole religion which they profeſſed open to the cauillations and euell ſpeaking of the wicked. This is the firſt thing that Paule blameth in them, that by their intemperaunce of contentions they brought the Goſpell in ſclander among the vnbeleuers. And then this point alſo, that in ſuch ſort they ſtriued amõg themſelues brethren with brethren. For they were ſo farre from bearing of wronges, that they gredily gaped one for an others goodes, prouoked one an other, and being vnprouoked did hurte. Therefore he inueyeth againſt that rage of contending, and not ſimply againſt all controuerſies. But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weakeneſſe, that they did not rather ſuffer loſſe of their goodes than to trauaile euen to contentions for the preſeruing of them: namely when they were ſo eaſily moued with euery damage, and for moſt ſmall cauſes did runne to the court of lawe and to controuerſies, he ſaith that this is a profe that they were of a minde to ready to anger and not well framed to patience. Chriſtians verily ought to do this, that they had alway rather to yelde of their owne right than to go to lawe, from whẽs they can ſcarcely get out againe but with a minde to much moued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man ſeeth that without loſſe of charitie he may defend his owne, the loſſe whereof ſhould be a ſore hindrance vnto him: if he do ſo he offendeth nothing againſt this ſaying of Paule. Finally (as we haue taught in the beginning) charity ſhall geue euery man beſt counſell, without which whatſoeuer controuerſies are taken in hande, and beyonde which whatſoeuer do procede, we holde it out of controuerſie that they be vniuſt and wicked. 1. Cor. 6. 6.

22 The firſt dutie of ſubiectes toward their magiſtrates is, to thinke moſt honorably of their office, namely which they acknowledge to be a iuriſdiction cõmitted of God, and therefore to eſteeme them and reuerence them as the miniſters and deputies of God.

For a man may finde ſome, which yelde themſelues very obedient to their magiſtrats, and would not that there were not ſome whom they ſhould obey, becauſe they ſo knowe it to be expedient for the common benefit: but of the magiſtrats themſelues they thinke no otherwiſe than of certaine neceſſarie euills. But Peter requireth ſomewhat more of vs, when he commaundeth that the king be honored: and Salomon, when he commaundeth God and the king to be feared. For Peter vnder the word of Honoring cõteineth a ſincere and well deming eſtimation: & Salomon ioining the king with God, ſheweth that he is full of a certaine holy reuerence and dignitie. This is alſo a notable commendation in Paule, that we obey not onely for wrath but for conſcience. Whereby he meaneth that ſubiectes ought to be ledde not onely with feare of princes and rulers to be holden in their ſubiection (as they are wont to yeld to their armed enemie, which ſee that vengeãce ſhall redily be taken vpon them if they reſiſt) but becauſe the obediences that are ſhewed to them are ſhewed to God himſelfe, foraſmuch as their power is of God. I ſpeake not of the men, as if the viſor of dignitie did couer fooliſheneſſe, or ſluggiſhneſſe, or cruelties, or wicked maners and full of miſcheuous doing: but I ſay that the degree it ſelfe is worthy of honor and reuerence: that whoſoeuer be rulers may be eſteemed with vs, and haue reuerence, in reſpect of their being rulers.

1.Pet.2 17. Prouer. 24.21. Rom. 13.5.

23 Of this then alſo followeth an other thing: that with mindes bent to the honoring of thẽ, they declare their obedience in profe to them: whether it be to obey their proclamations, or to paye tribute, or to take in hande publike offices and charges that ſerue for comon defence, or to do any other of their commaundements. Let euery ſoule (ſaith Paule) be ſubiect to the hier powers. For he that reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God. The ſame Paule writeth to Titus: Warne them that they be ſubiect to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magiſtrats, that they be redy to euery good worke. And Peter ſaith, Be ye ſubiect to euery humaine creature (or rather as I tranſlate it, Ordinance) for the Lordes ſake, either to the king as moſt excellent, or to the rulers that are ſent by him, to the puniſhemẽt in deede of euell doers, but to the praiſe of well doers. Moreouer that they ſhould teſtifie that they do not faine ſubiection, but are ſincerely and hartily ſubiect, Paule addeth that they ſhould commende to God the ſafetie and proſperitie of them vnder whom they liue. I exhorte (ſaith he) that there be made prayers, beſechinges, interceſſions, thankeſgeuinges for all men, for kings and for all that be ſet in ſuperiority, that we may liue a peaſable and quiet life with al godlineſſe neſſe and honeſtie. Neither let any man here deceiue himſelfe. For ſith the magiſtrat can not be reſiſted, but that God himſelfe muſt alſo be reſiſted: although it may be thought that an vnarmed magiſtrat may frely be deſpiſed, yet God is armed which will ſtrongly take vengeance on the deſpiſing of himſelfe. Moreouer vnder this obedience I conteyne moderation, which priuate men ought to binde themſelues to kepe in caſes touching the publike ſtate, that they do not of their owne head entermedle in publike buſineſſes, or raſhely breake into the office of the Magiſtrat, and enterpriſe nothing publikely. If any thing ſhall in a publike ordinãce be behouefull to be amẽded, let not themſelues raiſe vprores, nor put their handes to the doing of it, which they all ought to haue faſt bounde in this behalfe: but let them commit it to the iudgement of the magiſtrat, whoſe hand alone is herein at libertie. I meane, that they preſume to do nothing vncommaunded. For when the commaundement of the ruler is adioined, then are they alſo furniſhed with publike authority. For as they are wont to call the counſellers of a king, his eares and eyes: ſo not vnfittly a man may call them the handes of the prince, whom by his commaundement he ſetteth in authoritie for the doing of things.

24 Nowe foraſmuch as we haue hetherto deſcribed a magiſtrat ſuch as is in deede the ſame that he is called, namely the father of the contree, and (as the Poete calleth him) the paſtor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteouſneſſe, the reuenger of innocence: he is worthily to be iudged a madde man, that alloweth not ſuch a gouernement. But whereas this is in a maner the experiẽce of all ages, that of princes ſome being careleſſe of all things to the foreſeing whereof they ought to haue bene hedefully bent, do without all care ſlouthfully wallowe in delites: other ſome addicted to their gaine, do ſet out to ſale all lawes, priuileges, iudgements, and grauntes: other ſome ſpoile the pore communaltie of money which they may after waſte vpon mad prodigall expendings: other ſome exerciſe mere robberies, in pilling of houſes, defiling of virgins and matrones, murthering of innocentes: many can not be perſuaded that ſuch ſhould be acknowledged for princes, whoes authoritie they ought to obey ſo farre as they may. For in ſo great hainous vnworthineſſe, among doings ſo much contrarie to the duetie not onely of a magiſtrate, but alſo of a man, they beholde no forme of the image of God which ought to ſhine in a Magiſtrat: when they ſee no token of that miniſter of God, which was geuen for praiſe to the good and for vengeãce to the euell: ſo neither do they alſo acknowledge ſuch a Gouernor, whoes dignitie and authoritie the Scripture commendeth vnto vs. And truely this feling of affection hath alway bene naturally planted in the mindes of men, no leſſe to hate and abhorre tyrantes, than to loue and honor lawfull kings.

25 But if we loke to the word of God, it will leade vs further, that we be ſubiect not onely to the gouernement of thoſe princes which execute their office toward vs well and with ſuch faithfulneſſe as they ought, but alſo of all them, which by what meane ſoeuer it be, haue the dominion in poſſeſſiō although they performe nothing leſſe than that which perteineth to the duetie of princes. For though the Lorde teſtifieth that the magiſtrat is a ſpeciall great gift of his liberalitie for preſeruing of the ſafetie of men, and appointeth to magiſtrats themſelues their boundes: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what ſort ſoeuer they be, they haue not their authoritie but from him: that thoſe in deede, which rule for benefite of the cōmon weale, are true examplars and paternes of his bountifulneſſe: that they that rule vniuſtly & willfully, are raiſed vp by him to puniſh the wickedneſſe of the people: that all egally haue that maieſtie wherewith he hath furniſhed a lawfull power. I will procede no further, till

But let vs rather tary vpon prouing that, which doth not ſo eaſily ſettle in the mindes of mē: that in a moſt noughty man, and moſt vnworthy of all honor, if ſo that he haue the publike power in poſſeſſion, remaineth that noble and diuine power which the Lorde hath by his word geuen to the miniſters of his righteouſneſſe and iudgement: and therefore that he ought of his ſubiects to be had in as great reuerence and eſtimation, ſo much as perteineth to publike obedience, as they would haue the beſt King if he were geuen them.

26 Firſt I would haue the Reders to perceiue and diligently marke that prouidence and ſingular doings of God, which is in the Scripture not without cauſe ſo oft rehearſed vnto vs, in diſtributing

the Hieſt is mighty in the kingdome of men, and he ſhall geue it to whom he will. With which maner of ſentences whereas the whole Scripture aboundeth, yet that ſame prophecy of Daniel ſpecially ſwarmeth full. Nowe what maner of king was Nabuchadonezar, he that cõquered Hieruſalem, it is ſufficiently knowen, namely a ſtrong inuader and deſtroyer of other. Yet in Ezechiel the Lorde affirmeth that he gaue him the lande of Egypt for the ſeruice that he had done to him in waſting it. And Daniel ſaid to him: Thou king arte the king of kings, to whom the king of heauens hath geuen a mighty, & ſtrõg, and glorious kingdome: to thee, I ſay, he hath geuen it, and all the landes where dwell the children of men, the beaſts of the wood, and ſowles of the aire: he hath deliuered them into thy hande, and hath made thee to beare rule ouer them. Againe he ſayed to his ſonne Belſaſar: The hieſt God hath giuen to Nabuchadonezar thy Father kingdome and royaltie, honor and glory: & by reaſon of the royaltie that he gaue him, all peoples, tribes, & languages were trembling and fearfull at his ſight. When we heare that a king is ordeined of God, let vs therof call to remembrance thoſe heauenly warnings cõcerning the honoring and fearing of a king: then we ſhall not dout to accõpt a moſt wicked tyrãt in the ſame place wherin the Lord hath vouchſaued to ſette him. Samuell, when he gaue warning to the people of Iſraell, what maner of things they ſhould ſuffer at the hands of their kinges, ſaid: This ſhalbe the right of the king that ſhall reigne ouer you: he ſhall take your ſonnes and put them to his chariot, to make them his horſmen, and to plowe his land, and reape his croppe, and to make inſtruments of warre. He ſhall take your daughters, that they may be his dreſſers of ointmentes, his cookes and bakers. Your lands, your vineyardes, and your beſt Oliue plantes he ſhall take away and geue to his bonde ſeruantes. He ſhall take tithes of your ſeedes and vineyardes, and ſhall geue them to his eunuches and bonde ſeruantes. He ſhall take away your bonde men, your bonde womẽ & your aſſes, and ſet them to his worke. Yea and he ſhall take tithes of your flockes: and ye ſhalbe his bonde ſeruantes. Verily kings ſhould not haue done this of right, whom the Lawe did very well inſtruct to all continence: but it was called a right ouer the people which it behoued them of neceſſitie to obey, and they might not reſiſt it: as if Samuell had ſaid. The wilfulneſſe of kings ſhall runne to ſuch licenciouſneſſe, which it ſhall not be your part to reſiſt, to whom this onely thing ſhalbe left, to obey their commaundements and harken to their word.

Ier.27. 5. I haue made the earth and men,ſaith the Lorde,and the liuing creatures that are on the ouerface of the earth in my great ſtrength and ſtretched out arme, and I will deliuer it to him whom it pleaſeth in mine eyes. And nowe therefore I haue geuen all theſe landes into the hande of Nabuchadnezar my ſeruante,and all nations and great kings ſhall ſerue him, till the time ſhall come of that lande. And it ſhalbe as a nation and a kingdome that hath not ſerued the king of Babell,I will viſit that nation in ſwerde,famine,& peſtilence. Wherefore, ſerue ye the king of Babell and liue. We ſe with howe great obedience the Lorde willed that cruell and proude tyrant to be honored, for no other reaſon but becauſe he poſſeſſed the kingdome. And the ſame was by the heauenly decree, that he was ſet in the throne of the kingdome,and taken vp into kingly maieſtie, which it was vnlawful to violate. If we haue this cõtinually before our minde and eyes,that euen ỹ worſt kings are ordeined by the ſame decree by which the authoritie of kings is ſtablyſhed:theſe ſeditious thoughtes ſhall neuer come into our minde, that a king is to be handled according to his deſeruings, and that it is not mete that we ſhould ſhewe our ſelues ſubiectes to him that doth not on his behalfe ſhewe himſelfe a king to vs.

28 In vaine ſhall any man obiect that this was a peculiar commaundement to the Iſraelites. For it is to be noted with what reaſon the Lorde confirmeth it. I haue geuen (ſayeth he) the kingdome to Nabuchadnezar. Wherefore ſerue ye him and liue. To whom ſoeuer therefore it ſhalbe certaine that the kingdome is geuen,let vs not dout that he is to be obeyed. And ſo ſone as the Lorde aduanceth any man to the royall eſtate, he therein declareth his will to vs that he will haue him reigne. For thereof are generall teſtimonies of Prou. 28.2. the Scripture. Salomon in the xxviij. Chapter, Many Princes are becauſe of the wickedneſſe of the people. Againe Iob in the xij. chap.
Iob.12.18 He taketh away ſubiection from kings,and girdeth them againe with Iere.29 7. the girdle. But this being confeſſed,there remaineth nothing but that we muſt ſerue and liue. There is alſo in Ieremie the Prophet an other commaundement of the Lorde, wherein he commaundeth his people to ſeke the peace of Babilõ, whither they had bene led away captiue, and to pray to him for it, becauſe in the peace of it ſhould be their peace. Behold the Iſraelites being ſpoiled of all their goods, plucked out of their houſes, led away into exile, and caſt into miſerable bondage,are commaunded to pray for the ſafetie of the Conqueror: not as in other places we are commaunded to pray for our perſe-perſecuters: but that the kingdome may be preſerued to himſelfe and quiet, that they themſelues may alſo liue proſperouſly vnder him. So Dauid being already appointed king by the ordinance of God, and annointed with his holy oile, when he was without any his deſeruing vnworthily perſecuted of Saul, yet the hed of him that layed waite for his life; he eſtemed holy, which the Lorde had hallowed with the honor of kingdome. Farre be it from me (ſaid he) that I ſhould before the Lorde do this thing to my Lorde the annointed of the Lorde; that I ſhould lay my hande vpon him, becauſe he is the annointed of the Lorde. Againe, My ſoule hath ſpared thee, and I haue ſaid, I will not lay my hande vpon my Lorde, becauſe he is the annointed of the Lorde. Againe, Who ſhall lay his hande vpon the annointed of the Lorde, and ſhalbe innocent? So ſure as the Lorde liueth, vnleſſe the Lorde ſtrike him, or his day be come that he dy, or he go down into battell: farre be it from me that I ſhould lay my hande vpon the annointed of the Lorde. 1. Sam. 24. 7. 1. Sam. 26. 9.

29 Finally we owe this affection of reuerence yea and deuotion to all our rulers, of what ſort ſoeuer they be, Which I do therefore the oftener repete, that we may learne not to ſearche what the men themſelues be, but take this for ſufficiente, that by the will of the Lorde they beare that perſonage, in which the Lorde himſelfe hath emprinted and engraued an inuiolable maieſtie. But (thou wilt ſay) Rulers owe mutuall duties to their ſubiectes. That I haue already cõfeſſed. But if thou therupon conclude, ẏ obediences are to be rendred to none but to iuſte gouernements, thou art a fooliſh reaſoner. For, husbandes alſo are bounde to their wiues and parentes to their children with mutuall duties. Let parentes and husbandes depart from their dutie: let parentes ſhewe themſelues ſo hard and vnpleaſable to their children, whom they are forbidden to prouoke to anger, that with their peuiſhneſſe they do vnmeaſurably wery them: let the husbandes moſt deſpitefully vſe their wiues, whom they are commaunded to loue, and to ſpare them as weake veſſels: ſhall yet therefore either children be leſſe obediẽt to their parentes or wiues to theit husbandes? But they are ſubiect both to euill parentes and husbandes and ſuch as do not their dutie. Yea, whereas all ought rather to endeuor themſelues not to looke behinde thẽ to the bagge banging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of an others duties, but euery man ſet before him that which is his owne dutie: this ought chiefely to haue place amonge thoſe ẏ are vnder the power of other. Wherfore if we be vnmercifully tormẽted of a cruel Prince, if we be rauenouſly ſpoiled of a couetous or riotous Prince, if we be neglected Eph. 6. 1 Ephe. 5. 26. 1. Pet. 3. 7.

Dan. 9. 7. of a ſlouthfull Prince, finally if we be vexed for godlineſſes ſake of a wicked and vngodly Prince: let vs firſt call to minde the remembrãce of our ſinnes, which vndoutedly are chaſtiſed with ſuch ſcourges of the Lorde. Thereby humilitie ſhall bridle our impatience. Let vs then alſo call to minde this thought, that it perteineth not to vs to remedy ſuch euels: but this onely is left for vs, that we craue the helpe of the Lorde, in whoes hand are the hartes of kings, and the Pro.21. 1. bowings of kingdomes. He is the God that ſhall ſtande in the aſſemblie of gods, and ſhall in the middeſt iudge the Gods from whoes Pſal.82. 1. face all kings ſhall fall, and be broken, and all the iudges of the earth Pſal.2. 10. that ſhall haue not kiſſed his annointed, that haue writtẽ vniuſt lawes to oppreſſe the poore in iudgement, and do violence to the cauſe of Eſa.10. 1. the humble, to make widowes a pray, and robbe the fatherleſſe.

30 And here both his maruelous goodneſſe, and power, and prouidence ſheweth it ſelfe: for ſometime of his ſeruantes he raiſeth vp open reuengers, and furniſheth them with his commaundement, to take vengeance of their vniuſt gouernement, & to deliuer his people many wayes oppreſſed out of miſerable diſtreſſe: ſometime he directeth to the ſame ende the rage of men that entende and go about an other thing, So he deliuered the people of Iſraell out of the tyExo.3. 7. ranny of Pharao, by Moſes: and out of the violence of Chuſam king of Syria, by Othoniell: and out of other thraldomes, by other kings Iud.3. 9.&c. or Iudges. So he tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Egyptians: the inſolence of the Egyptians, by the Aſſyrians: the ſerceneſſe of the Aſſyrians, by the Chaldees: the boldneſſe of Babilon, by the Medians, and by the Perſians when Cyrus hadde ſubdued the Medians. And the vnthankfulneſſe of the kings of Iuda and Iſraell, and their wicked obſtinatie toward his ſo many benefites, he did beate downe and bring to diſtreſſe ſometime by the Aſſyrians, ſometime by the Babilonians, albeit not all after one maner. For, the firſt ſort of men when they were by the lawfull calling of God ſent to do ſuch actes: in taking armure againſt kinges, they did not violate that maieſtie which is planted in kings by the ordinance of God: but being armed from heauẽ they ſubdued the leſſer power with the greater: like as it is lawfull for kings to puniſh their Lordes vnder them. But theſe later ſort, although they were directed by the hand of God whether it pleaſed him, and they vnwittingly did his worke, yet purpoſed in their minde nothing but miſchefe.

31 But howſoeuer the very doings of men be iudged, yet the Lorde did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloody ſcepters of proude kings, and ouerthrewe their intolerable

gouernementes. Let Princes heare and be afraide. But we in the meane time muſt take greate hede, that we do not deſpiſe or offende that authoritie of Magiſtrates full of reuerend maieſtie, which God hath ſtabliſhed with moſt weighty decrees, although it remaine with moſt vnworthy men, and which do with their wickedneſſe, ſo much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of vnbridled gouernment be the reuengemente of the Lorde, let vs not by and by thinke that it is committed to vs, to whom there is geuen no other commaundement but to obey and ſuffer. I ſpeake alway of priuate men. For if there be at this time any Magiſtrates for the behalfe of the people, (ſuch as in olde time were the Ephori, that were ſet againſt the kings of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, againſt the Romane Conſuls: or the Demarchy, againſt the Senate of Athenes: and the ſame power alſo which paraduenture, as things are nowe, the three eſtates haue in euery realme, when they holde their principall aſſemblies) I do ſo not forbidde them according to their office to withſtande the outraging licentiouſneſſe of kings, that I affirme that if they winke at kings willfully raging ouer and treading downe the poore communaltie, their diſſembling is not without wicked breache of faith, becauſe they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they knowe themſelues to be appointed protectors by the ordinance of God. Parlaments.

32 But in that obedience which we haue determined to be due to the authorities of Gouernors, this is alway to be excepted, yea chiefely to be obſerued, that it do not lead vs away from obeying of him, to whoes will the deſires of all kinges ought to be ſubiect, to whoes decrees all their commaundements ought to yelde, to whoes maieſtie their maces ought to be ſubmitted. And truely howe vnorderly were it, for the ſatisfying of men to runne into his diſpleaſure for whom men themſelues are obeyed? The Lorde therefore is the kings of kings: who, when he hath opened his holy mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and aboue all: nexte to him we be ſubiect to thoſe men that are ſet ouer vs: but no otherwiſe than in him. If they commaunde any thing againſt him, let it haue no place and let no accompt be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing ſtay vpon all that dignitie wherewith the Magiſtrates excell, to which there is no worng done, when it is brought into order of ſubiection in compariſon of that ſingular and truely ſoueraigne power of God. After this reaſon Daniell denied that he had any thing offended againſt the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: becauſe the king had paſſed his boundes, and had not onely bene a wrong doer Dan. 6. 22.

to men, but in lifting vp his hornes against God he had taken away power from himselfe. On the other side the Israelites are condemned, because they were to much obedient to the wicked commaundement of the king. For when Ierobeam had made golden calues, they forsakinge the temple of God, did for his pleasure turne to newe superstitions. With like lightnesse their posterity inclined themselues to the ordinances of their kings. With this the Prophet sharply reprocheth them, that they embraced the commaundements of the king: so farre is it of, that the pretense of humilitie may deserue praise, wherewith the flatteres of the court do couer themselues and deceiue the simple, while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commaunded them of their Princes: as though God had resigned his right to mortall men, geuing them the rule of mankinde: or as though the earthly power were minished, when it is made subiect to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers do humbly tremble for feare. I knowe howe great and howe present perill hangeth ouer this constantie, because kings do most displeasantly suffer themselues to be despised, whoes displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But sith this decree is proclaimed by the heauenly harald Peter? That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that we then performe that obedience which the Lorde requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatsoeuer it be, than swarue from Godlinesse. And that our courages should not faint. Paule putteth also an other spurre to vs: That we were therfore redemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, that we should not yelde our selues in thraldome to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bonde to vngodlinesse

AColuthes in the olde Church. Booke. 4. Chapter. 4. Section. 1. 9. & Chap. 19. Sect. 22 23.

Adams fall.

The fall of Adam proceded not of intemperance of gluttony, but of infidelitie: for he despisinge the word & trueth of God, turned out of the way to the lyes of Sathan: which infidelitie opened the gate to ambition & pride, wherunto was adioyned vnthankefulnesse: & ambition was the mother of disobedience. 2. 1. 4.

By the fall of Adam sith other creatures haue bin after a sort deformed, it is no maruel, that all mākinde was corrupted, that is to say: swarued out of kinde from his first originall, & made subiect to curse. This the old Doctors called Originall sinne, but yet did not so plainly set foorth this point of Doctrine as was conueniēt. In the meane time it is proued by reasons and testimonies of Scripture, ỳ Pelagius fowly erred when he sayd that by imitation only, not by propagation, sinne passed from the first manne into all his posterity. 2. 1. 5, 6.

And though the pestilence of sinne do principally abide in the soule, yet it doth not therefore pertaine to the discussinge of this Doctrine, to dispute whether the soule of the childe commeth of the engendringe substance of the father: foraſmuch as the cause of the infection is not in the substance of the flesh or of the soule, but because it was ordained of God, that those gifts which he at the first had giuen to man, man shoulde haue and lose them for him and his. Finally it maketh not against this doctrine, that the children of the faithful are sanctified. 2. 1. 7.

That by the fal of Adam the naturall gifts in man were corrupted & the supernaturall were taken away, is a sayinge that many haue vsed, but few haue vnderstoode. 2. 2. 4, 16. which sayinge is expounded. 2. 2. 12. that is to say, that the supernaturall gifts, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, desirous endeuor of holines & righteousnes were taken away, but are restored by Christ: & that the naturall gifts, namely the vnderstanding minde, & the heart are corrupted, because the soundnes of vnderstanding & the vprightnes of hart were both taken away: Also that reason in mā was not vtterly blotted out, but partely weakened and partely corrupted: and so Will, because it can not be seuered from the nature of man, was not vtterly destroyed, but made thrall to corrupt desires. 2.2.12.

It is proued by the testimonies of Augustine and of the Scripture, ẏ God not only foresaw or suffred, but also by his will disposed the fall of the first man, & in him the vaine of his posterity. 3.23.7,8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God, although Moses do not expresse thē in the history of the creation. 1.14.3

Of the time or order wherin they were created, it is not expedient to enquire, forasmuch as ẏ Scripture (which we ought to follow for our rule) declareth nothinge thereof. 1.14.4.

Why the heauenly Spirites are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, Principalities, powers, Dominatiōs, Thrones, Goddes. 1.14.5.

Concerninge Angels the Scripture teacheth so much as is auayleable for our comfort & for the cōfirminge of our fayth, namely that they are distributers & ministers of Gods bountifulnes towarde vs, and the same by diuerse wayes. 1.14.6,9

Not only one Angel hath seuerall care of euery one of vs, but they all with one consent do watch for our safety: & therfore it is superfluous to enquire whether euery mā haue his seuerall angel assigned to be his keper. 1.14.7.

Of the number and degrees of Angels, it is curiousnes to enquire, & rashnes to determine: And why, wheras they be Spirites, the Scripture painteth them with wings vnder Cherubin and Seraphin. 1.14.8.

Against the Sadduces and such other fantasticall men, it is proued by sundry testimonies of the Scripture, that Angels are not qualities or inspirations without substance, but very spirites in deede. 1.14.9.

That superstition is herein to be auoyded, and that we giue not to Angels those thinges that belonge only to God and Christ. 1.14.10.

For auoydinge of this perill, we must consider that whereas God vseth their seruice, he doth it not of neede, as though he coulde not be without them, but for the comfort of our weakenesse. 1, 14. 11. And therefore whatsoeuer is sayd of the ministery of Angels, ought to be referred to this end, that ouercominge all distrust, our trust in God should be thereby the more strongly stablished, and not ẏ they should lead vs away from God 1.14.12.

That the Angels also were created after the likenes of God. 1.15.3.

Of

Of the Aſcending of Chriſt into Heauen.

Although Chriſt in his riſing againe beganne more fully to ſhew forth his glory & power: yet in his Aſcending into heauē he firſt truly beganne his kingdom, becauſe he then powred out greater aboundāce of his Spirit, more royally aduanced his reigne, & ſhewed greater power both in helpinge them that are his, and in ouerthrowinge his enemies. And yet that he is ſo abſent accordinge to the preſence of his fleſhe, that he is alway euery where accordinge to the preſence of his maieſty, and with the faithful according to his vnſpeakable & inuiſible grace. 2.16.14.

Baptiſme.

THe definition of baptiſme. The firſt end thereof is to ſerue our faith before God, the other ende, to ſerue our confeſſiō before mē. It bringeth to our faith three things, firſt ỳ it is a ſigne of our cleanſing, aſſuringe vs that all our ſinnes are done away. 4.15.1. which is proued by teſtimonies of ỳ Scripture, & ỳ it is not the water that clenſeth vs, but the blood of Chriſt. Sect. 2.

The force of baptiſme is not reſtrained to the time paſt: but we are by it waſhed and cleanſed once for all our life: & yet that we may not hereof take a liberty to ſinne from thence forward. 4.15.3.

The power of the keies (as they call it) that is to ſay, the miniſterie of the Church, by which the forgiuenes of ſinnes is dayly preached vnto vs, is not to be ſeuered from baptiſme. 4.15.4.

The ſeconde fruite of fayth by baptiſme, is that it ſheweth to vs our mortifyinge in Chriſt, & a new life in him. 4.15.5. The thirde frute is, that it teſtifieth that we are ſo vnited to Chriſt, that we are partakers of all his good thinges. For which cauſe Chriſt is called the proper obiect of baptiſme, and the Apoſtles baptiſed into the name of Chriſt, in whom we do ſo obtaine the matrer both of our cleanſinge and of our regeneration, as we obtaine the cauſe thereof in the father, & ỳ effect in the holy Ghoſt. 4.15.6.

It is proued that the baptiſme was all one which was miniſtred of Iohn and of the Apoſtles, although ſome of the olde Doctors thought otherwiſe. 4.15.7. and that it maketh not to the contrary, that more abundant graces of the Spirite are poured out, ſince the reſurrection of Chriſt. But yet there is in baptiſme a difference to be made of the perſon of Chriſt from Iohn, & frō the Apoſtles and other miniſters. 4.15.8.

Both our mortifying & our cleanſing were as by ſhadow ſignified amōg the people of Iſrael, by the paſſage through the sea, and the comfortable calling of the cloude. 4. 15. 9.

It is false whiche some haue taught, that by Baptisme we are restored to the same righteousnesse & pureneſſe of nature which Adã had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God do remaine yet some leauinges of sin, although the same reigne not in them: which doth whet their endeuors, and doth not geue them occasion to flatter themselues. 4. 15. 10. 11. the same is proued by Paule. Sect. 12.

Howe Baptisme serueth our cõfession before men. 4. 15. 13.

What is the order to vse Baptisme, both for confirmation of our faith, and for a confession before men. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not encloſed in the Sacrament, so as they be geuen to vs by the vertue thereof. 4. 15. 14, 15.

Baptisme is nothing encreased by ỹ worthinesse of him that doth minister it, nor diminished by his vnworthinesse: against the Donatistes, and our Catabaptistes which require a rebaptising, becauſe we haue bin baptised in the kingdome of the Pope. 4. 15. 16. their argumẽts are confuted. Sect. 17, 18.

Baptisme is a continuall Sacrament of repentaunce for all our life, so that we neede no other Sacrament of penance. 4. 19. 17.

Of the coniuring of the water, the waxe Candell, the Chresme, the blowing, the spittle, and such other trifles added to the simple ceremonie of Christ: and the other of purely ministring it in the Church is shewed. 4. 15. 19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the ministers of the Church & not to priuate men, much lesse to women: and the cõtrary obiections are confuted. 4. 15. 20, 21, 22.

Baptisme of Infantes.

The Baptising of Infantes doth very wel agree with Christes institution, and with the nature of the signe. 4. 16. &c.

Baptisme succeded in the place of Circumcision, Wherein they be like, and wherein they be vnlike. 4. 16. 3, 4.

Infantes are not to be debarred from baptisme, sith the Lorde doth make them partakers of the thing signified in Baptisme. 4. 16. 5. and that the Lord doth regenerate Infantes. Sect. 17, 18, 19.

Sith it is certaine that the same couenaunt, which it pleased God to make with Abraham, is sealed in infantes with the outwarde Sacrament, therefore ought baptisme also to haue place among them. 4. 16. 6.

Baptising of infantes is well proued by this that Christ embraced children and layed his handes vpõ them. 4. 16. 7.

A confutation of certaine arguments of the enemies of infantes baptisme. 4. 16. 8, 22, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29

There commeth greate fruit by the baptizing of infantes, both to the the faithfull parentes and to the children. 4.16. 9. which fruit Satan trauaileth by the Anabaptiſtes to take from vs.4.16.32.

A cõfutation of the aduerſaries arguments, ſaying, that there be other things ſignified in Baptiſme than there are in Circumciſiõ:that our couenaunt differeth from the olde couenaunt:that other are called children at this day than were at that time.4.16.10,11,12,13,14,15.

A confutation of their other fained differences betweene Circumciſion and baptiſme. Sect. 16. Alſo of this obiection, that baptiſme is a Sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infancy.4.16.20,21.

In them of ripe age, faith and vnderſtanding ought to go before baptiſme: but in infantes,the baptiſme of the faithfull goeth before vnderſtanding.4,16.24.

A confutation of their error, which condemne to eternall death all that are not baptiſed.4.16.26.

Of Baptiſing of infantes.4.8.16.

Bearing of the Croſſe.

It behoueth that we deny our ſelues,that we may beare ỹ Croſſe, becauſe it is Gods will to exerciſe all his vnder the croſſe, beginning at Chriſt his firſt begotten ſonne. Which fellowſhip with Chriſt doth already geue vs great grounde of patience and comforte.3.8.1.

It is for many cauſes neceſſary for vs to leade our life vnder a continuall croſſe: firſt to beate downe our arrogãce and truſt of our owne ſtrength. And this remedy euen the moſt holy do neede, as is proued by the exãple of Dauid. 3.8.2. Hereby our truſt in God is confirmed,& our hope encreaſed.Sect.3.

Secondly,that our patience may be tried, and we may be framed to obedience. 3.8.4. Which is moſt needefull for vs, ſith the wãtonnes of our fleſhe is ſo great to make vs ſhake of the yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently. Sect.5.

Sometime alſo to puniſhe our offences committed: wherein we acknowledge that he doth the office of a good father rowarde vs, but contrariwiſe the vnfaithfull are oftentimes made more obſtinate. 3.8.6.

A ſingular cõforte when we ſuffer either ſhame, or loſſe,or any other calamitie for righteouſneſſe:which croſſe moſt properly belongeth to the faithfull. 3.8.7.

How neceſſary it is for the faithfull,in the bitterneſſe of afflictions, to be furniſhed with this thought, through the ſea, and the comfortable calling of the cloude. 4. 15. 9.

It is falſe whiche ſome haue taught, that by Baptiſme we are reſtored to the ſame righteouſneſſe & pureneſſe of nature which Adã had at the beginning. And there is ſhewed that in the children of God do remaine yet ſome leauinges of ſin, although the ſame reigne not in them: which doth whet their endeuors, and doth not geue them occaſion to flatter themſelues. 4. 15. 10. 11. the ſame is proued by Paule. Sect. 12.

Howe Baptiſme ſerueth our cõfeſſion before men. 4. 15. 13.

What is the order to vſe Baptiſme, both for confirmation of our faith, and for a confeſſion before men. Where it is ſhewed that the graces of God are not encloſed in the Sacrament, ſo as they be geuen to vs by the vertue thereof. 4. 15. 14, 15.

Calling.

Of ỹ effectual or inward Calling, which is a ſure teſtimony of election, & hangeth vpon ỹ only free mercy of God. 3.24.1,2.

Againſt them, which in predeſtinatiō do make man a worker with God. Alſo againſt them that hang election vpon that which foloweth election. 3.24.3.

The certainety of our election is to be knowen by the word and callinge of God, and we ought not to preace into the eternall councell of God. 3.24.4.

The father hath choſen vs onely in Chriſt, in him therefore let vs behold the ſtedfaſt grounde of our election. 3.24.5. and ſo, that thereof alſo we may conceiue a ſure cōfidence of perſeuerance to the end. 3.24.6,7,8,9.

Two kindes of calling, vniuerſal, and ſpecial. 3.24.8.

It is proued by diuerſe examples and teſtimonies of Scripture, that the elect before their Callinge do differ nothinge from other menne: and that it is falſe which ſome men do dreame, that there is a certaine ſeede of election planted in their hartes euen from their natiuity. 3.24.10,11.

It is ſhewed at large that as God doth by the effectuallneſſe of his Callinge towarde the elect, make perfect the ſaluation to which he hadde by his eternall counſell appoynted thē: ſo he hath his iudgements againſt the reprobate, wherby he putteth his purpoſe concerning them in execution, and maketh a way for his predeſtination. 3.24. 12,13,14.&c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals firſt began, and howe they haue ſo ſuddenly ſtart vp to ſo great honor. 4.7.30.

Ceremonies.

The old Ceremonies are taken away, as touchinge their vſe onely, but not as touchinge their effect, for we haue the ſame effect at this day moſt euidently and effectually in Chriſt. And this doth nothinge diminiſhe their holineſſe, as it is proued. 2.7.16. and beinge weyed by themſelues and without Chriſt, they are worthily called of Paule handewrytinges againſt vs. 2.7.17.

The ordinances concerninge Ceremonies in the Popes lawe, do commaunde obſeruation for the moſt parte vnprofitable, and ſometime alſo fooliſhe although they haue a great ſeeminge of wiſdome: moreouer they oppreſſe conſciences with their infinite multitude. 4. 10.11,12,13.

The popiſh Ceremonies can not be executed by this color, that they be ordained for the inſtruction of ỹ ignorant, as ỹ Ceremonies of the law were: becauſe there appeareth in this point a manifeſt difference betwene vs and the people before Chriſt. 4.10.14.

The popiſh ceremonies are beleued to be Sacrifices clenſing ſinnes, & deſeruinge eternall life: they are without doctrine, and are ſnares to catch mony. 4.10.15.

Charity towarde our neighbour.

It is proued, againſt the Sorboniſtes, that Charity is ỹ loue of our neighbour and not of our ſelues. 2. 8.54.

Vnder the name of neighbour is contained euery man, be he neuer ſo much a ſtraunger to vs, and our enemy. 2.8.55. & therefore the Schoolemen are condemned of ignorance, which of the commaundementes of God, not to deſire reuenge, & to loue our enemies, haue made counſels, to the neceſſary kepinge whereof monkes alone do binde themſelues: and it is proued that the old doctors of the Church, yea & Gregory himſelfe, thought otherwiſe. 2.8.56,57.

We haue neede of patience, that we be not weary of doing good to other. And we ought not to haue reſpect to ỹ vnworthineſſe or other qualities of mẽ which might withdrawe vs, but to God which ſo cõmaundeth vs. 3.7.6.

To the fulfilling of all the partes of Charitie, it is not enough if we performe all the dutifull deedes of Charitie, but we muſt do it with a ſincere affection of harte. Wherein the chiefe point is, that we take vppon our ſelues the perſon of him whom wee ſee to neede our helpe. So ſhall wee auoide diſdainefull pride and other corruptinges of Charity. 3.7.7.

Chriſt & the Apoſtles in rehearſinge the ſumme of the lawe do ſometime leaue out the firſt table: not for that it more auaileth to the ſumme of righteouſneſſe to liue innocently with men, than to honor God with Godlineſſe: but bycauſe vnfained Charity is ỹ proofe of true Godlineſſe. 2.8.52,53.

A confutation of the Phariſees of our time, which holde that we are iuſtified by Charity, bycauſe Paul ſayeth that Charity is greater then faith and hope. 3.18.8.

An expoſitiõ of the tenth commaundement, wherein (as in the former commaundements) is forbidden not onely all purpoſe to hurt our neighbour, but alſo all luſt or deſire againſt Charity. 2.8.49.58. God doth for good cauſe & worthily require of vs ſo greate feruentneſſe and vprightneſſe of loue. 2. 8.50.

An expoſition of the ſixt commaundemẽt, wherein not onely the ſlaughter or hatred of our neighbour is forbidden vs, but alſo the preſeruing of his life is commaunded vs, becauſe man is both our fleſhe and the Image of God. 2.7. 39.40.

Church.

The Church the mother of the faithfull. 4.1.1,4,5.

An expoſition of this Article of the Creede, I beleue ỹ holy Church 4.1.2,3.

The holineſſe of the Church is not yet perfited. 4.8.12.

Of the inuiſible Church: and of the viſible Churche, the ſignes whereof are the pure preaching of the worde and miniſtration of Sacraments. 4.8,7,8,9,10,11.

Whereſoeuer thoſe ſignes are, we ought not to departe from that fellowſhip. 4 8.12.

There may ſome faulte crepe in, either in doctrine or in miniſtratiõ of Sacraments, for the which yet we ought not to caſt of the communion of that Church, and much leſſe for the imperfectiõ of life and corruptneſſe of maners: And herein the Anabaptiſtes are reproued 4.1. 12,13,14,15,16.

The Church is none otherwiſe holy, but that it alway hath many faultes, and yet it ceaſſeth not to be the Church, as is proued by teſtimonies of Scripture and the experience of all ages. 4.1.17, 18,19.

See Miniſtery of the Church.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is proued by the example of the Apoſtles and Prophets, and of Chriſt himſelf, that whatſoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not geuen to men, but to the word, the miniſtration whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was neuer lawfull for the Church, to teache any other thing, than that which ſhe receiued of the Lorde. 4.8.1,2,3,4,8,9.

Chriſt hath euer taught his Church: & yet hee hath vſed diuers maners of teaching according to the diuerſitie of times, ere the lawe was written, in the time of the law and the Prophets, & laſt of all ſince that he himſelf was openly ſhewed in the fleſhe. 4.8.5,6,7.

Falſe Church.

Where lying and falſehode hath gotten the vpperhande & reigneth, there is not the Church: And this is proued to be in the papacie, although they there boaſt of a perpetuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops. 4. 2. 1,2,3,4.

They are not heretikes or ſchiſmatikes that depart from the papacie. 4. 2. 5,6.

Howe much ſoeuer a man make the beſt of the faultes of the popiſhe Church, yet the ſtate thereof is no better than was in the kingdome of Iſraell vnder Ierobeam. 4.2.7,8,9,10.

Yet by the goodneſſe of God there remaine in the papacie certaine foteſteppes of the Church: and ſo is that fulfilled which hath bene writtē, that Antichriſt ſhould ſit in the temple of God. 4.2.11,12.

A cōpariſon of the power which the trew Church hath in teaching, with the tirrany of the Pope and his miniſters in forging newe articles of faith. 4.8.10. Of the papiſtes principle, that the Church cannot erre. 4.8.13.

It is falſe to ſay that it behoued that the Church ſhould ad to the writings of ỹ Apoſtles. 4.8.14,15,16.

A confutation of the arguments which the papiſtes make, to proue that there is power geuen to the Church to coine newe articles of faith. 4,8.11.12.

Chriſt.

The Godhed of the Sonne is proued. 1.13.7.

A difference betwene Chriſts working of miracles, and the Prophets or Apoſtles doing of the like. 1.13.13.

It is proued by many and moſt ſtronge teſtimonies of Scripture, that Chriſt toke vppon him a true ſubſtance of mans fleſh, and not a Ghoſt or coũterfaite ſhape of mã, as the Marcionites fained, nor yet a heauenly body as the Manichees lyingly affirmed. 2. 13. 1.

An expoſition of the places of Scripture, which Marcion writhed to the confirmation of his error, and alſo of thoſe which Manicheus wreſted, and many of their diſciples do wreſt at this day. 2. 13. 2, 3. where alſo are confuted the newe Marcionites, which to proue that Chriſt toke his body of nothing, do holde that women haue no ſeede: There are alſo certaine other things confuted, which are obiected as abſurdities. 2. 13. 4.

Clerkes or Clergie,

Of Clerkes in the olde Church. 4. 4. 9.

Concupiſcence or Luſte.

The difference betweene concupiſcence and counſell. 2. 8. 49.

That all the concupiſcences of men are euill and gilty of ſinne, not inſomuch as they are naturall, but becauſe they are all inordinate by reaſon of the corruption of nature. And ſo did Auguſtine thinke, if he be diligently weyed. 3. 3 12. and this is proued by many places of his writings. 3. 3. 13.

Confeſſion Auricular.

Concerning Confeſſion, the Schoolediuines do fight againſt the Canoniſtes, affirming that it is not by the commaundement of God. A confutation of the arguments whereupon the firſt ſort do ſtand, firſt becauſe the Lorde in the Goſpell did ſend ỹ Leprous whom he had cleanſed to the prieſts: and there is ſhewed the true meaninge of that doing. 3. 4. 4.

A confutation of their ſecond argument, for that the Lorde commaunded his diſciples to loſe and vnwind Lazarus when he was raiſed from death. 3. 4. 5.

A true expoſition of two places by which they trauell to vphold their confeſſion: that is to ſay, that they which came to the Baptiſme of Iohn did confeſſe their ſinnes, and Iames willeth vs to confeſſe

our ſinnes one to an other. 3.4.6.

The vſe of confeſſing to a prieſt was very auncient, but yet free as a politike order, not as a lawe ſet by Chriſt or his Apoſtles: and afterwarde the ſame was abrogate by Nectarius Biſhop of the Church of Cõſtantinople, becauſe of a Deacõ which had vnder ỹ pretence abuſed a woman. This tyrannous lawe was not laid vpon Churches before the time of Innocent the third, about three hundred yeares paſt, and the fooliſhneſſe and barbarouſneſſe of that ordinance is declared. 3.4.7.

Witneſſes of the ſaid abrogatiõ, out of Chriſoſtome Biſhop of Cõſtantinople. 3.4.8.

An expoſition of Innocentes lawe concerning the confeſſion of all ſinnes, where are rehearſed the diuerſe opinions of the Romiſhe diuines cõcerning the number and vſe of keyes, and the power of binding and looſing. 3.4.15.

The lewdneſſe of all the particular articles of the lawe of confeſſing, and ſpecially of that concerning the rehearſing of all ſinnes. 3.4.16. and a plaine deſcription of the cruelty wherewith poore conſciẽces were by diuerſe circũſtances tormented therein. 3.4.17.

By a ſimilitude is deſcribed howe a great part of the world hath hetherto obeyed ſuch illuſions. That it is an impoſſible lawe, & maketh men hypocrites. And thẽ is ſhewed a moſt certaine rule of confeſſion according to the example of the Publicane. 3.4.18.

A confutation of this article, that ſinnes are not forgeuen, and that the gate of paradiſe is ſhut. &c. vnleſſe there be firſt firmely cõceiued a vowe of confeſſing, where alſo their obiectiõ is cõfuted, that iudgment can not be pronounced till the cauſe be heard, that is to ſay, that abſolutiõ can not be geuen till all the ſinnes be rehearſed. 3.4.18.

It is no maruell that we cõdemne and aboliſh auricular confeſſion, and our aduerſaries do falſly aſſigne ſo great profit vnto it, forſomuch as on the other ſide it armeth men to boldneſſe of ſinning. 3.4.19.

They do falſly pretẽd that they haue the power of the keyes, ſith they are not the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, nor haue the holy Ghoſt, forſomuch as they do daily without conſideration looſe thoſe thinges which the Lorde hath cõmaunded to be bound, and bind what he hath commaunded to be looſed. 3.4.20.

It is proued falſe that they ſay ỹ the power of the keyes may ſometime be vſed without knowledge, foraſmuch as by that meane the abſolution ſhould be vncertaine. Where alſo is ſpoken of the abſolution or condẽnation which the miniſters of the Goſpel, or the church do pronoũce according to ỹ word, and of the certaintie therof. 3.4.21.

The abſolution of the prieſts in the Papacie is vncertaine, as well on the behalfe of him that aſſoileth as of him that confeſſeth: but cõtrariwiſe it is in the abſolution of the Goſpell, which hangeth vpon this onely condition, if the sinner seke his purging in the onely sacrifice of Christ, and do yelde to the grace offred vnto him. 3.4.22.

The Popish Doctors, when they allege for themselues the power of loosing geuen to the Apostles, do wrongfully wrest to auricular confession those sayings which Christ spake partly of preaching of the Gospell, and partly of excommunication. The errors of Lombard and such other in this matter: and concerning the maner of remission with enioining of penance and satisfaction. 3.4.23.

A summe of all before spoken: & what the faithfull ought to thinke of auricular confession. 3.4.24.

True Confession.

What kinde of cõfessiõ is taught vs by the word of God, namely to confesse to God the knower of our hartes & of all our thoughtes. 3.4.9.

Out of this secret confession made to God, followeth a voluntary confession before men, so oft as it is behouefull fot the glory of God or the humbling of our selues. And of this secõd kinde there was an ordinary vse in the old Church, & is also in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a speciall maner to be vsed, whensoeuer it shall happẽ that the people be giltie in any generall offence, or to be plaged with any calamitie. Of the profite of such confession. 3.4.10,11.

Of two other sorts of priuate cõfession: of which the first is vsed for our owne cause, when we require comfort of our brethren, because the feling of sinnes doth vexe and trouble vs: in which case we must chiefely resort to our pastors: and this remedy is warely & moderately to be vsed, that no bondage be brought in. The other sorte is to appease and reconcile our neighboure, if he be in any thing offended by our fault, vnder which kinde is conteined their Cõfession which haue sinned so farre as to the offence of ỹ whole Church. 3.4.12.13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kindes of Confessiõ. Of the frute which they that confesse do receiue thereby, bycause they knowe that forgeuenes of sinnes is declared to them by the messenger of Christ. 3.4.14.

Of cõfession of sinnes one sorte is generall an other speciall. 3.10.9.

Confirmation Popishe.

Of the popishe sacramẽt of Confirmation foisted in place of that holy institution. 4.19.5.

That the exãple of the Apostles is wrõgefully alledged for defence thereof. 4.19.6.

It is blasphemy when they call it the oile of saluation. 4.19,7,8. and when they say that none are made full Christians till they be annointed with the Bishops Confirmation. Sect. 9. and when they say that this annoinannointinge is to be had in greater reuerēce than Baptiſme. Sect. 10, 11.

It is to be wiſhed, that the maner of the olde Church were brought in vſe againe, to call children to geue accompt of their faith. 4.19.13.

Conſcience.

Conſciences, when they ſeke aſſiance of their iuſtification before God, ought to forgette all the righteouſneſſe of the lawe. 3. 19.2,3.

The Cōſciences of the faithfull do not follow the law as cōſtrained by neceſſity of the lawe, but being free frō ỹ yoke of the lawe, do volūtarily obey ỹ will of god. 3.19.4,5,6.

Of ỹ freedom of Cōſciēce in outward & indifferent things. 3.19.7,8.

The Conſciences of the faithfull being ſet at liberty by the benefit of Chriſt, are made free from the power of all men: and howe this is to be vnderſtode: where alſo is ſpoken of the ſpirituall and ciuille gouernement, and what difference is to be put betwene thē. 3.19.14,15.

What is Conſcience: and of the common difference betwene the temporall court, and the court of Conſcience. 4.10.3,5.

Of Councels.

We muſt keepe a meane in honoring of Councels, that we take nothing away from Chriſt, and our doctrine for the moſt parte is confirmed by auncient Coūcels. 4.9.1.

By the Scriptures the Councels haue no authority, vnleſſe they be aſſembled in the name of Chriſt: and what that is. 4.9.2.

It is falſe which the Papiſtes affirme: ỹ truth remaineth not in the Church vnleſſe it be among the paſtors, and that the Church it ſelfe is not, vnleſſe it remaine to be ſene in generall Councels. 4.9.3, 4,5,6,7.

What things are to be weyed in ſearching ỹ authority of any Coūcell: and that Auguſtine preſcribeth a very good way therein. 4.9.8.

Councels one againſt another. 4.9.9. and euen in thoſe former and auncīēt Coūcels are founde faultes and errors. 4.9.10,11.

Creation of the VVorld.

Although God ought to be knowen by the Creation of things, yet leaſt the faithfull ſhould fall away to the fained inuētiōs of the heathen, his will was that the hiſtory of the Creatiō ſhould remaine written, & the time thereof expreſſed in the Scripture. 1.14.1. where their vngodly ſcoffing is confuted, which aſke why it came not ſooner in Gods mind to creat heauē & earth 1.14.1.

For the ſame purpoſe it is rehearſed, that God ended his worke, not in a moment, but in ſix dayes: and likewiſe the order is ſet forth, namely that Adā was not created till God had firſte furniſhed the worlde with all plenty of good things. 1.14.2,22.

A confutation of the error of Manicheus concerning two originall beginnings. 1.14.3.

It is proued by the Scriptures that the knowledge of God which appeareth in ỹ workmanishhip of the world, can not by it self alone bring vs into the right way. 1. 5. 13. and yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sect. 14.

Although the beholding of heauē and earth and the consideration of the ordringe of things pertaining to men, do moue vs to worshippe God, yet all these thinges passed away without profit, euen from the wisest Philosophers. 1. 5. 10.

Herupō came the infinite number of gods, and the contrarieties of opinion amōg the sectes of Philosophers concerning God. 1. 5. 11.

The substance of God is incomprehensible: but in his workes, by engrauing certaine pointes of his glory therein, he hath after a certaine maner presented himselfe to be seene. 1. 5. 1.

The wisdome of God is testified, not onely by those thinges which philosophers and learned men do finde by speculation in heauen and earth, but also which common men do perceiue by the onely helpe of their eyes. 1. 5. 2.

That we may with trewe faith conceiue so much as behoueth vs to know cōcerning God, it is good to learne ỹ history of the Creation of the world, in such sort as Moses hath set it forth, the chiefe pointes wherof are briefly rehearsed. 1. 14. 20.

The cōsideration of the workes of God, that is to say, of the Creation of all things, ought to be applied to two principall endes: first that we do not with vnthankefull neglectinge or forgetfulnes passe ouer his vertues which he presenteth apparantly to be seene in his creatures. 1. 14. 21. secondly, that we may learne to apply them to our selues, whereby wee may stirre vp our selues to the trust, inuocation, praise, and loue of him. 2. 14. 22.

A confutation of the shamelesnesse of certaine papistes, which say that the riotous excesse of priests and of all the popish Church, is the gloriousnesse of the kingdome of Christ

Christ which the holy prophetes spake of before. 4.5.17.

Death of Christ.

Although christ hath by ỹ whole course of his obedience, that is to say by his whole life & all the partes thereof, redeemed vs, yet the Scripture to set forth more planely the maner of our saluatiō, doth ascribe the same as peculiar and proper to the Death of Christ. In the which the voluntarie yeldinge of Christ hath the first place, which yet was so volūtary as he gaue ouer his owne affectiō not without strife. Also his cōdemnation is to be considered: Wherein two things are to be noted, namely that Christ was reputed among the wicked, and yet that his innocēcy was oftētimes testified euē by the iudges owne mouth. 2.1.5.

The maner of his Death is to be marked, that is to say, the accursed crosse. And it is declared by many testimonies of Esay & the Apostles, that this behoued so to be, that the curse which was dewe to vs being cast vpon him and so ouercome & taken away, wee should be deliuered. And this was figuratiuely represented in the sacrifices of Moses lawe, which at the last was performed in Christ the originall truth of all figures. 2.1.6.

Both in the Death and buriall of Christ a double benefit is set before vs, ỹ is to say, deliuerāce frō Death whereunto we were in bondage, & the mortifying of our flesh. 2.1.6.

Descending of Christ to Hell.

The Descēding of Christ to Hell conteineth the mistery of a great thing, and is of no small importāce to the effect of our redemptiō. Diuerse expositions of this article are rehearsed and confuted. 2.16.8,9.

A trewe, godly, holy and comfortable exposition thereof out of the word of God, which is also confirmed by the testimony of the olde Doctors, that Christ did not onely suffer a bodily death, but also did feele the rigor of Gods vengeāce, whereby he might both appease his wrath and satisfie his iust iudgemēt: and therefore it behoued that he should, as it were hāde to hande, wrestle with the power of Hell and with ỹ horror of euerlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemy, or angry with him. But he did suffer the greuousnesse of Gods seuerity, in respect that hee being stricken and beaten with the hande of God, did feele all the tokens of Gods wrath and punishment. 2.16.10.11.

A cōfutation of certaine wicked and vnlearned men, which at this day do finde faulte with this exposition, crying out that the sonne of God hath wronge done to him, and that he is charged with desperatiō, which is contrary to faith. Therefore it is proued against them with manifest testimonies, that these two things do very well stāde together, that Christ feared, was troubled in spirit, was afraide, was tempted in euery pointe as we are, and yet that hee is without sinne. 2.16.12.

Deuelles.

Thoſe things that the Scripture teacheth concerning Deuels, tende commonly to this ende, that wee ſhoulde be carefull to beware of their deceites, & furniſh our ſelues with thoſe weapons which may be able to beat back the moſt mighty enemies. 1.14.13.

That we ſhould be ỹ more ſtirred vp to do ſo, it ſheweth vs that there is not one or two Deuels, but great armies of euell ſpirites that make warre againſt vs: and in what ſence it ſometime ſpeaketh of the Deuell in the ſingular number. 1.14.14.

This ought to enflame vs to a continuall warre with the Deuell, for ỹ he is euery where called enemy to God and vs. 1.14.15.

The Deuell is naturally wicked, a murderer, a lier, and forger of all malitiouſnes. 1.14.15. But this euelneſſe of nature is not by creation, but by corruption. 1.14.16.

It is curioſity to enquire of the cauſe, maner, time and faſhion of the fall of the euell Angels, foraſmuch as the Scripture leaueth it vnſpoken. 1.14.16.

This the Deuell hath of himſelfe and of his owne naughtineſſe, deſirouſly and purpoſely to ſtriue againſt God, but hee can do and performe nothing vnleſſe God be willing and graunt it 1.14.17.

God ſo tempereth this gouernment, that hee geueth Satan no reigne ouer the ſoules of the faithfull, foraſmuch as in the ende they euer obteine the victorie, although in ſome particular doings they be wounded and beaten downe: but he onely geueth the wicked to him to gouerne, and to vſe his power vpon their ſoules and bodies 1.14.18.

A cõfutation of them which ſay that Deuells are nothing els but euell affections or perturbations: and it is proued by teſtimonies of Scripture, that they are mindes or ſpirits endued with ſenſe and vnderſtanding. 1.14.19.

Diſcipline is a thing moſt neceſſary in the Church. 4.12.1.

Of priuate admoniſhings, which is the firſt foundation of the Diſcipline of the Church. 4.12.2.

Of the Eccleſiaſticall Senate, that is to ſay, the ſeniors or elders, which together with the biſhops haue ỹ ouerſight of maners. 4.3.8.

Princes as well as the common people ought to be ſubiect to the Diſcipline of the church, & ſo was it wont to be in the olde time. 4.12.7.

Of the olde Diſcipline of the cleargy, and the yearly aſſemblinge of prouinciall ſynodes: and howe this order is buried in the papacy, ſauing that they kepe certaine ſhadowes thereof. 4.12.22.

Excommunication.

WHat is the power of the iuriſdiction of the Church, and howe neceſſary and auncient it is. 4.11.1,4.

Of the power of binding and loſinge, ſo much as pertaineth to Diſcipline, wherein there is ſpoken of Excommunication. 4.11.2.

This

This power of the Church is distincte from the ciuile power, and the one is a helpe to the other. Therefore the opinió of some men is false, which thinke that it ought to haue no place where are Christian magistrates. 4.11.1,3,8.

This is a stayed and continuall order in the Church, and not enduring onely for a time. 4.11.4.

Of the right vse of this iurisdiction in the olde Church: and howe this power belonged not to one man alone, but to the assembly of elders. 4.11.5,6. and Ch.12.Sect.7.

Of the Excommunicatió of the church, & ỹ authority therof. 4.12.4

Three endes which the Church hath regarde vnto in corrections and Excommunication. 4.12.5.

Of exercising the discipline of the Church according to the proportió of sinnes, for asmuch as some be priuate and some be publike, some be negligent defaultes, some be hainous offences. 4.12. 3,4,6.

In Excommunication seuerity ought to be tempered. And in this behalfe is noted the extreme rigorousnesse of thé in olde time. 4.12.8.

Euery priuate man ought to esteeme them that be Excommunicate as strangers from the Church, but not to accompt thé past hope, but to endeuour to the vttermost of their power to bringe them into the way againe. 4.12.9,10.

If the benche of elders do not so diligently correct faultes as they ought, or if the pastors can not amende all things as they would, yet priuate men ought not to departe from the Church, neither ought the pastors to shake of their ministerie. 4.12.11.

Against ỹ pecisheneſſe of the olde Donatistes & of the Anabaptistes of our dayes, which do acknowledge no congregation of Christ, but where there is in euery point an Angelike perfection. 4.12.12.

If the corruption of any sinne haue infected the whole multitude, the rigorousnesse of discipline must be tẽpered with the mercy, least the whole body be destroyed. 4.12.13.

F.

Faith.

THe name of Faith otherwise taken among holy writers than it is among the prophane. 4.12.13.

Howe it is to be vnderstode that God is the obiecte of faith. 2.6.4.

Of faith. And heere the Sophisters are reproued, which vnderstande nothing els by this worde faith, but a common assente to the history of the Gospell, & do simply call God the obiect of faith, in the meane time leauing out Christ, without whom there is no faith, nor any accesse to God. 3.2.1.

A confutation of the Scholemennes doctrine cõcerning vnexpressed faith, wheras faith requireth an expresse reknowledginge of the goodnesse of God, in which standeth our righteousnesse. 3.2.2.

Our faith, so longe as wee are waueringe in the world, is enwrapped with many remnaũtes of ignoraunce, and in all things infidelity is euer mingled with faith, whereof many examples are ſeene in the diſciples of Chriſt before that they came to perfecte light, yet this is ſtill moſt trewe, that vnderſtanding is euer ioined with faith. 3.2,3,4.

There is a certaine obedience to Chriſt, & aptneſſe to learne, with a deſire to profit, which is called by the name of faith, whereas it is but a preparatiõ to faith, and that ſame may be called an vnexpreſſed faith: yet it farre differeth from the papiſtes inuention. 3.2.5.

The trewe faith or knowledge of Chriſt, is when we cõceiue him in ſuch ſorte as he is offered of the Father, that is to ſay, clothed with his Goſpell. And faith hath a mutuall relation to the word, and the word to faith, becauſe the worde is the fountaine of faith, the grounde of faith, and the mirroure in which faith beholdeth God. 3.2.6.

Faith, although it aſſente to all the partes of the word of God, yet moſt properly it hath regarde therin to the good will and mercy of God, that is to ſay, the promiſes of grace grounded vpon Chriſt, for the vnderſtanding and certainty whereof, the holy Ghoſt lighteneth our mindes and ſtrengtheneth our hartes: Hereupon is gathered the definition of faith. 3.2.7.

A confutation of the Sophiſters diſtinction of faith, formed & formleſſe: whereby it appeareth that they neuer thought of the ſingular gifte of the holy Ghoſt, foraſmuch as faith can in no wiſe be ſeuered from a Godly affection. 3.2.8.

This worde faith hath diuerſe ſignificatiõs, and is ſometime taken for the power to do miracles, with which gift of God, ſomtime ỹ wicked are endued: Sometime it is figuratiuely taken for that knowledge of God which is in ſome wicked men, which is rather a ſhadowe & ymage of faith, of which faith there are diuerſe ſortes in them. 3.2.9.10.

The reprobate haue alſo ſometime ſuch a like feeling as the elect haue, yet they do not fully conceiue ỹ force of ſpirituall grace, but only confuſely. Neuertheleſſe the ſame is a certaine inferior working of the holy Ghoſt. But this feling differeth farre from the peculiar teſtimony which he geueth to the elect. 3.2.11.

Yet is not the Spirit deceitfull, which lightly ſprinkleth the reprobate ſometime with ſuch a knoweledge of the Goſpell, and feling of the loue of God as afterward doth vaniſh away. Somtime alſo there is ſtirred vp in their hartes a certaine deſire of mutuall loue toward God, but ſuch a loue as is a hired and not a harty loue. At lengthe it is concluded that there be ſome which do not faine a faith, & yet do lacke the trewe faith: Which is alſo proued by teſtimonies. 3.2.12. and ſuch a feling is in the Scripture called faith, although it be vnproperly ſo called. 3.2.13.

Faith is ſometime taken for the ſounde doctrine of religion, and the whole ſumme therof: contrariwiſe ſometime it is reſtrained to ſome

particular obiect,& ſometime it ſignifieth ỹ miniſtery of the Church 3.2.13.

Faith is moſt rightfully called knowledge and ſcience, and yet is ſuch a knowledge as rather conſiſteth of certaine perſwaſion than of vnderſtandinge, foraſmuch as that which our minde conceyueth by Faith is moſt infinite. 3.2.14.

Faith is not cõtent with a doutfull opinion or a darke conceiuing, but requireth a ful and ſettled aſſuredneſſe: & hereunto are to be referred all thoſe titles of commendation wherewith the holy Ghoſt ſetteth foorth the authority of the word of God. 3.2.15.

Many do ſo conceiue the mercy of God, that they receiue very litle comfort thereof, becauſe they dout whether he wil be merciful to thẽſelues or no: but there is a far other feelinge of the aboundant ſtore of Faith, the chiefe ground whereof is that we do not thinke the promiſes to be true without our ſelues onely, but rather that by inwardly embracing them we may make thẽ our owne: Hereupon is gathered, who may truely be called Faithfull. 3.2.15,16.

Though the Faithful in reknowledginge the goodneſſe of God toward them are not only oftentimes tempted with vnquietneſſe, but alſo are ſometime ſhaken with moſt greuous terrours: yet this withſtandeth not but that Faith bringeth aſſuredneſſe with it, becauſe howſoeuer they be troubled, yet they neuer fall and depart from that ſure affiance which they haue conceiued of the mercy of God, but ſtriuinge with their owne weakeneſſe they alway get the vpper hande at laſt: which is proued by many examples in Dauid. 3.2.17.

The aſſuredneſſe of Gods good will. 3.2.18.

A confutation of the moſt peſtilent ſuttle reaſoninge of certaine halfe papiſtes, which although they confeſſe that ſo oft as we looke vpon Chriſt, we finde plentiful matter to hope wel, yet wil nedes haue vs to wauer and dout in conſideration of our owne vnworthines. And it is proued that we ought neuertheleſſe to looke for aſſured ſaluation, foraſmuch as Chriſt by a certaine maruelous communion doth daily grow together more & more into one body with vs. 3.2.24.

So ſoone as we haue any one drop of Faith we begin to beholde God mercifull vnto vs, although a farre of in dede, yet with ſo aſſured ſight, as we knowe we are not deceiued: Both theſe pointes are proued by teſtimonies of Paul. 3.2.19, 20.

It is ſhewed by examples, howe Faith armeth and fortifieth it ſelfe with the word of God to beare the violent aſſaultes of tentations, and howe the godly minde neuer ſuffereth the affiance of Gods mercy to be plucked away from it, although it be assailed with many remnants of vnbeliefe and distrust. 3.2.21.

In the good will of God, which Faith is sayd to haue respect vnto, although Faith do chiefely looke vnto the assured expectation of eternall life, yet there are also contained promises of this present life and a perfect suretie of all good thinges, but the same such as may be gathered of ỹ word: Both these poyntes are confirmed by testimonies of Scripture. 3.2.28.

Faith, although it embrace the word of God in euery point, that is to say in the commaundementes also and in the prohibitions and thretnings, yet hath her fundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in ỹ free promise of mercy: and for this reason the Gospell is called the worde of Fayth, and is set as contrary to the law. 3.2.29.

Yet do we not by this distinction teare Faith in sonder as Pyghius shamefully cauilleth. 3.2.30.

Faith doth no lesse neede the worde of God, than the frute doth nede the liuely roote of the tree, & with the worde must be ioyned a consideratiõ of the power of God, without the which, mens eares will either not willingly heare ỹ worde, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered, in that that it is effectuall, that is to say by the workes of God, & by his benefites either particular or ancient & such as he hath bestowed vpon ỹ whole Church. 3.2.31.

The Faithfull oftentimes so behaue themselues, that some errours are mingled with their Faith, and they seme to passe the boũdes of the word, but yet so, that Fayth hath alway the vpper hand: This is proued by the examples of Sara & Rebecca, whome in the crooked turninges of their minde, God did by a secret bridle holde fast in the obedience of his word. 3.2.31.

By reason of our blindenesse and stiffeneckednes, the word suffiseth not to make vs haue Fayth, vnlesse the Spirit of God do enlighte our minde, & strengthen our hart with his power: & the same Spirit is not only the beginner of our Faith, but also doth encrease it by degrees. 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the most parte of men a most straunge doctrine, that no mann can beleue in Christ, but he to whom it is giuen, yet, it is proued to be most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and examples. 3.2.34.

Therefore Faith is called the Spirit of Faith, the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gift, which he giueth by singular priuilege to whom he will: as it is proued by notable sentences taken out of Augustine. 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the minde be enlightened with vnderstanding of the worde, vnlesse also the assuredness of the word be poured into ỹ very heart: both which thinges ỹ Spirit worketh: which is therfore called the seale, the pledge, and the Spirite of promise. 3.2.36.

Although Faith be tossed with diuerse doutings, yet it alway at the last escapeth out of the gulfe of tẽtations, and receiueth most sweete quietnes. 3.2.37.

A confutation of the damnable doctrine of the Schoolemẽ, which say that we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God toward vs, than by morall coniecture 3.2.38.

They are proued to be miserably blinde, in saying that it is rashnes for vs to conceiue an vndouted knowledge of the will of God: A good comparison of them and Paule in this poinct of doctrine. 3.2.39.

A confutation of their triflinge shift, that although we may take vpõ vs to iudge of the grace of God accordinge to the present state of righteousnes, yet the knowledge of perseuering to the ende abideth in suspense. 3.2.40.

It is proued that the definitiõ of Faith taught in this chapter Sect. 7. agreeth with the Apostles definition. Heb. Cap. 11. And the errour of the Schoolemen, that charitie is before Faith and Hope, is confuted by the testimony of Bernarde. 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendred of Faith, & is the vndeuided companion of Faith, so that whosoeuer lacketh hope, is proued also to haue no faith. Also Faith is nourished and strengthened by hope: and how necessary are the helpes of hope to stablishe Faith, which is assayled with so many sortes of tentations. 3.2.42.

By reason of this conioyning & alliãce of Faith & hope, the Scripture doth many times vse those two wordes without difference, and somtime ioyneth them together. A confutation of the errour of Peter Lombarde, which maketh two fundations of Faith, that is to say, the grace of God, & ỹ merit of workes. 3.2.43.

Of the imperfection of Faith, & the confirming & encrease thereof. 4.14.7,8.

Of the summe of our Faith, which we cal the Crede, or Simbole of the Apostles. 2.16.18.

Fasting.

Of that part of Discipline of the Church, which cõcerneth the appointing of Fastinges, or extraordinary prayers: & how pastors ought to vse it. 4.12.14,16,17.

It is to be prouided that no superstition crepe in in Fasting. 4.12.19.

The definitiõ of Fasting. 4.12.18.

Of the superstition of Lent, and the diuersity of obseruing the same Fasting. 4.12.20,21.

Feare.

The faithful are oftentimes troubled with Feare & diſtruſt by reaſon of the feelinge of their owne weakenes. 3.2.17.

An other kinde of Feare conceiued in a godly heart, either by exãples of Gods vẽgeance againſt the wicked, or by conſideration of his own miſery: Such Feare is ſo much not cõtrary to faith, that the faithfull are much exhorted to haue it. Neither is it any maruell, if there be in a Faithfull ſoule both Feare and Faith, ſith on the other ſide in the wicked there are both dull negligẽce and carefulneſſe. 3.2.22,23.

The Feare of God proceedeth out of a double feling, namely whe we honor God as our father, and feare him as our Lord: Neither is it any maruell if one minde haue both thoſe affections. 3.2.26.

Of forſaking of our ſelues.

The firſt beginning of framing our life after rhe rule ſet foorth in the lawe, is to conſider that we are not at our own liberty, but hallowed & dedicate to God. And therefore we ought to forſake our ſelues, and our own reaſon (which as the Philoſophers thinke, ought alone to be obeied) to the ende that we may be gouerned by the word & Spirite of the Lord. 3.7.1.

Alſo that we ought not to ſeeke thoſe thinges that are our owne, but thoſe thinges that are according to the will of the Lord, and do ſerue to aduaunce his glorie. And that this is the forſaking of our ſelues, without the which there is a world of vices encloſed in the ſoule of man, and if there be any ſeming of vertue at all, the ſame is corrupted with wicked deſire of glory. 3.7.2.

The forſaking or mortifyinge of our ſelues, is partly in reſpect of mẽ, and partely, yea, and chiefly in reſpect of God. Toward other men, the Scripture commaundeth vs to do two thinges: namely to preferre them in honor before our ſelues, & with vnfained truth to employ our ſelues wholly to procure their cõmodities. Howe the firſt of theſe points is to be performed, is taught in the 3.7.4. & alſo how the Scripture leadeth vs by the hand to the ſeconde point is ſhewed in the 3.7.5.

See certaine things pertaining to this purpoſe. 3.20.43.

Freewill.

Man was endued with Freewill in the firſt eſtate of his creation. 1.15.8. which he loſt by his fall. Of this the Philoſophers were ignorant, and ſo all ſuch as follow them, giuing Freewill to man, are vtterly deceiued. 1.15.8.

The pliableneſſe or weake power of Freewill, which was in the firſt man, doth not excuſe his fall. 1.15.8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glory of God, to acknowledge all our ſtrength to be but a ſtaſſe made of a reede, yea, but a ſmoke. In the meane time we muſt beware, that while we take al vprightneſſe from man, we do not thereof take occaſion of ſlothfulneſſe. But rather we ought thereby to be ſtirred vppe to ſeeke in God all the goodnes whereof we our ſelues are voide. The defenders of Freewill do rather throw it downe hedlong than ſtabliſh it. 2. 2. 1.

The Philoſophers determine three powers of the ſoule, Vnderſtanding, Senſe, & Wil or Appetite: and they thinke that the reaſon of mans vnderſtandinge ſuffiſeth for his good gouernance: that wil is by ſenſe moued to euill, ſo that it doth hardly yeelde it ſelfe to reaſon, and ſometime is diuerſly drawen from the one to ỹ other, but yetỹ it hath a free election & can not be ſtopped, that it may followe reaſon her guide in all things: finally that vertues and vices are in our powers. 2. 2. 2, 3.

The Eccleſiaſticall wryters, although they acknoweledged the ſoundeneſſe of vnderſtanding, and the freedome of will to haue bin ſore wounded by ſinne, yet haue ſpoken too much philoſophically of this matter. The old wryters did it for this purpoſe, firſt becauſe they were loth to teache a thinge that ſhoulde be an abſurdity in the common iudgement of men, & alſo ſpecially leaſt they ſhoulde giue a new occaſion of ſlothfulnes to the fleſh beinge already too much dull to goodnes, as appeareth by many ſayinges of Chryſoſtome and Hierome. The Greecke doctors aboue all other, & ſpecially Chryſoſtome, do exceede meaſure in aduauncing Frewill. But all the olde wryters generally, except Auguſtine, do ſo vary and wauer in this poinct of doctrine, that there can almoſt no certainety be gathered of their wrytinges. They which came after thē, fell one after an other to worſe & worſe. The definitions of Freewill out of Origen, Auguſtine, Bernard, Anſelme, Peter Lombard, & Thomas. 2. 2. 4.

In what things they do commōly giue Freewill to man, and of the three ſortes of mans will. 2. 2. 5.

Alſo of the common diſtinction of the three ſortes of libertie. 2. 2. 5.

Whether man be wholly depriued of power to do good, or whether he haue yet ſome power thought it be weake: where it is ſpoken of the common diſtinction of grace working and grace workinge together, and what is amiſſe in the ſame diſtinction. 2. 2. 6.

Foraſmuch as it can not otherwiſe be ſaid that man hath Freewil, but bicauſe he doth euil of his own will, & not by cōpulſion, it had bin very good for the church that this word Freewill had neuer bin vſed, which had raiſed vp men to a damnable truſt of themſelues. The old writers alſo do oft declare what they meane by that word, ſpecially Auguſtin, out of whom there are many places alleged, where he weakneth and mocketh the ſtrength thereof, both when he calleth it

Bondwill, & when he expoundeth the thing it ſelfe as it is at large. 2. 2.7,8.

Although the old Eccleſiaſticall writers do ſometime too much aduaunce Freewill, and haue ſpoken doutfully and diuerſly in that matter: yet it appeareth by very many of their ſayinges, that they litle or nothinge eſteeminge mans power, gaue the whole praiſe of al goodnes to the holy Ghoſt. Many ſuch ſentences are rehearſed out of Cypriã, Auguſtine, Eucherius, Chryſoſtom. 2.2.9.

The power of mans will is not to be weyed by the ſucceſſe of things, but by the choiſe of iudgement and the affection of will. 2.4. 8.

It is proued againſt the defenders of Freewil that ſinne is of neceſſity, & yet neuertheles ought to be imputed: alſo that it is voluntary, and yet can not be auoided. 2.5.1.

A ſolution of an other obiection of theirs, where they ſay that vnleſſe both vertues & vices proceede of Free election of will, it were no reaſon that man ſhoulde either be puniſhed or rewarded. 2.5.2.

Alſo an other obiection, where they ſay that if this were not the power of our will, to chooſe good or euill, then of neceſſity either all men ſhould be good, or all men euill. 2.5.3.

Againſt the ſame men alſo it is proued that exhortations, admonitions & rebukings are not in vaine, although it be not in the power of the ſinner to obey: and there is ſhewed what effect the ſame do worke both in the wicked & in the faithfull. 2.5.4,5.

It is not to be gathered by the commaundementes & law of God, that man hath Freewill & ſtrength to performe them, for God doth not only commaunde what ought to be done, but alſo promiſeth grace to obey. 2.5 6,7,9.

This is proued as well in the cõmaundementes which require the firſt conuerſion to God, as alſo in thoſe which ſpeake ſimply of the obſeruinge of the lawe, and thoſe which commaund men to continue in the receiued grace of God. For the ſame God which requireth thoſe thinges, doth teſtifie that the conuerſion of a ſinner, holineſſe of life, ſtedfaſtnes of continuance, are his Free gifts, and the praiſe therof is not to be parted betwene God and man. 2.5.8,9,11.

The conditionall promiſes, as, If ye will, If ye heare, and ſuch like, do not proue that there is in manne a Free power of willing or hearinge: yet it is proued that God doth not mocke menne in ſo bargayninge with them. Alſo what is the vſe of ſuch proteſtations, both toward the godly and toward the vngodly. 2.5.10.

The reprochings, wherein God ſayth to his people that they were the cauſe that they receiued not al kinde of good things at his hande, do not proue that it was mans power to eſcape the euils wherewith they

they were afflicted. And there is ſpoken of the vſe of ſuch reprochinges as well toward thē that obſtinately go forward in their faults, as towarde the conformable that are conuerted to repentance. Alſo whereas the Scripture doth ſometime giue to vs the office of doing, it doth ſo for no other reaſon but to awaken the ſlothfulnes of the fleſh. 2.5.11.

The ſaying of Moſes, The commaundement is nere to thee, in thy mouth & in thy heart. &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of Freewil, foraſmuch as he there ſpeaketh not of the bare commaundements, but of the euangelicall promiſes of the law. 1.5.12.

No more do thoſe places make for them, where it is ſayd that the Lorde looketh and watcheth to ſee what men wil do. 2.5.13.

Alſo thoſe places where good workes are called ours, and we are ſayd to do that which is holy and pleaſinge to the Lorde. And here is ſhewed that the onely Spirite of God worketh all good motions in vs, but yet not as in ſtockes. 2.5.14, 15.

An expoſition of certaine other places of Scripture, which the enemies of the grace of God do abuſe, to ſtabliſh Freewill. 2.5.16,17,18,19

Chriſt, although he were knowē to the Iewes in time of the law, was yet ſhewed in dede only by the Goſpell: & the holy fathers taſted of that grace, which is now offered to vs with ful aboundance, they ſaw ȳ day of Chriſt, albeit with adimme ſight, the glory whereof nowe ſhineth in the Goſpell, without any veile betwene vs and it. 2.9.1,2.

In the ſame place alſo is ſhewed, that the Goſpell is properly and ſpecially called the publiſhing of the grace giuen in Chriſt, and not the promiſes that are written by the Prophets concerning the remiſſió of ſinnes. Againſt the doctrine of Seruettus, which taketh away the promiſes vnder this pretence ȳ by the faith of the Goſpel we haue the fulfillinge of all the promiſes, it is proued that though Chriſt offer to vs in the Goſpell a preſent fulneſſe of ſpirituall good thinges, yet the enioyinge thereof lyeth hidden vnder the cuſtody of hope ſo long as we liue in this world,& therfore we muſt yet reſt vpon the promiſes. 2.9.3.

Holy Ghoſt.

Teſtimonies whereby the Godhed of the holy Ghoſt is proued. 1 13.14,15.

The holy Ghoſt is the bonde wherewith Chriſt doth effectually binde vs to him, and without it, all that Chriſt hath ſuffered and done for the ſaluation of mankinde doth nothing profit vs. 3.1.1,3.

Chriſt came after a ſingular maner furniſhed with the holy Ghoſt, to ſeuere vs frō the world, & therfore he is called the Spirit of ſanctification. Why he is ſometime called the Spirit of the father, & ſometime the Spirit of the Sonne. He is called the Spirit of Chriſt, not only in reſpect that Chriſt is the eternal Worde, but alſo accordinge to his perſon of Mediator. 3.1.2.

An expoſitiō of the titles wherwith the Scripture ſetteth forth the holy Ghoſt:& there is entreated of the beginning and whole reſtoring of our ſaluatiō: The titles be theſe: the Spirite of adoption, the earneſt and ſeale of our inheritaunce, life, water, oyle, oyntment, fire, a fountaine, the hande of God. &c. 3.1.3.

Faith is the chiefe worke of the holy Ghoſt, and therefore to it for the moſt part are all thoſe thinges referred which are commonly founde in the Scripture to expreſſe the force & effectuall power of the holy Ghoſt. 3.1.4.

Humility.

It is not the true Humility which God requireth of vs, vnleſſe we acknowledge our ſelues vtterly voide of al goodneſſe and righteouſneſſe. 3.12.6.

Of this humility there is an example ſhewed in the Publicane. 3. 12.7.

That we may giue place to the calling of Chriſt, both preſumption & careleſnes muſt be farre away frō vs. 3.12.8.

Idols.

THe Scripture ſetteth out God by certaine titles of addition & markes, not to the entent to binde him to one place or to one people, but to put difference betwene his holy Maieſty and Idols. 2.8.15.

An expoſition of the firſt commaundement: where is ſhewed that worſhippinge, truſt, inuocation, and thankeſgiuinge, belonge wholly to God, and no whit thereof may be conueied any otherwhere without great iniury to him to whoſe eies al things are open. 2.8.16.

An expoſition of the ſecond cõmaundement: where is ſpoken of Idols and Images. 2 8.17.

The Scripture, to ỹ entẽt to bring vs to the true God, doth expreſly exclude all the gods of the Gentiles. 1.10.3. & ſpecially all Idols & Images. 1.11.1.

God is ſeuered from Idols, not only that he alone ſhould haue the name of God, but ỹ he alone ſhold be wholly worſhipped, & nothinge ỹ belongeth to the Godhed ſhould be conueied to any other. 1.12.1.

The glory of God is corrupted with falſe lying, when any forme is appointed to it. 1.11.1.

It is proued by textes & reaſons, that God generally miſliketh all Portraytures and Images that are made to expreſſe a figure of him, & this prohibitiõ pertained not to the Iewes only. 1.11.2.

God did in olde time ſo ſhewe his preſence by viſible ſignes either to the whole people, or to certaine choſen men, that thẽ ſame ſignes admoniſhed thẽ of the incomprehenſible ſubſtance of God. 1.11.3.

It is proued euen of Iuuenals teſtimony that the Papiſtes are mad, which defende the Images of God and of Sainctes with the example of the Cherubs coueringe the propiciatory. 1.11.3.

The ſtuffe it ſelfe and alſo the workemanſhip which is done with the handes of men, do ſhew that Images are not Gods. 1.11.4.

Againſt the Grecians, which make no grauẽ image of god, but do giue thẽſelues leaue to paint him. 1.11.4

The ſayinge of Gregory, vppon which the Papiſtes ſay that they ſtande, that Images are vnlearned mens bookes, is cõfuted by the teſtimony of Hierome, Habacuc, Lactantius, Euſebius, Auguſtine, Varro, and the decree of the Elebertine councell. 1.11.5.6,7.

The Papiſtes Portraitures or Images whereby they repreſent the holy martirs and godly virgins, are paternes of moſt wicked riotous exceſſe and vnchaſtnes. 1.11.7,12.

The people ſhall learne much more by the preaching of the word and miniſtration of Sacramentes, than by a thouſand woddē croſſes. 1.11.7.

The antiquity and beginninge of Idolatry, for that men thinkinge God not to be neere them, vnleſſe he did ſhew himſelfe carnally preſent, raiſed vp ſignes in which they beleued that he was carnally conuerſant before their eyes. 1.11.8.

After ſuch an inuentiō byandby followeth the worſhippinge of the Image, like as of God or of any other creature in the Image: both which the law of God forbiddeth. 1.11.8,9.

Againſt them, which for defence of abominable Idolatry, do pretende that they do not take the Images for Gods, it is proued that neither the Iewes did thinke their calfe to be God, nor the heathen when they made to themſelues Images did euer thinke ȳ ſame to be God, whō yet no man excuſe. 1.11.9.

The Papiſtes are ſo perſwaded as the heathen and the Idolatrous Iewes were, that they worſhip God himſelf vnder Images. 1.11.10. Neither can they eſcape away with their diſtinction of ſeruice & worſhip. 1.11.11,16. & 1.12.2.

When Idolatry is condemned, grauinge & painting are not vtterly reproued, but there is required a true and right vſe of them both, that God be not counterfaited with bodily ſhape, but onely thoſe thinges which our eyes may beholde. 1.11.12.

Of Images in the temples of Chriſtians. 4.9.9.

Euen the Idolaters themſelues in all ages, naturally vnderſtoode that there is one only God: but this vnderſtandinge auailed no further than to make thē to be vnexcuſable 1.10.3.

Idolatry is an euidēt proofe that the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the mindes of all men. 1 3.1.

Image of God in man.

What it is, that man was create after the Image of God: And here are confuted the fonde expoſitions of Oſiander and of other: and here is declared that though the Image of God do appeare alſo in the outward manne, and do extende to the whole excellence wherewith the nature of man paſſeth all kindes of liuinge creatures, yet the principall ſeate thereof is in the minde and in the heart, or in the ſoule & the powers therof. 1.15.3. & 2.2.1.

The Image of God at the beginning appeared in Adam, in light of minde, vprightnes of heart, and the ſoundnes of all his parts: which is proued by the repayring of corrupted nature, wherein Chriſt newly faſhioneth vs after the image of God, and by other argumentes. 1. 15.4.

Iudiciall proceedinges in Law.

Of the vse of Iudiciall proceedinges, Magistrates, and Lawes, amonge Christians. It is lawfull for Christians to sue for their right before a Magistrate, so that the same be done without hurting of piety & of the loue of our neighbour. 4.20.17,18.

Desire of reuenge, is alway to be auoided, whether it be a commō or conuinciall action wherein menne striue before a Iudge. 4.20.19.

The commaundemēt of Christ, to giue thy cloke to him that taketh away thy coate, & such like, proue not but that a Christiā may sue before a Magistrate, & vse his help for ỹ preseruing of his goods. 4.20.20.

Paul doth not vtterly condemne sutes, but reproueth the vnmeasurable rage of suyng at lawe among the Corinthians. 4.20.21.

Iustification of Faith.

Of the Iustificatiō of faith, & first of the definition of the name & of the thing it selfe. 3.11.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iustification of faith is of great importance. 3.11.1.

It is shewed by ỹ Scripture what it is to be Iustified by workes, and what it is to be Iustified by faith. 3.11.2,3,4.

A confutation of the errour of Osiander, cōcerning essential righteousnes, which taketh frō men the earnest feeling of the true grace of Christ. 3.11.5,6,7. &c. to the 13.

A confutation of Osianders inuentiō, that whereas Christ is both God & Man, he was made righteousnes to vs in respect of his nature of Godhead and not of his Manhode. 3.11.8,9.

Against them which imagine a righteousnes compounded of faith and workes, it is proued that when the one is stablished, the other must nedes be ouerthrowen. 3.11.13,14,15,16,17,18.

It is proued by the Scripture against the Sophisters, that this is a sure principle, that we are Iustified by faith only. 3.11.19,20.

It is proued by testimonies of Scripture that the righteousnes of faith is reconciliation with God, which consisteth only vpon the remission of sinnes. 3.11.21,22.

By the only interceſſiō or meane of the righteousnesse of Christ, we obtaine to be Iustified before God. 3.11.23.

That we may be throughly perswaded of the free Iustification, we must lift vp our mindes to ỹ iudgement seate of God: before which, nothinge is acceptable but ỹ which is whole and perfect in euery behalfe, the dredfull maiesty whereof is deſcribed by many places of Scripture. 3.12.1,2.

All godly writers do ſhewe that when mē haue to do with God, the only place of refuge for conſcience is in the free mercy of God, excluding all truſt of workes: And this is proued by teſtimonies of Auguſtine and Bernard. 3.12.3.

Two thinges are to be obſerued in free Iuſtification: the firſt, that the Lord kepe faſt his glory vnminiſhed: which is done when he alone is acknowledged to be righteous, for they glory againſt God which glory in themſelues. 3.13.1,2 the ſeconde, that our conſciences may haue quietneſſe in the ſight of his iudgement. 3.13.3,4,5.

What maner of beginning is of Iuſtification, and what continuall procedings. 3.14.

A briefe ſumme of the fundatiō of Chriſtian doctrine taken out of Paul. 3.15.5.

This fundation being layd, wiſe builders do well & orderly build vpon, whether it be to ſet forth doctrine & exhortation, or to giue cōfort. 3.15.8.

Good workes are not deſtroyed by the doctrine of Iuſtification of faith. 3.16.1.

It is moſt falſe that mens mindes are drawen away from affection of well doing, when we take from them the opinion of deſeruinge. 3.16.2,1.

It is a moſt vaine ſclaunder, that men are prouoked to ſinne, when we affirme a free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, in which we ſay that righteouſnes conſiſteth. 3.16.4.

An expoſition of certaine places, wherein the faithfull do boldly offer their righteouſnes to the iudgement of God to be examined, and pray to be iudged accordinge to the ſame, and it is proued that this diſagreeth not with the free iuſtification of Faith. 3.7.14.

The ſaying of Chriſt, If thou wilt enter into life, kepe the commaundementes, diſagreeth not with the free Iuſtification of faith. 3.18.9.

Knowledge of God.

To Knowe God, is not onely to conceiue that there is ſome God, but to vnderſtande ſo much as behoueth vs to knowe of him, and ſo much as auaileth for his glory, and is expedient. 1.2.1.

The Knowledge of God ought to tende to this ende, firſt to frame vs to feare and reuerence: & then that by it guiding & teaching vs we may learne to aske all good things of him, & to accompt the ſame receiued at his hande. 1.2.2 & 1.5.8.

The Philoſophers had no other Knowledge of God than ẏ which made them vnexcuſable, but did not not bringe them to the trueth. 2.2. 18.

This perſwaſiō is naturally planted in all men ,that there is ſome God. 1.2.3. & that to this ende,that they which do not worſhip him, may be condemned by their owne iudgement. 1.3.1.

Though all men know by nature that there is a God , yet ſome become vaine in their ſuperſtitions, and other ſome of ſet purpoſe do maliciouſly depart from God. 1.4.1 See certaine things pertaining to this matter,in the Title of Creation of the world.

Law.

The Law,that is to ſay the forme of religion ſet forth by Moſes , was not giuen to holde the olde people ſtill in it, but to nouriſhe in their harts the hope of ſaluatiō in Chriſt vntil his comming:which is proued by this that Moſes repeateth the mētion of the couenāt:& by the order of the ceremonies appointed as well in ſacrifices as in waſhinges, alſo by the office of prieſthode in the tribe of Leui,and the honor of kingdom in Dauid & his poſterity. The Law alſo of the ten commaūdements was giuen to prepare men to ſeeke Chriſt. 2.7.1,2. and that is done,whē it maketh vs vnexcuſable being on euery ſide cōuicted of our ſinnes,to moue vs to ſeeke for pardon of our giltines. 2.7.3.4.

It is proued by the Scripture & declared,that the obſeruing of the Law is impoſſible. 2.7.5.

There are three vſes and offices of the morall Lawe : The firſt is, that ſhewing vnto vs the righteouſnes which onely is acceptable vnto God,it may be as a glaſſe for vs, wherin we may behold our weakeneſſe,& by it our wickednes,and finally by them both , our accurſednes: Neither turneth this to any diſhonor of the Lawe, but maketh for the glory of the bountifullnes of God , which both with helpe of grace aideth vs to do that which we are commaunded,and by mercy putteth away our offences. Neither yet doth this office altogether ceaſſe in the reprobate. 2.7.6,7,8, 9.

The ſecond office,is to reſtraine the reprobate with feare of puniſhment,leaſt they vnbrideledly commit the wickedneſſe which inwardly they alway nouriſhe and loue: & alſo to drawe backe the children of God before their regeneration from outwarde licentiouſneſſe. 2.7. 10,11.

The third office,concerneth the faithfull:for the Law although it be already wrytten with the finger of God in their heartes, yet profiteth them two wayes : For by ſtudyinge vppon it, they are more confirmed in the vnderſtanding of the will of the Lord,& are ſtirred vp & ſtrengthened to obedience , that they go not out of kinde by the ſluggiſhnes of the fleſhe. 2. 7. 12, 13. For, as touching the curſe of the Law, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extend it ſelf againſt them in damning and deſtroyinge them. 2. 7. 14.

By the ten commaundements of the Law we learne the ſame things which we but ſlenderly taſt by inſtruction of the law of nature: Firſt that we owe to God reuerẽce, loue, & feare, ỹ righteouſneſſe pleaſeth him, & wickednes diſpleaſeth him: finally, that examininge our life by the rule of the Law, we are vnworthy to be accompted amonge the creatures of God, & that our power is vnſufficiẽt, yea, no power at all to performe ỹ Law. Both theſe pointes engendre in vs humility & abacing of our ſelues, which teacheth vs to flye to the mercie of God, and to craue the helpe of his grace. 2. 8. 1, 2, 3.

Foraſmuch as God the Lawmaker is ſpirituall, that is to ſay, ſpeaketh as well to the ſoule as to the body, therfore the law likewiſe requireth not only an outward honeſty, but alſo an inward and ſpiritual righteouſneſſe, & a very angelike pureneſſe. 2. 8. 6. which is proued by Chriſt's owne expoſition, when he confuted the Phariſees wrong interpretation, which required only a certaine outward obſeruatiõ of the Law. 2. 8 7.

There is alway more in the cõmaundementes and prohibitions of the Law, than is expreſſed. Therfore for the right and true expoundinge of them, it behoueth to wey what is the entent or ende of euery of them: Then from that which is commaunded or forbidden, we muſt draw an argument to the contrarie, that we may vnderſtande, that not only an euill is forbidden, but alſo the good is commaunded which is contrary to that euill. 2. 8. 8, 9.

An expoſition of the commaundements of God: Where is declared that the Lord in the beginning of the Law, to ſtabliſh his own maieſty, vſeth three argumentes: Firſt by chalenging to himſelfe the ſoueraigne power and right of dominion ouer vs, he doth as it were by neceſſity drawe vs to obey him: ſecondly he allureth vs with ỹ ſwetenes of the promiſe of grace: thirdly he moueth vs to obediẽce with rehearſall of the benefit that we haue receiued. 2. 8. 13, 14, 15.

righteousnes, but the very accomplishment thereof, the expressing of the image of God, & the perfectiō of holinesse: which law is al contained in two poyntes, that is to say, the loue of God and of our neighbour. 2.8.51.

The Law of Nature. 2.2.22.

Lawes Politike.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magistrate, nor the Magistrate without Lawes. A confutation of them which say that a common weale is not well ordered, vnlesse it be gouerned by the politike Lawes of Moses. For this purpose is rehearsed a diuision of the Lawes of Moses into morall Lawes, ceremonies, & iudiciall Lawes, and the ende of euery one of them beinge discussed, it is proued ỹ it is lawefull for euery seuerall nation to make politike Lawes, 4.20.14,15. so that they agree with that natural equity, the reason whereof is set foorth in the moral Law of Moses. Therfore it is shewed by examples that they may alter the ordinances of penalties accordinge to the diuersity of the cuntrie, time, & other circumstances. 4.20.16.

Lying.

An exposition of the ninth commaundement: wherin the Lord forbiddeth falshed, wherewith we by Lying or backebyting, do hurt any mans good name, or hinder his cōmodity. 2.8 47.

We many times sinne against this commaundemēt, although we do not Lye. But in this point there must be a difference wisely made betwene the slaundringe which is here condemned, & iudiciall accusation or rebuking, which is vsed vpon desire to bring to amendemēt. 2.8.48.

Life of a Christian man.

The law containeth a rule how to frame a mans Life, and diuerse places also of the Scripture do here and there declare it, & not without an orderly maner of teachinge, although not so exquisite & curious as the Philosophers do. 3.6.1.

Herein the Scripture doth two things: it stirreth vs vp to the loue of righteousnesse and teacheth a rule how to followe the same. The first point it worketh by diuerse argumēts & reasons. 3.6.2. & herein the Scripture layeth much better fundations, thā can be found in all the bookes of the Philosophers. 3.6.3.

Against them that pretende a knowledge of Christ, whē their life and manners resemble not the doctrine of Christ. 3.6.4.

Though perfection were to be wished in all men, yet we must also acknowledge for christiās the most parte of menne which haue not yet proceded so farre. We must alway endeuour forwarde, & not despeire for ỹ smalnes of our profiting. 3.6.5

Out of a place of Paul these are gathered to be ỹ parts of a wel framed Life: consideratiō of the grace of God, forsaking of wickednesse & of worldly lustes, sobernes, righte-ouſnes, godlineſſe (which ſignifieth true holines) & the bleſſed hope of immortality. 3.7.3.

Life preſent, & the helpes thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the beſt way howe to vſe the goodes of this Life. 3.10 4,5.

Two faultes muſt be auoided: that we do neither binde our conſciences with too much rigorouſnes, nor giue looſe reines to the intemperance of men. 3.10.1,3.

God both in clothing & in foode prouided not onely for our neceſſity, but alſo for our delite. 3.10.2.

It is moſt neceſſarie, that euery one of vs in all the doings of his life do loke vpon his vocation, that we attempt nothinge raſhely or with doutfull conſcience. 3.10.6.

God diſdaineth not to prouide alſo for the neceſſities of our earthly body, & in what ſenſe we aske of him our daily bread. 3.20.44.

Life to come.

God doth by diuerſe myſteries teach vs the contempt of this preſent Life, that we may earneſtly deſire Life to come. 3.9.1,2,4.

Sucha cõtempt of this Life is required of vs, that we neither hate it nor be vnthankefull to God, of whoſe clemency it is a teſtimony to the faithfull. 3.9.3.

An admonition to them which are holden with too much feare of death, ý Chriſtians ought rather to deſire that day which ſhal make an end of their continuall miſeries, and fill them with true ioy. 3.9.5,6.

Of the incomprehenſible excellency of the eternal felicity (which is the end of the reſurrection) the taſt of the ſweeteneſſe whereof we ought here continually to take, but yet to auoid curioſity wherupon do ariſe trifling & noyſome queſtions, yea and hurtfull ſpeculations. And there ſhall be an egall meaſure of glory to all the children of God in heauen. 3. 25. 10, 11. In which place alſo is an anſwere to the queſtions which ſome men do moue concerninge the ſtate of the children of God after the reſurrection.

M.

Magiſtrates.

THe office of Magiſtrates is not only holy and lawefull before God, but alſo the moſt holy and honorable degree in all the life of men, and this is proued by diuerſe titles wherwith the Scripture doth ſet it forth, and by the examples of holy men, which haue borne ciuile power. 4.20,4.

This conſideration is a pricke to godly Magiſtrates to moue them to the doing of their duety, and alſo it is a cõfort to eaſe the hard trauailes of their office. 4.20.6.

A confutation of thẽ, which ſay that though in the olde time vnder the law Kinges and Iudges ruled ouer Gods people, yet this ſeruile kind of gouernmẽt doth not agree with the perfection which Chriſt hath brought with his goſpel. 4.20. 5,7.

They

They erre which exclude the Magistrates from the charge of religion, forasmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the lawe: It is proued by Scripture, that they are ordeined protectors & defenders as well of the worshipping of God as of common peace and honesty, which they cannot thorowly performe without the power of the sweard. 4, 20. 9.

A declaration of this question by Scripture, howe the magistrats may be godly, and also drawe their swearde, & shed the blood of men, and it is proued that they are so farre from sinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, and a profe of their godlinesse. Herein the Magistrates must beware of two faultes, namely extreme rigorousnesse, and superstitious desire of pitie. 4. 20. 10.

It is the duty of subiectes toward Magistrates, to thinke honorably of them as of the ministers and deputies of God, forsomuch as concerneth their degree, but not that they should esteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4. 20. 22.

It is also their duty with mindes hartily bente to the honoringe of them to declare their obedience towarde them, whether it be in following their decrees, or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their safety and prosperity, to raise no tumultes & not to thrust themselues into the office of the Magistrate. 4. 20. 23.

Euen wicked princes of euell life, and which rule tyrannously (forsomuch as perteineth to publike obedience) ought to be had in as great reuerence and honor as we would geue to the best king that might be, 4. 20, 24, 25. becaule euen they also haue the publike power not without the prouidence and singular power of God. Which is proued by diuerse testimonies and examples of Scripture: and there is shewed with what considerations those subiects ought to bridle their owne inpatience which liue vnder such vngodly and wicked tyrants. 4. 20. 26, 27, 28, 29, 31.

It is not lawfull for priuate men to rise vp against tyrantes, but only for them which by the lawes of the kingedome or of the coũtry, are the defenders of the liberty of the people. 4. 20. 31.

The Lorde by his maruellous goodnesse and prouidence, doth sometime raise vp some of his seruantes to punishe tyrauntes, and sometime also he directeth thereunto the rage of wicked men while they intende an other thing. 4. 20. 30.

In the obedience which is due to the commaundements of kings and rulers this is alway to be excepted, that it drawe vs not away frõ the obedience of God: Neither is any wrong done to them when we refuse to obey them in suche things as they commaunde against God: And this is our duty, howe great and present perill soeuer do hange vpon such cõstancy. 4. 20. 32.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himselfe not only moued to seke, God, but also led as it were by the hande to finde him. 1. 1. 1.

The creatiō of Man is a notable shewe of the power, wisedome, and goodnesse of God: wherefore Man is by some of the Philosophers called a little world. 1. 5. 3.

The vnthankefulnesse of Men, which feeling tokens of the prouidence of God both in their soule and body, yet do not geue God praise. 1. 5. 4.

Two sortes of knowledge of our selues, the one in our first originall estate, the other after Adams fall, and the latter is not to be receiued without consideringe the first, least we shoulde seeme to impute corruption to God the author of nature. 1. 15. 1.

The knowledge of himselfe is most necessary for Man, which cōsisteth in this, (as the truth of God prescribeth) that first consideringe to what ende he is created, and endued with excellēt giftes, he should hang altogether vpon God, of whom he hath all thinges by gift: then, that weyinge his owne miserable estate after the fall of Adā, hee should trewely loth himselfe and conceiue a newe desire to seke God, that in him he may recouer these good thinges, of which he himselfe is found vtterly voide and empty. Wherefore we must beware that in this pointe we hearken not to the iudgement of the flesshe and to ỹ bookes of Philosophers, which while they withholde vs in considering onely our good thinges, would carry vs away into a most wicked ignoraunce of our selues. 2. 1. 1, 2, 3.

Man can neuer come to the trewe knowledge of himselfe, vnlesse he haue first beholdē the face of God, that is to say, till he haue begonne to knowe and weigh by the worde of God, what and howe exacte is the perfection of his righteousnes, wisdome and power, to the which we ought to be made of like forme. 1. 1. 2.

Euen the most holy men were stricken with feare and astonishmēt, whē God did extraordinarily shewe his presence and glory vnto them. 1. 1. 3.

That whole man is corrupted in both partes of him, (that is to say both in vnderstanding minde, and in harte or will) is proued by diuerse titles wherewith the Scripture describeth him, specially when it sayeth that he is flesshe: And there is declared that this word flesshe is not referred onely to the sensuall parte but also to the superior parte of the soule. 2. 3. 1.

That Men do in vaine seke for any good thing in their owne nature, is proued by Paule, which entreating of the vniuersal kindred of the children of Adam, and not rebuking the corrupted maners of some one age alone, but accusinge the perpetuall corruptiō of nature, taketh from men righteousnesse, that is to say vprightneſſe, & pureneſſe, and then vnderſtanding, and laſt of all the feare of God. 2. 3. 2.

A confutation of the obiection concerning certaine heathen Men, which foraſmuch as they were all their life long by the guiding of nature bent to ỹ endeuor of vertue and honeſty, do ſeeme to warne vs, that we ſhould not eſteeme the nature of Man altogether corrupt. Therefore it is declared that in the vnbeleuers God doth not inwardly clenſe the corruption of nature wherwith Man is in eche parte defiled, (as hee doth in the elect) but by his prouidence ſometime hee bridleth it in them, that it breake not forth into deedes, and reſtraineth it by diuerſe wayes, ſo much as he knoweth to be expedient for preſeruing of the vniuerſall ſtate of things. 2. 3. 3.

Thoſe vertues which wee reade to haue bene in heathen Men, are not ſufficiēt proues of the pureneſſe of nature, foraſmuch as their mind was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or ſome other poiſon, and not directed with deſire to ſet forth the glory of God: and alſo foraſmuch as thoſe vertues are not the common giftes of nature, but the ſpeciall graces of God, which he diuerſly and by a certaine meaſure geueth to profane Men, as oftentimes to kings, and ſometime to priuate Men. 2. 3. 4.

Mariage.

An expoſition of the ſeuenth cōmaundement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication, and requireth chaſtity and cleanneſſe, which wee ought to kepe and preſerue both in our minde, and in our eyes, and in the apparell of our body, and in our tonge, and in the moderate vſe of meate and drinke. 2. 8. 41, 44.

Continence is a ſingular gifte of God, which he geueth not to all men, but to ſome, yea & that ſometime for a ſeaſon: As for them to whom it is not graunted, let them alway flee to Mariage, which is ordeined of the Lord for the remedy of mans neceſſity. 2. 8. 41, 42, 43.

Maried perſons muſt beware that they committe nothing vnbeſeming the honeſty and temperance of Mariage: Otherwiſe they ſeeme to be adulterers of their own wiues, and not huſbandes. 2. 8. 44.

The papiſtes do wrongfully call Mariage a Sacrament: And their reaſons are confuted. 4. 19. 34. It is proued that the place of Paule, wherwith they ſeeke to cloke themſelues, maketh nothing for them. 4. 19, 35.

In the meane they diſagree with thēſelues when they exclude prieſts from this Sacrament, and do ſay that it is vncleanneſſe and defiling of the fleſhe. 4. 19, 36.

By this falſe colour of Sacramēt, the Pope with his cleargy haue drawen to themſelues the hearing of cauſes of Matrimony, and haue made lawes of Mariage, which partly are manifeſtly wicked againſt

God, & partely moſt vniuſt toward men, which lawes are rehearſed, 4.19.37.

Mediator Chriſt.

It behoued that Chriſt, to the ende that he might performe the office of Mediator, ſhould be made man, foraſmuch as God had ſo ordeined, bycauſe it was beſt for vs, ſith none other could be the meane for reſtoring of peace betweene God and vs, none other coulde make vs the children of God, none other could aſſure vnto vs ỹ inheritaunce of the heauẽly kingdome, none other could for remedy ſet mannes obedience againſt mannes diſobedience. 2.12.1,2,3.

A confutation of their fantaſtical conceit, which affirme that Chriſt ſhould haue become man, although there had needed no remedy for the redeming of mankinde. And it is proued by many reaſons and textes, that foraſmuch as the whole Scripture crieth out that he was clothed with fleſh, to the ende that he might be the redemer, therefore it is to great raſhneſſe to ymagine any other cauſe or purpoſe. 2.12.4.

Neither is it lawfull to ſearche further concerning Chriſt: & thoſe that do ſearch further, do with wicked boldneſſe runne forwarde to the faining of a newe Chriſt: And herein Oſiãder is reproued, which hath at this time renued this queſtion, and affirmeth that this error is confuted by no teſtimonie of Scripture. 2.12.5.

And the principle is ouerthrowẽ which he buildeth on, that man was create after the ymage of God, becauſe he was formed after the likeneſſe of Chriſt to come, that he might reſemble him whom the Father had already decreed to cloth with fleſh: And there is ſhewed that the ymage of God in Adam, was the marks of excellẽcie wherewith God had garniſhed him, which doth alſo ſhine in the Angels. 2. 12.6,7.

A ſolution of other obiectiõs or abſurdities which the ſame Oſiãder feareth: namely, that then Chriſt was borne & creat after the ymage of Adam but as it were by chaunce: and that the Angels ſhould haue lacked their hed, and men ſhould haue lacked Chriſt their kinge. 2. 12.6,7.

Howe the two natures do make one perſon of ỹ Mediator in Chriſt: Which is ſhewed by a ſimilitude taken of the ioining of the ſoule and body in one man: And then it is proued by diuerſe places that the ſcripture doth many times geue vnto Chriſt thoſe thinges which properly belongeth to the godhed, & ſomtime thoſe things which muſt be referred onely to the manhode, and ſometime geueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figuratiue maner of ſpeache is called Communicating of properties, 2.14.1,2. and ſometime alſo geueth to Chriſt thoſe things which do comprehẽd both natures together, but do ſeuerally well agree with neither of them.

Which

Which laſt point the moſt part of the olde writers haue not ſufficiētly marked: Yet it is good to be noted, for the diſſoluing of many doutes, and for auoidinge of the errors of Neſtorius and Eutiches. 2.14.3.4.

A confutation of the error of Seruettus, which had put in the ſtede of ỹ ſonne God, an imagined thing made of the ſubſtāce of God, ſpirit, fleſhe, and three elementes vncreate: His ſutteltie is diſcloſed, and there is proued (which thing he denieth) that Chriſt was the ſonne of God, euen before that he was borne in the fleſh, becauſe he is that word begotten of the father before all worldes. 2.14.5.

Alſo it is proued that he is truely and properly the ſonne of God in fleſh, that is to ſay in the nature of Man, but yet in reſpect of his godhed, and not of his fleſh, as Seruettus babbleth. 2.14.6.

An expoſition of certaine places which Seruettus and his diſciples do enforce for defence of their error: There is alſo another cauillation of his diſcloſed, that Chriſt before that he appeared in the fleſh, is in no place called the ſonne of God but vnder a figure. 2.14.7.

Alſo there is opened the error of all them which do not acknowledge Chriſt the ſonne of God but in the fleſh: And there are brefely rehearſed ỹ groſſe ſutteltie of Seruettus, wherewith he hath bewitched himſelfe and other, ouerthrowing ỹ which pure faith beleueth cōcerning the perſon of the ſonne of God: And therupon is gathered that with the crafty darke ſutteltie of that filthy dog, the hope of ſaluatiō is vtterly extinguiſhed. 2.14.8.

Merit of Chriſt.

It is truely & properly ſayd that Chriſt Merited for vs the grace of God and ſaluatiō: Where it is proued that Chriſt was not onely the inſtrument or miniſter of ſaluation, but alſo the author and principall doer thereof: And in ſo ſaying, the grace of God is not defaced, becauſe the Merit of Chriſt is not ſet againſt mercy, but hangeth vpon it. And thoſe things which are Subalterna, fight not as contraries. 2.17.1.

The diſtinction of the Merit of Chriſt and of the grace of God is proued by many places of Scripture. 2.17.2.

There are alleged many teſtimonies of Scripture, out of which it is certainly & ſoundly gathered, ỹ Chriſt by his obediēce hath truely purchaced and deſerued fauor for vs with his father. 2.17.3,4,5.

It is a fooliſhe curioſitie to enquire, whether Chriſt hath deſerued any thing for himſelfe: and it is raſheneſſe to affirme it. 2.17.6.

Merites of VVorkes.

The boſtinges that are made of the Merites of workes, do ouerthrowe as well the praiſe of God in geuing righteouſneſſe, as alſo the certainty of ſaluation. 3.15.

Whoſoeuer firſt applied the name of Merit to good works in the ſight of Gods iudgement, he did againſt the pureneſſe of faith. And though the olde fathers vſed that name, yet they ſo vſed it that they haue in many places ſhewed that they attribute nothing to workes. 3. 15. 2.

An expoſition of certaine places, wherewith the Sophiſters go about to proue that the name of Merit toward God is found in the Scripture. 3. 15. 4.

It is proued by authoritie of the Apoſtles and Auguſtine, that the rewardes of righteouſnes do hang vpon the mere liberalitie of God. 2. 5. 2.

It is proued that this is a falſe ſaying, that Chriſt Merited for vs onely the firſt grace, and that afterwarde we do Merit by our owne workes. 3. 15. 6, 7.

There be certaine things touching merites in the title of Iuſtification by faith.

Miniſtery of the Church.

Of the Miniſtery of the Church, and of them which deſpiſe this maner of learning. 4. 1. 5.

Of the efficacie of the Miniſtery. 4. 1. 6.

God, which might teache the Church either himſelfe alone or by Angels, yet doth it by the Miniſtery of Men for three cauſes. 4. 3. 1.

The Miniſtery of the Church is garniſhed with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture. 4. 3. 2, 3.

Of Apoſtles, Prophetes, Euangeliſtes, Paſtors and Teachers: and what is the ſeuerall office of euery of them. 4. 3. 4, 5.

The chiefe partes of the office of Apoſtles and paſtors are to preache the Goſpell, and Miniſter the Sacraments. 4. 3. 6.

Paſtors are ſo bounde to their Churches, that they may not remoue to any other place without publike authoritie. 4. 3. 7.

They are called in the Scripture, Biſhops, Prieſts, Paſtors and Miniſters, which gouerne Churches. 4. 3. 8.

No man ought to thruſt in himſelfe in the Church to teache or gouerne: But there is a callinge required. 4. 3. 10.

The preaching of the worde of God is compared to ſeede which is ſcattered in the grounde: Whereby we vnderſtand that the whole encreaſe procedeth of the bleſſing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghoſt. 4. 14. 11.

What maner of men ought to be choſen Biſhops, and in whath ſorte and of whom they are to be choſen, and with what forme or ceremony they are to be ordred. 4. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14. 15, 16.

The olde Church before the papacy, diuided all their Miniſters into three degrees, Paſtors, Elders, and Deacons. 4. 4. 1.

Of the commiſſion to remit and retaine ſinnes, or to binde & looſe, which is a parte of the power of the keyes, and perteineth to the Miniſtery of the word. 4. 11. 1.

Monkery.

Monaſteries in olde time were the ſeedeplottes of eccleſiaſticall orders:

orders: And there is deſcribed out of Auguſtine the forme of the olde Monkery, & howe they were wont at that time to get their liuing with the labor of their handes. Wherby appeareth that at this day the maner of popiſhe Monkery is farre otherwiſe. 4.13.8,9,10.

Of the proude title of perfectiō wherewith the Monkes do ſet out their kinde of life. 4.13.11. bycauſe they binde themſelues to keepe the councels of the Goſpell (as they call them) whereunto other Chriſtian men are not bounde. Sect. 12. and becauſe they haue forſaken all their poſſeſſions. Sect. 13.

As many as go into Monaſteries, do departe from the Church, ſith they openly affirme that their Mōkerie is a forme of ſecōd Baptiſme. 4.13.14.

The popiſh Mōkes do in maners much differ from the olde Monkes. 4.13.15.

Some things are to be miſliked euen in the profeſſion of the olde Monkery, and they that were the authors therof brought a perilous example into the Church. 4.13.16.

Monkes with their vowes do cōſecrate themſelues not to God but to the Deuell. 4.13.17.

As all vowes vnlawefull and not rightly made, are of no value before God, ſo they ought to be voide to vs. 4.13.20.

Therefore they which departe frō Monkery to ſome honeſte trade of life, are wrongfully accuſed of faith breaking and periury. 4.13.21.

Obedience of children to parentes.

AN expoſition of the fifith commaundement: The ende and ſumme thereof. 2.8.35.

Howe farre this word honoring extēdeth: and there be three partes thereof, Reuerēce, Obedience, and Thankefulneſſe. 2.8.36.

Of the promiſe adioined to the fifith commaundement, concerning long continuance of life, and howe farre the ſame pertaineth to vs at this day. 2.8.37.

How & by howe diuerſe meanes, God ſheweth his vengeance vpon the diſobedient: Yet obedience is not due to parentes and other, but ſauing the lawe of God. 2.8.38.

Offences.

What Offences are to be auoided, and what to be neglected: what is an Offence geuen, and what an offence taken. 3.19.11.

It is declared by the doctrine & example of Paule who be weake, to whom wee muſt beware that wee geue no offence. 3.19.12.

Whereas we are cōmaunded to beware that wee Offende not the weake, the ſame is meant onely in things indifferent: Therefore they do wrongfully abuſe this doctrine which ſay that they heare maſſe for the weakes ſake. 3.19.13.

Officials.

Of popiſhe Biſhops Officials, as they call them. 4.11.7,8.

Orders Papiſticall.

The Sacrament of Order bredeth to the papiſtes ſeuen other petie Sacraments, of whoſe names and differences they themſelues be not yet agreed. 4. 19. 22.

Their fonde and vngodly foliſhneſſe, ſoraſmuch as they make Chriſt felowe Officer with them in euery one of them. 4. 19. 23.

Of Acoluthes, Dorekepers and Reders, whom the papiſtes do make Orders of the Church and Sacraments, 4, 19. 24. and with what ceremonies they conſecrate them. Sect. 27.

Of Exorciſtes or Coniurers an order of the popiſh church. 4. 19. 24.

The orders of Pſalmiſtes, Dorekeepers and Acoluthes, are vaine names among the papiſtes, foraſmuch as they themſelues do not execute the Offices, but ſome boy, or any laiman. 4. 19. 24.

Of the ſhauing of the Clergie, and the ſignification thereof by the doctrine of the Papiſtes. 4. 19. 25.

They do wrongfully apply it to Paules example, which ſhaued his head when he toke a vowe, or to the olde Nazarites. 4. 19. 26.

It is ſhewed out of Auguſtine whence it firſt began. 4. 19. 27.

Of the three hier orders: and firſt of Prieſthode or ſacrificerſhip: where is ſhewed that the papiſtes haue moſt wickedly peruerted the order appointed by God, and do wrong to Chriſt the only & eternal ſacrificing prieſt. 4. 19. 28.

Of their blowing at the making of popiſh Prieſts, and howe in that ceremonie they do wrōgfully coūterfait Chriſt: Where is declared that the Lorde did many thinges which he woulde not haue to be examples for vs to followe. 4. 19. 29.

Of the vndelible character or vndefaceable marke of ỹ oile wherewith popiſhe Prieſts are anointed at their creatiō: And howe the ſame is wrōgfully applied to the childrē of Aaron. But theſe Prieſts in coueting to be like the Leuites, are apoſtates from Chriſt. 4. 19. 30, 31.

A definition and expounding of Originall ſinne. 4. 15. 10, 11, 12.

A true definition of Originall and a declaration of the ſame definition: Wherein is ſhewed, that not only puniſhment came from Adam vpon vs, but alſo that the infection deſtilled from him remaineth in vs, and howe it is the ſinne of an other and alſo oure owne ſinne: Finally that ſuch infectiō pearced not only into the inferior deſire, but alſo into the very vnderſtanding minde and bottome of the heart, ſo that there is no part of the ſoule free from corruption. 2. 1. 8, 9.

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faultes, bycauſe we ſay that men are naturally faulty: And there is proued, that man is corrupt by naturall viciouſneſſe: (to the ende that no man ſhould think it to be gotten by euill cuſtome) but yet ſuch as proceded not from nature, but is an accidētall qualitie, and not a ſubſtanciall propertie from the beginning. 2. 1. 10, 11.

Patience.

A Part of the forsaking of our selues, in respect of God, is cõtentation of minde and sufferance: Which we shall performe, if in seking the commoditie or quietnesse of this present life we yelde our selues wholly to the Lorde, and do not desire, hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of prosperinge than by his blessing. 3.7 8.

So shall it come to passe that we shall neuer seke our owne commodities by vnlawfull meanes or with wronging of our neyghbours: also that we shall not burne with vnmeasurable desire of richesse or of honors: finally if things prosper well with vs, we shall yet be holden from pride, and if they happen ill, we shall yet be restrained from impatience, 3.7.9. Which extendeth to all chaunces whereunto our present life is subiect, whereof the faithfull do alwayes acknowledge the hande of God their father, and not fortune, to be the gouernor. 3.7.10.

The Patience of the faithfull is not such as is without all feeling of sorowe, but such as being vpholden by Godly comfort, fighteth against the naturall feling of sorow. Therfore the Patience of the Stoikes is to be reiected: neither is it in it selfe any fault to wepe or feare. 3 8.8,9.

A description of ỹ striuing which is engendred in the hartes of the faithfull by ỹ feling of nature, which feling can not be cleane done away, and by the affection of godlinesse wherewith that same feling must be subdued & tamed. 3 8.10.

There is great differẽce betwene Philosophicall and Christian patience: Forasmuch as the Philosophers do teache vs to obey because we so must of necessitie: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also bycause it is profitable for vs. 3.8.11.

Pardons.

The so long cõtinuing of Pardõs, declareth in howe depe darkenesse of errors men haue bene drowned these certaine ages past. 3.5.1.

What Pardons are by the papistes doctrine: Wherby is proued that they are a dishonoring of the bloud of Christ: A comparison of Christ and popish Pardons. 3.5.1.

A cõfutation of the wicked doctrine of Pardons, by the notable sayinges of Leo bishop of Rome, & of Augustine. And there is shewed that the bloud of martirs is not vnlawfull, although it haue no place in forgeueneſſe of sinnes. 3.5.3.4.

Either the Gospell of God must ly, or Pardõs must be lieng deceites: And there is shewed what seemeth to haue bin the beginning of them. 3.5.5.

Penaunce, the Popish Sacrament.

Of the vsage of the olde Church in publike Penaunce: and of the laying on of handes at reconciliation. Also howe in processe of time the laying on of handes was vsed in priuate absolutions.4.19.14.

The diuerse opinios of ỹ Scholemen howe Penaunce is a Sacrament: And there is shewed that the definition of a Sacrament doth not agree with it.4.19,15,16.

It is a ly, and a deceitfull error which they haue inuented concerning the Sacrament of Penaunce: and it is a wicked and blasphemous title wherwith they haue garnished it,a second boorde after shipwracke from Baptisme.4.19.17.

Perseueraunce.

See Booke.2.Chap.5.Sect.3.

A confutation of the most wicked error, that Perseueraunce is geuen of God according to the Merit of men, so as euery man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankfull for the first grace: and in this opinion is shewed a double error. Of the cõmon distinction of grace working, and working together: and howe Augustine vsed it,qualifying it with an apt definition.2.3.11.

Politike gouernement.

There is a differẽce to be made betwene Policie, and the inwarde gouernement of the soule. Their doctrine is to be reiected which go about to ouerthrowe Policie as a thing not necessary for Christians, or as a thing that ouerthroweth the spirituall libertie of the soule. Also those flatterers are to be reiected, which do geue to much vnto it,and do set it in cõparison against the authoritie of God.4.20.1,2.

Policie is the gifte of God,which bringeth great cõmodities to mankinde, and no small helpe to the defence of the state of religion. Politike gouernmẽt hath three partes, the Magistrat, the Lawes, and the people.4.20.3.

Of three formes of Ciuile gouernmẽt, Aristocracie the gouernment of the best chosen men, Democracie the gouernement of the people, Monarchie the gouernement of one:it can not simply be determined which of these is the best:yet it commeth to passe by the fault of men,that it is safer & more tollerable to haue many to gouerne than one to reigne: But all these formes are of God,and diuersly disposed by him,therefore it is ỹ duty of priuate men to obey, and not to make innouatiõ of states after their owne will.4.20.8.

Of the immunitie that the Romishe clergy take to themselues, which was altogether vnknowen to to the Bishops of the olde Church. 4.11.15.

In matters of Faith, the iudgement in the olde time perteined to the Church,and not to Princes, although sometime Princes entermedled their authoritie in ecclesiasticall matters, but the same was done to preserue & not to trouble the order of the Church.4.11.15,16.

Of the authoritie of the sweard vsurped by the bishops in the papacie: and howe they haue by litle & litle frõ so small beginnings growẽ to so great encrease.4.11.9,10.

Pope.

It is proued that the supremicy of of the see of Rome is not by the institution of Christ. 4 6. 1,2,3,4.

Neither had Peter any principalitie in the Church or among the Apostles. 4.6.5,6,7.

Neither is it profitable nor may be, that one man should beare rule ouer the whole Church. 4.6.8,9,10.

Although Peter had had a supremicy in the Church, yet it followeth not that the seat of that supremicie ought to be at Rome. 4. 6.11,12,13.

It is proued by many arguments that Peter was not bishop of Rome. 4.6.14,15.

The supremicie of the see of Rome, is not according to the vse of the olde Church. 4 6. 16,17.

Of the beginning and encreasinges of the Romish papacie, vntill it aduaũced it selfe to that heighth, whereby both the libertie of the Church is oppressed, and all moderate gouernement hath bene ouerthrowen. 4.7.

In the most parte of the coũcels, the Bishop of Rome nor his legates had not the chiefe place, but some other of the bishops had it at the Councell of Chalcedon: but yet without order. 4 7.1,2.

Gregory pronounceth that the title of vniuersall bishop was deuised by the deuell, and published by the crier of Antichrist. 4.7.4.

It is proued by the vse of the old Church, that it is false which the bishop of Rome bosteth, that he hath iurisdictiõ ouer all Churches, 4.7.5. Whether ye consider the ordering of Bishops, Sect. 6. or ecclesiasticall admonitiõs and censures, Sect. 7. or summoning of Councels, Sect. 8. or authoritie of higher appeales. Sect. 9, 10.

The olde Bishops of Rome in the most part of their Epistles did ambitiously set fourth ỹ glory of their see, but those Epistles at that time had no credite: Also they did thrust in certaine forged things as though they had bene written in the olde time by holy men. 4.7. 11,20.

Although in the time of Gregory the authoritie of the bishop of Rome vs greatly encreased: yet it is proued by his writings that it was then farre from vnbridled dominion and tyranny. 4.7.12,13,22.

There was strife for the supremacy betwene the bishop of Constãtinople and the bishop of Rome. 4.7.14,15,16. vntill Phocas graunted to Boniface ỹ thirde, that Rome should be the head of all Churches: which afterwarde Pipine cõfirmed, when hee gaue to the see of Rome iurisdiction ouer the Churches of Fraunce. 4.7. 17.

From thenceforth the tyranny of the see of Rome encreased more and more, partly by ignoraunce and partly by negligence of Bishops: which destruction of the whole order of the Church Bernarde lamenteth and layeth to the Popes charge. 4.7. 18,22.

The insolēce and shameleſneſſe of the biſhops of Rome in ſetting forth their owne ſupreme authoritie: 4.7.19,20. which is reproued by ſayings of Cypriane and Gregorie. Sect. 21.

Rome can not be the mother of all Churches, foraſmuch as it is no Church. Neither can the biſhop of Rome be head of biſhops, ſith he is no biſhop. 4.7.23,24.

It is proued by Paule, that the Pope is Antichriſt. 4.7.25.

Although the Church of Rome in olde time had had the honor of ſupremicie, yet the ſame is not to be bounde to a place. 4.7.26,29.

Of the maners of the citie of Rome, of the Pope, and of the Cardinals and their diuinity. 4.7.27,28.

The Biſhop of Rome firſt layed hand vpon kingdomes, & then vpon the Empire: Which is proued by moſt ſharpe reprehenſions of Bernarde to be vnmete for him that boſteth himſelfe the ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles. 4.11.11.

Of the gift of Cōſtantine, wherwith he laboreth to hide his robbery, 4.11.12. and howe there are not yet fiue hundred yeare paſt, ſince the Popes were in ſubiectiō of Princes, and by what occaſion they haue ſhaken it of, Sect. 13. and how they brought the citie of Rome into their power, but about a hundred and thirty yeare ago. Sect. 14.

Prayer.

Trew faith can not be ydle from callinge vpon God. 3.20.1.

Howe neceſſary and howe many wayes profitable is the exerciſe of Praying, 3.20.2. although the Lord will not ceaſſe while we craue nor, nor nedeth any to put him in mind. Sect. 3.

The firſt rule of well framinge our Prayer, is that we be no otherwiſe diſpoſed in harte and minde than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. 3.20.4,5.

The ſeconde rule is, ẏ in Praying we alway feele our owne nedineſſe, and that earneſtly conſidering that we wante all theſe things that we aſke, we ioine with our Prayer an earneſt and feruent deſire to obteine. 3.20.6.

We ought to pray at all times, and in the greateſt quietneſſe of our eſtates, the onely remēbraunce of our ſinnes ought to be no ſmall prouocatiō to moue vs to that exerciſe. 3.20.7.

The thirde rule of Praying well, is that we forſake all confidence of our owne glory, leſt if wee preſumptuouſly take any thing, be it neuer ſo little, vnto our ſelues, wee with our vaine pride, fall downe from his face. 3.20.8.

The beginning of Praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble and plaine confeſſion of offence. 3.20.9.

In what ſenſe the Prayers of certaine holy men are to be taken, in which to entreate God, they ſeeme to alledge their owne righteouſneſſe. 3.20.10.

The fourth rule of Praying well, is that being ſo ouerthrowen and beaten beaten downe with trewe humilitie, we be neuertheleſſe encouraged to Pray with an aſſured hope to obteine: So in our Prayers, faith and repẽtaunce do mete togeather. 3.20.11.

Of the certainty of faith, whereby the faithfull do determine that God is fauorable vnto them: And howe neceſſary ỹ ſame is in Prayer: Neither is that certainty weakened, when it is ioined with acknowledging of our own miſery. 3.20.12.

God cõmaundeth vs to call vpon him: hee promiſeth, that we ſhalbe heard: both theſe things are neceſſary, that we may Pray in faith. 3.20.13.

There are rehearſed diuerſe promiſes of God, with the ſweteneſſe whereof they that are not ſtirred vp to Pray, are altogether vnexcuſable. 3.20.14.

An expoſition of certaine places, wherein God ſemeth to haue aſſented to ſome mennes Prayers which yet were grounded vpon no promiſe. 3.20.15.

Theſe foure rules of Praying well, are not examined with ſo extreme rigor, but that God herein doth beare with many infirmities, yea many intemperances in them that be his, which is proued by many examples. 3.20.16.

We muſt alway Pray in the name of Chriſt onely, 3. 20. 17. neither were the faithfull euer hearde any otherwiſe. Sect. 18.

They which Pray otherwiſe, haue nothing lefte for thẽ at the throne of God, but wrath & terror. 3.20.19.

It is not againſt Chriſtes office of mediator: that we be commaunded to Pray one for an other. 3.20.19.

A confutation of the Sophiſters deuiſe, which ſay that Chriſt is the mediator of redemption, and the faithfull are mediators of interceſſion. 3.20.20.

Againſt them, which make dead Sainctes interceſſors to God for them, or do mingle the interceſſion of Chriſt, with the Prayers and merites of dead men. 3.20.21.

This fooliſhneſſe hath proceded in the papacie to groſſe monſtrouſneſſe of vngodlineſſe, and to horrible ſacrileges. 3.20.22.

It is proued that the doctrine of Predeſtinatiõ is a doctrine of moſt ſwete frute. There are rehearſed three principall profites thereof: and they are admoniſhed which being moued with a certain curioſitie do beyond the boundes of Scripture breake into the ſecretes of the wiſedome of God: 3.1.1,2. and alſo they which would haue all mention of Predeſtination to be buried. What is Predeſtination, and what is the foreknowledge of God, and howe the one of them is wrongfully ſet after the other. The example of Predeſtination in all the ofſpring of Abraham in reſpect of other nations, is cõfirmed by many teſtimonies of Scripture. 3.21.5.

The vniuerſalneſſe of the promiſes of ſaluation, maketh nothing againſt the doctrine of the Predeſtination of the reprobate: and yet not without cauſe are they framed vniuerſally. 3.24.16.

Prieſthode, Kingdome, and Propheticall office of Chriſt.

That wee may knowe to what end Chriſt was ſent of his father, & what he brought vnto vs, three things are chiefely to be conſidered in him, his Propheticall Office, his Kingdome, and his Prieſthode: and therefore is geuen to him the title of Chriſt (or Meſſias which ſignifieth annointed) although he be ſpecially ſo called in reſpect of his kingdome. Albeit that God alway gaue Prophets and teachers to his Church, yet it is proued that all the Godly loked for full light of vnderſtanding, onely at the comming of Meſſias: and that he when he appeared was annointed a Prophet, not onely for himſelfe, but alſo for all his body. 2. 15. 1, 2.

As touching his kingdome, firſt we muſt note the ſpirituall nature thereof, whereuppon alſo is gathered the eternall continuaunce of it, which is of two ſortes: the one perteineth to the whole body of the Church, the other is propre to euery member: Both ſortes are declared and plainly ſet forth by teſtimones of Scripture. 2. 15. 3.

It is declared that the profit of the kingdome of Chriſt can not otherwiſe be perceiued of vs, but when we knowledge it to be ſpirituall: And the ſame profit conſiſteth in two things, namely that it enricheth vs with all good things neceſſary to eternall ſaluation, ſecondly that it fortifieth vs with ſtrength and vertue againſt the deuill and all his aſſaults: And ſo Chriſt reigneth for vs rather than for himſelfe, whereupon we are rightfully called Chriſtians: Where it is ſaid that at the laſt day he ſhall yelde vp his kingdome to God and his Father, and ſuch like ſayings the ſame maketh nothing againſt the eternity of his kingdome. 2. 15, 4, 5.

As touching his Prieſthode, that the efficacy and profit thereof may come to vs, it is ſhewed that we muſt begin at the death of Chriſt. Hereupon it followeth that hee is an euerlaſting interceſſor, by whoſe mediation we obteine fauor, whereby ariſeth to Godly conſciences both boldeneſſe to pray, and quietneſſe: finally that he is ſo a Prieſt, that he ioineth vs in the fellowſhip of ſo great an honor, to the ende that the Sacrifices of prayers and praiſe which came from vs, may be acceptable to God. 2. 15. 6.

Promiſes.

Not without cauſe all the Promiſes are concluded in Chriſt: foraſmuch as euery Promiſe is a teſtifying of the lawe of God toward vs, and none of vs is beloued of God without Chriſt. Neither was Naaman the Syrian, Cornelius the captaine, nor ỹ Eunuche to whom Philip was carried, without knowledge of Chriſt, although they had but a very ſmall taſt of him, and a faith in ſome parte vnexpreſſed. 3. 2. 32.

The Lord, to the ende to fill our hearts with loue of righteousnesse and hatred of wickednesse, was not content to set forth bare commaũdementes only, but added Promises of blessings both of this present life and of eternall blessednesse, & also threatninges both of present miseries, and of eternall death: The threatnings declare the great pureness of God: the Promises do shew his great loue to righteousnes, and his wonderful goodnes toward mẽ. 2.8.4.

Prouidence of God.

Prophane men, by fleshly vnderstanding do confesse God the creator, otherwise than we do by faith: forasmuch as faith doth teach that he is also the gouernour of all things, not by a certaine vniuersal motiõ, but by a singular Prouidẽce, which extendeth euen to the least sparow. 1.16.1.

They which giue any thinge to fortune, do bury the Prouidence of God, by whose secrete councell all successes are gouerned. 1.16.2.

Thinges without life, although eche of thẽ haue their property naturally planted in them, yet do not put forth their force, but so farre, as they be directed by ỹ present hand of God: Which is proued by the sonne, before which he would both light to be, and the earth to abounde with all kinde of good things: which also we read to haue stand stil by the space of two daies, and gone backe two degrees at the commaundement of God. 1.16.2. also by the starres and signes of the heauen, which the vnbeleuers do feare. Sect. 3.

The almightines of God is busied in continuall doinge, so that it extendeth to euery particular act, and nothinge happeneth but by his councell: Which who so do not acknowledge, they defraude God of his glorie and do extenuate his goodnes: But we on the other side do receiue double frute therof. 1.16 3.

It is proued that the Prouidence of God doth not onely beholde things that are done, but gouerneth all successes: Whereby is ouerthrowen the fained inuention of bare foreknowledge & of vniuersal Prouidence only: Also the error of the Epicures is cõfuted, & of thẽ which giue to God a gouernaunce onely aboue the middle region of the aire. Yet there may a certaine vniuersall Prouidẽce be graunted, but so, that ỹ speciall Prouidence be not darkened, which doth gouerne not onely certaine but all particular doinges. 1.16.4, 5.

That not only the beginning of motion is in the disposing of God, is proued by the plentifullnesse of one yeare and the barrennesse of an other, for whereas God calleth the

The Prouidence of God in gouerning the worlde, is chiefly to be considered in mankinde, and in the diuerse estate of all men, & diuerse disposinge of successes. 1. 16. 6, 7. Against them which cauill, that this doctrine of the Prouidēce of God, is the Stoikes doctrin of fate or destinie. 1. 16. 8.

Whether any thinge happen by fortune or chaunce: Where is rehearsed the sayinge of Basilius Magnus, that Chaunce and Fortune are words of heathen men: also the saying of Augustine, that he repented that he hadde vsed the name of Fortune. Yet those thinges may be said to happē by fortune in respect of vs, which beinge considered in their nature, or weyed according to our knowledge, do seme so, althogh in the secret councell of God they be necessary: Also all thinges that are to come, may be said to be happening, inasmuch as they be vncertaine to vs. 1. 16. 8, 9.

What things are to be considered, that the doctrine of the Prouidence of God may be referred to a right hande, that we haue the profit thereof: And where the causes of those things that happen, appeare not vnto vs, we must beware that we do not thinke, that thinges are rolled by the sway of fortune: but we must so reuerence his secrete iudgementes, that we esteeme his wil the most iust cause of al things. 1. 17. 1.

Against certaine dogges, which at this day do barcke against ỹ Prouidence of God, it is proued by the Scripture that wheras God hath so reuealed his will in the lawe & the gospel, ỹ he illuminateth the minds of them that be his with the spirite of vnderstandinge, to perceiue the mysteries therein contained, which otherwise are incomprehēsible, yet the order of gouerning the worlde is called a bottōlesse depth, because when we know not the causes therof, yet we ought reuerētly to honor it. 1. 17. 2.

Such prophane men do foolishly comber themselues, when they alleage that if the doctrine of the Prouidence of God be true, then the prayers of the faithful in which they aske any thinge for time to come, are vaine, no councell is to be taken for things to come, & then men which do any thing against the lawe of God, do not sinne: These daungerous errors they shall auoid, which in consideringe the Prouidence of God, shall frame themselues to true modesty. 1. 17. 3.

As concerning things to come, it is proued that the Scripture doth well ioyne the aduisements of men with the Prouidence of God: because we are not hindered by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne thinges: For the knowledge of consultinge and taking heede, are inspired into men by the Lord, whereby we may serue his Prouidence, in the preser-

In all ſucceſſes of time paſt the will of God doth gouerne: and yet the doers of wicked dedes are not excuſed, becauſe they are accuſed by their owne conſcience, and do not obey the wil of God, but their owne luſt: They are in dede the inſtruments of Gods Prouidence, but ſo, that they finde the whole euil in themſelues, & in God is found nothing but a lawfull vſe of their euilneſſe, 1. 17. 5. & 1. 18. 4. Where alſo the ſame thing is ſhewed in the election of kinge Iarobeam, the ten tribes forſakinge the houſe of Dauid, the ſlaughter of the ſonnes of Achab, & in the betrayinge of the Sonne of God.

A Godly and holy meditation of the Prouidence of God, which is taught by the rule of godlineſſe: firſt that beinge certainely perſwaded that no thinge happeneth by fortune, we alway caſt our eyes to God the chiefe cauſe of al thinges: then that we dout not that his ſingular Prouidence watcheth for vs, whether we haue to do with men as well euil as good, or with his other creatures: To which vſe we muſt apply the promiſes of God in the Scripture which teſtifie ỹ ſame, the examples whereof are rehearſed. 1. 17 6.

We muſt alſo adioyne thoſe teſtimonies of Scripture which teach that al men are vnder the power of God, whether we nede to get their good wils or reſtraine the malice of our enemies: which laſt point God worketh diuerſe waies, ſomtime by takinge away their wit, ſometime when he graunteth them witte, he frayeth them that they dare not go about that which they haue conceiued: and ſomtime alſo when he ſuffereth them to go about it, he breaketh their enterpriſes: Vppon which knowledge neceſſarily foloweth a thankefulneſſe of minde in ſo proſperous ſucceſſe of thinges. 1. 17. 7.

In aduerſity when we are hurt by men, is required patience and quiet moderation of minde: Which is ſhewed in the examples of Ioſeph being afflicted of his brethren, Iob perſecuted of ỹ Chaldees, & Dauid rayled vpon of Semei. If we happen to be diſtreſſed with any miſery without the worke of men, this ſelfe ſame doctrine is the beſt remedy againſt impatience, becauſe the Scripture teſtifieth, that euen aduerſities alſo do come frō God. 1 17. 8.

A Godly man principally regardinge the prouidence of God, yet will not leaue inferiour cauſes vnmarked. Therfore if he haue receiued a benefite of any man, he will hartily know and confeſſe himſelfe to be bounde vnto him. If he haue taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or wāt of heede, he will impute it vnto himſelfe, much leſſe will he excuſe his owne offences. In thinges to come chiefly he will haue conſideration of inferiour cauſes, but yet ſo, that in determininge he will not be caried away with his owne wit, but committe himselfe to the wisedom of God: neither shall his trust so stay vpon outwarde helpes, that he will careleselely rest vpon them if he haue them, nor be dismaied for feare if he want them. 1.17.9.

A large description of the inestimable felicitie of a Godly minde which resteth vpon the Prouidēce of God: and on the other side the miserable carefulnesse wherewith we must needes be distressed when the weakenes of this earthly cotage maketh vs subiect to so many diseases, sith our life and safety is besieged with infinite daungers at home, abroade, vpon the lande, in the water, by men, & by deuils. 1.17 10, 11.

Those places of Scripture where it is said that God repented him: make nothing against the doctrine of prouidence, forasmuch as therin (like as also when he is sayd to be angry) the Scripture applying it self to our capacity describeth him, not such as he is, but such as we feele him to be. Likewise, where he spared the Niniuites, to whom he had threatned destruction within forty dayes: wheras he prolonged the life of Ezechias for many yeres, to whō he had declared present deathe: because such threatnings containe an vnexpressed condition. Which is well proued by a like example in King Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abrahams wife. 1.17.12, 13, 14.

A confutation of them, which coueting to get a praise of modesty, go about to maintaine ỹ righteousnesse of God with a lying defence, when they say: that those thinges which Sathan and all the reprobate do naughtily, are done by the sufferance of God, and not by his prouidence and will. And it is proued by the affliction of Iob, the deceiuing of Achab, the killing of Christ, the incestuous adultery of Absolon, and many other examples, that men do worke nothinge but that which he hath alredy decreed with himselfe, and doth appoynt so to be by his secrete direction. 1.18.1.

And this hath place, not only in outward doinges, but also in secrete motiōs. For it is proued by the hardeninge of Pharao and other testimonies, that God worketh euen in the mindes also and hartes of the wicked: Neither maketh it anything to the contrary, that oftentimes the worke of Sathan is vsed therein: For God worketh neuertheless, but after his owne manner, vsinge a iust reuenge, 1.18.2. and therefore God is not the author of sinnes. Sect. 4.

They are proued gilty of intollerable pride, which refuse this doctrine vnder pretence of modesty. A confutation of their obiection whē they say, that if nothing happē but with the will of God, then hath he in himselfe two contrary wils, forasmuch as he doth appoynt those thinges to be done by his secrete counsell, which he hath openly forbidden by his law. And there is shewed wed, that God doth not disagree with himselfe, that the will of God is not chaunged, that he doth not faine himselfe to nill that which he willeth: but wheras there is in God, but one simple will, the same to vs appeareth diuerse, becausse for the weakenesse of our vnderstandinge, we conceiue not howe he diuersly both willeth not, and willeth one selfe thing to be done. Finally it is proued by Augustine, that man sometimes with good will willeth somthinge which God willeth not: & sometime willeth that thing with euill will, which God willeth with good wil. 1.18.3.

The consideration of Gods power in gouerning this frame of heauen & earth, and all the partes that are in them. 1.5.5.

The felowship of men is so gouerned by the prouidence of God, that he sheweth himselfe liberall, mercifull, righteous, and seuere. 1.5.6.

Those thinges which in the life of men are cõpted chaunces, as well of prosperity as aduersity, are so many tokens of the heauenly Prouidence, 1.5.7. and ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect. 9.

How God worketh in the hartes of thẽ that be his: & Sathan in them that be his, but yet so, that they are not excused. 2.4.1.

God worketh also in the wicked, & euen in the same worke wherein Sathan worketh, and yet is not God so said to be ỹ author of sinne, neither is Sathan or the wicked excused, but there is difference betwene the one & the other, both in the ende and maner of doing. 2.4.2, 5.

The old writers oftentimes referred these things, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or sufferance, least the wicked shoulde thereby take occasion to speake irreuerently of the works of God. But the Scripture, when it saith that God blindeth, hardeneth and such like, declareth somewhat more than a sufferance: although God do worke two wayes in the reprobate, namely by forsakinge them, and takinge his spirite from them, and also by deliueringe them to Sathan the minister of his wrath. 2.4.3,4.

The ministery of Sathan is vsed to stirre forwarde the reprobate, whensoeuer the Lorde by his prouidence directeth them hither or thither. 2.4.5.

Purgatory.

We ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatory, forasmuch as it is a damnable inuention of Sathan, which maketh voide ỹ crosse of Christ, &c. 3.5.6.

Redemer Chriſt.

THe knowledge of God ỹ Creator is vnprofitable vnto vs, vnleſſe faith do alſo folow, ſetting him forth in Chriſt a father & Redemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the world in all ages hath bin holden amonge the children of God. 2. 6. 1.

It is proued by diuerſe argumentes and teſtimonies of Scripture, that the happy ſtate of the Church hath alway bin grounded vpō the perſon of Chriſt. For both the firſt adoptiō of the choſen people, & the preſeruing of the church, the deliuerance of them in perils, and the reſtoringe after their diſſipation, did alway hange vppon the grace of ỹ mediator. And the hope of all the Godly was neuer repoſed any other where than in Chriſt. 2. 6. 2, 3, 4.

It is to be diligently conſidered how Chriſt hath fulfilled the office of Redeemer, that we may finde in him all thinges neceſſary for vs, ſith (as Bernard ſayth) he is to vs light, meate, oyle, ſalt, &c. 2. 16. 1.

An expoſition howe we ſhoulde ſay that God was our enemy vntill he was reconciled to vs by Chriſt, whereas to giue Chriſt to vs, and to preuent vs with mercy, were ſignes of the loue wherewith he before embraced vs. And there is ſhewed that the Scripture vſeth this ſpeach and ſuch other, to apply it ſelfe to our capacity: and yet it doth not ſay the ſame falſely. And all this is proued by the authority of Scripture, & the teſtimony of Auguſtine. 2. 16. 2, 3.

Regeneration.

Againſt certaine Anabaptiſtes which inuēt a phrentike intemperance in ſtede of ſpirituall Regeneration, namely that the children of God beinge now reſtored into the ſtate of innocency, ought no more to be carefull to bridle the luſt of the fleſh, but only to folow the Spirit for their guide. 3. 3. 14.

Of the diſtinction of fault and peine: wherewith moſt ſtrong teſtimonies of Scripture, the dotinge errour of the papiſtes is confuted, namely that when the fault is forgiuen yet God retayneth the peine, which remaineth to be redeemed with ſatisfactiõs: 3.4.29,30. & there alſo is ſhewed that they can not ſcape away with their diſtinction betwene euerlaſting peine & temporall peines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they go about to confirme their errour: where is declared that there are two kindes of the iudgement of God: the one of vengeance, the other of chaſtiſement, which are wiſely to be diſtinguiſhed a ſunder. 3.4.31.

The firſt of theſe, that is to ſay vengeance, the faithfull haue alway earneſtly prayed to eſcape: the other, that is to ſay chaſtiſement, they haue receyued with quiete minde, becauſe it hath a teſtimony of loue. And where it is ſaid that God is angry with his Saintes, the ſame is not meant of his purpoſe or affection to puniſhe them, but is ſpoken of the vehement feelinge of ſorowe wherewith they are ſtriken ſo ſoone as they beare any parte of his ſeuerity: and this is profitable for them. On the other ſide the reprobate, when they are ſtriken with the ſcourges of God, do already after a certaine manner beginne to feele the peynes of his iudgement. All which thinges are proued by teſtimonies of the Scripture, and alſo by the expoſitions of Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine. 3.4.32 33.

God when he had forgiuen the adultery of Dauid, chaſtiſed him both for common example, and alſo to humble him: and for this reaſon he dayly maketh the faithfull (to whom he is mercifull) ſubiect to the common miſeries of this life 3.4.35.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two partes of Repentance, namely Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, and Viuification which they wrongfully expound to be comfort by the feling of the mercy of God, whereas it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue well. 3. 3. 3.

They do alſo make two other ſortes of Repentance, the one of the lawe, the other of the Goſpell: where alſo are ſhewed examples of either ſorte out of the Scripture. 3. 3. 4.

A true definition of Repentance take̅ out of the Scripture, And how Repentance though it can not be ſeuered, yet ought to be diſtinguiſhed from faith. 3. 3. 5.

A plainer declaration of the definitiō of Repentance: where firſt is ſhewed ẏ there is requiringe a turning to God, that is to ſay an alteration, not only in outward workes, but alſo in the ſoule it ſelf, 3. 3. 6. the̅ that it procedeth of an earneſt feare of God: Where alſo is entreated of the ſorowfulnes that is accordinge to God. 3. 3. 7.

Thirdly that ſayinge is declared that Repentance conſiſteth of two parts, the Mortification of the fleſh, and the quickening of the Spirite. 3. 3. 8.

Both theſe things do we obtaine by partakinge of Chriſt, the firſt by communicatinge of his death, the ſeconde of his reſurrection. Therefore Repentance is a new forminge of the image of God in vs, & areſtoringe into the righteouſneſſe of God by the benefit of Chriſt: And this reſtoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3. 3. 9.

But there remaineth in all the ſaintes, while they liue in mortall body, matter of ſtrif with their fleſh, and ſo thought all the eccleſiaſtical wryters that haue bin of ſounde iudgement: & ſpecially Auguſtine, which calleth this nouriſhment of euill and diſeaſe of luſtinge in the elect, weakenes, and ſomtime ſinne: And in deede it is ſinne. 3. 3. 10.

This is confirmed by the teſtimony of Paule, & by the ſumme of the commaundements. Whereas it is ſayd ẏ God cleanſeth his church from all ſinne, the ſame is ſpoken rather of the giltineſſe of ſinne thā of the matter of ſinne it ſelf, which ceaſſeth not to dwell in the regenerate (but ceaſſeth to reigne in them) though it be not imputed. 3. 3 11.

A declaratiō of the ſeuen cauſes or effects, or partes or affections of Repentance, which Paul rehearſeth:

Thoſe

Thoſe be ſtudy or carefulneſſe, excuſing, diſpleaſure, feare, deſire, zele, reuenge. Whereunto alſo is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernard, that in ſuch reuenge we muſt keepe a meaſure. 3.3.15.

The frutes of Repentance are, deuotion towarde God, charity toward men, holines and purenes in all our life: but al theſe ought to beginne at the inwarde affectiō of the heart, from whence outwarde teſtimonies may afterwarde ſpringe forth: Where alſo is ſpoken of certaine outward exerciſes of Repentance, which the olde writers ſeme to enforce ſomwhat too much. 3.3.16.

Turninge of the heart to God, is the chiefe point of Repentance: ſackcloth and aſhes, weping & faſting, were vſed of them in the olde time before Chriſt, as tokens of publike Repentāce: of which the two laſt may yet be vſed to appeaſe the wrath of God in ỹ miſerable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of Repentance or penance is vnproperly drawen from his naturall ſenſe to this outwarde profeſſion. Publike cōfeſſion is not alway neceſſary in ſinnes: but priuate confeſſion to God may neuer be omitted, wherein we ought to confeſſe not onely thoſe thinges that we haue lately committed, but the diſpleaſure of our greuous fall ought alſo to cal vs backe to remēbrance of our paſſed offences. Of ſpeciall penance which is required of haynous offenders and certaine other: and of the ordinary penance which the children of God, euen the moſt perfect, ought to vſe all their life long. 3.3.18.

God doth therefore freely iuſtifie them that be his, that he may alſo with the Sanctificatiō of his ſpirit reſtore them into true righteouſnes: Therefore Iohn, Chriſt and the Apoſtles, preached Repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes. The effect of which ſaying is declared. 3.3 19.

Chriſtians ought to exerciſe thēſelues in a continuall Repentance, & he hath moſt profited, that hath learned moſt to miſlike himſelfe. 3.3.20.

Repentance is a ſingular gift of God, vnto which he calleth all men, which he giueth to all them whom he purpoſeth to ſaue, and which the Apoſtle pronounceth ỹ it ſhall neuer be giuen to wilfull apoſtataes whoſe wickedneſſe is vnpardonable, that is to ſay, ſuch as haue ſinned againſt the holy ghoſt 3.3.1.

Although fained Repētance doth not pleaſe God, yet he ſomtime for a ſeaſon ſpareth hypocrites which make a ſhewe of ſome conuerſion, which he doth not for their ſakes, but for common example, that we may learne more cherefully to giue our mindes to vnfained Repentance: And this is proued by the examples of Achab, Eſau, & the Iſraelites. 3.3.25.

The Schoole ſophiſters do fowly

erre in thoſe definitiõs which they make of Repentance, and no better do they diuide it, when they parte it into contrition of heart, confeſſiõ of mouth, & ſatisfaction of worke: Where is entreated of certaine queſtiõs which they moue: whereupon is eaſily gathered, that they babble of thinges which they know not, whẽ they ſpeake of Repentance. 3.4.1.

When they require thoſe three thinges in Repentance, they muſt needes binde thereunto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: And if it be ſo, then are we moſt miſerable, foraſmuch as we can neuer haue quietnes of cõſcience: Which is proued firſt in that cõtrition of heart ſuch as they require. 3.4.2.

There is great differẽce betwene the doctrine of ſuch contrition, & that cõtrition which the Scripture requireth of ſinners, that they truly hunger & thirſt for the mercy of God. 3.4.3.

In what ſenſe the olde wryters thought that ſolemne penance, which was then required for haynous offences, might no more be eftſoones done than Baptiſme. 4.1. 29.

Reaſon of Man.

Mans vnderſtanding is not ſo to be condemned of perpetuall blindnes, that we leaue it no whit of vnderſtanding in any kinde of thing: but it hath ſome knowledge inaſmuch as he is naturally caried with deſire to ſearche out trueth. And yet this deſire by and by falleth into vanity, becauſe the minde of man can not for dulnes, keepe the right way to ſearch out trueth, & for the moſt parte he diſcerneth not of what thinges it is behouefull for him to ſeeke the true knowledge. 2.2.12.

As touching earthly things, it is proued by exãples that the minde of man hath a ſharp vnderſtãding, as firſt of all in ciuile policy and in gouernance of houſeholdes, ſith euery man vnderſtandeth that the felowſhips of men muſt be holden together by lawes, and comprehendeth in minde ỹ principles of thoſe lawes. 2.2.13.

Alſo in liberall artes and handy craftes, for learninge whereof, yea for amplifyinge and garniſhinge of the ſame, there is in man a certaine aptneſſe, although ſome be more apt thã other. But the light of Reaſon and vnderſtanding in men is ſo a generall good qualitie in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Gods liberalitie towarde euery man: which thing God ſheweth when he createth ſome Idiotes and dull witted: alſo when he maketh one man to excell in ſharp inuention, an other in iudgement, an other in quickeneſſe of minde, againe when he poureth into men ſingular motions according vnto euery manes calling, and according to the time and matter that is to be done. 2.2.14, 17.

The inuention of artes, the orderly teaching or depe & excellent knowledge thereof, which appeare to haue bin in ỹ olde Lawyers, Philoſophers, losophers, Phisitians, being profane men, do declare vnto vs that the minde of men how much soeuer it be fallen from his first vprightnes, is yet still garnished with excellent gifts of God. 2.2.15.

They are the giftes of the holy Ghost which the Lorde giueth to whom he will, euen to the vngodly for the publike benefite of mankinde. Therefore we ought to vse them although they be communicate vnto vs by the ministery of the wicked, to whom they are but trāsitory and fletinge, because they are without the sounde fundation of trueth. 2.2.16.

It is shewed in the first two points, that mans Reason seeth nothinge that concerneth the kingdome of God and heauenly matters, which are contained in three things, that is to say, to know God, his fatherly fauour towarde vs, and the way to frame our life accordinge to the rule of his lawe. 2.2.18. and to that purpose are alleaged diuerse testimonies of Scripture. Sect. 19, 20, 21 In the third it seemeth that he hath some more vnderstandinge than in the other, forasmuch as man is instructed by the lawe of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowledge is vnperfect in ỹ vnbeleuers, & auayleth to no other end, but to make them vnexcusable: neither do they by that naturall light, see the trueth in euery thinge. And here is expounded the sayinge of Themistius, that vnderstanding in the vniuersall definition is seldome deceiued, but the error is when it descēdeth to particular causes, and there is shewed, that mās vniuersal iudgement in the difference of good and euil, is not alway sound and vpright. For it attaineth not those which are the chiefe things in the first table of the law, namely of cōfidence in God. &c. In the second table, although it haue some more vnderstandinge, yet it appeareth that it somtime erreth, as when it iudgeth that it is an absurditie to suffer to imperious gouernment, and not to reuenge wronges: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the lawe. 2.2. 22, 23, 24.

It is proued by the Scripture, that the sharpnes of our Reason in all the partes of our life, is nothing before the Lord: & our mindes do read the grace of enlightening, not only at the beginninge, or for one day, but at euery moment. 2.2.25.

See vnder the title of Freewill, certaine thinges pertaininge to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the Resurrection of Christ, all is vnperfect that we beleue concerning his crosse, Death, & Burial. Thereof we receiue three profites: forasmuch as it hath both purchased vs righteousnes before God, & is to vs a pledge of the Resurrectiō to come, & by his life, we are now regenerate into newnesse of life. 2.16.13.

A declaration of the history of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.25.3.

Laſt Reſurrection.

Foraſmuch as the faithfull, do chiefely neede hope and patience, leaſt they ſhould faint in the courſe of their callinge: he hath ſoundly profited in the Goſpel which is accuſtomed to a cõtinuall meditation of the bleſſed Reſurrection. 3.25.12.

The article concerning the laſt Reſurrection, cõtaineth a doctrine of great weight, graue and hard to beleue: for the ouercomminge of which hardnes by faith, the Scripture giueth two helps, the example of Chriſt, and the almightineſſe of God. 3.25.3,4.

A confutation of the Sadduces, which deny the Reſurrection: & of the Millenaries which appoint the kingdom of Chriſt to endure but a thouſand yeares. 3.25.5.

A confutation of their errour, which imagine that ſoules at ỹ laſt day ſhall not receiue againe the bodies wherewith they are nowe clothed, but ſhall haue new and other bodies. 3.25,7,8.

Of the maner of the laſt Reſurrection, 3.25.8.

By what reaſon the laſt Reſurrection, which is a ſingular benefit of Chriſt, is cõmon alſo to the wicked and the accurſed of God. 3.25.9.

Sabbath.

AN expoſition of the fourth cõmaundement, the ende thereof, and the three cauſes whereupon we muſt note that it conſiſteth. 2.8.28.

The firſt cauſe is a ſhadowing of ſpirituall reſt, that is to ſay, of our ſanctification: This is proued by diuerſe places to haue bin the chiefe thing in the Sabbath. 2.8.29.

Why the Lorde appointed the ſeuenth day. 2.8.30,31.

This part, foraſmuch as it was ceremonial, is takẽ away by the death of Chriſt. 2.8.31.

The two latter cauſes, that is to ſay, that there ſhoulde be certaine dayes appointed for aſſemblies in the Church, and that there ſhould be giuen to ſeruauntes a reſt from their labour, do ſerue for all ages. 2 8.32.

Of daies of meting in the church to heare the word of God & common praiers: Where is ſpoken of obſeruing of the Sonday, 2.8.32,33 and of ſuperſtition to be auoyded in this behalfe. 2.8.34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament. 4.14.1.

For what reaſon the old writers vſed this word in that ſenſe. 4.14.2, 13.

A Sacrament is neuer without a promiſe going before, which the Lord ſealeth by that meane, wherin he prouideth helpe for our ignorance and dulneſſe, and alſo for our weakenes. 4.14.3,5,6,12.

A Sacrament conſiſteth of the worde & the outward ſigne: But the Sacramentall worde is to be taken otherwiſe than the papiſtes thinke. 4.14.4.

Sacramentes ceaſſe not to be teſtimonies of the grace of God, although though they be giuen alſo to the wicked, which do gather to themſelues more greuous dãnation therby. 4. 14. 7.

Our faith is ſo confirmed by Sacraments, that yet it hangeth vpon the inwarde effectuall working of the Spirite, 4. 14. 9, 10, 11. and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confutation of the deueliſhe doctrine of the Sophiſtical ſcholes, that the Sacramentes of the newe law do iuſtifie and do giue grace, ſo that we do not ſtop it with deadly ſinne. 4. 14. 14.

Auguſtines good diſtinction betwene a Sacrament and the thinge of the Sacrament, whereby is proued that though God in Sacramẽts do truely offer Chriſt, yet the wicked receiue nothinge but the Sacrament, ẏ is to ſay, the outward ſigne. 4. 14. 15, 16.

We muſt not thinke that there is ioyned or faſtened to the Sacraments any ſecrete vertue, whereby they by themſelues do giue vs the graces of the holy Ghoſt. 4. 14. 17.

In the olde time God gaue vnto his people ſome Sacraments in miracles, and ſome in natural thinges. And there is ſpoken of the tree of life and of the raynebowe. 4. 14. 18.

Sacramentes are on the Lordes behalfe teſtimonies of grace & ſaluation, & on our behalfe tokens of our profeſſion. 4. 14. 19.

The Sacramentes of the olde Church vnder the lawe, tended to the ſame end that our Sacramentes do, that is to ſay, Chriſt: whom yet our Sacramẽts do more plainly repreſent. Wherfore the ſcholemens doctrine is to be reiected, which ſay, that the olde Sacraments did ſhew a ſhadow of the grace of God, and ours do giue it preſently. 4. 14. 20, 21, 22, 23. &c.

The fiue falſely called Sacraments.

When we deny thoſe fiue to be Sacraments which are inuented by men, we ſtriue not about the name but the thing: becauſe the papiſtes will haue them to be viſible formes of inuiſible grace. 4. 19. 1.

Many reaſons are brought, why it is not lawfull for men to make Sacraments. Alſo there is a difference to be put betwene Sacraments, and other ceremonies. 4. 19. 2.

The nũber of ſeuen Sacraments can not be proued by the authority of the old Church. 4. 19. 3.

Although the old Church vnder the law, had mo Sacraments, yet at this day, the Chriſtiã church ought to be cõtent with thoſe two, which Chriſt hath ordained: And it is not lawfull for men to make other, nor to adde vnto theſe any thinge of their owne. 4. 18. 20.

Sacrifices.

A difference betwene the Sacrifices of Moſes his law, & the ſupper of the Lord in the Chriſtiã church 4. 18. 12.

What the name of a Sacrifice properly ſignifieth: and of the diuerſe kindes of Sacrifices vnder the lawe: which may be deuided into two sortes, whereof some may be called of thankesgiuinge, and other some propitiatory or of cleansinge. 4.18.13.

Our only propitiatory Sacrifice, is the death of Christ. Sacrifices of thankesgiuing we haue many, as all the dueties of charity, praiers, praises, giuinge of thankes, and all that we do to the worshipping of God. 4.18,13,16,17.

This maner of Sacrificing is daily vsed in the church, & in the supper of the Lord: And thereupon all Christians are Sacrificing Priestes.

Satisfactions Papisticall.

Of Satisfactiõ, which they make the third thinge in penance, of retaininge the paine, the fault beinge forgiuen, & such like lies, which all are ouerthrowen, by setting against the free forgiuenes of sinnes, by the name of Christ. 3.4.25.

A confutation of the blasphemous error of the schoolemen, that forgiuenes of sinnes, and reconciliation is once done in Baptisme, but after Baptisme, we must rise againe by Satisfactions. 3.4.26.

By such errour, Christ is spoyled of his honor, & the peace of consciences is troubled, forasmuch as they can neuer certainly determine, that their sinnes are forgiuen them. 3.4.27.

In Daniel, when Nabuchadonesser is commaunded to redeeme his sinnes with righteousnesse, that same redeming, is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set foorth, but rather the manner of true conuersion. The same is to be said of certaine other places of Scripture. 3.4.36.

An exposition of that place in the gospel, Many sinnes are forgiuen her, because she hath loued much: Meaning that loue is not the cause, but the profe of forgiuenes. 3.4.37.

The olde wryters of the church did not speake of Satisfactions in such sense as ỹ papistes do: for they vnderstoode, that the penitent do make Satisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3.4.38,39.

Scripture, the VVorde of God, and the authority thereof.

Men do not sufficiently knowe God the creator, and discerne him from fained gods, by consideration of his creatures, vnlesse they be also holpē by the light of his Word. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his, not only since that he chose the Iewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, euen toward Adam, Noe, and the other fathers. 1.6.1.

Either by oracles, or by visions, or by the ministery of other, the fathers had the Worde which they were certainly perswaded to be the word of God, whereby they knew the true God the creator and gouernour of all things: which Word afterwarde, that he might prouide for men in all ages, he caused to be written in the law & the Prophets, as it were in publike registers, 1.6.2,3. in which place also is proued ued by testimonies of Scripture, ỹ the doctrine of the Word, must be ioyned to the consideratiõ of creatures, least we conceiue a fickle knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authority of Scripture hangeth vpon the iudgement of the Church, & in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1.7.1.

This errour is well confuted by the place of Paule in the seconde chapter to the Ephesians, where he saith that the faithfull are builded vpon the fundation of the Apostles and Prophets. 1.7.2.

In what sense Augustine sayeth, that he woulde not haue beleued the Gospell, vnlesse the authority of the church did moue him: which place they do cauillously wrest to the confirmation of their errour. 1. 7.3.

Although there be many other arguments, which do proue, yea, & do enforce the wicked to confesse, that the Scripture came from God: yet by none other meane, than by the secrete testimony of the holy Ghost, our hearts are truely perswaded that it is God, which speaketh in ỹ law, in the prophetes, & in the gospel: And this is proued by many places of Esay. 1.7.4,5.

The orderly disposition of the wisdom of God, the doctrine sauoringe nothinge of earthlinesse, the goodly agreement of all the partes among themselues, & specially that baseneſſe of contemptible wordes, vttering the hie mysteries of ỹ heauenly kingdome, are seconde helps to stablish the credit of Scripture. 1 8.1,2.11.

Also the antiquity of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doth not himselfe inuent a new God, but setteth foorth to the Israelites, the God of their fathers. 1.8.3,4.

Whereas Moses, doth not hide the shame of Leuy his father, nor ỹ murmuring of Aarõ his brother, and of Mary his sister, nor doth aduaunce his owne children: the same are arguments, that in his bookes is nothing fained by man. 1.8.4.

Also the miracles which happened, as well at the publishinge of the lawe, as in all the rest of time. 1 8.5.

Which miracles, when the prophane writers could not deny, they cauilled, that Moses did them by Magicall artes. Which sclaunder, is confuted by most strong reasons. 1, 8.6.

Also whereas Moses speaking in the person of Iacob, assigneth the gouernment to the tribe of Iuda, and where he telleth before of the callinge of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeares after, and the other almost two thousand yeares: these are argumentes, that it is God himselfe which speaketh in the bookes of Moses. 1.8.7.

Whereas Esay telleth before of the captiuity of the Iewes, and their restoringe by Cyrus (which was borne a hundred yeares after the death of Esay) and where Ieremy before that the people was led away appointeth their exile to continue three score & ten yeres, whereas Ieremy & Ezechiell, being farre distant in places the one from the other, do agree in all their sayings: where Daniell telleth before of thinges to come, for six hundred yeares after: these are most certaine proues, to stablish the authority of the bookes of the Prophets. 2.8.8.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which aske how we know that those are the writinges of Moses and the Prophetes, which are red in their names: and how we knowe that there was euer any such Moses 1.8 9.

Also of them that aske, from whence the copies of the bookes of the Scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commaũded them all to be burned. And there is spoken of the wonderfull Prouidence of God in preseruinge them so many ages, among so many enemies, and so cruell persecutions. 1.8.10.

The simplicity of speeche of the first three Euangelistes, containing heauenly mysteries, the phrase of Iohn thondering from on hie with weighty sentences, the heauenly maiesty shining in the writinges of Peter and Paule, the sudden calling of Mathew frõ the boorde, the callinge of Peter and Iohn from their fisherbotes to the preaching of the Gospell, the conuersion and calling of Paule beinge an enemy to Apostleship, are signes of ỹ holy Ghost speaking in them. 1.8.11.

The consent of so many ages, of so sondry nations, and of so diuerse mindes in embracinge the Scripture, & the rare godlines of some, ought to stablishe the authoritie thereof among vs. 1.8.12.

Also the blood of so many martyrs, which for the confession thereof, haue suffered death with a constant and sober zeale of God. 1.8.13.

Against certaine phrentike men, which forsakinge the readinge of Scripture and learninge, do boast of the Spirite, & do flie to reuelations. 1.9.1,2.

A confutation of their obiectiõ, that it is not mete that the Spirite of God, to whom all thinges ought to be subiect, shoulde be subiect to the Scripture. 1.9.2.

Also where they say that we rest vpon the letter which slayeth 1.9.3.

The Lorde hath ioyned with a mutuall knot the certainety of his doctrine and of his spirite. 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heauẽ & earth & other creatures doth depaint out God vnto vs, such doth the Scripture set him foorth, that is to say, eternal, ful of goodnes, clemẽcy, mercy, righteousnes, iudgement & trueth: and also to the same end. 1.10.1,2.

Prieſts were forbidden to marry by wicked tyranny, and againſt the word of God, and againſt all equity. 4. 12. 23.

It is fonde to defend the forbidding of mariage with the examples of the Leuiticall Prieſts, which whẽ they ſhould go into the ſanctuary lae aſunder frõ their wiues. 4. 12. 25.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes ſaying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: alſo of their opinion which ſay that in all Sinnes there is an aduiſed malice and frowardneſſe. 2. 2. 22, 23, 25.

Againſt the falſe imagination of the Sophiſters concerning veniall ſinnes, which they call deſires without a determined aſſent, which do not long reſt in the hart: it is proued that euery ſinne, euen ỹ lighteſt deſire deſerueth death, and is deadly, except in the ſaincts which obteine pardon by the mercy of God. 2. 8. 58, 59.

A confutation of their fonde diſtinction betweene deadly and veniall ſinnes, and of their ſclaũder when they ſay that we make all ſinnes egall. 3. 4. 28.

Howe it is to be expounded, that God viſiteth the iniquity of the Fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation: and whether ſuch reuengement be vnſemely for the righteouſneſſe of God. 2. 8. 19, 20.

Sinne againſt the holy Ghoſt.

The true definition of Sinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, and exãples therof out of the Scripture. 3. 3. 22.

It is not one or an other particular falling, but a generall forſaking, the deſcription whereof is declared by the Apoſtle. Neither is it any maruell if God will be alwayes vnappeaſable to them that haue ſo fallen, 3. 3. 23. foraſmuch as he promiſeth pardon onely to them that repent, which they ſhall neuer do. And though the Scripture do ſay that ſome ſuch haue groned and cried, yet that was not repentance or conuerſion, but rather a blinde torment by deſperation. 3. 3. 24.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirit of man is not onely a breath, but an immortall ſubſtaũce, although it were created, is proued by conſcience, by the knowledge of God, and by ſo many excellent giftes wherewith the minde of man is endued, yea, and by thoſe things which it conceiueth in ſleepe, and alſo by many argumẽts taken out of the ſcripture. 1.15.2. Finally by this that it is ſaid, that man was created after ỹ image of God. Sect. 3.

Againſt them that vnder the colour of Nature do denie the prouidence and gouernaunce of God vttering it ſelfe in the maruellous & in a maner innumerable powers of the Soule. 1.5.4,5.

A confutation of the errour of the Manichees and of Seruetto, that the Soule is a deriuation of the ſubſtaunce of God: alſo of the error of Oſiander, which acknowledgeth no image of God in man without an eſſentiall righteouſnes. 1.15.5.

Concerning the immortalitie of the Soule, in a maner none of the Philoſophers hath certainly ſpokẽ: but they do bind the powers therof to this preſent life, whereas the Scripture doth ſo geue to it the chiefe rule in gouernaunce of life, that it alſo ſtirreth vp man to the worſhipping of God. Alſo of the diuerſity of Soules, & of the deuiſiõ of the powers of the ſoule according to the Philoſophers. 1.15.6.

Of their error which thought that whole man periſheth by death, and that the ſoules at the laſt ſhall riſe againe with the bodies. 3.25.6.

Of the ſtate of ſoules from death to the laſt day. 3.25.6.

A deſcription taken out of Bernard, of the miſeries of a faithfull ſoule, being conſidered as it is in it ſelfe and of it ſelfe: and on the other ſide, of the aſſured glorying of a faithfull ſoule in Chriſt, which blotteth out all her vnworthineſſes. 3.2.25.

Superſtition.

The ſimplicitie of the ſuperſtitious doth not excuſe them, becauſe their blindeneſſe is found to be mingled with vanitie, pride, and obſtinacie. 1.4.1,3.

When ſuperſtition goth about to pleaſe God, it mocketh him with lying colours. 1.4.3.

The ſuperſtitious do not approche vnto God but againſt their will and with ſeruile feare. 1.4.4.

Whoſoeuer do corrupt the true religion, although they followe the conſent of antiquitie or the cuſtome of any citie, yet they depart from the one and true God. 1.5.12.

It is proued by the etimologie of of the wordes Superſtition, Religion, Euſebeia or godlineſſe, what difference is betwene Religion and ſuperſtition. 1.12.1.

The craft of ſuperſtition, when graunting the chiefe place to the one God, it beſetteth him with a route of ſmaller gods. 1.12.1,3.

Supper of the Lorde.

Of the bread & wine the ſignes in the holy Supper: and it is declared by his owne wordes at his Supper, why the Lorde willed that we ſhould vſe them. 4.17.1.

We gather a great fruit of confidence and ſweteneſſe out of this ſacrament, which teſtifieth that we are ſo growen together into one body with Chriſt, that whatſoeuer is his, we may lawfully call it oures, 4.17.2.

This is declared by the wordes of the Supper. 4.17.3.

The chiefe office of the ſacraments is not to geue vnto vs the body of Chriſt without any hier conſideration, but rather to ſeale that promiſe wherein he teſtifieth that his fleſh is verely meate. 4.17.4.

The Supper maketh not Chriſt then firſt to begin to be the bred of life, but that we ſhould fele ỹ force of that bred. He once gaue his fleſh for the life of the world, and daily geueth it to them that be his. We muſt beware that we do not to much abace or aduaũce the ſignes. The eating of the fleſhe of Chriſt is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4.17.5.

So thought Chriſoſtome and Auguſtine: and In what ſenſe Auguſtine ſaid, that in beleuing we eate the fleſhe of Chriſt. 4.17.6.

They do not ſay enough, which paſſing ouer the mention of fleſhe and blood, do thinke that we are made pertakers onely of the ſpirit of Chriſt. The miſterie of the Supper is ſo great, that neither the tõge can expreſſe with ſpeaking, nor the harte comprehẽd with thinking the greatneſſe thereof. 4.17.7.

Howe farre the perfect communicating of Chriſt extẽdeth. Where is declared that Chriſt, which from the beginning was the lifegeuing word of the father, made the fleſhe which he toke vpon him to be alſo lifegeuing to vs. 4.17.8,9.

The faithfull do truely eate of the ſame fleſhe howe great diſtance of places ſoeuer there be betwene them and it. 4.17.10.

The miſtery of the Supper conſiſteth of two things, the bodily ſignes, and the ſpirituall truth: Which ſpirituall truth conteineth three things, ſignification, matter, and effect. 4.17.11.

Of the tranſubſtãtiation of bred and wine into the body and blood of Chriſt, which the crafteſmen of the court of Rome haue forged. 4.17.12,13,&c. and 20.

They are without teſtimonie of antiquitie. And in what ſenſe the olde writers ſaid that in the conſecration is made a ſecret turning. Alſo the ſignification of the Supper agreeth not, vnleſſe the ſubſtance of the outwarde ſignes remaine. 4.17.14.

The breade is a Sacrament to none but to mē to whom the word is directed. And here are confuted certaine arguments of the teachers of tranſubſtantiation. 4.17.15.

Of ſome men, which though they do at one word graunt that the ſubſtance of the ſignes remaineth, yet placing the body of Chriſt in bread and vnder bread, they fall backe into the locall preſence, and faine a being euery where. 4.17.16, 17,18,20.

A confutation of their obiectiōs. 4.17.21,22,23,&c.

It is proued that this doctrine is not mainteined, neither by the teſtimonies of Auguſtine, nor by authoritie of Scripture. 4. 17. 28,29, 30,31.

A confutation of certaine other of their obiections, and chiefely of this that they ſay, that whatſoeuer we teache of ſpirituall eating, is againſt the trewe and reall eating: where alſo is declared that ŷ body of Chriſt is in the Supper offered to the infidels, but they receiue it not. 4.17.33.

Neither can the ſaying of Auguſtine be drawen to this purpoſe, that the Sacraments are nothing appaired by the infidelitie of men. Which is proued by diuerſe other teſtimonies of the ſame man. 4.17.34.

Howe the body and blood of Chriſt is geuen to vs in the Supper, & what maner of preſence of Chriſt we ought to holde therein. 4.17. 18,19,32.

Of the expoſition of the wordes of Chriſt in the Supper. 4.17.20,21.

The body of Chriſt is conteined in quantity, and comprehended in heauen, vntill the laſt day, as it is proued by the ſcriptures. 4.17.26,27.

Of the papiſtes carnall adoration, and concomitance, and conſecration of the hoſt (as they call it) and carrying it about in pompe. 4. 17.35,36,37.

The miſtery of ŷ Supper ought to ſtirre vs vp to geuing of thankes, to exerciſe vs in remembring the death of Chriſt, to kindle vs to holineſſe of life, and chiefely to charity. 4.17.37,38.

In the papacie the Supper (the trewe miniſtration whereof is not without the word) is turned into a dumme action. And here is ſpoken of the laying vp of the Sacrament to be extraordinarily deſtributed to ſicke men. 4.17.39.

The doctrine of the papiſtes, whē they go about to prepare men to the worthineſſe of eating the body of Chriſt, doth in cruell wiſe torment cōſciences: And the deuell could not by any readier way deſtroy men. Of the beſt remedie to auoide this deſtruction. They erre which in the Supper do require of the faithfull perfection of faith. 4. 17.41,42.

As touching the outward vſage of the miniſtration of the Supper, there are many things indifferent: And how it ought to be miniſtred moſt comely. 4.17.43.

Of

Of the ſmall aſſembly at this day at ỹ pertaking of the Supper, which is a token of contempt, wherewith the holy fathers in olde time were much diſpleaſed : And howe the cuſtome which commaundeth men to communicate once euery yeare, was a moſt certaine inuention of the deuell. 4. 17. 44, 45, 46.

It is proued by authority of the Scripture and by the vſage of the olde Church, foure hundred yeares before the death of Gregorie, and by many other arguments, that the cõſtitution which toke away from lay men the cup of the Lorde, came out of the deuels workſhop. 4. 17. 47, 48, 49, 50.

Of the concomitance of the blood in the fleſh of Chriſt, which is a popiſhe inuention. 4. 17. 47.

The Supper of the Lorde is profanely abuſed, if it be geuen to all men without choiſe. Of the duty of miniſters in reiecting the vnworthy. 4. 12. 5.

A briefe ſumme of thoſe things which we ought to knowe concerning the two Sacraments. And why the Supper is oftentimes miniſtred, and Baptiſme but once. 4. 18. 19.

Swearinge.

An expoſition of the thirde cõmaundement, in which theſe three things are cõteined, that we neither think nor ſpeake any thing of God, nor of his word and honorable miſteries, nor yet of any of his workes, otherwiſe than reuerently. 2. 8. 22.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared ỹ it is a kinde of worſhipping of God : And therefore we muſt beware that our othes cõteine not any diſhonor to the name of God, which is done in Forſwearing: or any cõtempt of it, which is done in ſuperfluous othes, or in which the name of any other thã of God is vſed. 2. 8. 23, 24, 25.

It is proued by Scripture againſt the Anabaptiſtes, that all othes are not forbidden vs, and that Chriſt in the Goſpell chaunged nothing as touching the rule of Swearing, ſet forth in the lawe. 2. 8. 26. Which is proued by his owne example : and not onely publike, but alſo priuate othes are permitted, keping the moderation which the lawe cõmaundeth. 2. 8. 27.

Temples.

OF Temples of Chriſtian men for aſſemblies of the congregation. 3. 20. 30.

It is proued by the authority of the olde Church, and the reaſons of Auguſtine, that it is not expedient, that there ſhould be any images in Chriſtian temples. 1. 11. 13.

The preaching of the word and the Sacraments, are liuely images which onely are fit to be in Chriſtian Temples. 1. 11. 7, 13.

The wickednes of the Nicene Synode which was holden by the commaundement of Irene the Empreſſe, and the filthy follies thereof in allowing images in Temples, and the worſhipping of them. 1. 11. 14, 15, 16.

Of the garniſhing of Temples

& holy things in the olde Church. 4.4.8.& 4.5.18.

Temptations.

Of diuerſe kindes of Temptations: and in what ſenſe it is ſaid that God tempteth vs. 3.20.46.

Teſtament, olde, and newe.

Of the likeneſſe of the olde and newe Teſtamēt: Where is declared, that they are all one in ſubſtance and matter, but onely do differ in miniſtration. The likenes ſtandeth chiefely in three pointes. 2.10.1,2.

The firſt point is, that the olde Teſtamēt did not holde the fathers in earthly felicitie, but had chiefe regard to the life to come. Which is proued by Paule, which ſaith that the promiſes of the Goſpell are conteined vnder it. 2.10.3.

The ſame alſo is proued by the lawe and the Prophets: Firſt, by conſidering the wordes of the couenaunt: I am your God. 2.10.7,8.

Againe, I will be the God of your ſeede after you: Sect. 9. Alſo by the life of the holy fathers, as Adam, Abell, Noe, Sect. 10. Abraham, Sec. 11. Iſaak, Iacob. Sect. 12,13,14. And by many teſtimonies of Dauid. Sec. 15,16,17,18. Of Iob. Sect. 19. Generally of all the latter Prophets. Sect. 20. But namely of Ezechiell. Sect. 21. Of Eſaye and Daniell. Sect. 22. A concluſion of this point with rehearſinge certaine teſtimonies out of the newe Teſtament. Sect. 23.

The ſeconde point is that the olde Teſtamēt did not ſtande vpon the merites of men, but vpon the free mercy of God. The third point is that the couenant of the fathers with God, did then ſtande vpon like knowledge of Chriſt the Mediator. 2.10.4.

Alſo in ſignification of Sacraments, the Iſraelites vnder the lawe were egall with ỹ Chriſtian people. 2.10.5,6.

There are foure differences of the olde Teſtament from the newe, wherunto we may alſo adde a fifth. The firſt is, that although in the olde time alſo the Lordes will was to directe the ſoules of his people to the heauenly inheritaunce: Yet to the ende that they might be the better nouriſhed in ỹ hope therof, he gaue it them to be beholden, and after a certaine maner taſted vnder earthly benefites: But nowe the grace of the life to come, being more clerely reueled by ỹ Goſpell, hee directeth our mindes ỹ ſtreight way to the meditation thereof, leauing the inferior maner of exerciſing which he vſed among the Iſraelites. 2.11.1.

For this reaſon, the fathers ſo much eſteemed this life, and the bleſſings thereof. 2.11.3.

The ſecond difference is in figures, wherewith the olde teſtamēt did ſhewe forth the image and ſhadowe of ſpirituall good things: The new teſtamēt geueth the preſent truth and perfect body. There is alſo a reaſon ſhewed why the Lorde

Lorde kept this order: And a definition of the olde teſtament. 2.11.4.

In this ſenſe it is ſaid, that the Iewes were by the introduction or ſcholing of the law led vnto Chriſt. before that he was deliuered in the fleſhe: 2. 11. 5. which appeared in the moſt excellent Prophets that were endued with ſingular grace of the ſpirit. Sect. 6.

The thirde difference, is taken out of the one and thirty chapter of Ieremy, and the thirde chapter of the ſeconde Epiſtle to the Corinthians, that the olde teſtament is literall, and the newe teſtament is ſpirituall: the olde bringeth death, the new is the inſtrument of life. 2. 11.7,8.

The fourth difference is, that the ſcripture calleth the olde teſtament, the teſtament of bondage, bycauſe it engẽdreth feare in mens mindes: but the newe is called the Teſtament of liberty, bycauſe it raiſeth them vp to confidence and ſurety. The three latter differences are cõpariſons of the lawe and the Goſpel. The firſt, conteineth alſo the promiſes made before the lawe. The fathers liued ſo vnder the lawe and the olde teſtament, that they ſtayed not there, but alwayes aſpired to the newe, yea and embraced a certaine cõmunicating therof. 2.11.9,10

The fifth difference is, that before the comming of Chriſt, the Lorde had ſeuered one nation, in which he would kepe the couenãt of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles, is a certaine ſigne, wherewith the excellencie of the newe teſtament is ſet foorth aboue ỹ olde: a thing ſo incredible, that it ſeemed yet newe to the Apoſtles themſelues, being exerciſed in reading of the Prophets, and endued with the holy Ghoſt. 2.11.11,12.

A concluſion of this matter, and an aunſwere to diuers obiections of ſome mẽ, which ſay that this variety in the Church, this diuers maner of teaching, ſo great change of vſages and ceremonies, is a great abſurditie. Where is declared that the conſtancy of God appeareth in this chaunging, and he hath done nothing but wiſely, righteouſly, and in mercy, when he gouerneth his Church, after one ſorte in childehode, & after an other ſort in riper age, & alſo when he did keepe cloſe in one people the ſhewing forth of his grace before the comming of Chriſt, which afterward he poured forth vpon all nations. 2.11.13,14.

Theft.

An expoſition of the 8. Commaundement: where is entreated of diuerſe kindes of Theftes, and ſome which although mẽ iudge otherwiſe, yet are accõpted Theftes before God: And ſo he that doth not performe that which by the office of his calling he oweth to other, is a Thefe. 2.8.45.

What we ought to do, that we may obey this commaundement, is ſhewed by diuerſe examples according to the diuerſity of perſons and offices. 2.8.46.

Traditions.

Foraſmuch as the Lorde, willing to teache a rule of trewe righteouſneſſe, hath drawen all the partes thereof to his owne will, thereby it appeareth, that all the good workes which men deuiſe of their owne wittes, are nothing worth before him: But the trewe worſhipping ſtandeth vpon obedience onely, which is the beginning, mother, and preſeruer of all vertues. 2.8.5.

Of Traditions of men, that is to ſay, ordinaunces proceding from men, concerning the worſhipping of God: And of the vngodlineſſe and neceſſitie of them. 4. 10. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8.

A diuiſion of popiſhe conſtitutions, which they call Traditions of the Church, into ſuch as conteine ceremonies, and other which are ſaid to perteine to diſcipline. The wickedneſſe of both ſortes, bycauſe they place the worſhip of God in them, and conſciences are bounde with preciſe neceſſity of thē. 4. 10. 9.

For them the commaundement of God is made voide. 4. 10. 10.

A trewe marke of mens Traditions, which ought to be reiected of the Church, and of all Godly men. 4. 10. 16.

A confutation of the pretence which ſome men vſe that defende popiſhe Traditions to be of God, bycauſe the Church cannot erre, and is gouerned by the holy Ghoſt. 4. 10. 17.

It is a meere mockery to ſay, that the Apoſtles were authors of the Traditions, wherewith the Church hath heretofore bene oppreſſed. 4. 10. 18, 19, 20.

The example of the Apoſtles, when they commaunded the Gentiles to abſteine from things offered vnto Idols, from ſtrāgled, and from blood, is falſely alledged to excuſe the tyranny of the popes lawes. 4. 10. 21, 22.

The Lordes kingdome is taken from him, when he is worſhipped with the lawes of mennes Traditions: which is proued by examples and teſtimonies of Scripture, to haue alway bene a moſt hainous offence in the ſight of God. 4. 10. 23, 24.

The inuentions of men can not be defended by the example of Menoha, which being a priuate mā offered ſacrifice, nor of Samuel which ſacrifiſed in Ramath, 4. 10. 25. nor of Chriſt, which willed men to beare the burdens that the Scribes and Phariſees did binde together. 4. 10. 26.

Of holy & profitable ordinances of the Church, and the ende that they tende vnto. 4. 10. 1.

Of ſuch ordināces of the Church, as ought to be accompted holy, namely thoſe which ſerue for comlineſſe, or do preſerue order and peace in the Church. 4. 10. 27, 28, 29. We muſt wiſely conſider, which be of that ſorte. 4. 10. 30.

It is the duty of Chriſtiā people, to obſerue ſuch ordinances: And what errors herein are to be taken heede of: And howe in the meane time, time, the libertie of conſciences may ſtill be preſerued ſafe. 4. 10. 31,32.

Tributes.

Of Tributes, Taxes, Impoſitiõs, and Finances, which are payed to Princes: And howe Princes may vſe them with a good conſcience. 4.20.13.

Trinitie.

In one ſimple eſſence of God, we muſt diſtinctly conſider three perſons, or (as the Grekes call them) Hypoſtaſes. 1.13.2.

A confuration of them which in this matter do condemne the name of perſon, and reiect it for newenesſe. 1.13.3,4,5.

The holy doctors haue bin compelled to inuente certaine newe words, to defende the truth of God againſt certaine ſubtle men, which mocked it out with ſhifting: As againſt Arrius they inuented this word homoouſion Conſubſtãtiall, and againſt Sabellius the name of three properties or perſons. 1.13.4,16.

The diuerſe ſentences of Hierome, Hilarie, and Auguſtine, in the vſe of theſe wordes. 1.13.5.

What we call a perſon, when we entreate of the Trinitie. 1.13.6.

Of the error of Seruettus, in the taking of this word Perſon. 1.13.22.

As God hath more clerely opened himſelfe by the comming of Chriſt, ſo he is ſince that time more familiarly made knowen in ỹ three perſons. 1.13.16.

Teſtimonies of ſcripture, whereby is ſhewed the diſtinction of the father from the Worde, and of the Word from the ſpirit. 1.13.17.

Alſo in the ſcripture there is a diſtinction made of the father, from the Word and the ſpirit, and of the ſpirit from them both, as well by obſeruatiõ of order, as by prophecies aſcribed to them. 1.13.18.

This diſtinction of perſons maketh not againſt the moſt ſimple vnitie of God. 1.13.19.

In what ſenſe the fathers ſay, that the father is the beginning of the ſonne, and yet that the ſonne hath his eſſence of himſelfe. 1.13.19.

A breife ſumme of thoſe things which we ought to beleue concerning the one eſſence of God and the three perſons. 1.13.20.

And herein we muſt diſpute ſoberly, and with great moderation, that neither our thought, nor our tong, do paſſe beyond the boundes of the word of God. 1.13.21.

A confutatiõ of the doting errors of Seruettus in this point of doctrine. 1.13.22.

A confutation, of the error of certaine lewde men, which ſay, that the father is trewly and properly the one only God, which in making the ſonne and the holy Ghoſt, did poure his Godhed into thẽ. 1.13.23.

It is falſe which they ſay, that when menuon is made of God in the ſcripture, onely the father is meant thereby. 1.13.24.

Alſo it is falſe which they dreame of vndeuided ſubſtances, of which euery one hath a parte of the eſſence. 1.13.25.

An aunſwere to their obiection, that Chriſt, if he be properly God, is wrongfully called the ſonne of God. 1.13.26.

An aunſwere to many places which they bringe out of Ireneus for profe of their opinion, where he affirmeth the father of Chriſt to be the one onely and eternall God of Iſrael. 1.13.27.

Alſo to the places of Tertullian. Sect. 28.

It is proued that Iuſtine, Hilarie, and Auguſtine, do make of our ſide. 1.13.29.

The Sonne is of the ſame ſubſtaunce with the father. 4.8.16.

V.

Laſt Vnction, as they call it.

WHat maner of adminiſtratiō is of the popiſhe laſt Vnctiō, and in what forme of wordes: And howe it can not be defended by the authority of Iames, or by the exāple of the Apoſtles. 4.19.18.

Foraſmuch as the grace of healing which was in olde time geuen to ỹ Apoſtles, hath long ago ceaſſed in the Church. Sect. 19, 20. And though it ſtill remained, yet this their wicked obſeruation is farre from that holy ceremony of the Apoſtles. A declaration of the blaſphemies thereof, when they coniure the oile, and aſcribe vnto it that which is propre to the holy Ghoſt. 4.19.21.

Vowes.

OF Vowes which are made againſt the expreſſe word of God: whether they may well be Vowed of Chriſtian men, and howe they are to be eſteemed. 4.13.1,6.

Three things are to be conſidered in Vowes: Who it is to whom wee Vowe, namely God which deliteth in obedience. 4.13.2. Who we be that do Vowe, that we meaſure our owne ſtrength and loke vpon our Calling, that we neglect not the benefite of liberty which God hath geuen vs. Sect. 3. And with what minde we Vowe. Sect. 4.

Of the Prieſts, Monkes, and Nonnes Vowe of ſingle life. 4.13.3,17,18,19.

There be foure endes of Vowes, two haue reſpect to the time paſt, and two to the time to come. 4.13.4,5.

There is one common Vowe of all the faithfull which they make in Baptiſme. 4.13.6.

Of the raſheneſſe and ſuperſtition of the worlde in making of Vowes. 4.13.1,7.

W.

Of VVarres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magiſtrates are driuen of neceſſity to take weapon in hand, to execute publike reuenge vpon thoſe that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they be ciuile or foreine enemies. 4.20.11.

It maketh not to the contrary hereof, which many alledge, that there is not in the newe Teſtament any teſtimony or example which proueth that Warre is a thing lawfull full for Christians. But Magistrates ought to take great heede, that in taking of weapon in hand, they nothing at all followe their owne lustes. As Warre, so garisons also, leagues and ciuile fortifications, are things lawfull for Christians to vse. 4.20.12.

Will of God.

Of the secret Will of God. Also of an other Will, whereunto aunswereth Willing obedience. 3.20.43.and 3.24.1,7.

Will of Man.

Whether the Will of man be in euery part through defiled and corrupted so that it bringeth forth nothing but euell: Or whether it yet reteine some liberty of choise. Where is declared the common saying taken out of the Philosophers, that all thinges by naturall dispositiō couet that which is good. And there is shewed that the liberty of Will can not be proued thereby. 2.2.26.

The soule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it selfe to aspire to goodnesse. And sith the whole man is subiect to the dominion of sinne, it is proued by testimonies of Scripture and of Augustine, that the Will of man is bound with most streight bōdes. 2.2.27.

Man by his fall lost not his will, but the soundnesse of his Will, so that he can not moue, much lesse apply himselfe to goodnesse, but is necessarily drawen or led into euell, howbeit not by compulsion but voluntary. Which is proued by Augustine and Bernarde. A large declaration of the difference betwene compulsion and necessitie. 2.3.5.

Sith the Lorde both beginneth and perfiteth good in our hartes, sith he worketh in vs to will, that is to say the good will, sith he createth a newe harte, taketh away the stony harte and geueth a fleshly hart, it followeth, that the Will of man is vtterly corrupted and hath no goodnesse at all. 2.3.6.

It is clerely proued by reasons and diuerse testimonies of Scripture, that God worketh good will in them that be his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginning so as it may afterward do some good of it selfe: But bycause it is his onely worke that Will conceiueth a loue of goodnesse, that it is enclined to the study thereof, that it is stirred and moued to an endeuour to followe it, and againe that the choise, studie, and endeuour do not fainte, but procede to effect, finally that man goeth constantly forward in them and continueth to the ende. 2.3.7,8,9.

Therefore it is proued by the authority of Scripture and of Augustine that this which hath bene taught these many ages, that God so moueth our Will, that it is afterward in our owne choise, to obey or disobey his motion, and other like sayings are vtterly false. 2.3.10, 11,12,13,14.

Alſo in doinges, which of themſelues are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belonge rather to the bodily than the ſpirituall life, the will of man is not free, but by the ſpeciall motion of God is enclined to clemency, mercy, wrath, feare, and other diuerſe effections, when it pleaſeth him to make way for his prouidence. Which is proued by Scripture, by daily experience, and by the authority of Auguſtine. 2.4.6,7.

VVorkes.

A compariſon of the pureneſſe of God with all the righteouſneſſe of men. 3.12.4,5.

Al the ofſpring of Adam being deuided into foure kindes of men, it is proued that they haue no holineſſe or righteouſnes: Firſt in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whom although there do ſometime appeare excellent qualities (which are the giftes of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3.14.1,2,3,4,5,6.

The ſame is ſhewed in them, which being profeſſed by Sacraments, are Chriſtiãs onely in name, denying God in their deedes: Alſo in hypocrites which with vaine falſe colours do hide the wickedneſſe of their heart. 3,14.7,8.

Finally, it is proued that euen the children of God trewly regenerated by his Spirit, can not ſtande by any righteouſnes of their owne Workes before the iudgement of God, becauſe they can bringe forth no good Worke ẏ is not ſprinkled with ſome vncleannes of the fleſh, and therefore damnable. Moreouer although they coulde bringe forth any ſuch Worke, yet one ſinne is enough to blot out the remembrance of all former righteouſnes. 3.14.9,10,11.

A confutation of the papiſtes ſhiftes concerning the righteouſneſſe of Workes: And ſpecially of the ſame horrible mõſter of Works of ſupererogatiõ. 3.14.12,13,14,15.

When we entreate of Workes, we muſt thruſt two peſtilences out of our mindes: that we put no truſt in the righteouſneſſe of our owne Workes, and that we aſcribe no glory vnto them. 3.14.16.

The Scripture ſetteth out and declareth foure kindes of cauſes in ſtabliſhing our ſaluation: And it is proued that in them all there is no regard of Workes. 3.14.17.

Where ſometime the ſainctes do bolden themſelues with remembrance of their owne innocence and vprightneſſe: howe the ſame is to be taken: and howe it doth in no wiſe abate any thing from the free righteouſneſſe in Chriſt. 3.14.18, 19,20.

Where the Scripture ſaith that the good Works of the faithfull do moue God to do them good, the order is therein rather expreſſed than the cauſe. 3.14.21.

Why the Lorde in the Scripture calleth good Workes oures, and promiſeth rewarde to them. 3.15.3.

A confutation of the Sophiſters inuention, concerning morall Workes, Workes, whereby men be made acceptable to God, before that they be grafted in Christ. 3. 15. 6. and 17.4.

Those rewardes are geuen to the Workes of the faithfull, which the Lorde in his lawe hath promised to the followers of righteousnesse: but thereof there are three causes to be considered. 3. 17. 3.

We may note in the scripture two acceptances of man with God, of which the latter although it haue respect to the good Workes of the faithful, yet is also of the free mercy of God. 3. 17. 4, 5.

When it is said that God doth good to them that loue him, here is not rehearsed a cause why he should do them good, but rather the maner of what sorte they be by his grace. 3. 17. 6.

An exposition of certaine places wherein ỹ scripture geueth to good Workes the name of righteousnes. And there is shewed that those places are not against the doctrine of iustification of faith. 3. 17. 7.

One good Worke or many do not suffice for righteousnesse before God, although one sinne suffice to condemne. And here the principle hath no place, the contraries haue all one rule. 3. 18. 10.

Why the Lorde said that he rendreth to Workes that which hee had freely geuen before Workes. 3. 18. 3. And therein he helpeth our weakenesse least we should be discouraged. 3. 18 4, 6, 7.

Hereuppon hangeth the righteousnes of the good Workes which the faithfull do, that by pardō they are allowed of God. 3. 18. 5.

TO THE CHRISTIAN AND STVDIOVS READERS OF THIS BOOKE, AVGVSTINE Marlorate Wisheth Health.

WHo so euer shall reade and peruse these two Tables following, and especially the latter, may maruell what I meant (after so many impressions and corrections of this worke) to collect and gather all the places of holy scripture therein alledged: and a great parte of the authorities therein expounded, whereas if any frute or proffit thereof were to be had, the same longe before might haue bene done: and especially about there yeares past, when the author him selfe was so diligent therein: who besides the many and profitable additions (which it conteineth) he himselfe setting the same in order, with his owne handes, and reducing it to a most exacte perfection, did then set and publishe it forth, in such sorte, that in fower bookes being deuided into chapters and diuerse sections, he hath right worthely and in familier maner, comprised the summe of the whole Christian religion. And certainely I cannot denie but it woulde haue bene very good and commodiose, if that any one man would haue taken the paine, faithfully and trewly to haue collected those places: which thing I thought ones to haue donne by the aduise of the imprinter, sauing that my chardge and office did elsewhere call me: as also when I had perused and set it in an other order then it was before, and had euen finished it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the least, to surcese for the time. And after that this booke being put forth both in Latine and French, was set to sale in euery place, because I sawe no man, who then did take the paine, to reduce the places of Scripture to a Table, and vnderstanding howe profitable the same would be to all men: I could not choose but after my power, and as leusure serued in those troublesome times, to employ my whole care & trauell therein. And because all things should be done and come forth more certaine and in better order: I would not geue credite, nor trust to the numbers which the imprinter had before set and made: for when I had diligently conferred them all, I found many false, many omitted, and some disorderly set: And surely that happeneth very sone to such as are not best skilfull in examining and perusing the places of holy Scripture to be sone deceaued. Wherefore all things diligētly restored, & that supplied which semed to want, I did so order the places of Scripture collected out of the olde and newe testament, that if there were any, through forgetfulnesse, or by any other meanes omitted or ouerskipped: (as it can not be but that in a great harueste some one eare of corne shall escape the reapers hande) I durst warrant so fewe shall be found, that this Table being brought to triall you shall not finde one much more plentifull or larger. Neuertheless I do pray and request the readers, that if they do finde any, they will aduertise the imprinter, wherby the same may better be examined and corrected. And this is to be noted, that such whole verses as I haue comprised in this table, they were not wholy but in part alleged, much lesse expounded in the Institution: which thing I did vpon good consideration. For oftentimes it happeneth that in diuerse places of the Institutions, some authorities are alleged, which are proued but by some part of the verse. And because in noting the places and numbers, we must vse repetitions (which for the most part bring a lothsomnesse to the reader) I thought it better to put in the whole verse, then by often diuisions, to vse vaine and superfluous repetitions. And as concerning the commoditie which the reader may gather by this my trauell: (besides that which by vse and experience I am taught by those Tables, which for mine owne priuate study and exercise I wrote vpon the Institutions heretofore set forth) I durst to affirme this much, that they which are not

exercised in entreating the holy Scriptures, and yet desirous to serue the Church of God, do diligently endeuor themselues thereunto, they shall finde a large and a plaine way, both with dexteritie to expound the writinges of the Prophets and Apostles, as also aptly to apply the authorities here alleged, and such like to the edifying of the Church, which is the very ende of the whole. And although we want not good Commentaries to discouer vnto vs the naturall sense of the Scripture, which we do nowe study and apply: yet because they who wrote the same, and who with good successe haue trauelled therein, were contented with the plaine and sincere exposition of the text: none could tell by the vse of the said Commentaries onely (vnlesse they were well practised in the principales of religion) howe and to what common place they ought to apply the argument then in hande. But who so can be contented to vse this Table, whensoeuer he shall finde the places which he entreateth, he shall see howe and to what ende the same is to be applied, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the aduersaries, or to the reconciling of such places as seeme to be repugnant. And this shalbe very commodious and profitable, not onely for the amplifying of any argument, but also to satisfie them, which are desirous to be confirmed in the principall pointes of Christian Religion. For it is manifest howe simple and slender is their oration and speech, which bring and allege nothing els, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the authors themselues (being most worthy and well learned) do cheefly desire breuitie, because the readers should vse and study the common places themselues, to the ende they should the more largely be applied to those things which in the Cõmentaries are but breefly expounded. Againe, forasmuch as we haue not alwayes in readinesse, what good authors haue written vpon the scriptures: and very fewe commentaries vpon some bookes, and namely vpon this Institution, are to be founde or had. This Table expounding the obscure and harde authorities, shall greatly further and helpe the readers. For they shall either finde some ready interpretation, or some entrance whereby to searche and finde out the trewe sentence. And as touching the translation, I trust it shall not seeme straunge to the reader, in that I haue rather followed the selfe same wordes, as they be in the Bible, then as they be alledged by Caluin in this his institution: For he being a man most excellently well learned, and of great reading (as by his works it doth appeare, how ready and familier the Scriptures were to him) had not alwayes the bookes in readines, or lying open before him, whem he wrote: neither was it necessary that whatsoeuer he did auouche out of the olde or new Testamẽt, he should expresse or write it in the selfe same words: for it is sufficiẽt, that the sense be faithfully retained, & the trew propriety of the words obserued, & so to eschew the cauilings of all men, sauing such as will finde fault in that, which in the least parte cannot be followed nor obserued. Being therfore perswaded that neither he himself will be offended, nor the reader mislike, if the sentences in the Bible be translated according to the Hebrewe, as concerning the olde Teſtament, and according to the Greeke, as touching the newe Teſtament: I haue aduentured to aduouche the authorities of the Scriptures in an other order (as concerning the wordes) then they are alledged in this booke of Inſtitutions. And therefore ſometimes that which is recited in the thirde perſon, this Table doth expreſſe it in the ſeconde, and ſo contrariwiſe: but yet ſo, that the ſenſe and meaning is alwayes reſerued, which thing euery man ſhall eaſily perceaue, if diligently and without haſty iudgement, he do conferre euery thing together: for elſe curioſe heades do loſe that fruict, which by aduiſed reading they might haue and receiue. And as concerning the names and nombers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde Teſtament, we haue not followed the common tranſlation, but that which is moſt agreable to the Hebrew. And therefore we do aduertiſe the readers, that they do not take the firſt booke of the Kinges, for the firſt of Samuell: nor the ſeconde of Kinges, for the ſeconde of the ſame Prophete: which is ſo done by them, who heretofore haue coted the Chapters in this imprinted Booke, bycauſe they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Cõcordances, which is collected according to the common tranſlation: and by that meanes, as it may euidently appeare to all men, ſome bookes of the olde Teſtament, are not rightly intituled: and the Pſalmes otherwiſe and in an other order deuided, then did the Hebrewes. And foraſmuch as all the principall pointes of religion, are in this booke copiouſly and faithfully expounded, we may eaſily refute the falſe opiniõs of the aduerſaries. VVhoſoeuer ſhall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learne, or a deſire to proffit: there is no doubte, but he ſhall very much proffit himſelfe, and helpe others: whoſe conſciences he may ſo ſtrengthen and aſſure, as they neede not to quaile in any pointe, bycauſe they be aſſured, that their faith is grounded vpon the firme foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, who wrate and ſpake, being inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, who hath willed and commaunded his moſt pretioſe and deere word, to be redde, heard, and handled, in all feare and reuerence, without adding thereunto, or takinge from the ſame: leaſt we be worthily reproued of our folly. Let vs therfore, in all ſimplicity and feare of God, reade ſo wholſome and neceſſary thinges, and daily proceede therein, in the grace and knowledge of God, who onely is the ſauior, hedde and Doctor of the Church: To whom nowe and for euer be all glory.
